

CERTIFICATE OF AUTHENTICITY

This is to certify that the microphotographs appearing on this film-file are accurate and complete reproductions of the records of Williams College Archives + Special collection as delivered in the regular course of business for photographing, starting with Newspapers - The Williams Record.
September 6, 1981

and ending with _____

It is further certified that the microphotographic processes were accomplished in a manner and on film which meets with requirements of the National Bureau of Standards for permanent micro-photographic copy.

7/18/91
Date Produced

Ken H
Camera Operator

Holyoke
Place (City)

Ma.
(State)

New England Archives Center

624 Hampden Street, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 • (413) 532-1465

The Williams Record

September 6, 1981

FRESHMAN ISSUE 1981

USPS 684-680

Largest class in College history

Williams welcomes 509 members of 1985 Class

The Williams Class of 1985 set College records for size and financial aid, with five hundred nine students and over one million dollars in aid.

College Admissions officials anticipated a class of approximately 500, but exceptionally large matriculation prevented them from accepting anyone from the waiting list. Such a measure has not been taken since 1956.

Financial aid for Williams freshmen reached a record $1,054,000 for aid received from the College, through work, and from other sources. Assistant Admissions Director Pat Riley attributed the aid increase to the large class size, greater financial need, and inflation. The Williams Parent Loan Program, instituted last April in response to soaring tuition, will play a significant role in the Williams aid picture, making the "million dollar class" a commonplace occurrence.

Admissions Director Phil Smith called the incoming freshman class "more diverse geographically" than last year's group. The four main "feeder" states (New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Jersey) showed a decline in applicants and were primarily responsible for a 13% overall decline in applications as compared to last year. Some of the decline was recovered by an increase in overseas applications. The overseas contingent replaced California as the fifth largest applicant group.

Applications from blacks declined, a statistic that was reflected in the overall 13% drop. Many students attribute the reduced black applicant pool to the aftershock of last November's cross burning incident outside Perry House. Hispanic applications increased though, bringing the American minority student group to 12% of the total incoming class. Foreign students represent 5% of the class of '85.

Academically, the Class of '85 maintained a high standard for Williams. The average SAT score for the incoming freshmen increased despite the national trend of dropping scores. As in past years, the Class of '85 performed better on the mathematical SAT section than on the verbal section.

The record number of incoming freshmen has presented some problems in the area of housing. The second floor of the Thompson Infirmary will become a freshman entry with two Junior Advisors assigned to it. This is the first time the College has established a freshman entry in the infirmary.

In the "private school versus public school" competition, public school students just edged out the private school students. Over fifty-one percent of the total class graduated from public institutions. As usual, Williams freshmen outnumber the women by 278 to 231.

Four hundred fifty-three applications were received in the Early Decision program. Women ED applicants outnumbered their male counterparts by 242 to 211. This runs counter to the trend for overall applications where men outnumber the women by 2,340 to 1,872. The College accepted 23.5% each from the men's and women's applicant pools.

In recent years, 85% of the students in an entering class have graduated from Williams within four years well over 90% of all matriculated students ultimately received a Williams degree.

The Hoosic River valley of the Northern Berkshires, "the middle of nowhere", even today seems an unlikely place for a town, let alone a "prestigious institution of higher learning". It was far more unlikely in the 1700s, when access to the valley was limited to an arduous trek over the Mohawk Trail.

The area was first surveyed in 1739 by Ephraim Williams, Sr. and, under the protection of Fort Massachusetts (located where the Price Chopper on Route 2 now stands), a settlement began to grow as early as 1752. As far as the College is concerned, Ephraim Sr.'s real claim to fame was fathering Ephraim Jr. and getting him appointed commander of the string of Western Massachusetts forts including Fort Massachu-

The Lasell Gym clocktower; one of the many sights that will remind you of Williams for years to come.

An unlikely college in an unlikely place

sett. Although Ephraim Jr. was apparently well-regarded militarily, he goes down in history for his defeats. In 1746, Fort Massachusetts was captured and burned, while supposedly under his command. On September 8, 1755, having led his men into an ambush at Lake George, N.Y., he ended up getting himself killed for his troubles.

Shortly before, Williams had written a will providing funds for a "free school" to be set up in West Hoosic on condition that the name of the town be changed to Williamstown. In 1765, the town was officially incorporated as "Williams Town".

The General Court of Massachusetts incorporated "The Trustees of the Donation of Ephraim Williams, Esq. for Maintaining a Free School in Williamstown" on March 8, 1785 to use the $9175 that had accumulated in the estate. Yet even this massive sum wasn't sufficient for the task and a lottery was required before construction of West College could begin in 1790. The opening of the school was delayed until October 20, 1791 by a failure to discover water on the land around the building. (In fact, the school had to rely on two springs at the lower end of Spring Street; hence its name.) Despite local opposition, Ephraim Williams's free school became Williams College in June 22, 1793.

The first Commencement was held on September 2, 1795. Of the four men receiving degrees, two

Continued on Page 6

The Williams Record

September 6, 1981

FRESHMAN ISSUE 1981

USPS 684-680

Largest class in College history

Williams welcomes 509 members of 1985 Class

The Williams Class of 1985 set College records for size and financial aid, with five hundred nine students and over one million dollars in aid.

College Admissions officials anticipated a class of approximately 500, but exceptionally large matriculation prevented them from accepting anyone from the waiting list. Such a measure has not been taken since 1956.

Financial aid for Williams freshmen reached a record $1,054,000 for aid received from the College, through work, and from other sources. Assistant Admissions Director Pat Riley attributed the aid increase to the large class size, greater financial need, and inflation. The Williams Parent Loan Program, instituted last April in response to soaring tuition, will play a significant role in the Williams aid picture, making the "million dollar class" a commonplace occurrence.

Admissions Director Phil Smith called the incoming freshman class "more diverse geographically" than last year's group. The four main "feeder" states (New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Jersey) showed a decline in applicants and were primarily responsible for a 13% overall decline in applications as compared to last year. Some of the decline was recovered by an increase in overseas applications. The overseas contingent replaced California as the fifth largest applicant group.

Applications from blacks declined, a statistic that was reflected in the overall 13% drop. Many students attribute the reduced black applicant pool to the aftershock of last November's cross burning incident outside Perry House. Hispanic applications increased though, bringing the American minority student group to 12% of the total incoming class. Foreign students represent 5% of the class of '85.

Academically, the Class of '85 maintained a high standard for Williams. The average SAT score for the incoming freshmen increased despite the national trend of dropping scores. As in past years, the Class of '85 performed better on the mathematical SAT section than on the verbal section.

The record number of incoming freshmen has presented some problems in the area of housing. The second floor of the Thompson Infirmary will become a freshman entry with two Junior Advisors assigned to it. This is the first time the College has established a freshman entry in the infirmary.

In the "private school versus public school" competition, public school students just edged out the private school students. Over fifty-one percent of the total class graduated from public institutions. As usual, Williams freshmen outnumber the women by 278 to 231.

Four hundred fifty-three applications were received in the Early Decision program. Women ED applicants outnumbered their male counterparts by 242 to 211. This runs counter to the trend for overall applications where men outnumber the women by 2,340 to 1,872. The College accepted 23.5% each from the men's and women's applicant pools.

In recent years, 85% of the students in an entering class have graduated from Williams within four years well over 90% of all matriculated students ultimately received a Williams degree.

The Hoosic River valley of the Northern Berkshires, "the middle of nowhere", even today seems an unlikely place for a town, let alone a "prestigious institution of higher learning". It was far more unlikely in the 1700s, when access to the valley was limited to an arduous trek over the Mohawk Trail.

The area was first surveyed in 1739 by Ephraim Williams, Sr. and, under the protection of Fort Massachusetts (located where the Price Chopper on Route 2 now stands), a settlement began to grow as early as 1752. As far as the College is concerned, Ephraim Sr.'s real claim to fame was fathering Ephraim Jr. and getting him appointed commander of the string of Western Massachusetts forts including Fort Massachu-

The Lasell Gym clocktower; one of the many sights that will remind you of Williams for years to come.

An unlikely college in an unlikely place

sett. Although Ephraim Jr. was apparently well-regarded militarily, he goes down in history for his defeats. In 1746, Fort Massachusetts was captured and burned, while supposedly under his command. On September 8, 1755, having led his men into an ambush at Lake George, N.Y., he ended up getting himself killed for his troubles.

Shortly before, Williams had written a will providing funds for a "free school" to be set up in West Hoosic on condition that the name of the town be changed to Williamstown. In 1765, the town was officially incorporated as "Williams Town".

The General Court of Massachusetts incorporated "The Trustees of the Donation of Ephraim Williams, Esq. for Maintaining a Free School in Williamstown" on March 8, 1785 to use the $9175 that had accumulated in the estate. Yet even this massive sum wasn't sufficient for the task and a lottery was required before construction of West College could begin in 1790. The opening of the school was delayed until October 20, 1791 by a failure to discover water on the land around the building. (In fact, the school had to rely on two springs at the lower end of Spring Street; hence its name.) Despite local opposition, Ephraim Williams's free school became Williams College in June 22, 1793.

The first Commencement was held on September 2, 1795. Of the four men receiving degrees, two

Continued on Page 6

Transportation

Escape from Williams

Thoreau was referring to Williams when he said, "It would be no small advantage if every college were thus located at the base of a mountain." It is also no small advantage for airports, train stations and bus depots. In fact, it is no advantage at all, which is why finding transportation into and out of Williamstown can be one of the major tests of resourcefulness during your four years here.

Foot: Given that the College encompasses the heart of Williamstown, walking is actually not a bad option for your daily transportation needs. Three shopping areas are within walking distance of the campus: Spring St., Cole Ave. (near the railroad tracks), and the Colonial Shopping Center (about 15 minutes east on Route 2).

Hitching: Hitching is technically illegal along state highways in Massachusetts, but no one, including the local police, can recall the last time anyone was picked up for the offense.

The ride board outside the snack bar in Baxter offers a somewhat more organized means of hitching. Post a notice there with your name, destination and phone number and keep your fingers crossed.

Train: Occasionally on an evening when the wind is right, you might hear a freight train rumble away to the north. So much for the rebirth of the railroad in Williamstown.

If you are a fan of rail travel, however, and can make your way to Pittsfield or Albany then rail connections are possible. Two Amtrak trains a day leave from Pittsfield, one at 10:22 a.m. going to Boston, and one at 8:55 p.m. going to Chicago, and stopping in, among other places, Rochester, Buffalo and Cleveland. Also, eight trains daily from Albany (or more precisely Rensselaer, although it is the Albany station) to Grand Central Station in New York.

For more information, call Amtrak: 800-523-5720.

Bus: Lest you are despairing that public transportation has totally ignored the Purple Valley, you will be happy to learn that regularly scheduled buses penetrate this outpost of academia.

New Englander buses run five buses to Boston daily. The first leaves Williamstown at 6:15 a.m. and the last at 5:15 p.m. The one-way fare is $11.15. Two buses to New York City via Pittsfield run daily. The one-way fare is $25.62. The oft-dubbed "slow boat to China" bus to Port Authority in New York chugs through just about every small town along the way.

A good pair of boots will take you as far in this weather as the fanciest Mercedes.

More information on schedules, fares and routes is available at the Williams Inn (458-9371) at the intersection of North and Main Streets. The bus stop is right outside the Inn.

Plane: Most Williams students fly from Albany, the nearest airport that is served by major airlines. Figure on at least an hour and a half if you are traveling by car. At peak periods (e.g., the end of a semester) a bus is often chartered, but if it is inconvenient, you will have to catch whatever ride you can. Some students have been known to pay $50 plus for a taxi.

Car: If you own a car, congratulations. You have access to the most effective means of getting around, and if you are willing to loan it out, you have also assured yourself a certain degree of popularity among your cohorts.

First semester freshmen are not allowed cars, so if you have one, you must either hide it from the authorities or put it in storage. Thereafter, you may pay registration fees of $55 a year and park in assigned lots—in the case of freshmen, behind the tennis courts, which can make for an annoying hike. Never so annoying, however, as being stranded in Williamstown when you are eager for a change of scenery.

also a reciprocal phenomenon. There are times when you see someone you recognize and they call you by name, but you are unable to think of theirs. In this case mumbling is your best escape. Virtually any name will sound correct when filtered through a cough or a snort. Volume and timing are critical.

If your unknown person is amid a crowd of freshmen, it is always safe to show a big smile, look at no one in particular, and shout "Hi!" The frosh in the group, thinking that they should know you and wishing to be as popular as you seem, will smile and shout "Hi!" back. No kidding. It really works.

The point to be made here is to avoid convention. If someone gets your name wrong toss etiquette out the window. Being creatively blunt can make you someone they will never forget.

"Hey there, er . . . a . . . Vladimir"

by David Lott

Invariably during your first week at Williams, fellow freshmen and quick-witted JAs will greet you warmly with, "Hi Melvin," "Hey Gladys," or "Happenin' Gustav!" when in reality you are none of these people. This creeping malady of misidentification is known as the Freshman Identity Crisis.

Most freshmen deal with mistaken identity in the same way. They say, "Sorry, I'm Bill, not Gustav. It's okay, I do that too. What is your name again?" Then they walk off, best of friends, talking enthusiastically about their intended majors or something equally lifeless. This is fine if you want to be a stereotype, but for those who seek to break the mold, here are some alternatives.

Employ the antagonistic technique. When someone accosts you with "Good morning, Vladislav," give him a friendly, but sharp, finger-jab to the ribs and reply, "Can't complain there, Wolfgang!" Walk off with a maniacal grin plastered on your face. The more crazed, the better.

You can also let it ride to the point where you ask what his major is. Following his response of "Pre-med" or "Pre-law," you caustically counter with, "Oh yea? Well I'm pre-historical."

Yet another approach is to simply ignore the person speaking to you. Do this by singing loudly or speaking to yourself in another language. Division III majors can invent their own language if need be. This evasive action will deflate the most persistent name-caller. You can have a set of cards printed with the phrase, "I am a deaf-mute. Please stop calling me by someone else's name."

The Freshman Identity Crisis is

PHOTO SPECIALS SAVE $1.00

off the regular price of developing your roll of color print film

Take lots of pictures and SAVE!

OVERNIGHT "SPRINT SERVICE" Available with this special

Hart's
Pharmacists, Inc.
Spring Street

Save 'em, Play 'em, Trade 'em

The Dean Team

DEANS

John C. Chandler

Position: President
Height: 6'1" Weight: 170
Bats: Both Throws: Right

President Chandler oversees both the financial and academic aspects of the College. Although his job takes him around the country for fundraising, he is an unusually visible college president, and regularly attends home athletic events.

Chandler plans to continue his walk-in hours, during which students may speak with him about their concerns without appointment.

DEANS

Daniel D. O'Connor

Position: Dean of the College
Height: 6' Weight: 170
Bats: Right Throws: Right

Fresh off a year of sabbatical leave, O'Connor resumes his duties as manager of the Dean's team. O'Connor is responsible for the day-to-day operation of the College.

In his third season with the Deans, O'Connor is best known for his vicious attacks on the team's major rival, grade inflation.

DEANS

Cris T. Roosenraad

Position: Associate Dean and Dean of Freshmen
Height: 5'10" Weight: 143
Bats: Right Throws: Right

With O'Connor back in the lineup, Roosenraad returns to his associate dean positions. The off-season departure of Lauren Stevens means Roosenraad assumes new responsibilities as the Dean of Freshmen, making him one of the team's key performers.

Roosenraad is the team's radical rowdy. He went to school with Tom Hayden and was one of the early members of what became the SDS. Of late, however, he has developed more refined tastes, expressing a particular weakness for Dom Perignon.

DEANS

John F. Reichert

Position: Acting Dean of the Faculty
Height: 6'2" Weight: 180
Bats: Right Throws: Right

The team's star rookie, Reichert will have a busy year ahead as he continues his teaching duties in the English department while also assuming the job of managing faculty and curricular affairs.

Succeeding Francis Oakley, who is on sabbatical leave, Reichert will be in charge of faculty recruitment, promotions, leaves and research support.

DEANS

Nancy J. McIntire

Position: Associate Dean
Height: 5'5" Weight: 135
Bats: Right Throws: Right

McIntire is the team coordinator of trades. Responsible for student transfers and exchanges as well as study abroad, she is the team's expert in dealing with player agents.

She has a special interest in the problems of women at Williams, an interest shared with Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta.

DEANS

J. Hodge Markgraf

Position: Provost
Height: 5'8" Weight: 145
Bats: Both Throws: Right

In charge of managing the team's finances, Markgraf begins his second season as college provost. He will be in responsible for the College's $30 million budget and long-range economic planning.

This freshman issue of the Williams Record is published as a supplement to the weekly issues of the paper which are distributed in the dining halls on Tuesday nights while school is in session. The Record wishes to thank the Dean's Office for their financial support of this freshman issue.

ARTS AND CULTURE BLOSSOM AT WILLIAMS

The first thought that invariably enters the mind of the neophyte Williams student (i.e., freshman) as his gaze takes him down the bustling metropolis of Spring Street is "This is it?" At first glance, Williams, to put it mildly, does not appear to be a hub of cultural activities. You will be pleased to learn that appearances can be deceiving.

Williams may be located in the boonies, but the College recognizes its obligation to foster cultural enrichment among the members of its community. Over the years, the arts at Williams have matured and developed to the point where our little community is an acknowledged cultural center in the Berkshires.

Just down the road by Garfield House is the world renowned Clark Art Institute, housing works by such artists as Homer, Degas, Monet, and Renoir.

Throughout the year, the Clark sponsors major exhibitions of artists' work from around the world. In addition, the museum offers a great number of lectures, concerts, and classic films, almost always free to students.

Not to be outdone, Williams maintains its own art museum in Lawrence Hall, next to the Berkshire Quad. Despite the inconveniences of the new addition to the building, one can still enjoy a wide variety of exhibits ranging from the art of ancient Greece to the latest work from local artists. Several student art exhibits are also on display at different times of the year.

The Williams theater offers students the opportunity to both enjoy serious theatre and ham it up. The Williams theatre department sponsors three or four major productions on the main stage of the Adams Memorial Theater (AMT) each year. Past productions have included works by Shaw, Wilde, and Shakespeare.

The College also offers students the chance to stage and direct their own productions in the studio theater of the AMT. Of more immediate importance to freshmen is the annual Freshman Revue which gives all you freshmen out there a chance to show your stuff.

Williams also has a Dance Society which sponsors one of the finest concert series at the College. Each year nationally renowned dance troupes spend several days in residence at Williams. The members give master classes, lecture-demonstrations, open rehearsals, and full performances open to the public. These residences give the dance enthusiast a chance to study an individual company's theories, techniques, and repertoire. For the newcomer, they are a perfect introduction to the dance.

Music is perhaps one of the most popular activities on campus, with the College offering a wide variety of musical events. The Berkshire Symphony (based on campus), made up of both students and professionals, performs four concerts a year, often with well-known guest soloists. Music in the Round is a chamber ensemble which performs several concerts each semester in the Bernhard Music Building. The Williams Choral

The Williams Choral Society provides stirring vocal music and tuxedos.

Society performs major concerts at Christmas and in the spring, as well as special concerts during the two parents' weekends. A smaller chamber choir also presents a number of special concerts. Baroque music, with emphasis on the harpsichord, can be heard in nine or ten Griffen Hall Concerts during the year. On the other end of the musicality spectrum, many musically literate students swear by the Williams Marching Band and its distinctive brand of entertainment.

There are also a number of student musical organizations and concerts. The Ephlats and Williams Octet offer student run concerts of popular and folk music. Studio, the music department's student recital series, allows students the chance to perform both vocal and instrumental music. Generally speaking, the studios are no amateur hour; you'll find your classmates are a pretty talented bunch.

Outside performers are also brought to Williams under the auspices of the Thompson Concert Series. Past guests have included the Juilliard String Quartet and other top performers.

More popular tastes will be indulged at a number of popular folk, rock, and jazz concerts which are held every year. Last year's performers included Hall and Oates, Steve Forbert, Willie Nile, Dizzy Gillespie, and Max Roach. The Williams Coffee House sponsors smaller concerts nearly every weekend in the Rathskeller.

Movies are a popular diversion at Williams. The Williams Film Society shows popular second run films every Friday night in Bronfman Auditorium. Reel Vintage sponsors a classic film festival on Saturday nights, offering films by such greats as Fellini, Hitchcock, and Bergman. Images, down on Spring Street, offers three different movies a week, both classic and popular.

Ephese:

A guide to Wms. slang

Upon arriving at Williams, many freshmen discover that their JAs speak a foreign tongue. This mixture of English and college lingo has evolved into a minor art here at Williams. To help you through these first few days in a foreign college, we present the following slang compendium.

One word of caution: these terms have limited use in some parts of the campus. It is wise to hear what upperclassmen are saying before plunging headlong into a conversation.

Ace—to get an A grade.

Band—a group of students who become crazed musicians when their liquor supply is full.

Bar—always preceded by a letter grade; a B—is a "B bar."

Burgers—short for Froshburgers, what you are.

Chow—food; also to eat, as in "Let's chow."

Deadly Medly—one of the vegetarian atrocities from the friendly folks at Food Service.

Demo—to destroy without mercy, usually private property.

Drink—also known "Log it," "get plotzed," "get ripped," etc.

Grind—someone who studies for fun; also verb form.

Grinder—the sandwich that outsiders would call a warm submarine or a hot hero.

Gut—an easy course, as in "I got an A bar in that gut."

Key—important, necessary, best, or anything else the speaker means.

Later—said at the close of a conversation.

Later, much—said at the close of a dull conversation.

Libes—the library, where one grinds.

Munch Out—what one does after a midnight run to the Grand Union or Price Chopper grocery stores ("Pig out" to the less cultured.)

O.C.—"out of control"; preceded by the first letter of an adjective, as in POC (prep out of control) or GOC (grind out of control).

Pro House—Prospect House, on the Berkshire Quad.

The Quad—to an upperclass male, the Freshman Quad; to an upperclass female, the Freshman Quad or Berkshire Quad, but only to those who live there.

Two "burgers" get "key" drinks as they "Log it."

Rack—to sleep or to get some sleep, as in "Rack in the libes is key."

Rathskeller—the Baxter basement.

Porcelain god—a local deity found in the rest-room, worshipped after a ritual of getting plotzed or ripped.

There—used to indicate intention of going somewhere; if you are asked to go to the Log, you reply, "I'm there."

Totally—used to indicate agreement or enthusiasm, as in "Are we there?" Reply: "Totally."

Yo—general greeting; male athletes often prefer "Hey big guy," slurring the words together.

'Za—our Billsville pizza in two varieties, both seasoned heavily with grease.

Renzi's College Book Store has relocated

Check out our new quarters and take advantage of our "Package Deal": it may earn you 100 bucks —

Yes, I do want a "package deal". I understand that if I hand in my slip on Sunday or Monday my books will be ready Tuesday morning, with my name and total attached to the bag. Without waiting in line I can pick up my bag—they will be arranged alphabetically in Renzi's College Book Store, between Penny's and The Log. Tuesday morning. You may pay by cash, check, money order, traveler's check—no charges, please. This will make you eligible for a drawing: the winner will receive, FREE, all his required books, in the courses we have been given. No charge for the service.

Name _____
(Please Print)

Name and Number of Course, Section and/or professor's name if English 101

Renzi's

COLLEGE BOOK STORE INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

The Williams Jazz Ensemble keeps the joint "jimpin'."

History

Continued from Page 1

became lawyers and two doctors. The early trustees of the college were heavily influenced by Yale and were strict Congregationalists. To them, Williamstown's isolation was ideal for defending young minds from Unitarianism, which from its base at Harvard was having a profound effect on American higher education.

The trustees called for the following curriculum for their new college: "In the first year,—the English, Latin, Greek, and French languages. In the second,—the several languages in part, Arithmetic, Geography, Algebra, Geometry, Mensurations, Conic Sections, Rhetoric and Logic. In the third,—Trigonometry, Navigation, Surveying, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy and Chemistry. In the fourth year,—Metaphysics, Ethics, History, National Law, Civil Polity, and Theology."

The College was perpetually in need of funds. The by-and-large well educated faculty was disgusted by the country bumpkins Williams tended to attract. In 1821, after failing to obtain permission from the state to move, Williams' second president, Zephaniah Swift Moore, with half the students and faculty marched over the Mohawk Trail to found Amherst College and spawn one of the nation's oldest collegiate sports rivalries.

Moore's successor at Williams, Edward Door Griffin, succeeded in developing an infusion of funds and an expansion of the enrollment. Although the College did not achieve financial security until the twentieth century, it was able to fall back on state aid and fortunate if occasional donations to the conservative religious institution. Although Williams has always attracted talented educators (witness President Mark Hopkins), it wasn't until the presidency of James Phinney Baxter (1937-61) that the College's academic reputation really began to grow. Since World War II, admissions have become progressively more selective.

As elsewhere, the 1960s were a traumatic period for Williams. They witnessed the largest building program in the College's history. The abolition of fraternities was a bitter issue on campus and among alumni. The result was the development of the residential house system.

The most revolutionary change was reserved for the 1970s. In 1971, the College admitted its first freshman class containing women. The repercussions are still being felt, although a student-faculty committee concluded that the transition had been made surprisingly smoothly.

New teams look strong —

Continued from Page 8

Crotty anchoring the backfield, and fleet Micah Taylor back to head the receiving corps. The defense is depleted, but returning linemen Steve Doherty, Joe Ross, Jack Kowalk, and Captain Jeff Kiesel in the secondary will give opposing QBs fits before the season is over.

During the winter months, hockey and basketball attract good crowds, especially during Winter Study. In the past two years the hockey team has been most competitive, reaching the Eastern College Athletic Conference playoffs last season behind the superb work of freshman netminder Dan Finn and co-goaltender Tom Golding. Finn returns from a successful stint at the National Sports Festival in Syracuse, N.Y., ready to battle for Williams.

Basketball in Lasell Gymnasium can also become intense, as proven two years ago when now-senior guard Al Lewis led an upset of Division I power Dartmouth to the delight of a screaming partisan crowd. Miracles do happen in the magic room on Spring Street.

Other sports at Williams should get more spectators than their usual low turnouts. Our swimming teams are traditionally the best in New England, often capturing All-American status for some members at the Division III nationals.

Women's basketball, both tennis squads, both squash teams, and men's lacrosse are also traditionally successful squads that get less support than they deserve, despite their impressive records.

No, the Ephs do not appear on Wide World of Sports, nor do we fill a 100,000 seat stadium, but spectator sports are definitely alive and well at Williams.

P.E. credit —

Continued from Page 8

will take a newcomer who is willing to learn fundamentals and take a pounding.

For frustrated jocks, there are two routes. The first is club sports. Now don't misunderstand. There are a lot of athletes playing club sports who have the ability to be varsity athletes. But club sports like rugby, softball, and women's hockey allow enjoyment of the sport without as serious a commitment as one would have as a varsity athlete.

Intramurals are not the gentleman's game that the title might suggest. The fierce competition in

PAPPA CHARLIE'S DELI

Visit Us Tonight!

Cindy, Ginny, Theresa and Charlie

We feature

- Grinders
- Bagels
- Fresh Fruit Juices
- Herb Teas

And New Student Pizzas

We Cash Student Checks

IM is more than enough to satisfy the four-year high school sports veteran.

Category three is the hacker. A hacker can be categorized as anyone who plays or exercises purely for the sheer perversity of it. One who likes it not for the sake of intense competition, but simply to stay in shape.

Intramurals are dynamite for the hacker, especially if he likes to show off in front of other hackers. Williams, Sage, and E.F.L. (East, Fayerweather, Lehman) have always been tough entries in the intramural race.

The swim test all freshmen take this week is the college's first shot at eliminating all those unfit to pass P.E. They figure the real losers will drown before they buy their first semester's worth of books. The survivors must suffer with eight quarters of Phys. Ed. Skiing, dance, yoga, karate, basketball, tennis, and even badminton are available plus many more. Those in any combination of 8 will get one through. Things like golf cart driving, parking coaches cars, and sportswriting won't. Take it from one who's tried.

Welcome Williams Freshmen!

Come Visit The

House of Walsh

A Traditional Clothing Establishment for Ladies and Gentlemen Since 1891 on the Williams Campus

Spring Street

458-5010

Welcome Williams Freshmen

Williamstown National Bank

Williamstown, Massachusetts

Serving Williamstown and the area Since 1883

TWO CONVENIENT LOCATIONS:

57 Spring Street - Mon.-Fri. - 9 am-3pm
455 Main St. Office - Drive-up Window
Mon.-Fri. - 9 am-6 pm - Sat. 9 am-1 pm

Complete Banking & Trust Services

WE KNOW HOW TO HELP

Member Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00 Mon.-Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

• Northern Berkshires' Most Complete Sporting Goods Store
• Full Service for all Raquet Sports, Skiing and Skiing

CUSTOM T-SHIRT PRINTING

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.

15 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267
TELEPHONE 413 458-3805

YOU CAN HAVE A BAD HORSE, BUT YOU'VE GOTTA HAVE A GOOD PAIR OF BOOTS.

Since the days of the wild west, people have relied on FRYE boots as old friends. That's because all Frye boots are carefully bench-crafted of the finest leathers. We've been making them that way for more than 100 years now. Our styles may change, but our quality and craftsmanship remain the same. The best.

FRYE

Salvatores
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

Save 40-57% at

The Williams News and Supply Room

on New York Times and Boston Globe subscriptions

Check out our line of . . .

- School Supplies (large selection of notebooks)
- Laundry Products
- Cookies, Candy, etc.
- Magazines
- Cigarettes
- Miscellaneous Items

We extend a warm welcome to the incoming Freshmen and to the returning upperclassmen of WILLIAMS COLLEGE.

Williams Co-ops

IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS

Something special is a gift from the Co-op

A look at Eph sports:

Georgia has its Bulldogs. Penn State holds claim to the Nittany Lions. A Notre Dame student becomes one of the Fighting Irish. But the student who comes to Williams must spend four years (and sometimes a lifetime) explaining to shocked friends and relatives that he is not a Lion, Tiger, Bear, or even a Fighting Iguana. He is an Ephman.

Yes, an Ephman. Not F-Man or Ef-Man, but Ephman (pronounced EEF-MAN), or possibly an Ephwoman if you are of the appropriate gender. As a member of the Williams Class of '85, you also have unknowingly become an Ephman, but do not run for a blood test yet.

The name Ephman comes from our beloved founder, Ephraim Williams. (Get it? His drinking buddies called him "Eph" for short). As a British colonel, Williams could not get to first base. Legend has it that he led his men into an Indian ambush, died young (and wealthy), and left us this spot for an institution of higher learning. In memory of his bravery, daring, courage (and wealth), we heretofore refer to ourselves as Ephmen—at least on the field of battle.

And somehow it seems that Williams types are always on the proverbial field of battle. Just getting the acceptance letter with the Phil Smith personally-embossed smiley face (thought yours was the only one, right?), one instantly becomes athletic.

It seems that the inclination to exercise hits immediately upon entering our Purple Valley. But here in paradise one must satiate the soul as well as the body. We do this through spirit, through rooting, and primarily through beating arch-rival Amherst as many times as possible during our four-year tenure.

Despite the relatively low-key attitude attributed to sports at Williams, a good number of the people on campus are aware of the football team's season record. This is a small campus. Everybody knows a varsity athlete or two, and therefore it is likely that within a student's freshman year he will find himself cheering for a roommate or a friend.

Despite the relative abundance of school pride, there are only three sports at Williams that draw a good number of spectators.

Of course, the biggest attraction occurs during eight weeks in the fall—football. In this country the media has made football the preeminent sport, and it remains top-dog at Williams. The team plays in the Little Three Conference against rivals Wesleyan and Amherst on the last two weeks of the season. The competition is intense, and we usually come out on top. Since Coach Bob Odell took charge ten seasons ago, the Ephs have won or tied for the conference title every season.

The Williams icemen look to return to the playoffs this year.

The Ephs face four opponents at home this season, with Middlebury, Tufts, Bowdoin, and Amherst coming to Weston Field to meet Williams, which boasted a 5-2-1 record last season. While games at Weston attract crowds of about 1000, participation is a must. The stands come to life as the game begins, making the contest a mere co-star. The stands are a social happening. It is possible to spend a spectacular day at the game without ever learning the score.

John Lawler returns to guide the grid offense with veterans Jay Wheatley, Tom Casey, and Sean

Continued on Page 7

Everyone's an athlete

by Steven H. Epstein

Becoming an athlete at Williams is like swimming with a strong current. It's natural, and it's easy. The only limiting factor is one's own determination. Williams doesn't dole out athletic scholarships. Everybody, in some sense, is a walk-on. And in another sense, everybody is an athlete. The physical education requirement makes this a universal truth.

It's easiest to categorize all Williams students into one of four athletic groupings: the real athlete, the frustrated jock, the enthusiastic hacker, and the person looking to fulfill a P.E. requirement and escape with his life.

For the real athlete—that is someone who wants to play competitive sports on a varsity level—there are plenty of opportunities here. Some squads like men's basketball and baseball are limited to better players due to roster size. Other squads like swimming and varsity tennis are so competitive that the hacker need not apply. For these teams, one had to excel in high school.

But there is a whole other category of sports which takes little or no prior experience, but the intense desire to sweat, for the cause. Teams like varsity crew and track are willing to carry novice members who are willing to work hard. Even the football squad admitting that while "we should be worried about the Soviets," a bigger problem is nuclear proliferation.

Continued on Page 7

Rugby always provides fierce action, fleet running, and mud.

Udall began by drawing attention to the mood of skepticism prevalent in the country brought on by a decade of low economic growth as well as such spectacular failures of high technology as Agent Orange and Three Mile Island.

"I worry about nuclear weapons getting into the hands of unstable rulers like Idi Amin, the Ayatollah Khomeini, or Khaddafi . . . I worry about we may have to go slower, not doing all that science can do."

He noted incidents of this already, citing the abandonment of the SST project. He predicted the same for nuclear power, stating that "expansion of nuclear power will be difficult until Americans are convinced of its safety."

The congressman also criticized President Reagan's economic policies, claiming that his tax and spending cuts would benefit large corporations, especially those bent on mergers, rather than the average citizen. He attacked use of funds for "merger capital" rather than spending for research and development. The Reagan Administration is "changing the slogan 'power to the people' to 'power to the (following) people,' followed by a short list of names," said Udall.

Udall defined "the best leaders" as "combining the best of the liberal and conservative impulses. We can't go back to

Continued on Page 8

Many seniors wore white armbands at the Convocation (above) to protest the recent South African military incursion in Angola. Below, Representative Morris Udall tosses barbs at Reagan Administration officials in his convocation address to the Class of '82. (Farley)

Panel looks to new energy sources

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Explaining the need for more development of new "soft" energy alternatives such as solar, hydroelectric, and synthetic energy, seven local and national authorities convened last Friday night for the 1981 Convocation entitled, "Energy: Pathways and Dilemmas: The 80's and beyond."

The panel was moderated by Professor Thomas C. Jorling, Director of the Center for Environmental Studies, and included

David Freeman, commissioner of the Tennessee Valley Authority; Walter E. Massey, director of the Argonne National Laboratory; Amory B. Lovins, physicist and advisor to Friends of the Earth; Robert O. Anderson, chairman of the board of Atlantic-Richfield; Professor William R. Moomaw, Williams Chemistry Department; and Congressman Morris K. Udall of Arizona.

Jorling began by emphasizing that energy use and projected energy consumption are actually failing. "Even without lifestyle change, energy demand in the year 2000 will be significantly lower than today," he said, adding that U.S. oil consumption is down 6% from last year, and current projections for energy demand in the year 2000 are half of what they were in 1972.

"There is more reason for optimism about energy sources now than could possibly have been foreseen two or three years ago," Anderson said. He mentioned some of the new discoveries of major oil reserves around the world.

But Lovins stressed that finding more sources of energy is not necessarily the solution. "That's like shopping for the cheapest brandy to run your car. There's no demand for energy per se—only for the services it gives us. So we ought to start at the usage end—what tasks do we want energy for?—and then use the most cost-effective technology in those tasks." He claimed that 98% of

Above: several students get checked at Baxter by the new computerized I.D. system. The computer will eliminate stolen meals, and will therefore allow Food Service to offer board options. (Tantimedh)

Food Service installs computer I.D. system

by Jon Tigar

The Williams College Food Service has taken a plunge into the computer age this fall with the introduction of a computerized identification system. The new system aims to reduce the number of students who eat meals for which they have not paid or who bring guests in free.

The system cost about $40,000 to install and will pay for itself in two years or less, Director of Food Service Ross Keller estimated.

"The producers of these systems estimate that the introduction of this system will save 2 percent of gross income per year," Keller said that 300-400 schools now use similar systems and that "interest is on the rise."

In addition, said Keller, "We can now offer board options," by eliminating the problem of purloined meals. "The old system could not be enforced and so we could not offer options," he explained.

The system works in the following way. Each student is given an ID card with a personal number on the back and the computer symbol for the number. An additional copy is filed with both Food Service and the Business Office.

When a student enters the dining hall, his card is fed into a "reader," which checks the computer's memory to see how many meals the student has left on his plan. The reader then "passes" or "fails" the student. If the computer is unable to read or locate a student's number, the reader shows "error."

The computer, which is programmed from the Food Service office in Baxter Hall, keeps tabs on how many meals each student has eaten, and where and when he has eaten.

Some students have complained that the system is impersonal. Keller responds, "I think the system is different only in that a student can no longer 'flash' the card; he must present the card. This is not because the school is trying to get mean, or get tough; the

Continued on Page 8

Continued on Page 10

Students resent dining plan

by Sara Ferris

The Committee on Student Residential Life's recommendation to immediately eliminate Row House dining was accepted by President John Chandler and instituted over the summer. Affected students returned to complain of long dining hall lines and less Row House unity as a result of this decision.

"I haven't seen any problems, but we are serving twice as many people," remarked an I.D. checker at the Greylock dining hall, where most Row House residents are now eating. "Student flow varies, so sometimes it gets crowded." A Greylock student was more critical: "The lines are horrid and the noise level is unbelievable. You can't even hear yourself speak."

A common complaint among Row House sophomores is a lack of opportunity to meet other house residents, especially those in other buildings. "I don't feel a part of the house," commented one student, "This dining system doesn't promote house unity."

Although the Gifford report urged Row Houses to eat together at specific times, Perry President Tim Caffrey

Continued on Page 8

Inside the Record

Outlook Interviews
Udall	page 3
Photo essay	page 4
"Sherlock" reviewed	page 5
Parking changes	page 7
Tuttle wins medal	page 12

Computer I.D. Poll

The computerized ID system introduced in the dining halls this fall has received a mixed reaction from the student body, according to a poll conducted by the Record last weekend. The questions and answers are printed below.

The most often repeated complaint was the paucity of board options under the new system. John Eagan '84 "was hoping that they could use the system to make a wider variety of meal plans." As for impersonality, some find just the opposite. Brooks Clark '82 told the Record, "It's kind of fun talking to the ladies when the machine doesn't work." Most students, however, expressed indifference. Tim Curran '83 had a typical comment: "It doesn't matter to me whether it's impersonal or not. I just want to get in and eat."

	yes	no
1) Are you in favor of the new system?	74	40
2) If you were convinced that the system cut costs to the student, would you be in favor of the system? (asked only to negative respondents of no. 1)	26	13
3) Have you experienced longer waiting lines in the dining halls as a result of the new system?	44	61
4) Do you find the new system to be impersonal?	46	73

isher" or from a fear of burdening overworked professors. Guest meals are rarely utilized for their intended purpose of student/faculty interaction, and faculty retreat within the shelter of fellow professors.

In another, more crippling trend, there is a loss of trust between students and faculty. Two major final exams were stolen last year, the most in recent memory, and ever larger numbers of students are brought before the Honor and Discipline Committee for cheating. The Honor Code is ignored by faculty, who disregard it, and by students who abuse it.

The physical and psychological changes buffeting this campus exemplify Williams' development as a more centralized institution.

The economics of the times have forced the College to deal with problems usually associated with larger, less personal universities. As a result, Williams' greatest asset, its personal touch, is looking more and more like an endangered species. From the elimination of Row House dining to cooler student/faculty relations, the changes are increasingly disturbing.

We do not mean to be unrealistic. There are those who would argue that small classes, personal trust, and a sense of community are things of the past; inappropriate to the real world. Yet the real world is what we make it, as Class Speaker Mike Sardo '81 reminded us in June. We can preserve a sense of community at Williams only if we are willing to reconsider our direction. We must seek out each other and learn from one another. We must trust one another more, yet before we can be trusted we must be trustworthy. And, while we recognize the necessity of the financial efficiencies the recent physical changes represent, we urge that in the eagerness to cut costs, the Trustees and administration don't lose sight of the spirit of Williams, the reason we came to this college.

Quote of the Week

"It's never easy to control the College population when the best method we have is the rhythm method."

College President John Chandler at last week's convocation ceremonies

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS

Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS

Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT

Lori Miller

FEATURES

Chris McDermott

LAYOUT

Bob Buckner

LAYOUT ASSISTANTS

Lols Abel

Roland Gallibert

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

Phillip Busch

Sara Ferris

Katya Hokanson

Dan Keating

Jon Tigar

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

Peter Burghardt

Paul Sabbah

AD MANAGER

Katie Miller

OUTLOOK

Priscilla Cohen

Alyson Hagy

SPORTS

Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY

Sue Doherty

Steve Farley

BUSINESS MANAGER

Chris Toub

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. All letters submitted to the RECORD must be typed and should not exceed 250 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters it receives.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA. 01267

Letters

Party Closed Early

To the Editor of the Williams Record

I regret the confusion in signals which led to the abrupt termination of the live music at the Greylock Quad party last Thursday. I was not aware that a live band had been hired to play from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. on a week-day evening. I would not have approved it in advance because it seems impossible to control the decibel level of such groups and, on summer evenings, it is difficult to seal off the building. It seems to me unfair to ask neighbors within a fairly wide radius of the party to forego sleep until one o'clock—particularly unfair on a week-day night. And so I ended the music at 11:30 p.m.

I would like to make it clear that the House officers who planned the party acted in good faith throughout and filed the required party plan well in advance. The confusion was not theirs but mine; in the rush of events which always attends the opening of the academic year, I failed to notice their plan. I understand and regret their frustration and the frustration of those who arrived late to the party, expecting to hear a live group.

Well conducted parties are essential to the life of the College. All-College parties of the type planned for last Thursday are good for student morale. But we live in a small town and need to be sensitive to the rights of others who share the place with us. I'm confident that we can work out some sensible compromises and I will be meeting with House Presidents next week to draw up plans for the present year.

Daniel O'Connor
Dean of the College

Carrels for Two?

To the editors,

Ah, senior year has finally arrived with all its trappings. Convocation robes and a file at OCC. A personal carrel. But... what? The library now politely informs us via an inconspicuous white announcement that "Due to great demand for carrels, students will be expected to do double up. Official Registration is still necessary."

Double up! The thrill is gone. How I looked forward to finding a freshman diligently working on an Econ 101 problem set in my carrel, his eyes filled with fear and awe as I ejected him to work on my Seminar Paper.

Sharing carrels bring all sorts of problems the library staff may never have considered. A whole new kind of etiquette will have to be developed. Who gets the carrel? If you're sharing with a junior or—heavens—a sophomore, you could simply use seniority. However if your carrelmate is a senior—goodness—

Continued on Page 6

Watt's great value to the president right now is that the original Reagan people are mutinous. Here he's appointed a woman to the Supreme Court who isn't 98-100 percent pure on the abortion question. And he's done all these liberal things like cutting taxes. The one thing that kind of keeps these people from mutiny is that at least there's one guy in the administration who's kicking the heck out of little old ladies in tennis shoes who want to save the environment and get mean on oil drilling.

"Watt keeps the original Reagan people from mutiny."

In one sense, he's taking the heat for the president, doing what the president wants done. On the other hand, the president is paying a very heavy price right now through all of Watt's actions.

The conservation movement has always been bipartisan. You look back on all the names in conservation and a good chunk of them are Republicans. These people are leaving the party in droves. There are a lot of people who are appalled that their Republican party is going off to the man who is just plain anti-conservation on all the major issues.

The people around the president are mean and tough, and they look out for the president's welfare. If the day came when Ed Meese decided that Watt was damaging the president pretty badly, I think he might be pulled rather quickly. But I don't see any signs of that now. I see signs that the White House secretly approves of what he's doing. It's enjoying his assaults on environmentalists.

Q: How much influence does Ed Meese have in the White House?

Udall: Next to the president, he's probably the most influential person in Washington. He has the president's ear. The president relies on him, trusts him, and he's very powerful.

Q: What's the future of offshore oil drillings in the U.S.?

Udall: There's never been any argument from people like myself or (former Interior Secretary) Cecil Andrus, that we had to do some drilling. We need oil. What we've got to do is do it in an orderly way. Our Alaska Lands Bill opened up national petroleum reserves that had been sitting there for 50 years, and provided for not governmental, but private drilling. This and other programs were coming along under Andrus and the Carter administration, but I don't think they get credit for them.

Q: There's going to have to be strong Democratic leadership to thwart the Reagan administration's efforts concerning the environment. Do you feel House Speaker Tip O'Neill is able to provide that necessary leadership?

Udall: Tip O'Neill is a top-notch person. I don't think he's been treated too fairly by the press. Tip is an idealist, and he's very effective and he knows how far he can go.

You can go to the well if you're president once, maybe twice, in a term and really get some things done. Reagan did a masterful job by saying, I'm your president, Mr. Southern Democrat, this is the most important vote of my term. We've got to have tax changes, we've got to get this economy straightened out, and by the way, here's some cuff links. He got 40 Democrats to switch sides. Now, you go back next week and say, here I am again, and by the way, I have another vote, and this is the most important of my career, and would you kindly help me. It won't work. He doesn't control these people. It is a false impression that somehow the House of Representatives has held some sort of meeting and voted that Ronald Reagan is now commander-in-chief of the House. These so-called Boll Weevils (Southern Democrats) have constituencies in labor, women's groups, teachers and important minority groups that are going to be heard from. So nobody's sold their souls to Ronald Reagan forever.

Q: Do you think the Republicans will be able to continue as a solid voting block?

Udall: No. The president's going to find 20-30 moderate Republicans around, including John Anderson and Silvio Conte (R-Mass.), who have been good on the environment. They had the most intense pressure put on them to stand firm on this very important (budget/tax) issue. It's very difficult for some of these moderates to be seen in their constituencies as knee-jerk supporters for any wild turkey that Ronald Reagan wants to send to the House. They're looking for opportunities to show they're still progressive and moderate.

Q: There is now focus on cutting from the defense budget. How much do you think will be cut, from what programs

Morris K. Udall, 59, has represented the Tucson district of Arizona in Congress since 1961. As chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and a leading Democrat on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Udall has been instrumental in the development of several pieces of major legislation over the past two decades. His commitments to civil service reform, federal protection of the Alaskan wilderness, and the development of national strip mining regulations have earned Udall the respect of Democrats and Republicans alike. Political analyst Mike Barrone says Udall "is probably the most productive and hardworking legislator on Capitol Hill."

Following receipt of his law degree from the University of Arizona, Udall served in the Air Force for the duration of World War II. He then played a season of professional basketball with the Denver Nuggets in 1948-49 before establishing an active law practice.

technician work. Or a new non-commissioned officers club to help retain some of these people. I would tilt toward the inexpensive, small things that add on to the military budget, rather than a B-1 bomber, which is a turkey. We voted it out several times several years ago, and now they're trying to resurrect it.

Q: What's your feeling on the MX missile proposals?

Udall: We can't find one plan everyone agrees with, but we've got to come up with some kind of basic mode. If we're going to have intercontinental missiles, and I guess we have to have them, they ought to be willing to modernize them from time to time. We've got to find a way to deploy them. The race track table is out. The senators from Nevada and Utah, the biggest hawks in town, have said, not here, put it somewhere else.

Of all the Rube Goldberg schemes, I think the one that probably has the best chance is the small submarine deployment. You'd get a lot less flak doing that than trying to put missile fields in somebody's backyard.

"Nobody's sold their soul to Reagan forever."

Q: What's the outlook of the proposed nuclear waste storage bill going through your committee?

Udall: We should get something done on it this year. About a year ago, in my office, I had the Sierra Club and the nuclear industry. They both agreed, for totally different rationale, that we needed a nuclear waste bill.

If you shut down every nuclear plant in America this afternoon, and, tomorrow, dumped all the nuclear warheads in the Pacific Ocean, you'd still have 35 years of waste sitting on your doorstep, and not a damn thing can be done about it.

What I'd like to do with nuclear is start a process, and a timetable, and have the president identify five sites, for example, by a certain time. States would be involved in the decision to a degree with low-level waste stuff. With high-level, it's so dangerous, and we know so little about it, it's really got to be done by the federal government.

I hope we can put it in a retrievable type storage. There's granite in Michigan and Wisconsin that hasn't moved for two million years and has no water penetrating very deep. There's salt mines in New Mexico and Kansas.

Q: What's your feeling about the nomination of Sandra O'Connor (a fellow Arizonan) to the Supreme Court, and of the Court in general?

Udall: I'm worried about the Supreme Court. It's increasingly conservative and there isn't a damn thing I can do about it.

Sandra O'Connor is a great woman. I testified in her behalf. For Reagan, this is a political masterstroke. Of all the interest groups, probably women and the feminist movement were more suspicious and more anti-Reagan than any other group in America. With one blow, he's defused that. Reagan said he would appoint a woman and he did.

Photography by
the Record
photo staff

The play features an all-star cast headlined by Frank Lan-remained remarkably inconspicuous throughout the performance; a thoughtful effort by

ARTS • ARTS • ARTS • A

Nabokov Film

On Tuesday, September 15, "Vladimir Nabokov," a 30-minute interview with the author, will be shown in the Stetson Media classroom. The showings, which are being held in conjunction with English 367, will be at 4 and 7:30 P.M.

Young Artist Concert

The first Young Artist Con-

Concerts

Fri., Sept. 18 NRBQ, Stage West, W. Hartford
J.B. Hutto, Rahar's, Northampton
Edgar Winter & Rick Derringer Band, J. B. Scott's, Albany
Gary U.S. Bonds, West Hall Auditorium, RPI
Sat., Sept. 19—The Night-hawks, J. B. Scott's, Albany
Southside Johnny & Joe Perry Project, Field House, Plattsburg State College
NRBQ, Joyous Lake, Woodstock, NY
"Ail-Star Jazz Festival" with Chick Corea, Pat Metheny, John Abercrombie, Karl Berger, Dave Holland, Dewey Redman, etc.
Creative Music Studios, near Woodstock
Sun., Sept. 20—Sweet Honey in the Rock, John M. Greene Hall, Smith College
Mon., Sept. 21—Widespread Jazz Orchestra vs. Valley Big Band, Academy of Music, Northampton
Fri., Sept. 25—Peter Tosh, Civic Ctr., Springfield Blue Oyster Cult & Foghat, Glenns Falls Civic Ctr.

cert of the season will be held on Friday, September 18 at 8:30 in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Veda Zuponic, pianist, will present Beethoven's Sonata in A flat Major, Schumann's Kreisleriana, Rachmaninoff's Prelude in E flat minor, two Etudes by Scriabin, and Liszt's Venezia e Napoli. Admission is free.

Griffin Hall Concert

The Griffin Hall Concert Series kicks off its 1981 season this Friday, September 19 at the Clark Art Institute Auditorium. Judith Relchert, soprano, Janet Geroulo, flute and Victor Hill, harpsichord will present a program which will include three Handel arias for soprano with flute, songs by Purcell, Debussy, Faure, and Wolf, and flute works of Mozart and Pulenc. The concert, which begins at 8:30, is free and open to the public.

The Williams College Dance Society, in conjunction with the art department, area studies program and the religion department, is sponsoring the residency of Indrani and Sukanya, two classical Indian Dancers. On Sunday, Sept. 20 at 8:30 in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, the pair will present a lecture-demonstration on "Feminine Images in the Myth, Art and Dance of India." The following evening at 8:30, the two will perform classical dances of India. Both programs are free.

Indrani and Sukanya have delighted audiences all over the world with their program of four styles of Indian classical dance which the New York Times has called "One of the most brilliant and joyful presentations of Indian dance."

Indrani, the foremost disciple of Bharata Natyam Guru, has been dancing since the age of five and has performed on all five continents. She has taught Indian dance at Juillard, Harvard, SUNY at Purchase, Brooklyn College, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival and New York University.

Sukanya carries on her family tradition of dancing. She was trained by her mother at a very early age and later accepted a scholarship to study with Martha Graham in New York before returning to Indian dancing.

Indrani and Sukanya have performed at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, the New York Dance Festival and at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts where they shared a concert with the internationally known Indian musician, Ravi Shankar. They have been chosen to participate in the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Touring Program and have just been awarded a grant by the National Endowment for support of their work in the coming year.

Continued on Page 6

Congratulations Benjamin Goldberg.
You won free all required texts we handle at the only store that offers this boon.

Renzi's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

MOON CHILD LEATHER

THE JEWELERS SUN

If you Love the Smell of Leather and
the Gleam of Fine Jewelry

115 Water St., Williamstown, Mass.
Tues.-Sun. 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

458-5898 458-3270

WELCOME CLASS OF 1985

GEORGE M. HOPKINS CO.
66-70 SPRING ST.

GEORGE M. HOPKINS CO. would like to welcome you to our community. We at Hopkins have been serving WILLIAMS students since 1886 - 91 years of satisfaction. This year we invite you to stop by and select your collegiate needs. Check those you need and see us immediately!

<input type="checkbox"/> Towels & face cloths	<input type="checkbox"/> All bedding needs
<input type="checkbox"/> Study lamps	<input type="checkbox"/> Pillows, blankets, sheets, bedspreads
<input type="checkbox"/> G.E. light bulbs	<input type="checkbox"/> Barware - Glasses
<input type="checkbox"/> Electrical fixtures	<input type="checkbox"/> Mirrors - small & full length
<input type="checkbox"/> Extension cords	<input type="checkbox"/> Waste baskets
<input type="checkbox"/> Small appliances	<input type="checkbox"/> Lamp shades
<input type="checkbox"/> Hot pots & cookware	<input type="checkbox"/> Window shades - measured & installed
<input type="checkbox"/> Coffee makers	<input type="checkbox"/> Rental supplies for first party
<input type="checkbox"/> Iron & Ironing Boards	<input type="checkbox"/> Scatter rugs
<input type="checkbox"/> Coat Hangers	<input type="checkbox"/> Kitchen tools
<input type="checkbox"/> Unfinished furniture	<input type="checkbox"/> Alarm clocks
bookcases, nightstands	<input type="checkbox"/> Ashtrays

Ask about our WATER and AIR beds!

You will find us next to the Williamstown National Bank.

SPECIAL SALE

DOORS 1st LP	$3.99
Talking Heads
"More Songs About Buildings"	3.99
Pete Townshend "Empty Glass"	3.99
J. Geils Band "Best of . . . Two"	3.99
"The Magnificent 7" Reggae dub collection
with I Roy, Big Youth, etc.	2.99
The Who "Quadrophenia" sound track	3.99

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street - 458-5229 Open 10-6

DELI

affected by wide-scale corruption. There are serious internal squabbles over the order of succession. Outside of the royal family, tribal factions are restrained by pay-offs from the kingdom's immense oil revenues. The large number of foreigners and minorities in Saudi society, as well as the emerging class of technocrats educated abroad, contribute to the instability of the government. It thus seems pure folly for the U.S. to transfer a large quantity of its highest quality weapons to the feudal kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

the Saudis capitalizing on the panics which occurred when the Shah fell and Iran stopped exporting oil to the West, and when Soviet troops marched into Afghanistan. This type of behavior is expected and understandable in a business-type relationship. Saudi Arabia's "moderation," like its aversion, occurs when such policy is in Saudi self-interest.

Reagan can create a pro-Western alliance in the Middle East without this arms sale. The primary task in formulating a comprehensive policy is to convince Saudi Arabia, as well as Jordan, to join the Camp David peace process. To date, Saudi Arabia has aligned with the radical Arab states (Syria, Libya, Iraq, etc.) and rejected the peace treaty signed in Washington two years ago. It is also in the doubt that the oil fields are critical to the U.S. economy, but their security will not necessarily be assured by the delivery of more American-made AWACS. Their security, in fact, might be endangered.

Reagan's proposal to sell the Saudis AWACS, F-15 offensive equipment, missiles and ground radar stations represents one of the largest arms deals in history. Saudi Arabia is already receiving sixty F-15 planes and there are presently four AWACS in the region. How many more weapons must the U.S. prostitute before another Persian Gulf fiasco leads to yet another round of arms sales? At the risk of sounding trite, I urge you to express your views on this important matter to your Congressman and to both of your Senators before the vote is taken.

Miriam Sapiro '82

would have tary from
"The n councils plant but

Secu

by

Assign cific par marks a used for last year
Accord Director decided to tem last y could par lots. How ble arran of cars in well as n dents par areas.

"I got a tion last
"Students flooded

an executive secretary in the Dean's Office. The main purpose of these visits would not be to supervise and reinforce semester as follows: $100 fund, $500 fund, and $200 fund, which would

Security revises

Robert McLean

g student cars to spending lots this year return to a procedure several years prior to g to Ransom Jenks, Security, the College implement a new system by which students in any of the campus ever, this more flexible ment led to a flood the inner campus as many instances of stalling in non-student spaces.

Many been of parked week of Office a dents th effect. tickets, heard " system. "It's any rea would be distributed s: $5 to the damage into house treasuries,

T

the advisory councils, uld also control cultu-parking

ickets have already tributed to illegally ars during the first chool, as the Security
empts to show the stu-
the new system is in espite the deluge of enks thus far has reaction" to the new

Comm
also in final r time to memb

The Clothes T

...e Council President Nathan '83 has invited to meet with the Council September to discuss rt.

...en Merrigan '82, chairman Housing Committee, mer committee to be "a oice" in discussing the and offering alternative ns. She believes that rd report "pinpointed problems in the housing

...itch-Currier Ad-hoc ee on Residential Life nds to respond to the ort, but "has not had rganize," according to Merrigan.

NOW AVAILABLE FOR FALL 1967

The Zeta Psi Fraternity of North America previously had a chapter at Washington State. It continues its interest in this field of education. Zeta Psi has available a scholarship for qualified William F. Zetser (son of Lt. F. S.N.R.), a Zeta Psi member of the 1930 college class, who lost his life in the Korean War. Interested students are invited to Zeta Psi's New York Headquarters for information and an application.

Zeta Psi Educational Foundation
500 Fifth Avenue, Suite 1000
New York, New York 10017

Welcome to Washington

Free Plant! with

BLE
81 America, having Williams College,
the educational a unique as students
Kendall Mitchell of the Williams his life in World encouraged to headquarters for Foundation te 830
10110

Williams!

$5.00 purchase

for

Miller & Lite — $38.00 & $23.50
Lowenbrau — $47.80 & $25.50

Music in the Round

Continued from Page 5

in this totally earthbound performance.

Things looked up with Honegger's Sonatine for two violins. This early work by the fine Swiss contemporary symphonist presages his mature skill with counterpoint and strident harmony, but also reflects his unwilling early association with Satie and his disciples. Here, the level of ensemble playing was better, with effective shadings of expression and plenty of singing line. Still, Honegger is not very pleasing to a first-time listener, as is the general case with modern music.

Schubert's Symphony No. 9 for piano and strings is a stupendous work, one of the popular favorites of every concertgoer. The excellent music is full of tribute to the great voices of the past, and the use of the orchestra is a catalog of the possibilities of the instrument. The playing is superb, and the relationship between the orchestra and the soloist is a demand for perfection. The result is a masterpiece of the charged music of the 19th century.

Four series of muscle

Schumann's Quintet in E flat for piano and strings made a stupendous finale. This work is popular among musicians, not for everything going for it: consistent melodic spark, creative distribution of notes to the separate voices, rhythmic pizzazz, and the use of strict sonata form as a catalyst, not as a restraint. The players responded appropriately to all the musical demands of the piece, and the result was the kind of highly charged entertainment that can make a weekend.

Four concerts remain in the series, scattered throughout the

Continued from Page 2

what to do? Perhaps we could settle in an I-got-my-ke before-you-did basis. Unfortunately, this method is not favored by the poor latecomer. Maybe I-got-to-it-before-you-did method might work. But the poor sports-minded scholar, fresh from the showers and fed after a long practice, would be consistentlyaced out. Maybe we could decide on a GPA basis, you know, mine's-lower-than-yours-I-need-it-more.

What about my treasured personal belongings? My mother might use a Kleenex or—ugh!—drink from my plastic William

Consequently, the receiving area will receive a 10 percent decal with the year, which of course they must pay an annual $500 fee to change. Most of the assigned houses, the the Missions tennis courts, the Mission F. houses with seven spaces, many lots, and determined tly, students regis- cars this year will additional parking a letter signifying In e nine campus lots park their car. The parking fee remains from last year. students have been the lot nearest their large Greylock lot or Park lot near the ts, for example. In rk, each of the four also be given six or s in the closer Infrir- and the house will who receives those

DESIGNER CLOTHES
AT DISCOUNT PRICES
for Men, Women and Teen

Spring Street
Williamstown
thru Sat. 10-5:30

96 Water St.
Open Sundays, Too!

At The Cottage.
Your decorating center for bedspreads, rugs,
pillows and baskets.

the
COTTAGE

duke Fuqua School of Business

A representative of the Fuqua School of Business will be on campus Thursday, October 1, to discuss the Duke MBA Program. Interested students may obtain further information by contacting the Office of Career Counseling.

The Record will run classifieds at 25¢ per line. Deadlines are 4:00 p.m. Wednesdays and Sundays. Total amount due must accompany this form. Mail or bring in person to Classifieds, The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Mass. 01267.

[illegible]

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

Save 40-57% at
The Williams News and Supply Room
on New York Times and Boston Globe subscriptions

Check out our line of . . .

- School Supplies (large selection of notebooks)
- Laundry Products
- Cookies, Candy, etc.
- Magazines
- Cigarettes
- Miscellaneous Items

DISCOUNT FILM DEVELOPMENT

We extend a warm welcome to the incoming Freshmen and to the returning upperclassmen of WILLIAMS COLLEGE.

PLANT SALE at Town & Country Flowers

On SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19 a truck filled with plants will be parked at Town & Country Flowers. Prices will be at an all time low! Come and take your pick of hanging, flowering and all-sized house plants. PLUS! Roses in assorted colors at 50¢ a piece.

Town & Country Flowers

458-5030

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 1

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

SEPTEMBER 15, 1981

Udall says "grow slow"

by Philip Busch & Susan Kandel

Representative Morris K. Udall urged a policy of caution concerning scientific and technological growth in his keynote address at the 1981 Fall Convocation last Saturday.

Speaking to a capacity crowd in Chaplin Hall, the Arizona Congressman focused on the Convocation theme of energy in a speech entitled "Energy, Environment and Economics for the '80's."

Udall began by drawing attention to the mood of skepticism prevalent in the country brought on by a decade of low economic growth as well as such spectacular failures of high technology as Agent Orange and Three Mile Island.

He cited the Three Mile Island disaster as an example of our faulty attitude toward technology. He contrasted the plant's safeguards against plane crashes and earthquakes with control room personnel who were insufficiently trained, calling it a case of looking "too much at the big picture and not enough at the little things."

Udall applied the same reasoning to nuclear weaponry, admitting that while "we should be worried about the Soviets," a bigger problem is nuclear proliferation.

"I worry about nuclear weapons getting into the hands of unstable rulers like Idi Amin, the Ayatollah Khomeini, or Khaddafi . . . I worry about another Hitler arising in the next twenty years," he said.

Udall sharply criticized Secretary of Interior James Watt, saying that putting him in charge of America's natural resources was "like giving the key of the chicken coop to Harlan Sanders." Udall urged cautious development, claiming that "we can have rational and sensible development but also preserve our environment . . . We may have to go slower, not doing all that science can do."

He noted incidents of this already, citing the abandonment of the SST project. He predicted the same for nuclear power, stating that "expansion of nuclear power will be difficult until Americans are convinced of its safety."

The congressman also criticized President Reagan's economic policies, claiming that his tax and spending cuts would benefit large corporations, especially those bent on mergers, rather than the average citizen. He attacked use of funds for "merger capital" rather than spending for research and development. The Reagan Administration is "changing the slogan 'power to the people' to 'power to the (following) people,' followed by a short list of names," said Udall.

Udall defined "the best leaders" as "combining the best of the liberal and conservative impulses. We can't go back to

Continued on Page 8

Above: several students get checked at Baxter by the new computerized I.D. system. The computer will eliminate stolen meals, and will therefore allow Food Service to offer board options. (Tantimedh)

Food Service installs computer I.D. system

by Jon Tigar

The Williams College Food Service has taken a plunge into the computer age this fall with the introduction of a computerized identification system. The new system aims to reduce the number of students who eat meals for which they have not paid or who bring guests in free.

The system cost about $40,000 to install and will pay for itself in two years or less, Director of Food Service Ross Keller estimated.

"The producers of these systems estimate that the introduction of this system will save 2 percent of gross income per year," Keller said that 300-400 schools now use similar systems and that "interest is on the rise."

In addition, said Keller, "We can now offer board options," by eliminating the problem of purloined meals. "The old system could not be enforced and so we could not offer options," he explained.

The system works in the following way. Each student is given an ID card with a personal number on the back and the computer symbol for the number. An additional copy is filed with both Food Service and the Business Office.

When a student enters the dining hall, his card is fed into a "reader," which checks the computer's memory to see how many meals the student has left on his plan. The reader then "passes" or "falls" the student. If the computer is unable to read or locate a student's number, the reader shows "error."

The computer, which is programmed from the Food Service office in Baxter Hall, keeps tabs on how many meals each student has eaten, and where and when he has eaten.

Some students have complained that the system is impersonal. Keller responds, "I think the system is different only in that a student can no longer 'flash' the card; he must present the card. This is not because the school is trying to get mean, or get tough; the

Continued on Page 8

Continued on Page 10

Many seniors wore white armbands at the Convocation (above) to protest the recent South African military incursion in Angola. Below, Representative Morris Udall tosses barbs at Reagan Administration officials in his convocation address to the Class of '82. (Farley)

Panel looks to new energy sources

by Jeffrey H. Bralnard

Explaining the need for more development of new "soft" energy alternatives such as solar, hydroelectric, and synthetic energy, seven local and national authorities convened last Friday night for the 1981 Convocation entitled, "Energy: Pathways and Dilemmas: The 80's and beyond."

The panel was moderated by Professor Thomas C. Jorling, Director of the Center for Environmental Studies, and included

David Freeman, commissioner of the Tennessee Valley Authority; Walter E. Massey, director of the Argonne National Laboratory; Amory B. Lovins, physicist and advisor to Friends of the Earth; Robert O. Anderson, chairman of the board of Atlantic-Richfield; Professor William R. Moomaw, Williams Chemistry Department; and Congressman Morris K. Udall of Arizona.

Jorling began by emphasizing that energy use and projected energy consumption are actually falling. "Even without lifestyle change, energy demand in the year 2000 will be significantly lower than today," he said, adding that U.S. oil consumption is down 6% from last year, and current projections for energy demand in the year 2000 are half of what they were in 1972.

"There is more reason for optimism about energy sources now than could possibly have been foreseen two or three years ago," Anderson said. He mentioned some of the new discoveries of major oil reserves around the world.

But Lovins stressed that finding more sources of energy is not necessarily the solution. "That's like shopping for the cheapest brandy to run your car. There's no demand for energy per se—only for the services it gives us. So we ought to start at the usage end—what tasks do we want energy for?—and then use the most cost-effective technology in those tasks." He claimed that 98% of dining hall lines and less Row House unity as a result of this decision.

"I haven't seen any problems, but we are serving twice as many people," remarked an I.D. checker at the Greylock dining hall, where most Row House residents are now eating. "Student flow varies, so sometimes it gets crowded." A Greylock student was more critical: "The lines are horrid and the noise level is unbelievable. You can't even hear yourself speak."

A common complaint among Row House sophomores is a lack of opportunity to meet other house residents, especially those in other buildings. "I don't feel a part of the house," commented one student. "This dining system doesn't promote house unity."

Although the Gifford report urged Row Houses to eat together at specific times, Perry President Tim Caffrey

Continued on Page 8

Students resent dining plan

by Sara Ferris

The Committee on Student Residential Life's recommendation to immediately eliminate Row House dining was accepted by President John Chandler and instituted over the summer. Affected students returned to complain of long

Inside the Record

Outlook Interviews
Udall	page 3
Photo essay	page 4
"Sherlock" reviewed	page 5
Parking changes	page 7
Tuttle wins medal	page 12

Computer I.D. Poll

The computerized ID system introduced in the dining halls this fall has received a mixed reaction from the student body, according to a poll conducted by the Record last weekend. The questions and answers are printed below.

The most often repeated complaint was the paucity of board options under the new system. John Eagan '84 "was hoping that they could use the system to make a wider variety of meal plans."

As for impersonality, some find just the opposite. Brooks Clark '82 told the Record, "It's kind of fun talking to the ladies when the machine doesn't work." Most students, however, expressed indifference. Tim Curran '83 had a typical comment: "It doesn't matter to me whether it's impersonal or not. I just want to get in and eat."

	yes	no
1) Are you in favor of the new system?	74	40
2) If you were convinced that the system cut costs to the student, would you be in favor of the system? (asked only to negative respondents of no. 1)	26	13
3) Have you experienced longer waiting lines in the dining halls as a result of the new system?	44	61
4) Do you find the new system to be impersonal?	46	73

Changing Attitudes

Summers are always a period of change for Williams, but this past summer has seen changes which affect not only the outward appearance, but also the inner character of our ivied tower. These changes, when seen as part of a more serious deterioration in physical plant, faculty/student relations, and the general community attitude, should force us to examine whether Williams still maintains the quality of life and education on which it has based its national reputation.

When students returned this fall, they were greeted by a new dining computer, longer lines in the remaining dining halls, and new parking regulations. Even more discouraging was the record-high enrollment. Every year the freshman class gets larger and larger; now 12 freshmen must be squeezed into the infirmary. Classes are correspondingly larger as enrollment rises while the number of classes remains constant or even declines. Students and professors find it harder to really get to know one another, much less enjoy the dialogue James Garfield envisioned.

Attitudes are changing too. Over the past year, faculty/student interaction has declined alarmingly. Students are afraid to become friendly with professors either for fear of being labeled an "apple polisher" or from a fear of burdening overworked professors. Guest meals are rarely utilized for their intended purpose of student/faculty interaction, and faculty retreat within the shelter of fellow professors.

In another, more crippling trend, there is a loss of trust between students and faculty. Two major final exams were stolen last year, the most in recent memory, and ever larger numbers of students are brought before the Honor and Discipline Committee for cheating. The Honor Code is ignored by faculty, who disregard it, and by students who abuse it.

The physical and psychological changes buffeting this campus exemplify Williams' development as a more centralized institution.

The economics of the times have forced the College to deal with problems usually associated with larger, less personal universities. As a result, Williams' greatest asset, its personal touch, is looking more and more like an endangered species. From the elimination of Row House dining to cooler student/faculty relations, the changes are increasingly disturbing.

We do not mean to be unrealistic. There are those who would argue that small classes, personal trust, and a sense of community are things of the past; inappropriate to the real world. Yet the real world is what we make it, as Class Speaker Mike Sardo '81 reminded us in June. We can preserve a sense of community at Williams only if we are willing to reconsider our direction. We must seek out each other and learn from one another. We must trust one another more, yet before we can be trusted we must be trustworthy. And, while we recognize the necessity of the financial efficiencies the recent physical changes represent, we urge that in the eagerness to cut costs, the Trustees and administration don't lose sight of the spirit of Williams, the reason we came to this college.

Quote of the Week

"It's never easy to control the College population when the best method we have is the rhythm method."

College President John Chandler at last week's convocation ceremonies

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS
Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT
Lori Miller

FEATURES
Chris McDermott

LAYOUT
Bob Buckner

LAYOUT ASSISTANTS
Lois Abel
Roland Gallibert

ASSOCIATE EDITORS
Phillip Busch
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson
Dan Keating
Jon Tiger

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS
Peter Burghardt
Paul Sabbah

AD MANAGER
Katie Miller

OUTLOOK
Priscilla Cohen
Alyson Hagy

SPORTS
Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY
Sue Doherty
Steve Farley

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Toub

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. All letters submitted to the RECORD must be typed and should not exceed 250 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters it receives.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letters

Party Closed Early

To the Editor of the Williams Record

I regret the confusion in signals which led to the abrupt termination of the live music at the Greylock Quad party last Thursday. I was not aware that a live band had been hired to play from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. on a week-day evening. I would not have approved it in advance because it seems impossible to control the decibel level of such groups and, on summer evenings, it is difficult to seal off the building. It seems to me unfair to ask neighbors within a fairly wide radius of the party to forego sleep until one o'clock—particularly unfair on a week-day night. And so I ended the music at 11:30 p.m.

I would like to make it clear that the House officers who planned the party acted in good faith throughout and filed the required party plan well in advance. The confusion was not theirs but mine; in the rush of events which always attends the opening of the academic year, I failed to notice their plan. I understand and regret their frustration and the frustration of those who arrived late to the party, expecting to hear a live group.

Well conducted parties are essential to the life of the College. All-College parties of the type planned for last Thursday are good for student morale. But we live in a small town and need to be sensitive to the rights of others who share the place with us. I'm confident that we can work out some sensible compromises and I will be meeting with House Presidents next week to draw up plans for the present year.

Daniel O'Connor
Dean of the College

Carrels for Two?

To the editors,

Ah, senior year has finally arrived with all its trappings. Convocation robes and a file at OCC. A personal carrel. But... what? The library now politely informs us via an inconspicuous white announcement that "Due to great demand for carrels, students will be expected to do double up. Official Registration is still necessary."

Double up! The thrill is gone. How I looked forward to finding a freshman diligently working on an Econ 101 problem set in my carrel, his eyes filled with fear and awe as I ejected him to work on my Seminar Paper.

Sharing carrels bring all sorts of problems the library staff may never have considered. A whole new kind of etiquette will have to be developed. Who gets the carrel? If you're sharing with a junior or—heavens—a sophomore, you could simply use seniority. However if your carrelmate is a senior—goodness—

Continued on Page 6

Udall predicts low Wattage for environmental causes

Edited by Eric Schmitt

Before Convocation Saturday, the RECORD editors, and other members of the media, met with Congressman Morris K. Udall to discuss pertinent political, environmental and energy-related topics.

In the past few weeks you have been at odds with Interior Secretary James Watt. Do you feel Secretary Watt is a liability to the Reagan administration?

Udall: Well, yes and no. In one sense, he's playing a very important role. The great burning question is, is he doing this on his own? Is he a loose cannon? Are all these ideas his ideas? Is it kind of painful to the president to have him doing it? Or, as I'm inclined to believe, does the president appreciate what he's doing, and like to have him out in front, taking all the heat, but doing things they both agree on.

The president can't have it both ways. Watt's great value to the president right now is that the original Reagan people are mutinous. Here he's appointed a woman to the Supreme Court who isn't 98-100 percent pure on the abortion question. And he's done all these liberal things like cutting taxes. The one thing that kind of keeps these people from mutiny is that at least there's one guy in the administration who's kicking the heck out of little old ladies in tennis shoes who want to save the environment and get mean on oil drilling.

"Watt keeps the original Reagan people from mutiny."

In one sense, he's taking the heat for the president, doing what the president wants done. On the other hand, the president is paying a very heavy price right now through all of Watt's actions.

The conservation movement has always been bipartisan. You look back on all the names in conservation and a good chunk of them are Republicans. These people are leaving the party in droves. There are a lot of people who are appalled that their Republican party is going off to the man who is just plain anti-conservation on all the major issues.

The people around the president are mean and tough, and they look out for the president's welfare. If the day came when Ed Meese decided that Watt was damaging the president pretty badly, I think he might be pulled rather quickly. But I don't see any signs of that now. I see signs that the White House secretly approves of what he's doing. It's enjoying his assaults on environmentalists.

Q: How much influence does Ed Meese have in the White House?

Udall: Next to the president, he's probably the most influential person in Washington. He has the president's ear. The president relies on him, trusts him, and he's very powerful.

Q: What's the future of offshore oil drillings in the U.S.?

Udall: There's never been any argument from people like myself or (former Interior Secretary) Cecil Andrus, that we had to do some drilling. We need oil. What we've got to do is do it in an orderly way. Our Alaska Lands Bill opened up national petroleum reserves that had been sitting there for 50 years, and provided for not governmental, but private drilling. This and other programs were coming along under Andrus and the Carter administration, but I don't think they get credit for them.

Q: There's going to have to be strong Democratic leadership to thwart the Reagan administration's efforts concerning the environment. Do you feel House Speaker Tip O'Neill is able to provide that necessary leadership?

Udall: Tip O'Neill is a top-notch person. I don't think he's been treated too fairly by the press. Tip is an idealist, and he's very effective and he knows how far he can go.

You can go to the well if you're president once, maybe twice, in a term and really get some things done. Reagan did a masterful job by saying, I'm your president, Mr. Southern Democrat, this is the most important vote of my term. We've got to have tax changes, we've got to get this economy straightened out, and by the way, here's some cuff links. He got 40 Democrats to switch sides. Now, you go back next week and say, here I am again, and by the way, I have another vote, and this is the most important of my career, and would you kindly help me. It won't work. He doesn't control these people. It is a false impression that somehow the House of Representatives has held some sort of meeting and voted that Ronald Reagan is now commander-in-chief of the House. These so-called Boll Weevils (Southern Democrats) have constituencies in labor, women's groups, teachers and important minority groups that are going to be heard from. So nobody's sold their souls to Ronald Reagan forever.

Q: Do you think the Republicans will be able to continue as a solid voting block?

Udall: No. The president's going to find 20-30 moderate Republicans around, including John Anderson and Silvio Conte (R-Mass.), who have been good on the environment. They had the most intense pressure put on them to stand firm on this very important (budget-tax) issue. It's very difficult for some of these moderates to be seen in their constituencies as knee-jerk supporters for any wild turkey that Ronald Reagan wants to send to the House. They're looking for opportunities to show they're still progressive and moderate.

Q: There is now focus on cutting from the defense budget. How much do you think will be cut, from what programs

Morris K. Udall, 59, has represented the Tucson district of Arizona in Congress since 1961. As chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and a leading Democrat on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Udall has been instrumental in the development of several pieces of major legislation over the past two decades. His commitments to civil service reform, federal protection of the Alaskan wilderness, and the development of national strip mining regulations have earned Udall the respect of Democrats and Republicans alike. Political analyst Mike Barrone says Udall "is probably the most productive and hardworking legislator on Capitol Hill."

Following receipt of his law degree from the University of Arizona, Udall served in the Air Force for the duration of World War II. He then played a season of professional basketball with the Denver Nuggets in 1948-49 before establishing an active law practice.

and what types of effect might it have?

Udall: There's a bitter fight going on that hasn't been resolved. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is determined to spend a lot more than (Office of Management and Budget Director) David Stockman would like to. The whole administration is in very bad trouble unless lower budget cuts are made now, this fall, before we go. Otherwise, there is going to be a $75 billion to $95 billion deficit in the budget. This would drive interest rates up, and it could be an economic disaster. Stockman recognizes that you can't go back for a second cut on civilian programs.

So what we're going to have to do is really get cost effective. You say to the generals, here's $50 billion for the fiscal year, and they'll come back with a fancy, new sophisticated scheme of some sort: a brand new tank that costs $1 million - $3 million, when what you need is more pay for technicians who can make a helicopter work. Or a new non-commissioned officers club to help retain some of these people. I would tilt toward the inexpensive, small things that add on to the military budget, rather than a B-1 bomber, which is a turkey. We voted it out several times several years ago, and now they're trying to resurrect it.

Q: What's your feeling on the MX missile proposals?

Udall: We can't find one plan everyone agrees with, but we've got to come up with some kind of basic mode. If we're going to have intercontinental missiles, and I guess we have to have them, they ought to be willing to modernize them from time to time. We've got to find a way to deploy them. The race track table is out. The senators from Nevada and Utah, the biggest hawks in town, have said, not here, put it somewhere else.

Of all the Rube Goldberg schemes, I think the one that probably has the best chance is the small submarine deployment. You'd get a lot less flak doing that than trying to put missile fields in somebody's backyard.

"Nobody's sold their soul to Reagan forever."

Q: What's the outlook of the proposed nuclear waste storage bill going through your committee?

Udall: We should get something done on it this year. About a year ago, in my office, I had the Sierra Club and the nuclear industry. They both agreed, for totally different rationale, that we needed a nuclear waste bill.

If you shut down every nuclear plant in America this afternoon, and, tomorrow, dumped all the nuclear warheads in the Pacific Ocean, you'd still have 35 years of waste sitting on your doorstep, and not a damn thing can be done about it.

What I'd like to do with nuclear is start a process, and a timetable, and have the president identify five sites, for example, by a certain time. States would be involved in the decision to a degree with low-level waste stuff. With high-level, it's so dangerous, and we know so little about it, it's really got to be done by the federal government.

I hope we can put it in a retrievable type storage. There's granite in Michigan and Wisconsin that hasn't moved for two million years and has no water penetrating very deep. There's salt mines in New Mexico and Kansas.

Q: What's your feeling about the nomination of Sandra O'Connor (a fellow Arizonan) to the Supreme Court, and of the Court in general?

Udall: I'm worried about the Supreme Court. It's increasingly conservative and there isn't a damn thing I can do about it.

Sandra O'Connor is a great woman. I testified in her behalf. For Reagan, this is a political masterstroke. Of all the interest groups, probably women and the feminist movement were more suspicious and more anti-Reagan than any other group in America. With one blow, he's defused that. Reagan said he would appoint a woman and he did.

Photography by
the Record
photo staff

HBO tapes Sherlock Holmes

by Steve Willard

The Muhammads of Hollywood once again journeyed to the Mountains of the Purple Valley as Home Box Office taped a two-hour, live production of "Sherlock Holmes" in the Adams Memorial Theatre September 4. An edited version of the five act play, which was written in 1899 with the assistance of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, will be shown nationwide by H.B.O. in November.

Set in London in 1891, the play revolves around love letters that first become a weapon for revenge, and later, when seized by villains, for blackmail. Sherlock Holmes is hired to recover the letters, and, at the end of his trail, he encounters his archenemy, Professor Morlarty.

The play features an all-star cast headlined by Frank Langella in the title role. Langella, who debuted on the Williams stage in 1962, turned in a magnificent performance as the inimitable sleuth, although his dashing good looks and unflappable charm may have been more than Conan Doyle envisioned for his character. Veteran actors Stephen Collins, of "The Star Trek Movie" fame, and Susan Clark, who won an Emmy as Best Actress for her performance as Babe Didrikson Zaharias in "Babe," took some of the limelight from Langella through strong supporting performances. All in all, however, "Sherlock" was clearly Langella's show, and it was his skill as an actor which made the performance the success it was.

H.B.O.'s taping equipment remained remarkably inconspicuous throughout the performance; a thoughtful effort by H.B.O. which permitted a truly "live" atmosphere in the theatre. The rapt attention and obvious enjoyment of the audience during the play was not lost on H.B.O.; five cameras routinely scanned the audience.

The performance of "Sherlock Holmes" capped the 26th year of the nationally renowned Williamstown Theatre Festival. Under the direction of Nikos Psacharopoulos, who deserves the lion's share of the credit for the success of the Theatre, such popular actors as Christopher Reeve, Blythe Danner, and Frank Langella performed for sold-out audiences throughout the summer.

Indian dancers to perform

The Williams College Dance Society, in conjunction with the art department, area studies program and the religion department, is sponsoring the residency of Indrani and Sukanya, two classical Indian dancers. On Sunday, Sept. 20 at 8:30 in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, the pair will present a lecture-demonstration on "Feminine Images in the Myth, Art and Dance of India." The following evening at 8:30, the two will perform classical dances of India. Both programs are free.

Indrani and Sukanya have delighted audiences all over the world with their program of four styles of Indian classical dance which the New York Times has called "One of the most brilliant and joyful presentations of Indian dance."

Indrani, the foremost disciple of Bharata Natyama Guru, has been dancing since the age of five and has performed on all five continents. She has taught Indian dance at Juilliard, Harvard, SUNY at Purchase, Brooklyn College, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival and New York University.

Sukanya carries on her family tradition of dancing. She was trained by her mother at a very early age and later accepted a scholarship to study with Martha Graham in New York before returning to Indian dancing.

Indrani and Sukanya have performed at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, the New York Dance Festival and at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts where they shared a concert with the internationally known Indian musician, Ravi Shankar. They have been

ARTS • ARTS • ARTS • A

Nabokov Film

On Tuesday, September 15, "Vladimir Nabokov," a 30-minute interview with the author, will be shown in the Stetson Media classroom. The showings, which are being held in conjunction with English 367, will be at 4 and 7:30 P.M.

Young Artist Concert

The first Young Artist Con-

Concerts

Fri., Sept. 18 NRBQ, Stage West, W. Hartford
J.B. Hutto, Rahar's, Northampton

Edgar Winter & Rick Der-ringer Band, J.B. Scott's, Albany
Gary U.S. Bonds, West Hall Auditorium, RPI

Sat., Sept. 19—The Night-hawks, J.B. Scott's, Albany

Southside Johnny & Joe Perry Project, Field House, Plattsburg State College
NRBQ, Joyous Lake, Woodstock, NY

"All-Star Jazz Festival" with Chick Corea, Pat Metheny, John Abercrombie, Karl Berger, Dave Holland, Dewey Redman, etc.
Creative Music Studios, near Woodstock

Sun., Sept. 20—Sweet Honey in the Rock, John M. Greene Hall, Smith College

Mon., Sept. 21—Widespread Jazz Orchestra vs. Valley Big Band, Academy of Music, Northampton

Fri., Sept. 25—Peter Tosh, Civic Ctr., Springfield Blue Oyster Cult & Foghat, Glenns Falls Civic Ctr.

cert of the season will be held on Friday, September 18 at 8:30 in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Veda Zuponic, pianist, will present Beethoven's Sonata in A flat Major, Schumann's Kreisleriana, Rachmaninoff's Prelude in E flat minor, two Etudes by Scriabin, and Liszt's Venezia e Napoli. Admission is free.

Griffin Hall Concert

The Griffin Hall Concert Series kicks off its 1981 season this Friday, September 19 at the Clark Art Institute Auditorium. Judith Relchert, soprano, Janet Geroulo, flute and Victor Hill, harpsichord will present a program which will include three Handel arias for soprano with flute, songs by Purcell, Debussy, Faure, and Wolf, and flute works of Mozart and Pulenc. The concert, which begins at 8:30, is free and open to the public.

SPECIAL SALE

DOORS 1st LP	$3.99
Talking Heads "More Songs About Buildings"	3.99
Pete Townshend "Empty Glass"	3.99
J. Gells Band "Best of . . . Two"	3.99
"The Magnificent 7" Reggae dub collection with I Roy, Big Youth, etc.	2.99
The Who "Quadrophonia" sound track	3.99

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street • 458-5229 Open 10-6

Music in the Round opens

by Greg Capaldi

Last Thursday night marked the opening concert of Music in the Round, a chamber series directed by Julius Hegyl, music faculty member and director of the Berkshire Symphony. The series is designed to present both the classical and modern repertoire in a basically informal atmosphere (colorful garb instead of concert black, casual stage presence, etc.). The concerts are considered quite worthwhile, despite the generally mixed success of the music, which was the case this time.

The Schubert's group Trío #2 in B flat for strings was; why this straightforward piece gave the players so much trouble is a mystery. Intonation and rhythmic vitality were shrouded in a cloud of imprecision, while melodic contours were often distastefully exaggerated. Above all, Schubert should have the clarity and directness of Mozart, an inconsistent element the coming year.

Continued on Page 6

Sukanya (above) and Indrani will bring their acclaimed classical Indian dance program to Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall Sunday evening.

Congratulations Benjamin Goldberg.
You won free all required texts we handle at the only store that offers this boon.

Renzi's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

MOON CHILD LEATHER

THE JEWELERS SUN

If you Love the Smell of Leather and
the Gleam of Fine Jewelry

115 Water St., Williamstown, Mass.
458-5898 Tues.-Sun. 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. 458-3270

WELCOME CLASS OF 1985

GEORGE M. HOPKINS CO.
66-70 SPRING ST.

GEORGE M. HOPKINS Co. would like to welcome you to our community. We at Hopkins have been serving WILLIAMS students since 1888 - 91 years of satisfaction. This year we invite you to stop by and select your collegiate needs. Check those you need and see us immediately!

<input type="checkbox"/> Towels & face cloths	<input type="checkbox"/> All bedding needs
<input type="checkbox"/> Study lamps	<input type="checkbox"/> Pillows, blankets, sheets, bedspreads
<input type="checkbox"/> G.E. lightbulbs	<input type="checkbox"/> Barware - Glasses
<input type="checkbox"/> Electrical fixtures	<input type="checkbox"/> Mirrors - small & full length
<input type="checkbox"/> Extension cords	<input type="checkbox"/> Washbasinets
<input type="checkbox"/> Small appliances	<input type="checkbox"/> Lamp shades
<input type="checkbox"/> Hot pots & cookware	<input type="checkbox"/> Window shades - measured & installed
<input type="checkbox"/> Coffee makers	<input type="checkbox"/> Rental supplies for first party
<input type="checkbox"/> Iron & Ironing Boards	<input type="checkbox"/> Sealtite rugs
<input type="checkbox"/> Coat Hangers	<input type="checkbox"/> Kitchen tools
<input type="checkbox"/> Unfinished furniture	<input type="checkbox"/> Alarm clocks
<input type="checkbox"/> bookcases, nightstands	<input type="checkbox"/> Ashtrays

Ask about our WATER and ATR beds!

You will find us next to the Williamstown National Bank.

Udall talks at Convocation

Continued from Page 1

the past, but we must go ahead with care." He concluded on an upbeat note, saying that "I may sound gloomy, but I'm optimistic about what this generation can do."

President John Chandler opened the proceedings by welcoming 550 new students and faculty to Williams, including 509 members of the Class of 1985, the largest freshman class in the College's 189-year history.

"We have about 30 more students than planned... It's never easy to control the college population when the best method we have is the rhythm method," he said.

In a more serious vein, Chandler defended the liberal arts ideal, criticizing the "disturbing utilitarian mood" pervading education. He said that education "cheats young people if it merely provides a perishable skill rather than educating for life."

Chandler conferred honorary degrees on Walter E. Massey, director of Argonne National Labs, Amory B. Lovins, physicist and advisor to Friends of the Earth, S. David Freeman, TVA commissioner, Robert O. Anderson, chairman of the board of ARCO, as well as Udall.

With blasting of the rock foundation completed, construction is well under way on the new wing of Lawrence Hall. Unlike past College construction, work at Lawrence has been a minor inconvenience to students living in nearby Fayerweather and Prospect Houses.

Convocation panel

Continued from Page 1

up the available solutions through continual testing and review. People are interested in solving energy problems—why not let them take the initiative?"

However, Freeman cautioned that, as commissioner of the TVA, he had had little success with convincing people of the benefits of conservation. "They're not energy specialists. And we can't refine homes as fast as Lovins suggests."

"The question is whether we believe the current array of technology and people's expectations can be sustained. I think it can't. We need more efficient use of resources, development of renewable energy sources, and public education that we can't produce our way out of the energy crisis."

Massey spoke about the need for government funding of research and development in a number of developing energy technologies. "There is too much risk for the private sector to be interested. The government must fund and conduct the research." He added that political pressures around election time can interfere with long-range, sustained research and development alluding to the Reagan budget cuts.

Massey also discussed the results—oriented pressure on R and D. "One cannot expect specific results by specific dates. Investors expect a return within five years, but the time between the start of research and the commercialization of a new energy source averages 30 years.

"Research and development allows diversity and flexibility of choice," he concluded. "We should avoid entrapment in a particular energy technology."

Moomaw also discussed the need for research and development and conservation incentives, decrying the "energy pork barrel" which many Rand projects have turned out to be. He also discussed the social and political pressures of domestic oil deregulation. Over the next 10 years, $106 billion in royalties will accrue to the treasuries of four states: Alaska, Texas, Louisiana, and California.

Udall raised the question of the future of nuclear power. He cited public opposition and declining construction of new reactors in the U.S.

Lovins responded by stressing the environmental risks and economic inefficiency of nuclear power. "We must recognize the market collapse of nuclear power," he said, "and not commit ourselves to need-less heroics for the benefit of our allies who are still developing nuclear power."

Freeman conceded nuclear power's disadvantages but stressed that safer nuclear technologies were ignored during the development of nuclear power in the '50s and '60s. He believes that we must accept the relative inefficiency and risk of current reactors until a better, safer generation of reactors is designed.

No House dining causes grumbles

Continued from Page 1

'82 said, "I don't think eating at the same time is any answer to the problem. We're planning an expanded, more versatile social calendar to maintain house unity."

Both Row House members and Greylock residents were optimistic that lines would improve as students adjusted their eating schedules to avoid peak times. However, most thought that the Gifford Committee plan to lengthen dining hours in the main dining halls should have been accepted. The report suggested Baxter should be open weekdays until 1:30 at lunchtime, with Mission Park and Greylock open to 1:15. Dinner hours at all three were increased to 7:15 on weekdays. College Council President Freddy Nathan '83 said, "We want them to follow through on increased dining times. There was supposed to be some kind of trade-off." Members of the College Council met with Chandler yesterday to discuss later meal hours.

Chandler explained that the proposed hours were not instituted because there was "so much going on over the summer—the new I.D. system, installing kitchenettes... we felt that was enough to absorb." He thinks that "as soon as traffic has sorted itself out, there will be no problems."

Fabey Beverage Co., Inc.
and
The Miller Brewing Co.
Introduce Your Miller Campus Representatives

Jon Dayton x 6269
Tom Casey x 6278

CALL THEM FOR DISCOUNTS
ON MILLER, LITE and LOWENBRAU

Coming Soon

DELIVERY SERVICE

to the dorms

7 - 11 nitely

WATCH FOR ANNOUNCEMENT

CLASSIFIEDS

Congratulations Frosh backgammon tourney winners: First place Allison Plitt Morgan west, second place Ted Hopshberger Morgan east. Third place Heidi Halleck/Katie Miller.

Ham Radio messages to anywhere in U.S., Canada, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, The Gambia, Trinidad, and Tobago, Uruguay, and Venezuela. Inquire at Goldman's Jewelers, Spring St.

UPS Mailing, 8:30-11:00. The Mole Hole.

HELP WANTED. Work in your own home. Send work history, name, address, and phone number to: Mike, P.O. Box 68, Water Vliet, Michigan 49098.

the older generation has a lot of stuffy ideas... cigarette smoking is one!

Inglennook or California Cellars
Burgundy, Rose, Chablis
4 liter bottles

6.99

Labatt's Beer or Ale
11.49/case

Budweiser or Miller
12 oz. cans
8.99/case

Schmidt's or Utica Club
16 oz. returnable bottles
7.49/case plus deposit

WEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2

BETWEEN N.A. and WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

The Record Store

"Discount Recordings"

BARGAIN RECORD DEPARTMENT
CUT OUT AND OVERSTOCK LP's

From 1.99
ROCK
POP
JAZZ

AUTHORIZED RADIO SHACK DEALER

Featuring
SPEAKER WIRE RECEIVERS
SPEAKERS
TURNTABLES
COMPUTERS
TAPE RECORDERS
TELEPHONES FUSES PATCH CORDS
BATTERIES
RADIOS
CALCULATORS
HEADPHONES
EARPHONES
EXT. CORDS
AC POWER CORDS
TV, FM, CB ANTENNAS
CAR STEREO
TV HOOKUP
GUITAR CORDS AND MORE

BACK TO CAMPUS SPECIALS FROM RADIO SHACK

LCD CALCULATOR
SCIENTIFIC
CAT. LIST 21.95
SALE 17.95

PRO 20 Headphone
CAT. LIST 31.95
SALE 24.95

CHRONOMATIC DIGITAL CLOCK RADIO
CAT. LIST 41.95
SALE 29.95

LAB 420 TURNTABLE
CAT. LIST 219.95
SALE 149.95

RECORD DEPT.
Featuring
Jazz, Rock, Pop, Folk
Classical, Reggae, Soul
Comedy, Soundtracks
Broadway Ethnic
AT DISCOUNT PRICES

PRE-RECORDED CASSETTES
A large selection
INCLUDING CLASSICAL

The Record Store
STOCKS
RECORDINGS FOR THE WILLIAMS
MUSIC COURSES

REPLACEMENT DIAMOND NEEDLES
OVER 100 DIFFERENT MODELS IN STOCK

BLANK CASSETTE - 8 TRK.
REEL TO REEL TAPE
TDK, Maxwell, Realistic, Memorex

TDK CASSETTE SALE
3PAK D-C90
8.99

Record & Tape Care Products
Discwasher
Sound Guard
Watts Realistic

Ephs Alley
Off Spring Street
458-5418

Mon. - Sat.
10 - 5:30

MASTER CARD
AMERICAN EXPRESS
VISA

Rooms like this one have been craved for freshmen in the Thompson Infirmary. (Milloy)

New dining system

Continued from Page 1

school is trying to become precise. Everyone knows that the system we had last year was ineffective."

This year's system also has had frequent problems, mostly mistakes on the part of the computer. Although Food Service has no way of checking the failure rate, Keller admits, "We've all made mistakes. It's a function of adjusting the reader or an inaccurate card. If the card just isn't going to read accurately, then we will exchange the card at no cost to the student."

Keller said he does not believe the new system will increase waiting time in the dining hall line. "Lines are not longer; time for the individual is longer. Food lines hold people up after they've passed the reader anyway."

All in all, Keller pronounced, "I think the students have accepted it marvelously. I think they know that the old system did not function accurately. As costs climb, it becomes of increasing concern to students to have it function accurately."

New faculty welcomed

Thirty-one new teachers came to Williams this year. There are eleven assistant professors, two instructors, two lecturers and 17 visitors. The Record plans to interview a few of the newcomers each week.

Henry A. Bent, one of the nation's foremost chemical educators, will teach thermodynamics in the chemistry department this semester as the College's first Bernhard Visiting Professor. Bent has taught physical chemistry at North Carolina State University since 1969. His undergraduate work was done at the University of Missouri and Oberlin College, where he received an A.B. in 1949. He earned his Ph.D. in physical chemistry from the University of California at Berkeley in 1952.

The Bernhard Visiting Professorships were established last year by a $1 million gift from Arnold Bernhard '25, to bring men and women of distinguished achievement in the sciences and humanities to the campus.

Chairman of the chemistry department, James Skinner, says, "We feel very fortunate to have Professor Bent at Williams because he is both an excellent chemist and an outstanding and innovative teacher."

Novelist Richard Ford, author of The Ultimate Good Luck, for which he received both a Guggenheim and a National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship, will lecture in the English department for the first semester.

Published in 1981, The Ultimate Good Luck deals with love, and grew out of his 14-year marriage. Other works of his include A Piece of My Heart, published in 1976, and short stories and articles in Esquire, Harper's, and Inside Sports.

Originally from Mississippi, Ford received his B.A. from Michigan State College and his M.F.A. from the University of California at Irvine. Subsequently, he was awarded a Ford Foundation Grant at Michigan University, which enabled him to complete his first novel. He taught at Williams in 1978 before moving to Princeton.

Timothy Cook of the political science department, a California native, graduated from Pomona College in 1976 and received his M.A. from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1977. He specializes in the area of Congress and the presidency and is currently working on a Ph.D. in political socialization, "how children learn about politics from children's literature." Cook likes "the interdisciplinary aspect of a small college and the give-and-take between faculty and students." Cook attended a small college and "always had the ideal of returning to that sort of spot."

Diana Sedney joins the chemistry department from Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge, where she spent a year as instructor of Freshman Chemistry. She will teach inorganic chemistry at Williams. Sedney grew up in Maryland, where she received her B.A. from Towson State College. After completing her Ph.D. at Northeastern, she taught at the University of Berne in Switzerland, but is delighted to be back in New England now, being especially eager to polish her squash, "unheard of in the South."

Anita Sokolsky, new member of the English department, has loved reading since her early years in Bronx, New York. She developed her interest further by earning her B.A. in English from Oberlin College in Ohio and her Ph.D. from Cornell. She taught introductory English courses at Cornell before entering the department at Williams to teach modern poetry and modern British fiction.

She has been interested in modern poetry since her introduction to Yeats and Wallace Stevens in college, but later developed interests in contemporary criticism and the Victorian novel, writing her thesis on George Eliot and Dickens.

Timothy Fries of the economics department got his B.A. in economics at Ohio State and his M.A. at the University of Rochester. Taught German by his parents, Fries was able to teach economics at the University of Bonn in West Germany. At Williams he is teaching environmental economics, and firms and capital markets. He supports international trade and expressed the need for Americans to communicate with other countries. Fries feels that man's personal responsibility to society should be discussed in all academic areas.

Saul Kassir, assistant professor of psychology, grew up in Brooklyn, New York and went to Far Rockaway High School. He was graduated from Brooklyn College C.U.N.Y. in 1974 and continued his education at the University of Connecticut, where he earned his M.A. in 1976 and his Ph.D. in personality psychology in 1978. He taught at Connecticut as a graduate student, followed by one year at the University of Kansas and two years at Purdue before coming to Williams. Kassir considers himself a Northeasterner and said Williams' New England location and good reputation drew him here.

Kassir is investigating how juries make decisions and is specifically concerned with how personality differences affect verdicts and which kinds of evidence are considered most important by juries. Another subject of his research is the method by which a child forms impressions.

Michael Fortunato, assistant professor of economics, was graduated from Columbia University in 1976 after growing up in New York City and going to high school on Long Island. He has been a teaching fellow at Harvard while doing doctoral work there.

A keen rugby player, Fortunato once played nationally for the U.S. against West Germany and is presently helping with the Williams Rugby Club.

Runners bear adversity

by Peter Farwell

Coming off two straight undefeated seasons with a 29-meet winning streak, the men's varsity cross country team will be challenged to duplicate past feats, no matter how fleet their own are.

Making matters difficult is the bear-knapping (hibernation) of the team's trusty mascot by those nefarious rebels from down south. In previous seasons "The Bear" has suffered captivity at the hands of M.I.T., who bestowed a red T, pair of shorts, and beret for his wardrobe. He now may sport a purple A on his back, which is where Amherst's runners wear theirs. Ironically, Eph runners can never see it, always being always out ahead.

The Bear has grown accustomed to the scenic wilds of Williamstown, the trails and mountains that his teammates enjoy, an occasional dip in the ponds or a night sortie (in search of honey?), not to mention feeling very at home in the Log. Without him the upperclassmen are suffering unbearably, and the freshmen can't seem to get their bearings. The Bear was a big factor in recent successes and has a 37-2 lifetime record at the meets where he has been enthusiastically rocketed into space before the race.

Yet the Bear is only the newest of Williams traditions that have helped propel the team to 11 straight Little Three titles, and a 112-19-1 record since 1970.

Led by Co-captains Gordon Coates and Chuck Stewart and senior Dan Sullivan, a twelfth title is possible. Vying to replace departed grads Phil Darrow and Ted Congdon, as well as star Bo Parker (off roving steers for a year), will be juniors Lyman (Blue Moon) Casey, Dan (Rocky) Riley, Jim (What Knew?) Corsiglia, and Willie (Are We Going to Run?) Spring. They will be surrounded by the sophomore bon vivants Brian (Train in the Summer?) Angle, Andy (Shelk) Moyad, John (Orthotics) Nelson, Chris (Legs) O'Neill, Nick (Preppy) Osborne, and Ian (Iron Man) Whyte. Most runners trained well over the summer—up to 900 miles—and with a few capable freshmen additions again will prove that "There Ain't No Mountain High Enough," even against good squads from Vermont and M.I.T., and the blockbuster new meet with Dartmouth, University of Connecticut and University of Massachusetts. Alumni continue running well after their college careers and will compete in the 9th "Aluminum Bowl" this Halloween, before watching the varsity host the Little Three.

Raquetwomen tuning-up

Despite the loss of all six singles players from last year's highly successful 9-2 season, Coach Sean Sloane is not yet ready to concede a "rebuilding year," citing instead the leadership of Captain Jami Harris, some talented sophomores, and an enthusiastic, spirited team.

The top of the singles Lisa Buckley and Renee George. Seniors Jane Cadwell, Kate Downey, and Eileen Conley will add depth and experience to both singles and doubles, and if sophomores Kerry Traylor, Carol Newhall, Sara Menke, and Melissa George improve as expected, this year's team could surprise many opponents.

Team mascot and Assistant Coach Baloo, reached just before press time, claims he is looking forward to a fantastic season because, as everyone knows, "Every dog has his day and I'm the only dog out here!"

Men's crew optimistic in wake of best year ever

Coming off a fantastic 1981 spring season, the men's crew is looking forward to the '81-'82 school year. Last year's crew was the best Williams has ever had. The powerful freshmen won all of the races but one, and placed eighth overall in the Dad Vall, the small-college rowing championships. The lightweight four went 3-1 over the season, losing only to a strong Conn. College heavyweight four, who were finalists in the Dad Vall. The entire crew swept the Little Three competition, the highlight of the regular season. The varsity were the true stars of last season: finalists in the Dan Vall Regatta, quarterfinalists in the Henley Royal Regatta, held in Henley, England, and gold and bronze medalists at the NAAO Men's National Championships.

Last year was only the second time a Williams crew has ever gone to the Henley Royal Regatta, the world's most prestigious rowing event. The Ephs competed in the Ladies' Challenge Plate event, which is the event exclusively for college men's crews. Competition is done on a head to head basis, with straight elimination in effect. Williams won their first race against University College of Dublin, Ireland by 2 1/4 lengths. This win advanced Williams to the next round, where the Ephs handily disposed of Cherwell Boat Club, an Oxford group, by 21/3 lengths. That win placed Williams in the quarterfinals against one of the top-seeded crews in the Ladies' Plate, Trinity College of Dublin, Ireland. In a very close and exciting race, Williams lost to Trinity by just half a length, a heartbreaker to be sure. Nonetheless, Coach John Pelner was very pleased with the overall outcome, saying "I couldn't have asked for a better performance."

After the competition of Henley, the crew returned to compete in the NAAO Men's National Championships held this year in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. Williams entered seven different events, and raced 15 times over three days. Despite the hot and muggy weather in Oak Ridge, Williams qualified for the finals in six of the seven events they entered. The Williams intermediate eight won the gold medal in that event by 1 1/2 lengths, defeating FIT, U.C. Santa Barbara, Detroit B.C., St. Catherine's, and Bedford B.C. In the intermediate four, Williams received the bronze medal.

This year's men's crew can also look forward to a good season. This fall, the squad expects to do well in the Head of the Charles in Boston, the Head of the Mohawk, and the Head of the Merrimack.

COME SEE

Flams Stead skirts,
Book Bags and Totes,
Knitting wools, needle-point,
cross stitch and gifts.

At the Bend
on Spring Street

THE KING'S LIQUOR STORE

purveyors of strong liquors
since 1946

Williamstown, Massachusetts

Labatt's Beer or Ale
from Canada
11.49/case and 2.90/six

Porta Palo Wine
from Italy

1.5 liter bottle of red or white 3.45

On Spring Street 413-458-5948

ALMOST FOREVER, CLASSIC CHIC HAS SYMBOLIZED

THE House of Walsh

...AND THE LEGEND CONTINUES

PURVEYORS OF FINE CLOTHING FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Spring St. Williamstown Mass. 01267 (413) 458-5010

"There's more to being photographed than twisting back and forth and looking toward the future!"

Senior School Photography

Allow yourself up to 1/2 hour in our dedicated studio and we'll take 12 poses, with a change of clothing if you wish, and present the 8 best previews to choose from.

20% off framing of our Senior Portraits with this ad.

STOP BY TODAY OR CALL FOR AN APPOINTMENT

photo works inc.

Everything in Photography

1 WATER STREET WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS 01267 413-458-3113

CUSTOM T-SHIRT PRINTING

- We have a variety of Williams logos.
- A great selection of preprinted Williams T-shirts and sweatshirts.
- We also print by the letter, so you can choose your own message—

Come In & Browse!

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

The Mole Hole

FOR THE WALL:

5' Graffiti Walls 5.95
5' Crossword Puzzle 5.95

5' Teddy Bear (for wall, Bed, or as a Rug) 38.95
Oriental Wood Scrolls 2.95

118 Water Street

Open 9-6 Seven Days

Kickers look ahead

by Leslie Orton

Although the women's soccer team lost many players to graduation, it will have some key players returning in the line-up. Back again on the front line are Becky Baugh '83, Amy Wilbur '83, and Jean Loew '84. Laurie Johnson '82 and Miss Booth '84 are also back, both playing forward positions. Mary McGill '82 will be the center of the defense again this year, with sophomores Carrie Bradley and Kathy Spraltz filling in halfback positions. Sophomore Elizabeth Ulmer is also back, playing fullback. Senior "Murf" Mealy will again be tending goal, trying to improve last year's four shut-out record.

In addition to the list of returnees, the team has a large number of experienced freshmen trying out for the team. Consequently it should have no problems filling in the gaps.

The squad will be opening against Skidmore on September 23 at home. Despite a tough schedule this season, the team remains optimistic.

THE ALTURA NEW AND EASY HIGH STYLE FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Lifestyle, vocation, and physical features are all considered along with fashion when a hairstyle is designed for a man or a woman by the Clip Shop. Right now geometrics are being advertised as the trendy look, but the short, close cuts of the 60's are too extreme for today's look. A free and easy, yet controlled style captures the mood of the 80's... and now the Clip Shop presents the "Altura", a style designed to give height, fullness and volume. For both men and women.

Many want the latest hairstyle, individuality and easy care. The "Altura" adapts to a variety of lifestyles, and works well on wavy hair or hair with a light foundation perm. It achieves a high, full voluminous look on top with a special razor/shear technique. The sides are close to the head, and the back is cut and directed into a concave design. This highly individual and directional cut the stylists of the Clip Shop have mastered by means of video. It has been part of their continuing education program.

GUYS AND GALS... Whether executives, students, artists or homemakers... will move to a new high with the "Altura".

The CLIP SHOP has four convenient locations:

Walk in or call for a free consultation or for an appointment.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

GT. BARRINGTON, MA.
528-9804

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

Williams alumnae

Tuttle garners bronze in world championship crew

Sue Tuttle '78, a five-time member of the U.S. National Rowing Team, placed third in the four-oared rowing event at the recently completed 1981 World Championships. Tuttle had been a member of the 1980 Olympic Rowing Team, but was unable to compete because of the American boycott. Tuttle's bronze medal performance in the competition held August 26-30 in Munich, West Germany had to feel good, as it came against Olympic class competition.

After qualifying in the opening heats, Tuttle's boat finished behind the Russian and East German crews to clinch a medal. Tuttle's performance came as no surprise to one who followed her career as an Eph-woman. She rowed four years in the varsity boat at Williams and was co-captain of the squad in both her junior and senior years, and co-captain of the U.S. National squad in '77.

Tuttle is the third Williams oarswoman to row on a U.S. National Team. Dixie Rhodes '76 was on the U.S. sculling team

In 1975. Nancy Storrs '73 joined Tuttle on the U.S. National sweep oar team from 1975-80. In addition, Meredith McGill '83 was the coxswain on the U.S. Junior National Team in 1979. Also, recently graduated Carolyn Matthews '81, was one of 32 oarswomen selected to try out for the U.S. National Team for 1981.

Coach George Marcus credits the uniquely high success of Williams oarswomen to two factors: "First, if a rower has potential and is intent upon achieving international-caliber status, it can be done in a brief two year training period. Second, success at any activity is more likely if the people are bright and eager. Williams' admissions standards assure an abundance of the first quality and the women's crew provides support for the second."

Oarswoman Sue Tuttle after receiving bronze medal in Munich this summer.

Cynical look at the big guys

by Steve Epstein

NEWS ITEM: Tennis brat John McEnroe wins the championship of the All-England Tennis Club at Wimbledon to become the number one player in the world. But he wins amid controversy over McEnroe's on-and-off court behavior.

It was kind of a quiet summer for the sports addict. The baseball strike made a dull game even duller, and golf tournaments joined junk sports like women's powerlifting and pro-celebrity croquet tournaments as the standard week-end T.V. bill of fare. It was a time for the sports fan, the junkie who thrives on the hitting of George Brett, and the incessant babbling of Howard Cosell, to ponder where sports is going... and just what it means any more.

EPHUSIONS

NEWS ITEM: Three professional football players with the Denver Broncos admit their addiction to dangerous drugs. The N.F.L. says it will conduct an investigation, but no names are released and no one is ever prosecuted. N.Y. Times uncovers Oiler QB Ken Stabler's ties with a known organized crime figure. Innuendo flies like Stabler's spirals.

The summer became a time to examine one's ideals. To watch old films of the greats like Mays, and Mantle and Jack Kramer. It was a time of hero worship, of idealism or baseball cards collected and faded. No baseball this summer. No afternoons at Fenway Park or Wrigley Field eating popcorn and watching men who earn six figures playing a little boy's game. But still, time for contemplation.

NEWS ITEM: New England Patriots star tight end Russ Francis retires from pro football, citing the danger of the game as his reason. Francis is afraid that continued play will risk crippling injury, as had happened to teammate Daryl Stingley. Violence in pro football again hits the front pages.

Football is becoming a life or death struggle. Drugs are on the increase. Baseball players don't want to play the game despite an average salary of over $100,000 a year (including five months paid vacation). Even tennis, the last bastion of sportsmanship, is being corrupted by the most talented crybaby in its history. Maybe it's just the media looking for some excitement. Or maybe it's another sign of a society in trouble. There were no answers to these plaguing questions this summer. Just sun and sand and avoidance of any problems like a negative G.P.A., a less-than-perfect physique, and the trouble with prosports. Summer is a time for idealism. Maturing is making me cynical.

NEWS ITEM: Three Boston College basketball players are brought up on charges of point shaving to help gamblers two seasons ago. The scandal rocks New England and uncovers the tip of the iceberg in collegiate gambling rings.

Oh, news item after news item. It's nice to be back in the sheltered Purple Valley. Now don't misunderstand. I still love to watch Earl Campbell glide effortlessly past enemy defenders, and to see Borg play the brat for supremacy of the tennis world—but it's all somehow been tainted this summer. Thank goodness I made it back with my sanity to the one place athletes still strive to achieve purely for achievement's sake. Welcome back fall athletes at Williams, I wish you luck. Win, but don't get too good. Big time sports just ain't what it used to be.

Booters face new season

by Dave Woodworth

Despite the losses of Tri-captain Stu Taylor and goalkeeper Alex Kousseoglou to graduation, Coach Mike Russo is "very optimistic" about the upcoming season.

The 1981 varsity soccer squad seeks to rebound from last year's disappointing campaign, 3-8-1. Though he himself is quick to point out that all coaches are optimistic during preseason, Russo does indeed have good reason to be positive.

For openers, the defense that gave up an average of two goals a game should be bolstered by the return to form of goalkeeper Vince Brandstein '84, who played well at the start of last year but was forced to the sidelines by a back injury. However, Brandstein will be pressed for the job by two top schoolboy prospects, Ken Rhodes '85 and Ted Murphy '85.

The absence of Co-captain Reg Jones '82, out with mononucleosis, will hurt the fullback corps, but the loss will be minimized by the play of Co-captain Brian Daniell '82 and David Barry '82, who replaces Jones at sweeper. Wingbacks Aytac Apaydin, Kris Strohbeing, and Willie Stern, all juniors, round out the Ephs' back line.

The midfield, a bright point of last season, will remain solid as sparkplug Rob Kusel '83 returns at center half. He will be joined by juniors Jeff Sutton, Eric Smith, and Mark Koenig, and by senior Jim Leonard.

Freshman Doug McKenney, a speedster with breakaway potential, will add scoring punch at forward. Russo is also pleased with the "tough" wing play of Dave Nasser '83. Other returnees up front are Jim Peck '82, Tad Chase '82, and Eric Stein '84.

Williams will face a rugged schedule this year, with an early test coming in their opener against highly regarded North Adams State on September 21. Should the Ephs do well there, the future holds promise.

Storey Reed and Dianne Koenitzer battle for ball in field hockey pre-season work. (Doherty)

Stickwomen prepare for '81

by Juliet Flynt

The field hockey team arrived for pre-season practice eager to improve on last year's 4-6 record and to build on the skills developed then under Coach Chris Larson. Ten girls had represented Williams' the previous weekend at Merestead hockey camp in Maine. Led by senior Carol Vanderzwaag, it won three of six games.

Although Coach Larson has been away playing and starring for the U.S. National Team, the Williams girls, led by Co-captains Beth Connolly and Hendy Meyer, began triple sessions under the eye of new Assistant Coach Juliet Flynt. The effort put into running hills, moose laps, and stick-work paid off as Williams won during a scrimmage day at Smith last Saturday, beating Vassar, Wellesley, and Trinity, and tying Smith. These scrimmages also provided a good opportunity to scout and shuffle players.

Returning varsity players Beth Connolly, Mary Pynchon, Hendy Meyer, Sue Harrington, Bea Fuller, Wendy Brown, Holly Perry, Laurie Soper, Storey Reed, Dorothy Briggs, Allison Earle, and Carol Vanderzwaag await Coach Larson's return. Twenty-six freshmen and a squad of J.V. players are also competing for a spot on the varsity. The season opens Sept. 23 at home against Skidmore.

A note to loyal spectators and frustrated whistle-haters: new rules will allow more continuous play. Changes in face-offs, penalty corners, obstruction, sticks, and push-ins will open up play and reduce the number of penalty whistles.

Women runners herd growing

by Patricia Hellman

If you've been wondering what the horde of girls running through town each day at 4:15 is, don't be alarmed. It's just the women's cross-country running team out for its daily workout. Despite its somewhat gruesome reputation, the sport has attracted record numbers of participants this year. All the girls seem to be in great shape, so the team can count on a good deal of depth in the coming season.

With luck, a blend of experience and enthusiasm will help the team to perform better than ever before. They have a tough record to beat, since they are defending last year's Little Three title and were the second best division III team in New England.

Back again are last year's Co-captains Liz Martineau and Sue Marchant. Sophomore running star Kerry Malone has also returned, along with Maria Antonaccio, Margaret Lynch, Tricia Hellman, and virtually the entire 1980 team.

The team welcomes back senior Steph Carperos, who took a year's "leave of absence" for injury. They also welcome the many new runners who have joined the ranks, and hope for a fun, injury-free season.

At this point, Coach Bud Fisher's main worry seems to be in holding the team back from running too fast, so they don't burn themselves out, and can work up slowly to peak condition. They're ready to start racing, which they will do next Saturday in a triple meet against Albany State and Hartwick College.

Men's soccer players are fixed in concentration during grueling conditioning on the hill. (Doherty)

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 2

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

SEPTEMBER 22, 1981

Desks replaced dining tables in the Perry House dining room, one of the changes that have disturbed Row House residents. (Farley)

Changes mar Row Houses

Removal of cooking and dining facilities from Row Houses over the summer has changed occupant's attitudes toward their houses as well as the houses' interiors.

Kitchens and dining rooms in Tyler, Wood, Perry, and Brooks Houses have been replaced by kitchenettes, study and classroom areas, and new living rooms. Classes now meet regularly in Perry and Wood Houses.

The changes are not necessarily final, according to Wendy Hopkins, director of student housing. "Refinements will be made after getting feedback from Row House residents on their living habits," she commented. "The College is trying to make the modifications while disturbing the lifestyles of house residents as little as possible."

"The Row Houses are unique in having such large common areas," noted Hopkins. "The idea was to maximize their use, but at the same time not destroy the architectural integrity of the spaces. All we did was put in lights, tables, and some chairs. We could revert."

The housing department is considering adding bedrooms to Brooks, but no decision has been reached as yet. "We felt it important to involve the Brooks House residents in the planning and decision-making processes," explained Hopkins. Conversion of the fireplace area in Brooks to a common living room is also under consideration.

Reaction among longtime student residents of the houses generally has been bitterly critical, however.

Kate Heilmann '83, a resident of Wood House, complained of a lack of house unity as well as physical amenities. "Our coke machine and washer-dryer were vandalized over the summer, and our T.V. doesn't work either. None has been replaced. We were supposed to get a coffee machine, too, to bring people around in the evenings. We don't have it. We don't see anyone from Garfield or Agard anymore now that we don't have meals. The houses are dispersing... it's really sad. We've lost all our house unity and spirit."

Lisa Louis '82, a resident of Brooks House, expressed similar sentiments. "The majority of people here really feel strongly that our house unity has been taken away. It's an effort to get people together for meals, since we have to go to one of the big dining halls. We don't get together as often.

"We haven't used our kitchenettes a whole lot so far," she commented. "They're nothing like having our own dining room. They make a little difference toward feeling better about the changes, but not nearly enough."

Panel attacks "Reaganomics"

by Katya Hokanson

Calling the Reagan Administration "an insult to our intelligence" and "a reign of unselfconscious greed," Boston University political science professor Frances Fox Piven addressed an overflow crowd in Bronfman Auditorium last Monday night.

Piven, co-author of the award-winning book Regulating the Poor, began her address by saying that the Republicans ran an "extraordinary campaign" on bread-and-butter issues. In her speech, "The Reagan Program: Reconstruction or Ruin?" she outlined the Republicans' promises to turn the economy around and stop the decline in income and the rise in inflation and unemployment.

Reagan won the presidency,

Piven said, because of those promises, the most important campaign issue being unemployment.

Instead of keeping these promises, Piven said, Reagan "introduced a reign of pure, unselfconscious greed, frankly designed to increase Big Business' profits at the expense of poor people, workers, women, and minorities."

Implicit in the array of Reagan economic programs, she said, is the revival of 19th century economic theory which holds that there are two different kinds of people: the affluent, and the rest.

"Each group has its own incentive system," Piven said.

"The affluent require bribes; lower taxes, less regulation, and fewer costs added for workers' health and safety. The others must be kept poor, for poor people work and are plous under threat of starvation."

Professor James MacGregor Burns at the Reagan panel. (Farley)

Thieves raid Morgan

by Phillip Busch

Thefts of stereo equipment worth well over $1000 from an unlocked storage room over the summer, and from students' rooms this fall, have raised serious questions about year-round security and the College's liability for summer storage.

The most serious losses occurred in Morgan Hall, where several students returning this September found valuable stereos missing from summer storage. Although the students had thought that the room would be locked all summer, it was left open for long periods to allow electrical work to be done.

Norman Tremblay, custodian at Morgan, said that the room "was open all summer to do rewiring... anyone could have got in there." Morgan was occupied over the summer by apprentices for the Williamstown Theater Festival.

Students suffering losses expressed disappointment rather than outright anger at the lack of security. "We were led to believe that the room would be kept locked," said Tom Graham '84.

Dave Weaver '82, whose loss amounted to $600 worth of equipment, blamed storage arrangements. "It's not really Security's fault, it's the fault of the storage system. Anyone will open anything for anybody. I'm from Nebraska, so I have to store my stuff over the summer. I demand a safe place."

Security Director Ransom Jenks said that the thefts were under investigation, but declined further comment in the absence of all the facts.

"We're trying now to gather the facts in the case," said Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor, who is supervising the investigation. "We have most of them."

Administrators concerned with the case met on Monday morning to discuss developments, according to O'Connor. Also on the agenda will be other summer damage to storerooms, including water damage in Williams Hall and break-ins in Morgan and Armstrong.

Additional thefts occurred during the first weeks of school. Charlie Pardoe '82 lost three stereo components from his room at Mary Hubble House during the night of September 12. The thieves apparently entered through an unlocked door, and exited through the window within 30 yards of a party going full-blast at Parsons House, according to Pardoe.

O'Connor also reported the recent theft of two stereos from

Continued on Page 8

Party controls tighten

by Jon Tigar

The premature closing of the Greylock Daiquiri Party by Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor September 10 has led to a new College policy prohibiting live music at campus parties held on weekday nights.

"My feeling," said O'Connor, "is that live music on weekday nights cannot be contained." The party, which had been scheduled to run until 1:00 a.m., was shut down at 11:30 p.m. O'Connor explained that the closing was prompted by complaints from neighbors.

O'Connor said he does not object to weekday parties in general or weekend parties with live music.

"I'm in favor of parties," he commented. "I think that they're a necessary part of college life. If a house wants to have live music on a weekend night, we can call all the neighbors, tell them what's going on and that the music will be over at such and such a time," O'Connor said. "The thing that drives people bananas is the feeling that the thing isn't going to end."

Hopkins House President Brendan Sachtlein '82 said the new policy "is not going to be a problem... We're glad to accommodate them."

O'Connor also told house presidents that he would like to see more all-college parties on a given night; for example, three parties where we now have only one. "I don't think one can handle the crowd," he explained.

Sachtjen dismissed the idea as "ridiculous. Each house could lose a fortune."

Jonathan Light '83, the president of Fitch-Currier House, said, "That's just not the way things work around here. It's very hard to throw an all-campus party and make money... Freshmen are the main people who go to all-college parties and attendance declines by class."

The Deans Office has also reminded house presidents of a Massachusetts state law prohibiting the unlicensed sale of alcohol. Houses may charge admission to a party at which alcohol is served, but may not charge for alcohol.

Doing Your Own Thing

As do all incoming freshman classes, the Class of 1985 has injected a boost of individual enthusiasm to the homogenous College community.

New classes, new friends and new activities tempt Williams' newest members and provide the opportunities for such enthusiasm to thrive. Bringing with it the collective talents of students drawn from across geographical, socioeconomic and cultural lines, a freshman class is nonetheless subject to established social and academic norms that pressure individuals to conform to a more rigid set of peer standards. Studying for studying's sake received raised eyebrows, while drinking for drinking's sake often invites a hearty pat on the back.

Obviously, freshmen are not the only ones fighting to establish and maintain individuality. They do, however, provide the most obvious example of the struggle between social conformance and individuality.

Students here should not have to wait until their junior or senior year, to attempt to do their own personal "thing," whether it be some guy taking up knitting or a woman living off-campus for the first time.

Every spring, the admissions office proudly announces its latest top-rate batch of well-rounded students for the following academic year. As a class, they hold tremendous potential; as individuals, they have four years to prove a well-rounded school comprised of individuals will accomplish more than the college of well-rounded, but indistinguishable students.

For the Class of 1985, the challenge to uphold individuality has begun. Delaying a few years may blur what separates each member right now.

Winter Study Charge

This past week, the Winter Study Review Committee held its first meeting. President Chandler has asked this committee to determine the education value and thus the existence of Winter Study at Williams. The text of Dr. Chandler's charge to the Committee appears below:

As you prepare to undertake the very important task of reviewing the Winter Study Program, I wish to delineate the work of the review committee.

We have agreed that the Committee will be autonomous but that it will keep the Committee on Educational Policy and the Winter Study Committee fully informed and will consult regularly with those committees.

The report of the Review Committee will be due by the April, 1982 faculty meeting, along with any recommendations that call for faculty action.

The Committee is urged to consult broadly with faculty, students, and alumni who have experienced the Winter Study Program so that opinions and attitudes towards the program may be determined. More fundamentally, the Committee is charged with determining the educational value of Winter Study. In assessing Winter Study's educational value, the Committee is urged to consider the broader question of the effect of this curricular feature on the cohesiveness of the College and on the overall quality of the experience of students on the campus as well as the perceptions of the College from without.

I would ask you, after considering these questions, to make any recommendations you deem appropriate regarding modifications in the present program or alternatives to it. The Committee should assume that if Winter Study is abolished, it must be compensated for in some way. That is, I would not regard a 4-0-4 calendar and curriculum as an acceptable alternative to present arrangements.

Quote of the Week:

"These Black Russians are good. (pause) Is there any alcohol in these?"

—Freshman at the Dodd Black & White Party

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS

Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS

Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT

Lori Miller

FEATURES

Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS

Mike Sutton

LAYOUT

Bob Buckner

LAYOUT ASSISTANTS

Lois Abel

Roland Galibert

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

Philip Busch

Sara Ferris

Katya Hokanson

Dan Keating

Jon Tigar

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

Peter Burghardt

Paul Sabbah

OUTLOOK

Priscilla Cohen

Alyson Hagy

SPORTS

Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY

Sue Doherty

Steve Farley

BUSINESS MANAGER

Chris Toub

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. All letters submitted to the RECORD must be typed and should not exceed 250 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters it receives.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Offensive

To the editor,

At first glance, the theme of the September 17 Spencer-Brooks affair seemed harmless. However, I found the "redneck" theme quite offensive.

The term "redneck" refers to the white, uneducated farm laborer of the southern United States (source: Random House Collegiate, 1968). They generally look unfavorably upon anything they do not understand or are unaccustomed to. History has shown that this outlook breeds prejudice.

The impetus for this letter does not concern itself with whether any racial or ethnic discrimination was implied. Instead, it concerns itself with the ignorance and narrow-mindedness of the organizers. Apparently, they did not realize that such a theme might be offensive to some members of the Williams College community.

Equally as offensive was the slogan "Preppies will be lynched (hung or shot) at midnight," which could have been interpreted to include not only the alligator shirt and Dockers preppie, but a variety of other minorities as well.

As a final note, I would like to suggest prudence on the part of the organizers and consideration towards other members of the College community when organizing future College functions.

Herve Jean-Baptiste '83

Squirrels

To the editor,

It has come to my attention, and other upper classmen as well, that the Williams campus is no longer plagued by four legged pets, strays, and the canine atrocities of past years. I, for one, can sleep soundly at night knowing that such a heinous problem has been so efficiently solved.

Alas, this idyllic valley is being rocked by a new, and perhaps an even more dangerous problem: squirrels. Yes, well, scoff if you must, but this is a subtle threat to our school and, as no one else has been bold enough to point it out, I'll assume the responsibility.

These furry rodents have become quite visible and prolific. One can see them everywhere, gathering nuts and carrying branches and twigs. They have even gotten cocky enough to ignore students as they walk to class. The friendly disguise is unbearable. Squirrels in their natural habitat are supposed to be paranoid, uppity and on the run. The ones around here think they're special or something, and I think we ought to nail 'em in the fall when it's easy.

We don't even have to get them all. The best plan is to find five or six areas of dense squirrel population and get out the gun used to remove skunks from under

Dodd. All we have to do is plug two or three squirrels in each area and string them up on stakes that B & G would be happy to provide. The other squirrels, upon seeing that their buddy no longer lets his yellow teeth grind all day and is, in fact, beginning to smell, will clear out.

This will work. I'm quite frankly agitated at some people who see nothing wrong with this squirrel invasion. Just ask the girl who came over the crest of the hill by Fernald House with thirty pounds of books. She stepped on a pile of acorns and nearly slid to her death in the street. I'm talking law suits, friends. The Administration should get moving. And talk about saving energy! Food costs could be defrayed easily: squirrel stew. Squirrel quilts and doormats are coming into style too.

Let's go. This is our chance to make a difference. Thank you.

Jeff Morrison '82

Changes

To the editor,

A new freshman class is here, and will never know Row-House dining. "The lines never used to be this long." I find myself explaining to a newcomer, "but last year we had five more dining halls than now. They were small and personal, but the College felt they cost too much, so . . ."

The new computerized ID system, of course, has advantages over the old "eyes and a smile" one. Everyone used to pay for breakfasts, for example, but only a select few would eat them.

And so another Williams tradition fades into memory, the College loses some more of its character, the victims of a change to salutary that no one can justifiably question it.

Meanwhile, as they did last year, the leaves are turning. I mean to enjoy the colors while I can; soon the whole landscape will be brown.

Dean Grodzins '83

Fire threat

To the editor,

Fire, can it happen here? Yes. It did, last week at Prospect House. A 150 watt lamp attached to a bedpost fell on the mattress and, an hour or so later, ignited it. The good news is the fire safety system works. At 3:30 a.m., the electrical sensor detected the smoke, rang the house alarm and signaled Security. Within minutes the building emptied; the Security Officer arrived on the scene, reached for the nearest extinguisher and quickly smothered the fire. The incident was over.

Now, just suppose that someone had "played" with the wiring so that no signal could be sent. How long would it have been before the smoke was detected? Would everyone have been able to get out in time? Or, the fire extinguisher. Suppose somebody had emptied it as a prank (this happened a dozen

Continued on Page 7

Professor Brown reflects on teaching in Thailand

by MacAlister Brown

What is it like to teach at a foreign university, particularly Asia? I have done it in both Nepal and Thailand and continue to relish the experience. Not that it is easy or comfortable in every respect, but the contrast with Williams College and American students is healthy and refreshing. Living in a different political climate is also stimulating.

My arrival in Bangkok, to take up a Fulbright Visiting Lectureship at Chulalongkorn University in June 1980 fell in the midst of the monsoon. Although this signals daily temperatures ranging between 75 and 100 degrees, it does not mean incessant torrential rain. In fact, I never got around to buying an umbrella because the relentless daily showers usually were of short duration and predictably late in the afternoon. To be sure, one had to wade occasionally through flooded streets with all the effusions coughed up by ineffective gutters, and prior to the showers I came to appreciate the truth of the song which observes that only "mad dogs and Englishmen go out in the noonday sun." A related insight can be found in the ancient Thai temples and houses which so beautifully incorporated cross-ventilation into their architecture. My family prided itself at home—and counted its monthly savings—in not resorting to air-conditioning in our sixth floor apartment.

"Students in Asia are accustomed to accepting the word from on high without overt challenge"

More difficult than climate to adjust to was the roaring terror of Bangkok traffic. A city of seven million inhabitants, Bangkok is plagued by the impulse of its middle class to rely upon personal automobiles. To accommodate this western affliction the once numerous canals of "the Venice of the East" have been filled-in and hard-topped, with the shade trees giving way in the bargain. With the aspiring lower middle class resorting to endless varieties of Japanese motorcycles, and with no noise or emission standards, few stop lights, and too few bridges and overpasses, the traffic congestion is barely imaginable. To walk beside it is to give up any hope of audible conversation. To cross a busy street requires uncommon skills in relative motion analysis and leaves you inhaling enough carbon monoxide to shorten your life by days, if not weeks. Rather than join this maelstrom of aggressive, frustrated drivers, I elected to get to work by bus.

Reaching the university each day by jam-packed buses was not exactly up to local professorial dignity, but it was much easier on my nerves. If not the legs and shoulders. It was also the best buy in town at 5¢ a ride, or 25¢ when air-conditioned, and a privileged lane allowed buses to skirt the traffic jams. I was able to observe a wide spectrum of Bangkok residents while prudently avoiding victimization by the city's growing population of thieves.

Personal comfort and security should not merit so much attention in describing foreign teaching experience, but these questions loom large in the early adjustment period. One also worries about office space, library facilities, contact with professional colleagues, secretarial help, teaching schedule, numbers and quality of students, and academic calendar. Most of these items proved to be quite satisfactory at Chulalongkorn. My political science colleagues were most friendly, and almost all had enjoyed graduate study in the United States.

The students were intelligent and could understand English reasonably well but were quite shy about speaking in front of others. In a culture that is extremely status-oriented one can lose face by revealing a command of English that is inferior to expectations. Far more prudent and secure, most students believe is to remain silent and let the professor do the talking. Furthermore, the Thai language, being tonal, bears no resemblance whatsoever to English, and years of study are required to move from mastery of one to the other. Fortunately my lack of a regional accent made it somewhat easier for the Thai students to understand me. Lectures were delivered with a microphone to rise above the traffic noise outside our naturally ventilated lecture halls. Such devices reinforced, I fear, the traditional authority accorded the professor in Asian universities. Students in Asia are accustomed to accepting the word from on high without overt challenge, and the status-conscious Thai culture makes this practice even more ingrained. Picture the difficulty of an American professor attempting to stimulate student discussion of alternative foreign policies, even for the United States, much less for Thailand. As a further complication, dress all the women students in white blouses and dark blue skirts and the men in a close approximation. What awe one has to feel for the occasional woman brave enough to express herself by appearing in blue jeans.

Graduate students were expected to be somewhat more independent, and they did demonstrate this in their dress and openness to radical ideas. In a political system that has been led by coalitions of military officers for several decades such intellectual independence may in El Salvador were Soviet proxies. Secretary Haig's line had struck a responsive chord in the veteran statesman of the 1960's.

I suppose that my views could have been regarded with some suspicion in the foreign ministry, since I managed to obtain two visas to visit neighboring communist Laos, Vietnam's junior partner. Actually the first visa was obtained with the help of an American working in Laos for the Friend's Service Committee, who intervened with our mutual friend, the press officer in the require courage. When one's lifetime professional status can be set by which foreign academic degree one obtains (i.e., Harvard counts more than S.I.U.), and the scarce foreign fellowships are dispensed by public servants (university administrators), radical politics may be a dangerous game to play. Yet it was the pressure generated largely by students that overthrew a military dictatorship in 1973 and it was students who paid the price two years later in a brutal, deadly confrontation with the army at Thammasat University. When the Thai military leaders contest with one another, in periodic coups d'état, they act with restraint and blood is rarely spilled. This is not necessarily so when radicals are involved.

Since my major teaching focus was on U.S. foreign policy, the question repeatedly posed by faculty and students alike was whether the United States would come to the aid of Thailand against the Vietnamese. I could point to our formal commitment under the Manila Treaty of 1954 and the subsequent Rusk-Thanas agreement, but I could not realistically hold out the promise of American soldiers coming back to the Asian continent, nor did it seem likely that this would be requested. The Vietnamese did enter a few miles into Thailand for half a day's fire fight in June 1980, but this hardly portends an outright invasion, and the Thai army was quite proud of its riposte. Thailand redoubled its efforts to prevent the Vietnamese-established regime in Cambodia from sitting at the U.N., while permitting Democratic Kampuchea forces to recuperate along the Thai border. Under the circumstances both the United States and China are now reasonably popular again in Thailand, and Vietnam and the Soviet Union are viewed with dark suspicion and anxiety.

The American presidential election, therefore, was of great interest to the Thai intellectuals, and I tried to interpret the prospects through newspaper and panel discussions. The election of Reagan seemed reassuring to most of my Thai friends since he was thought to be more alert to Soviet machinations and dedicated to greater defense spending. The deputy prime minister, Dr. Thanat Khoman, returned from a visit to Washington after the election positively beaming about the new uplift he detected in America. Just before I left Bangkok in January Dr. Thanat and I disagreed at a panel discussion on whether the leftists

Laos foreign ministry. A few insistent phone calls managed the rest. After visiting Vientiane twice, however, my reports on life in Laos were hardly such as to make me appear a fellow traveler, even though somnolent, unkempt, small town Vientiane held a certain appeal for me after living in roaring, aggressive Bangkok.

One of the world's poorest countries, Laos remains almost stagnant. The lure of a better economic opportunity abroad, through flight across the Mekong River to transit refugee camps in Thailand is also draining Laos of its dwindling pool of semi-educated people, as well as its embattled hill tribes. Thailand can further complicate the problem for Laos by imposing blockades on its land-locked neighbor, but this only pushes Laos further into dependence on Vietnam and the communist block. Nonetheless, the Cuban military attaché to Hanoi gravely assured me at the bar in Vientiane's one international hotel, all agree on the necessity of peace.

Laos is a topic in itself, however, and was only one of our family's many travels while in Bangkok. Weekend trips with the Siam Society exposed us to more Buddha relics than the casual tourist would care to see, but with expert Thai guides we acquired a real delight in their variety and artistic qualities. We also came to appreciate the other Thailand of provincial towns, farmers, hill tribes, railroads and river traffic, so different from the swollen westernized metropolis of Bangkok. And then to go to Kathmandu for Christmas and on to Sherpa villages by foot was to span even more of the extraordinary spectrum of life in Asia. Little wonder that we are anxious to return to learn more and at the same time strengthen our appreciation of the many exceptional privileges of American culture and academic life.

"The election of Reagan seemed reassuring to most of my Thai friends."

MacAlister Brown, Professor of Political Science, taught in the American Studies program at Chulalongkorn University, Bangkok, Thailand, under a Fulbright Fellowship in 1980-81.

Electric Warrior dynamic

by Stephanie Brown

A rock group with an out-of-the-ordinary sound, T. Rex combines the zany lyricism of the B-52s with a pulsing, aggressive disco beat and the funky melodies of Rod Stewart. Popular in the early 70s, T. Rex is now making a comeback with songs from its "Electric Warrior" album.

Gentle music and mystical words are what originally turned many people onto T. Rex. The "Ride a White Swan" album which came out in 1970 soared to the top of the charts and won the group its first acclaim. "Ride a White Swan" was followed by even greater hits—"Hot Love," "Telegram Sam," and "Jeepster." Its latest smashes, including "The Motorway" and "Get It On," have repopularized the group.

No extensive analysis is needed to discover the key to T. Rex's immediate appeal. The attraction lies in its uncomplicated, driving rhythm and easily-identifiable lyrics. T. Rex does not depend upon screeching guitar solos and synthesizers to dress up its songs. Instead, it relies solely on the ensemble of rhythm guitar, drums, a simple bass line, bongos and occasional hand claps. The vocals keep within a mid-range that everyone can sing along with without having to touch his chin to his clavicle.

Another joy to be found in T. Rex is the lyrics—at times tender, and at times coarse, but almost always understandable. This verse from "The Motorway" typifies the group's simple language: "I love the way you walk don't you know you're the coal motivator... I love the clothes you wear they're so mean they're so free they're so handsome. Love the clothes you wear, I love it," and the chorus: "Just like a car you're pleasing to behold I'll call you Jaguar if I may be so bold... Girl I'm just a Jeepster for your love, Girl I'm just a vampire for your love, I'm gonna suck you."

The "Electric Warrior" album also displays a skillful diversity of songs. "Rip Off" features loud, grating vocals which complement the cynicism of the lyrics: "The President's weird, he's got a burgundy beard. It's a ripoff..." The "Lean Women's Blues" represents a welcome alternative with its ballad-like verses and acoustic guitar. But whether it's a rock tune, a ballad, or the blues, T. Rex displays a flair for dynamic simplicity and alluring lyricism. The result is unique.

Dance Society steps into new season

A mother/daughter team, a Williamstown native and a master of Afro-American dance are just a few of the experts that the Williams dance department will bring to campus this year.

This past weekend, the department hosted the residency of Indrani and Sukanya, two classical Indian dancers who demonstrated that there is a good deal more to dance than to shoes. Later in the fall, Dr. Alice Heipern will begin a series of masterclasses, with a lecture on the technique of Martha Graham, one of the great pioneers in modern dance. In conjunction with this class, the department will present the film, "A Dancer's World."

If the name Renzi makes you think only of long lines and textbooks, then think again. This winter study, Marta Renzi, a native of Williamstown, will step in to take the place of dance director Joy Ann Dewey, who will be on leave the second half of the year. Renzi, an established choreographer with her own company, will instruct students in the dance classes and will also direct a student concert choreographed by her.

Following Marta Renzi's residency, Rudolph Von Laban will teach his theories of effort,

PABST 1/2 KEGS
Normally $32.65
SPECIAL $31.00
If ordered by Thursday

PRICE INCLUDES

- Deposit on tap
- 100 cups per keg

CALL YOUR PABST REPRESENTATIVES
Kelton Burback x 6309
Steve Flaim x 6324

GIVE THAT STUDENT A BLUE RIBBON!

Scandinavian music

A program of all Scandinavian vocal music, sponsored by the Weston Language Center, will be performed on Monday, Sept. 28 at 8:00 P.M. in the Weston Language Center. The concert, featuring mezzo soprano Hanne B. Booth and accompanist Betty Pierce, is free and open to the public. The program will include "Haugtussa" by Edvard Grieg and the first American performance of "Leider" by Vagn Holmboe and "Divekes Sange" by Peter Heise. The song cycles will be sung in the original languages, with translations available, and the composers and the works will be discussed briefly during the recital.

Hopkins

(Next to The National Bank at 61 Spring Street Williamstown, Ma. 458-9001)

The Versatility Cut by

Women today want versatility. They're career women, mothers, hostesses, wives, homemakers and students, all rolled into one. This is why a versatile cut is so important. No longer does a woman have to be locked into one look. The shoulder length allows for both romantic long looks and many updo alternatives. A perm base can give the styles extra body.

Pictured here are just a few versions of this look for today's versatile woman.

Call for an appointment or just walk in on Spring Street Williamstown 458-9167

OR Pittsfield 447-9576, 443-9819; Bennington, Vt. (802) 442-9823

Fashion begins with... joyce

CONCERNED WITH FASHION, FIT AND QUALITY

Tempers flare in bookstore feud

by Roh Brooks

For many years tension lurked on Spring Street, present but unseen behind bookstore walls. Then, last spring, it exploded into view; with a flurry of hot words the textbook situation at Williams College changed dramatically. Spurred on by financial problems and a lack of faculty orders, local bookseller Joseph Dewey abruptly challenged—and discarded—an informal agreement which had existed between him and business rival Ralph Renzi. The Battle of the Bookstores had begun.

A new, more openly competitive textbook business appears to be on the horizon for Williams. However, whether this will ultimately be beneficial or detrimental to the College community is open to speculation. The most extreme views on the subject come, not surprisingly, from Dewey and Renzi themselves.

Initially, the bookstore owners had shared an understanding that if a professor chose to inform only one dealer of his course textbook needs, the other would not attempt to sell books for that class. Dewey, however, claims there was insufficient business in town to support two stores and that both his and Renzi's establishments were on shaky economic ground. As a result, Dewey has begun selling texts officially ordered from Renzi. In other words, textbook-order "poaching" has arrived.

The effect of this arrival may not be fully appreciated until one realizes that, once poaching has made its appearance, it must become the only game in town. Renzi, who ordered 100 percent of the books for what he thought would be "his" courses

According to Renzi, Dewey has not been able to sell enough and has consistently underordered his share of the books to avoid return shipping charges on unbought texts. Renzi claims this has forced him to reorder books when Dewey's reticence caused a shortage, and eventually

Continued on Page 7

Students swell local voting list

To many of us fall conjures images of colored trees, schools reopening, and football players inflicting pain on one another. However, in many communities, fall is also the season for tuning up the political machines for local, off-year elections.

While most Williams students can participate in hometown politics only by means of an absentee ballot, for a sizable number of Ephraim students distance from home presents no such problem. Why? Because they are registered to vote here.

Seventy-three Williams students are Williamstown voters. Another 63 who no longer live on campus (most having graduated) still remain on the Williamstown voter list.

Many of the student voters registered here in 1980, so that they might work (and vote for) presidential candidate Edward Kennedy in the New England stronghold where Kennedy stood the best chances of scoring primary wins. Indeed, the affiliations of the locally-registered Williams students still show a weighty majority of registered Democrats or Independents. (See box.)

Of course, not all the students who register in Williamstown do so with purely political aims.

Brad Adams '82 gave mixed reasons for having registered as a Williamstown Republican.

"I wanted to vote on Election Day, rather than go through the trouble of getting an absentee ballot," Adams remarked. He cited his lack of a real "home town" after his family had moved between three cities in many years.

Carl Berg '82 gave somewhat different—and certainly less political—reasons for registering here. "My parents live in Singapore," Berg explained, "so I don't have any home town in the States to get an absentee ballot from."

Despite the surprisingly large number of students registered to vote locally, only a few seem to take any interest in Williamstown politics.

Senior Howard Shapiro, however, is one notable exception. Shapiro, who worked closely with the Kennedy camp in 1980, has served as a member of the Williamstown Democratic Town Committee since May, 1980.

"It's unfortunate that more students don't involve themselves in local politics," Shapiro said, "because in such a small town they can have a considerable impact on events that greatly affect the College."

Though elected for a four-year term to the Democratic Town Committee, Shapiro—like all of the students interviewed—remarked that his status as a Williamstown voter did not reflect an intention to settle in the area immediately after graduation.

"I asked Kurt Tauber for a job," Shapiro said jokingly, "but he said I'd have to wait at least a few years first."

Williams Students on Williamstown Voting List
	Rep.	Dem.	Ind.	Total
Currently on Campus	8	19	46	73
No Longer on Campus	5	26	32	63
Total				136

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

Carl Berg '82, one of several who chose to register as a Williamstown voter. (Doherty)

A representative of the Fuqua School of Business will be on campus Thursday, October 1, to discuss the Duke MBA Program. Interested students may obtain further information by contacting the Office of Career Counseling.

The Clothes Loft Annex

Famous Brand Fashion Outlet
55 Spring St.
Williamstown, Ma.

OPENING THIS WEEK

lady and gentleman
... at discount prices

Mon. - Sat.
10 am - 5:30 pm

New band promises great music

by Kip Cinnamon

The secret is out. A seething cauldron of steaming new music is brewing on Williams College. Working with two guitars, bass, sax, drums, keyboard and some voracious vocals, band members James Pfeiffer, Adam Merims, Andy Schlosser, John Graham, Mark Adams, Bruce Leddy, and dynamic Julie Brooks are creating music that promises to do more than simply fill the present gap in College dance bands. Due to roar onto the party circuit around Homecoming, guitarist Pfeiffer describes the band's present playing as "extremely formative" and adds with characteristic shy confidence that "We're pretty tight, though." If a recent practice session is any indication, James is understating the group's progress.

Band members bring together the volatile elements of high-energy and inexperience. The results are a roaring freshness; the music is highly danceable, often funky. James Pfeiffer, a loosely kept secret on the lead guitar during his three years here, is finally plugged in, out of the closet, and tearing off crisp licks in his quiet way, promising the band a humble new star.

Adam Merims and Andy Schlosser are the two members with some previous stage time. Both played with The Doctors, Andy also smilingly mentioned a recent tour with Talking Heads. Their experience and musical maturity draw a necessary balance with the new musicians, helping to direct the fresh arrangements. Adam bangs a solid rhythm guitar, and Andy's punchy bass keeps the tempo thrusting.

James' lead is regularly given to John Graham, who blows a ripping alto sax. The depth and versatility his wailing horn add to the group assures that the freshness will not sour after a few performances. Bruce Leddy dances on his electric piano and promises "a synthesizer is on the way", adding even more texture to their full sound. Mark Adams, who was tardy to the session because he attended a "fantastic" Simon and Garfunkel reunion in Central Park, lends his sure drumming to the band. He threatens a syncopated funkiness on the new wave numbers, and if he lets this loose, his beat will keep moving your head and your feet.

Julie Brooks is a knockout behind her microphone. She growls and screams like a blond Benetor only to fill her soprano sound into strong, clear highs. This is her first rock experience from the band side of the stage.

Their name, song list, and schedule are yet a secret—they are a shy band still. But let it be known: A new band will soon be electrifying Williams parties with its own arrangements of rock, pop, new wave, and reggae songs. So stand by for good tunes.

IMAGINUS EXHIBITION AND SALE of FINE ART REPRODUCTIONS

NEW THIS YEAR:

• CLASSIC PHOTOGRAPHS • ADAMS, CUNNINGHAM, and more.

FEATURING: Old Masters, Impressionists, The Group of Seven, Woodland Indian and Oriental Art, Fine Modern, British Museum and Exhibition Posters, Eschers, Curtis, Rockwell, and others.

OVER 700 DIFFERENT IMAGES

Sept. 23 & 24
9 - 5
Baxter Hall

PRICES

MOST LARGE PRINTS
$3.00 ea or 3 for $8.00
MOST SMALL PRINTS
$2.00 ea or 3 for $5.00

Veda Zuponic takes a bow following her "thoughtful and polished performance" at last Friday's Young Artist concert.

Pianist starts series

by Greg Capaldi

Last Friday night's piano recital by Veda Zuponic, the first in the Young Artist Series, was not for everybody. Ms. Zuponic, music department chairperson at Glassboro (NJ) State College, is drawn to both large programs and pieces of high intellectual caliber. Though her program was best suited to experienced concertgoers, her thoughtful, authoritative, and polished performances were something anyone could enjoy.

The uninitiated listener was bound to be thrown by Schumann's Kreisleriana. As is typical with Romantic works, the basis is extra-musical, here based on writings by E.T.A. Hoffman. Schumann's episodic discourse employ musical devices primarily in response to the literary flow.

The most compelling work of the evening was Beethoven's Sonata #31 In A flat, both in terms of the striking transcendental elements typical of late Beethoven and of the artist's solid understanding of them. Improvisational elements are scattered through the music, like frequent changes of tempo, and recitative-like measures in which the note values actually fail to add up correctly.

Zuponic's astute execution of these moments was nicely matched by her rendition of the final fugue, which really sounded like the interplay of symphonic voices, rather than the piled-up sonorities that so many pianists dish out.

The program ended with the comparatively facile Venezia e Napoli by Liszt. Here the playing was at its most fluent, with giddy Italianisms shining through in the true spirit of a traveler's fond recollections. Prokofiev's graceful Prelude in C was the encore.

EARN BIG $ BUCKS & FREE TRAVEL BE A CAMPUS REP FOR NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST TRAVEL AGENCY

For more information contact:
Linda Szeliga
Garber Student Tours
1406 Beacon Street
Brookline, MA 02146

or call 617-787-0600 Ext. 300 • Outside MA 1-800-225-4570

CLASSIFIEDS

Addresses of people away from school for the semester: Rachel Varley, Institut d'Europeens, 77 Rue Doguerre, 75104, Paris (14e), FRANCE. Susan O'Brien, AFOV Pierrakou 26 Zografou, Athens, Greece. Rich Stern, Institute for European Studies, Freyung 4, Palais Kinsky, A1010, Vienna 1, Austria. Richie Mass and Liz Cole, 94 Greencroft Gardens, London NW6 3PH, England. Roger Platt, Institute of European Studies, 56 Russell Square-1 Bloomsbury, London WC1, England.

Ham Radio messages to anywhere in U.S., Canada, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, The Gambia, Trinidad, and Tobago, Uruguay, and Venezuela. Inquire at Goldman's Jewelers, Spring St.

Note: These messages are sent free of charge.

UPS Mailing, 8:30-11:00. The Mole Hole.

HELP WANTED. Work in your own home. Send work history, name, address, and phone number to: Mike, P.O. Box 68, Water Vliet, Michigan 49098.

DELIVERY SERVICE STARTS SUNDAY, SEPT. 27

Check your mailbox for details

Letters

Threat

limes last year and, again this year, two nights after the mattress fire). Would there have been time enough to find another one?

OK. You see my point. Do not tamper with the fire safety equipment. It could cost you your life—or a lifetime of guilt for the death of someone else.

I'm accustomed to thinking that Williams students, whatever other differences they have, all believe in toleration and freedom of speech. But I understand that the bulletin board in Baxter which displays the materials of the Williams Committee to Oppose the Draft was trashed last week, not for the first time. Bulletin boards permit the expression of opinions. Am I wrong to think that Williams students are tolerant?

On second thought, maybe it's a case of misplaced tolerance. Thomas Hobbes, anticipating the criticism that his view of the human condition was too pessimistic, says to his critics, "when you lock your doors and your chests, you criticize mankind as much by your deeds as I do by my words." Williams students, by failing to lock their doors, show a naive tolerance of theft. Most of our (increasing) problem with thefts is the result of doors left unlocked. My guess is that the thieves are professionals who find students easy pickings.

Intolerant of opinion, tolerant of thievery. It doesn't make much sense, does it?

Dean Daniel O'Connor

Party

To the editor,

I find it rather sad that students at a college of Williams's caliber feel it is acceptable to transcend all socially considerable rules of behavior when under the influence of excessive alcohol consumption. This past weekend was host to both the Black and White and the White and Black parties, and some person or persons inspired by an overlarge intake of alcohol felt it would be enjoyable to go into another's room and render it unfit for human habitation.

I am a resident of Mills House, which hosted the White and Black party this weekend. This party seemed an enjoyable and considerably less expensive alternative to the longer established affair being held at Dodd. Students were enjoying themselves, sporting their imaginative combinations of black and white (or should I say white and black?) But some person felt that sufficient enjoyment could not be extracted from the party itself, and thus undertook a search for more exciting pastimes.

Discovering an unlocked room in Mills devoid of its occupant, this person discovered the "fun" for which it searched. An unopened bottle of quality sherry stood on the windowsill. It was but a moment's work for this fun-loving soul to open the bottle. And yet, an enjoyable swig of sherry was not that for which this student searched. Far more appealing was the idea of simply pouring the contents of the bottle onto the bed. And thus when the hapless resident returned to her room, she was greeted by a bed and bedclothes thoroughly soaked with fine sherry. The soul of wit who had been responsible for this view did not deign to be present at its unveiling. Perhaps had he or she been present, the realization might have come to him or her that the person to whom the bed, sherry and room belonged had nothing to sleep on and nowhere to sleep. It might also have been apparent that the mattress now reeked in a most definite way of sherry, a fluid which is a pleasure to drink but not to sleep on. I can only hope that the jolly soul who entertained him or herself in this fashion had a very bad hangover and a decently guilty conscience. But somehow I fear neither of these will be enough to prompt an apology.

Caroline Kettlewell '84

Bookstore Feud

Continued from Page 5

ally, has increased the size of the original orders. Renzi believes that open competition will lead to many courses in which students do not have enough books.

Conversely, Dewey is confident that competition will work. He would like to see all professors filing copies of their textbook needs with his store and Renzi's, as well as with the Pooh Perplex and the 1914 Library. Dewey responds to the charges of underordering, asserting "I get my half and a little extra."

Any book dealer, says Dewey, has to make regular returns to almost every publisher anyway, when copies of non-textbooks don't sell—"It's a part of the business." The cost of sending back a few unbought textbooks is not prohibitive, he claims.

When questioned about the occasional shortages of books for classes, Dewey pointed out that many factors determine why book shortages occur. Course enrollment can increase unexpectedly, the publisher can be out of stock, the warehouse can be slow, and mistakes can be made by the publisher.

For instance, Dewey explains, this semester he ordered The Illad for History of Ideas 101 and Classics 101 and received boxes of Managerial Psychology.

The official College position is presently one of non-interference. Dewey would like to see the school direct the faculty to send copies of its orders to both stores. Last spring, he submitted this proposal to Provost J. Hodge Markgraf, and to then Dean of Faculty, Francis Oakley. The College rejected the proposal, Markgraf said, because it does not want to be in the position of having to force a faculty member to send an order somewhere against his wishes. "The faculty have their rights too," Markgraf said.

Hallmark Cards for all Occasions Jewish New Year, September 29

Diaries
Photo Albums
Art Supplies

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown

Telephone 458-4920

We now buy and sell used records.

Check our back room full of used rock, jazz, etc. Amazing bargains ranging from current LP's to out-of-print rarities at the lowest prices.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street - 458-5229

Open 10-6

Inglennook or California Cellars
Burgundy, Rose, Chablis

4 liter bottles

6.99

Budweiser or Miller

12 oz. cans

8.99/case

Labatt's Beer or Ale

11.49/case

Schmidt's or Utica Club

16 oz. returnable bottles

7.49/case plus deposit

WEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2

BETWEEN N.A. and WILLIAMSTOWN

663-6081

CC re-examines Gifford report

by Susan Kandel

Forty-five students debated housing problems and solutions at the first College Council meeting of the year held last Wednesday at the Log.

In an attempt to clarify confusion over some of the provisions of the controversial Gifford Report, Kathleen Merrigan '82 and John O'Rourke '82, chairmen of the Housing Committee, spoke on the motivation behind the various proposals and on the problems that still need to be dealt with.

The Gifford Report, said Merrigan, stemmed from a desire to lessen the division between academic and residential life, and to improve the quality of house government.

"The Gifford Committee felt there was no day-to-day self-government in the houses," said

Merrigan. "The house presidents seem to be concerned with parties, and the personal problems and larger political questions of their house members are ignored," she added.

The question of the maintenance tax, which goes in part to the residential house social budget and in part to Buildings and Grounds, was also discussed.

"A certain percentage of house residents don't actually join their houses and therefore pay the tax without benefiting," said Merrigan.

The Gifford plan to establish advisory committees composed of house presidents and faculty associates from each house in groups such as Missions Park-Tyler, Berkshire-Dodd, Row Houses, and Greylock will also receive attention from the Housing Committee.

"We hope this year we can be a more viable committee," said Merrigan.

Other proposals that still need to be implemented by the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) concern the freshman inclusion process, which O'Rourke calls "nebulous, at best," minority student integration, and the noise problem at Prospect House.

"In the past, the Housing Committee hasn't worked closely with the CUL," said O'Rourke, citing closer cooperation, more open meetings of the Housing Committee and more student input as necessary for effective solutions to this problem.

Steve Spears '83, head of the Finance Committee and CC Treasurer, announced the first meeting of the Finance Committee, held yesterday, during which he planned to "decide the general direction and philosophy of the budget," which is set between $135,000 and $140,000.

"Things look pretty good," said Spears. "The final budget should reach College Council by mid-November."

Fed—student loans cut

by Freddy Nathan

The United States Senate and the House of Representatives agreed this summer to authorization provisions in the federal budget that would drastically reduce aid to higher education.

These cuts came in the wake of the Reagan Administration's budget cutting program, announced last spring by OMB Director David Stockman. Particularly hard hit were the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) Program and the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants (otherwise known as "Pell Grants"), two programs which in recent years had a substantial role in providing support to low and middle income students.

The authorization levels were agreed upon by the Education Conference from the Senate and the House who met in July to work out differences between the authorization provisions adopted in the House budget and the Senate Amendment.

Since most Williams students have already borrowed their Guaranteed Student Loans for the current 1981-82 year, most of these changes will not affect grants and loans until the 1982-83 school year.

Under present law which stays in effect until October 1, there is no income ceiling and students are permitted to borrow up to $2,500 per year, regardless of family income, with the government guaranteeing repayment of the loan to the lending institution. However, beginning October 1, 1981, students from families earning more than $30,000 adjusted gross income per year must pass a needs test to borrow a GSL. The definition of need is left to the Secretary of Education, Terrel Bell, to determine. College students from families earning up to $30,000 a year would automatically qualify for federally guaranteed loans with the government paying the in-school interest subsidy plus the special allowance to the lender. Ironically the great amount of publicity generated in the spring and early summer not only prompted most students to get their loans early but also attracted new borrowers who wanted to take advantage of the federal bonanza before it was too late. Consequently, the cost savings expected may indeed turn into significantly greater overruns than anyone imagined.

To offset these losses in federal aid the Trustees of Williams have recently established a Parent Loan Program, which will be financed by using a portion of the College's endowment funds. It is currently available to any Williams parent regardless of family income. "Williams parents will be eligible for loans of up to $7,500 a year (less the amount of the Guaranteed Student Loan and any scholarship aid) at 12% interest, with the repayment to start immediately, and with the payments to extend over a period that is twice as long as the anticipated length of the student's stay at Williams," according to President Chandler. As of this date close to 150 Williams students have borrowed an average of $4,533 each, according to Robert Gewecke, the College Comptroller.

The Pell program of basic educational opportunity grants is the other main form of federal aid for students. The conferees agreed to accept authorization caps of $2.65 billion for 1982, $2.8 billion for 1983 and $3.0 billion for 1984. These spending limitations are expected to force considerable reduction in grants to individual students but the exact impact cannot be measured without knowing how many students will be eligible and what the amount of the grant will be. For the 1981-82 academic year the maximum Pell Grant will be $1670.

Stereos stolen from Morgan Hall

Continued from Page 1

adjoining ground-floor rooms in Armstrong House, apparently through open windows. O'Connor suspects "transients" rather than students or local residents.

"I think it's professionals coming through town and taking advantage of opportunities. They know students are a soft touch, not locking or nailing down anything that moves," he commented. O'Connor believes that crimes of this type are becoming more common on campus, especially thefts of stereos and bicycles.

The Dean said it was "unquestionably a mistake" that students were not informed of the possible opening of the storage room. "The students were under the assumption that the room would be kept locked."

O'Connor agreed that the summer storage system needed review. "Many of our students come from far away," he said, "and they can't take all their belongings home. It's reasonable to ask the College to store them... A central storage area is one answer. We'd have to find a place that's dry and secure against vandalism."

"We can't be legally liable for belongings, but we should offer a reasonable guarantee of security," he added. "This is a serious problem; storage is an important service to students. Our short-term problem is the recent losses. In the long run it's how to prevent future losses."

Director of Student Housing Wendy Hopkins also commented on the situation. "We make it clear to students that they store things at their own risk. We try to keep storage areas locked, but we can't be held responsible for losses."

"There's no one place large enough to store everything left for the summer. There's a phenomenal amount of it. Space is at a premium on this campus, so areas are used for storage only if they can't be used for anything else," Hopkins said.

"Most colleges won't let students leave their stuff over the summer," added Hopkins. "They make them take it home... we want to continue offering this service."

Fahey Beverage Co., Inc. and The Miller Brewing Co.

Introduce Your Miller Campus Representatives

Jon Dayton x 6269

Tom Casey x 6278

CALL THEM FOR DISCOUNTS ON MILLER, LITE and LOWENBRAU

Lite

Runners fly to victories

by Lyman Casey

Even after having lost last year's top three runners and their good-luck bear, men's cross country has picked up right where it left off in 1980.

In a strong cold rain the varsity flexed its muscles, thrashing Trinity, 15-48, on Saturday. The team was immeasurably aided by the strength their substitute bear Paddington brought them. Running well in spite of the rain, senior Co-captains Chuck Stewart and Gordon Coates, and John Nelson '84 coasted once again, tying for first place. Right behind them came Bennett Yort '84 and Andy Moyad '84.

Showing great heart was frosh standout Pat Connors, who lost his shoes to a muddy creek at the one mile point and completed the race barefoot.

The Eph harriers looked strong earlier in the week, squashing North Adams on Wednesday in their home opener by a score of 17-46. Stewart and Nelson coasted in for a first place tie and were followed closely by Coates, completing the Eph's 1-2-3 finish. Also scoring well for Williams were Connors in fifth and Dan Riley '83 in sixth. A good sign for the Ephs was the narrow gap between the first place runners and Andy Moyad '84, who, though running seventh for Williams, was a mere thirty seconds back.

Saturday, the JV got a chance to show its depth against Albany St., and responded by taking the third through eighth places to win, 26-30. Dan Sullivan '82 and Ian Whyte '84 led the way for the squad.

Another freshman who has run well thus far is Brian Kilcoyne, who placed seventh Wednesday and Saturday, and figures to be in the thick of things at season's end.

The quick start of the 1981 harriers has stretched their consecutive win streak to 31 meets spanning three seasons. Next week, the Ephmen go against tough UVM, Middlebury, and Albany squads at Albany.

They're off! The Eph runners surge to the front at the beginning of their thrashing of North Adams State on Wednesday. (Davies)

Odell's team looks promising

Continued from Page 10 clinched at the end of last season by bull Sean Crotty, a sophomore from Troy, N.Y. Crotty fills the shoes of departed Bill Novicki quite ably, and should see a lot of action this season as a ball carrier. Senior Kenny Mills and freshman Frank Edwards may give Crotty a rest at times.

The receiving corps are back, and stronger than ever. Split end Micah Taylor (a NESAC sprint champ) is back for his second full season of football. Injury prone last season, Taylor was a key cog in the Eph's early attack before getting hurt. Junior Sly Sommers also has good speed and hands, but little varsity experience.

The tight end position would appear weak with the loss of veteran Dave Greaney, but senior Craig Overlander returns from a leg injury which sidelined him last season to keep the position strong. Overlander has good size (6'1" 190), speed, and hands, and will catch more than his share of passes in '81.

Offensive line a question mark

The offensive line is a unit in transition, despite the fact that three of five starters are returning. Center is the big question mark, where senior Rory Dunne and sophomore Bernie Krause will fight for the right to fill the shoes of departed Marc Theofelakes.

Guard would appear strong with starters Tim Clark and Mike Chambon returning, but Chambon returns after a brief try-out at line-backer and is a bit rusty.

Tackles are solid, as well as gigantic. 210 lb. senior Andy Robison and 6'6" (that's no misprint) 240 lb. junior Gary Stosz will return to anchor the offensive line.

The Eph defense (or Ephense) may have its problems in 1981, but one can bet they won't stem from the front five. Six experienced veterans return for five spots.

Six defensive linemen return

Nose guard is again being contested by senior Joe (Don't Call Me Sheldon) Ross and junior Jack Kowalik, from Braintree, Mass. Whoever misses out will move over to tackle, where he will be joined by Steve Doherty, a 6'3" 220 lb. senior from Milton, Mass. who was the team's best down lineman last season. Senior Rob Roberto from Warwick, R.I. is a lean, mean, tackling machine and will also see plenty of inside action.

The ends will be admirably anchored by two guys big enough to be the Williams Octet. They are 6'0" 190 lb. Tom Bouchard of Danvers, Mass. and 6'2" 195 lb. Gary Pfaff of Beverly, Mass. Both are experienced and nasty.

The $64,000 Question is who will attempt to replace the two graduated all-everything line-backers, Brian Benedict and Mark Deuschle. Veterans Rick Versace and Mike Hawkins have the inside track—with sophomores Chris Woodworth and Dan Finneran also in the running.

The team's secondary, last year the best nationally in Division III, is sadly depleted also. The only returning starter is team captain Jeff Kiesel, a senior from Chester Springs, Pa. However, seniors Darrell White, Jeff Skerry, and junior Tim Curran all have some experience. They should be the starters, with injured juniors Tomas Alejandro from the Planet Mars and Mike Jones from Seat Pleasant, Md. returning later to challenge for spots.

Special Teams Strong

The place-kicking will once again be handled by senior Rich Coomber, from Morrisville, Pa. Coomber has hit field goals of 50 yards plus in practice with room to spare. He was somewhat inconsistent last season, but attributes this to problems in timing between himself and his holder. This season, punter John Hennigan will hold for Coomber.

Hennigan, a sophomore from Chatham, N.J., will do most of the punting.

The team seems ready this week, after over four weeks of practice, to take on Middlebury and avenge a disappointing loss and tie to the Panthers in the last two seasons.

Hurry! . . Super saver fares anywhere for Christmas are almost gone.

Don't wait to make your reservations to go home for the holidays.

Most airlines are going up October 1st.

THE TRAVEL STORE
105 Spring Street
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

The Mole Hole
UNIQUE GIFTS
for all family members
118 Water Street
Open 9-6 Seven Days

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE
Renee George of Northbrook, Illinois, is this week's recipient. Renee, a junior, won her first match in varsity singles competition over Tufts this week in three sets. Tufts is a traditionally strong opponent, and Renee's 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 win is truly deserving of praise. Coach Sean Sloane called her "a determined competitor." Renee, this Bud's for you.
this Bud's for you!

BREAKAWAY Sports
A companion to Goff's Breakaway has shoulder detailing with the addition of Antron yoked shoulders and a fine color-accenting bead trim. Its high zip-through collar, pockets with velcro flaps, knit cuffs, and drawstring waist enhance its function while retaining that fashion look so indicative of a CB Sports pull-on.
Plus a variety of all-weather shells for men and women.
Goff's Sports, inc.
MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

College Council President Freddy Nathan (second from left) reported on student aid developments at last Wednesday's Council meeting.

Two new Doonesbury's are in—
Thanks for cooperating during the rush.
Renz's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

Introducing LATE NITE SNACKS
Delivery from Napolitano's Pizza
FOR JUST 50¢
That's:
$5 for a large cheese pizza
(only 5¢ more than Colonial)
DELIVERED TO YOUR DOOR
Call x6621 Between 9 and 10:30
Tues., Wed., and Thurs. Nights
All deliveries made between 11:30 and 12:00
Service Starts Tonight

"There's more to being photographed than twisting back and forth and looking toward the future!"
Senior School Photography
Allow yourself up to 1/2 hour in our dedicated studio and we'll take 12 poses, with a change of clothing if you wish, and present the 8 best previews to choose from:
20% off framing of our Senior Portraits with this ad.
STOP BY TODAY OR CALL FOR AN APPOINTMENT
photo works inc.
Everything in Photography
1 WATER STREET WILLIAMSTOWN MASS 01267 413-458-3113

Odell leads Eph gridders toward success in 1981

by Steven H. Epstein

All over the country—at Alabama, Stanford, and even at Harvard—big time football has once again begun for 1981. Scholarships are doled out, players start double-sessions almost before school ends for the summer, and players' and coaches' future livelihoods all depend on one factor—winning.

And then there's Williams. No scholarships for football gods. No 100,000 seat stadium. No Bear Bryant to entice the media. Just Robert Odell, former Pennsylvania halfback sensation of the 1940's at the helm. Odell doesn't make flashy predictions or appear as guest analyst at halftime of the ABC Game of the Week. He doesn't do much—that is, except win football games regularly with his relative "low-key attitude" about football.

Since 1971 Bob Odell has coached at Williams, and since 1971 the Ephs have maintained pre-eminent status atop the Little-3 Conference as well as consistently posting one of the best records in the New England Small College Athletic Conference.

Odell has 45 returning veterans from his 1980 squad which posted a 5-2-1 record, and won the Little-3 Conference Title with late season wins over Wesleyan and Amherst. His starting team will likely include 13 of 22 former starters, with both the place kicker and punter from last season also back for more.

Lawler to run offense

For the third consecutive season the quarterbacking will be done by senior John Lawler from Wellesley, Mass. Lawler won his starting position in his sophomore year against Bowdoin, and has since started 11 of 12 games played by the Ephs. His strongest assets are his field leadership and his ability to direct a run-oriented offense. His passing arm is adequate, but at times inconsistent.

Ready to back up Lawler are junior Scott Garabedian from Salem, Mass., and sophomore B. J. Connolly from Oakdale, N.Y. Both have shown great promise in practice. Odell is expected to go with Lawler unless his passing arm becomes a liability.

Two of the three starting running backs from last year return to the Ephs' starting lineup. At left-halfback, 5'9", 155 lb. Tom "Honest, I really do Play Football" Casey returns. Casey, a senior, is used primarily as a pass-receiver, although he did gain good rushing yardage also in '80. Senior Jay Wheatley from White Plains, N.Y. is the right-halfback. Wheatley seems to star every year against Amherst—scoring the winning TD the last two years. Early season heroics against Middlebury could signal a consistently good season for the kid with so much potential.

The fullback spot was

Continued on Page 9

Coach Bob Odell eyes sophomore quarterback B.J. Connolly about to run a play during pre-season practice for the Ephs. (Doherty)

"Holio Bolio, it's football time!"

by John Hennigan

For those new to Williams, football ritual of pre-season practice must be shared. Before the season becomes muddled in statistics and decorated with postgame victory parties, we want to take a step back and remember those first few days of September that make the start of each school year unforgettable for the entire Eph squad.

Upon a player's arrival in Williamstown for pre-season practice, he feels the inevitable task that lies ahead. Until classes start, he will sleep no later than 6:00 a.m., view more films, and learn more plays than an outsider could believe.

However, all is not lost! On the field a player receives all the moral encouragement he needs from Coach Renzi Lamb, chairman of the department of Hard Knocks and Vernacular Linguistics at Williams.

Head Coach Bob Odell, now starting his eleventh year, has won or tied for the Little Three Championship every year. Odell has coined several cliches which have grown synonymous with Williams football. One could say that, after the "fur has flown" and "Katie has barred the door," "Holio Bolio," the Ephmen are a good bet for another Little Three Championship this year.

By far the most inspiring moment of pre-season this year came from Sean "Buckets" Crotty.

The sophomore fullback treated the offensive unit to an inspiring rendition of Irish songs and folktales after a severe thunderstorm blew out the electricity during a film session. But Crotty will not disap-point the fan who appreciates hard running, and crunching blocking on the gridiron.

The "Hogs," another name for the offensive linemen, along with the "Dogs," the equivalent alias for the defensive linemen, have also been hard at work in their respective hog and dog pits. Between the big berthas, seven-man sled, and two-man sled, the Hogs and Dogs "dance" with foam and rubber all practice long. Between whistles, shouts of "Gentlemen!" from one coach of boxing broadcasting fame, and continuous popping of helmets and pads, one cannot help but taste the sweetness of success in the Cole Field air.

Everything between the first timed mile of day one to the final whistle against Amherst remains in the player's memory for years, often growing fonder with the passage of time. But preseason leads to the Middlebury game. "Holio Bolio, it's time to play ball."

Note: John Hennigan, a sophomore, is the punter for the Williams football squad.

JOCK SCRAPS

Soccer kicks London

by Dave Woodward

Eric Stein '83 posted the lone tally of the day with a picture-perfect chip shot just beyond the keeper's reach as the Williams varsity side edged London University by a 1-0 count in an exhibition match played last Friday.

The match was characterized by solid defense on the part of both squads. The Ephs, led by David Barry '82 and Co-captain Brian Daniell '82, stood up well under the pressure applied by the visitors. Williams also controlled the midfield, as juniors Rob Kusel and Eric Smith turned in good performances. Stein notched the unassisted goal at 40:31 of the first half.

The Ephs outshot their opponents, 16-13, while Ken Rhodes '85 and Ted Murphy '85 had six saves in combining on the shut-out. Coach Mike Russo called it "a very nice win, because although it's an exhibition game, it sets Williams soccer off on the right foot."

Women run for win

Senior Co-captain Liz Martineau and senior Tricia Hellman tied for first in a time of 19:41 to lead the women's cross country team to a perfect score 15-40 victory over the State University of

New York at Albany on Saturday.

The harriers completely blanked Albany, taking the first twelve places in the race. The weather conditions were perfect, and both Martineau and Hellman showed themselves to be the class of the field. They were followed by Co-captain Sue Marchant, and sophomores Kerry Malone and Margaret Lynch who all crossed the finish line together in 20:14.

Coach Bud Fisher is looking for another strong performance this Saturday when the Ephs host the Williams Invitational Cross Country Meet, which will start at 1:00 p.m.

Women racqueteers yield to Tufts, 8-1

by Steve Epstein

"David did beat Goliath," said one famous sage of sportswriting, "but that couldn't have been the season opener." The Eph women's tennis team had to feel the truth of that maxim, falling to goliath Tufts, 8-1, on Saturday.

It looked more like the flood than the David and Goliath story before the match, with heavy rains forcing the match indoors to the Lansing-Chapman rink tennis courts. The Ephs were also hurt by the addition of no-ad scoring to the rules, to speed up the indoor play. The racqueteers lost many a game at deuce, with the more experienced Tufts players gaining the upper hand on many key sudden-death points.

The only winner of the day was junior Renee George of Chicago, Illinois. George was victorious in her first varsity singles match, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. Her other five teammates, all also new to varsity singles competition, did not fare as well.

Senior Jami Harris, also from Chicago (and, like George, one of 4 Dodd House members on the squad) fought to a match point in the second set before eventually falling in the third, 3-6, 7-6, 6-3. Harris played the number one slot armed with an oversized Prince Woodie and consistent ground strokes which should stand her in good stead against less gargantuan opponents.

Second singles player Lisa Buckley '83 fell in straight sets, as did sophomore Marissa Gulton, who played number three. George was victorious at fourth singles, and teammate Kate Downey '82 came as close as any other Eph to victory, losing in three sets after gaining two match points in the third set. Downey fell 4-6, 6-4, 7-5. Sixth singles player Jane Cadwell '82 also fell in straight sets.

In the doubles, all three teams fell in straight sets, but not without a fight. The best fight came from second duo junior Margot Stone and sophomore Melissa George, both again from Chicago—the Williams tennis capital of the world. Stone played doubles with Melissa's sister Renee the year before—simply trading in one sister for another. They played well before falling 7-5 in a first-set tie-breaker after fighting to 5 deuce games in the set.

Junior Lisa Pepe prepares to rifle a spike in Towne Field House as the volleyball team practices. (Farley)

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 3

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

September 29, 1981

Blazing controversy

Heat loss may cool fireplaces

by Katya Hokanson

Most fireplaces in freshman buildings and in residential houses may be blocked up before the start of the next academic year in an effort to reduce fire hazard and save energy, according to Dean Cris Roosenraad.

Roosenraad, citing two fires of "moderate severity" that occurred because of fireplaces last year, said he requested the Energy Conservation Committee (ECC) to submit a recommendation on the issues of fire hazard and energy loss.

The Committee recommended to Roosenraad that all fireplaces except for those in J.A. rooms and in house common rooms be made "unsuitable," Chairman Robert Kozelka said.

President John Chandler will consider the proposal and it will be brought up for consideration before the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL), said Roosenraad.

Neither Peter Welanetz, director of the Physical Plant, nor Deans Roosenraad and O'Connor, nor anyone on the Energy committee knew how many fireplaces there are on the Williams campus. No quantitative studies have been made on the energy that could be saved by blocking fireplaces.

However, according to Pete Didisheim '82, member of the ECC and chairman of the Student Energy Conservation Committee, "considerable amounts" of energy would be saved by the measure.

Lorraine Driscoll '82, also a member of the ECC, said "Many of the fireplaces don't have flues, and many of the existing flues don't close properly. Also, people may forget or neglect to close them. That's a big loss of heat."

Student reaction to the recommendation was largely negative.

"This campus is becoming an elaborate cost-benefit analysis," said Will Layman '82. "It's true closing fireplaces would save money, but closing them hurts the quality of life and detracts from the beauty of the campus. Does everyone have to be at the same level in identical little cubicles? And what about the heaters in Greylock that are right next to huge windows? They waste a lot of energy. There are a million other things we can do to save money. Fireplaces are rare and special on college campuses."

"Student reaction will have a chance to come through the CUL and the Dean's Office," said Roosenraad.

Both Driscoll and Didisheim said that the committee did not consider alternative measures to total blockage, such as glass doors to reduce heat loss and danger of fire. Welanetz said that glass doors would cost about $100 per unit, a price he considered prohibitive.

"I do think we made an error in neglecting to talk about installing flues and glass doors in each fireplace so they would continue to be available for use. Perhaps we're too narrowly interested in conserving as much energy as possible at the cheapest available cost," Driscoll concluded.

Inflation crops art complex

by Stuart Smith

"Inflation and other problems" have forced budget cuts and other economies in the plans for the new $4.5 million addition to the Williams College Museum, according to Museum Director Thomas Krens.

The Trustees voted last October to cut 2000 square feet from the plan, and other savings have been necessitated, including the scrapping of plans for Fire hazard and energy-waster or an important aesthetic asset? Most fireplaces on campus could be blocked up before the beginning of the next school year. (Farley) the $700,000 renovation of the existing Lawrence Hall.

The College originally budgeted $2 million for construction, furnishings, renovation and other fees. Then, as now, a $1.3 million endowment was set aside to maintain the completed building.

The Trustees were forced to reassess their construction plans when the lowest bid submitted last spring was $3.43 million, nearly 71 percent over the original estimate. Changing the plans reduced the construction cost budget to $2.75 million. An additional $449,000 covers the architects' fee, movable furnishings, and design development costs.

According to Art Department Chairman Milo C. Beach, one cost-cutting measure replaced the skylights planned for the two new museum galleries with a plain, flat roof.

Also, some spaces in the old building which were to be converted to classrooms or studios will be left unused, according to Krens, because the rooms, with their present functions, are not connected to the right parts of the addition to be useful. Any additional funds, Krens noted, would be used to "immediately renovate these rooms."

Some essential conversions will still be carried out, however. On the top floor of Lawrence, a classroom that would have stood between the old and new galleries will be converted to an additional gallery, as originally planned. A specific donation will cover that cost, Krens said. Altogether, according to Krens, these sacrifices should allow the addition to stay within its $4.5 million budget.

A problem with the existing museum, Krens said, is that the condition of the permanent collection has been deteriorating due to widely fluctuating humidity levels. Such levels have varied from 20 to 90 percent and have caused the pigment of some paintings in the museum to crack and flake.

The addition will be totally climate-controlled and should thus go a long way toward preserving the collection. In the existing galleries of the museum, air-conditioning will be installed, but Krens says these galleries won't be insulated unless a matching grant to help cover costs is approved by the government.

While calling the addition a great improvement, Krens admits that it does not exactly conform to its original plans. "We were not able to do everything we wanted," he said, "But the avenue remains open for future development."

With the addition's two new galleries, and plans to renovate classrooms into several galleries in Lawrence, the museum's exhibition space will more than double. When not on exhibit, paintings will be kept in new storage rooms where students will still be able to study them. According to Krens, paintings will be hung on large wire screen racks, which can be pulled out for viewing.

Up till this point, Krens noted, "We've not been in a position to receive gifts, and as a result they've been going elsewhere."

Because of the new storage space, Krens expects many new gifts and donations of artworks. These should be greatly enhance the museum's permanent collection, he added, because the museum has virtually no acquisitions budget and is dependent on such gifts.

Designed by Charles Moore of the firm Moore Grover Harper, Essex, Connecticut, the addition is contracted to the Fontaine Bros. of Springfield, Mass. Crews have finished rock blasting and are now pouring the concrete foundations for the addition.

According to the contractor, once the foundations are finished, the workers will be able to "work straight through the winter" on the steel frame and masonry structure.

Some parts of the building may be ready by next fall, though Beach takes "with a grain of salt" promises that the art department will be able to move into its new quarters by next September. The museum itself, closed in January '81, should reopen by January '83. Until then the permanent collection is being stored at the Clark Art Institute.

President Chandler tosses out the first trumpet of the season into the expectant arms of Band leader John Russell '82. The Band anticipates an eighteenth consecutive undefeated season. (Burghardt)

Cooks stew in new surroundings

by Peter Nicholas & Susan Kandel

In a move described by one affected cook as "a slap in the face," Williams administrators this summer eliminated the jobs of the Row House cooks as a result of the end of Row House dining. In addition, the College began to phase out the matron service.

According to Director of Food Services Ross Keller, the College formerly employed five Row House cooks. Three have been reassigned to larger dining halls and two have left Williams.

Keller claimed the change in dining policy and reshuffling of Row House cooks is in no way part of a College plan to phase out all nonessential services. He does not feel that the College is unresponsive to student and employee needs.

"Dodd House dining is maintained, although it would be cheaper and more efficient to close it down," he commented.

Helen DeRose, a cook from Fort Hoosac House now working at Mission Park, maintained that the two cooks left the College because they were "disgusted" with the treatment given them by the College.

She argued that the new dining policy was made with negligible employee input and lack of consideration of student wishes.

"We were like one big happy family. The kids all got together . . . I was like the mother," she reminisced of her years at the Fort. DeRose said she had more independence working at the Fort than at Mission Park, where she is "no longer my own boss."

The College's assertion that Row House dining facilities failed to attract sufficient numbers of students is untrue, according to DeRose. "Over a hundred kids came every Sunday for brunch," she said.

The phase out of matron service

Continued on Page 6

Viva Italiano

Italian, the language of poets and artists, is a dead idiom at Williams that should be revived by the Administration. Seven students have taken their own initiative; six by taking an introductory Italian course at North Adams State and one by following an independent course of study here.

Between 1972 and 1976, Anthony Nicastro, Italian professor at North Adams State, taught an introductory Italian course for Williams art graduate students and interested undergraduates. Waning interest on the part of both student parties forced the class's cancellation, and since then, only intermittent Winter Study offerings have appeased student interest.

That six students make the extra effort to drive to North Adams three times a week is a good indication of the latent interest that exists. If a regular Italian course were to be offered on campus, at least double the number of present Italian students could be counted on to fill classroom seats.

Moreover, every year six to eight Williams students spend part of their junior year in Italy. Few bother to learn Italian before leaving as two of the popular programs in Rome and Florence are conducted solely in English. Greater proficiency in the language would create more options for students interested in language-intensive programs.

With enthusiasm as high as it is now, Italian should have at least the same type of independent study/tutorial arrangement that the Critical Languages presently use.

Nicastro has indicated he would be willing to teach a class at Williams again. With the rave reviews he has drawn from students attending his North Adams course, the College would be wasting an excellent opportunity by turning him down.

Nearly every Williams student took the equivalent of three years of foreign language in high school. This semester less than 25 percent of the student body is enrolled in a foreign language class.

Instituting an Italian class would be a first step toward reversing this alarming trend, and should be one of the Administration's goals for the fall of 1982.

Food Facts

The College's new dining changes have had a major effect on the lives of students on the Williams campus. The elimination of Row House dining, the restriction of guest meals, and the new computer system have meant longer lines and fewer of the charms that used to characterize Williams dining.

The student body understands the financial necessities of saving money on campus dining. None of us wants to pay more each semester for food. Nevertheless, we also appreciate the many benefits both of the services we retain and of those we have lost. Thus we are in an ideal position to assist Food Service and the Administration in the formulation of Williams Dining Policy.

In order to make a constructive contribution to the decision-making process, however, it is important that the students get a full breakdown on the costs of the new food service system and the numbers of students using the different dining halls during peak periods. Only with this information can we work as a community to solve this pressing community problem.

Quote of the Week

"Nothing has any weight with Ross Keller"
—John Segal, C.C. Vice-president

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS

Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS

Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT

Lori Miller

FEATURES

Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS

Mike Sutton

LAYOUT

Bob Buckner

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

Phillip Busch

Sara Ferris

Katya Hokanson

Dan Keating

Jon Tigar

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

Peter Burghardt

Paul Sabbah

OUTLOOK

Priscilla Cohen

Alyson Hagy

SPORTS

Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY

Sue Doherty

Steve Farley

BUSINESS MANAGER

Chris Toub

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. All letters submitted to the RECORD must be typed and should not exceed 250 words. The Record reserves the right to edit all letters it receives.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879 Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Looking inside the greenhouse

Maybe it is spent mellowing out on the Berkeley campus, travelling across the United States, or contending with Spanish tanks rolling toward the center of Madrid. However carried out, the junior year, or a portion of it, completed outside Williamstown inculcates a different attitude toward the College and a spirited examination of higher education's relevancy.

Last year I spent my junior year in Madrid, Spain. While it was not my most academically challenging year, the time off from Williams in a different living and learning environment was my most productive educational experience ever.

The benefits reaped from living with a Spanish family, improving my second language and travelling extensively through Europe and Morocco were evident by the year's end. However, I didn't fully realize the most intriguing aspect of a year away from the Purple Valley until I returned this September: challenging the relevancy of what I was doing here at Williams.

PURPLE PROSE

In many ways the College acts as a greenhouse. Each incoming freshman class represents 500 new minds and bodies the College is charged with cultivating for the opportunities the Real World offers. The novelties of my freshman year precluded any serious questioning as to why I was at Williams. Sophomore year, the novelty had worn off and had been replaced by an acceptance of the tradition surrounding the school. Yet why was this tradition so important? What did I really want from the College and its myriad offerings?

My junior year was the chance to step outside the greenhouse and look down into the arrangement to see what had been going on around me for those first two years.

Actually, Williams is a very nice greenhouse. From Phil Smith's smiling faces on the letters of acceptance to Dean O'Connor and President Chandler's weekly student walk-in hours, the College tries and, in many cases, succeeds in maintaining a personal bond between the students and the Institution.

Despite these efforts, the size, location and the homogeneity of the student body turns the College in on itself. Williams and the Real World blur together, becoming one and the same. What actually occurs outside the greenhouse is left to experience vicariously when we occasionally buy a New York Times.

There exists the need to step back from the classes, the committees, the pseudo-institutions and the ambitions to ask, "Why are they important?" and "Why am I here?" We live in the Williams greenhouse only three or four years. To confuse this with the greater challenge awaiting us after Williams defeats the College's purpose of preparing its students.

Spending a semester or a full year at a college in a different part of the country breaks down the isolationism that can plague Williams. Devoting oneself to learning a new language in a foreign country, and assimilating the new culture forces a personal revision of values, and a reexamination of the objectives Williams presents.

Working as Business Week's correspondent in Madrid raised the questions, "If I am successful and proficient now at what I eventually want to do for a living, why do I need to complete a fourth year of college?" "Wouldn't I be better off staying in the business, where I'd been offered a full-time job, and hone my skills there?" That is what Williams ostensibly has been preparing me for in the first place: a position in the Real World.

I had made it. I had stepped outside the greenhouse and was able to look down through the clear panes and question my purpose at Williams and what I eventually could get out of it.

Of course the diploma from Williams was important, but by challenging its significance and forcing an introspective look I raised greater questions of why the diploma was so important. My year in Spain spawned a greater feeling of self-confidence, independence and ability to put into proper perspective the seemingly all-important college concerns.

After nine months in Spain and three months as a summer news reporter for the Portland, Oregon newspaper, returning to Williams was anti-climactic. The sometimes petty bickering in the College Council, the often arcane procedures of the Financial Committee, and the howl over a lack of adequate meal plans seemed so irrelevant.

Taking time off from Williams isn't feasible or desirable for many people. Yet I left the Williams greenhouse, looked at other larger, more complicated greenhouses, and returned with a much better idea of what I wanted from the College.

Much of the anxiety over academic pressures is relieved, and one look at an all-College party exposes an artificial social environment that bears little resemblance to any other outside the College.

As seniors we will mature and be ready to leave the greenhouse in May. Some of us know what we want to do; others are still exploring various options. Which ever avenue is taken, the chances for success and satisfaction improve vastly if one is able to return that final year with a certain notion of relevancy attained through the broader look into the system.

Eric Schmitt

Rebels without a cause (almost)

by Alyson Hagy

You can really tell when you have been around here for a while. You have been here, in Williamstown, almost too long when you start applying what you have learned over the years to the tiniest things. You have been here quite a while when you start applying truths to the Village Beautiful.

On Truth

I see it all the time now. Somebody runs a cost-benefit analysis on their books-n-beer budget. The College Council Finance Committee takes up its duties very deliberately and with a touch of zeal (perhaps an echo of the Reagan era?). The masses still tremble with some kind of rage because their pets have been purged and food lines are ever longer. The local (very local) media sets its sights on Hopkins Hall to watch and wait and hope we don't all become the subjects of a detached oligarchy. A few of us act like we remember Nixon and the War.

It might simply be said that some of us

ern America. We grew up sneering at the war. By gosh, we are smart and no one's going to make us look silly.

But, let's face it, we do look silly and we can't help it. It makes only a little more sense to discuss row house dining than the sale of AWACs over the remnants of a Baxter meal. Just a little more sense. We have our little government, our little suburban social patterns. I admit, this is our world, no matter how small it is, and I suppose we have to make do. I try to accept the inevitable temporary loss of perspective that has us demonstrating for dogs and dining while apartheid and El Salvador are peripheral concerns at best. I accept it because I, too, want to fret and worry over a situation that I might be able to rectify. But there is still a problem when you begin to know the rest of the world a little better and you recognize the disparity between our over-anxious microcosm of a college and that wilderness out there. When that happens, you know you are getting old. Those days bent over books have stooped your spine and your seems to be the "above all." (Did you see the little airplanes buzzing the football stadium on Saturday?? I rest my case.) We are sitting on a heap of money—millions and millions—and we, as a college, have to do something with it. There is a future to insure.

Look at it this way: Williams will survive the 1980s barring nuclear disintegration and the fierce bite of acid rain. Its future will be the product of "careful planning." There will be a faculty, a student body, a few classrooms. B&G will still be around to move desks and tables. Food Service will still be feeding someone. This is the very bottom line. Somebody has planned the future. Even we have been planned. With the survival of good ol' Williams in mind, monies have been pragmatically parcelled out to insure the continuation of those traditions. The Trustees, et al, have assured terribly. I realize as much as anyone how spoiled one can be at Williams, but I also believe that we, the current student body, are suffering to some degree because we are in the middle. Because we are here at a time of change, we have less power than those students who came before us (hello, alumni!) or those little Ephs of the future. The new plans are being made for the future according to the experience of the past. Those of us that are here, still stooped over our books, have just enough time to feel left out and stomped on sometimes. And we always said we would try to be too smart for that.

"We have less power than the students who came before us."

A bugle

So what do we do? Kick and scream? It seems to be coming down to that as we all sense the bounds of rationality. The students have been left out. We aren't children (we say), but if you forget us again we might just yell until our faces are red. Do we, instead, remain serious and construct our own alternatives to living and learning? Submit them to a council or a committee? Wait to be rebuffed? Do we just take ourselves too seriously. After all, one is apt to develop some sort of neurosis after a few months buried in the Berkshires. It might also be said that we have nothing else to do. We learn political and economic theory, we master research techniques, we come in contact with lots of classroom "truths" delivered to us in an academic vacuum, and we feel compelled to use them. So some of us, an Older Guard on campus, start throwing up barricades because civilization, as we know it in Williamstown, seems to be coming to an end. We think we know what happens to youth caught with its pants down . . . it gets a pat on the head, it gets its room cleaned, it gets a draft card.

Consequences

Like I said, I think the current preoccupation with student-administration "struggle" is, in some sense, our way of remembering Vietnam, tricky Dick, and the anger of our older brothers and sisters. It is a back door way of growing up. We will feel like fools if we are ever caught with our pants down. We are supposed to be too smart for that. And, by gosh, we know all of this stuff; we understand the Romans, the Nazis, and mod-mind starts looking outward. You might feel like you are wasting your time around here. You might start to want out.

Okay, so what if I confess right here and now. I am a senior. I have read a lot of books and I usually watch the news at night. I have spent quite a bit of time trying to figure this college out. I have tried to figure out how it works. I guess I have tried to find the truth. But while battling my own neurosis in a fog, I think maybe I have rediscovered the one simple, essential fact, the kernel of Williams College. The truth around here still is: money talks.

"A few of us act like we remember Nixon and the War."

Big deal, right. Your father has probably been saying that to you for years. Well, I finally must admit that it is totally true. Here in the Berkshires, it's been the bucks that made the difference. Williams College is a business. Our administration is a working firm that wants to keep its books and its nose clean. This support for their set of priorities.

I only say all of this to point out that there is a "plan" of sorts that pulls the strings around here. Change does not happen on its own. But I hardly dare to explore the implications of my own observation. I hate to ask what happened to educational priorities. That question has been asked too many times. And besides, I am old and touched with cynicism. Perhaps I am even beginning to believe that the powers that be can have their cake and eat it too. After all, they have been doing that for quite a while. You know—patting us on the head while they make off with our puppies and our pocket money (remember the SAT tax for a moment).

To us, down here on the lawns, there really might finally appear to be some incongruities. Our classes are getting larger and larger. Junior faculty are overworked—almost too tired to see us. There is a housing shortage on campus. Row House dining is rolling over in its grave. Whatever happened to the small and intimate, we query? Yet we see two new buildings in the works and by gosh, there will be a new wing for alumni and such at the Faculty Club.

Oh, it is not that we are suffering so remain rational and continue looking for the truth, continue searching for the path to peace and power just like the books say? Or do we care at all? Do we finally float off saying "to hell with it all" and go searching for a job and another power structure to analyze.

Of course, I have few answers. I have rarely been one to scream and kick teeth, but then, I have not really been patronized since I was eleven. Yet I have begun to learn one thing, a lesson realized by "real" organizers in the past. Students need to get their facts and be up front with their gripes. No matter what. No matter how flat the faces are in front of you. There is little to be gained by shuffling around any "truth" you might care to defend. If we are honest and organized and care about what bit of community we do have, we might still be able to craft "student opinion" and effect some well-planned changes.

This is not so much a call to action as it is a reminder. We do not act to touch up our resumes. We act because we believe in something. If we believe in a Williams tradition and a set of social and educational priorities, we should talk and move. I, for one, still refuse to believe I cannot yell louder than a dollar bill.

Concert Listing

prepared by Toonerville Trotley

Sept. 30 Ian Hunter Band, Albany Kinks, Boston Garden, Boston Sept. 30 Romeo Void, JB Sept. 30 J.J. Liebowitz, Bristol, MA Sept. 30 Williamstown Kinks, Clark St., Providence Sept. 30 Second Nature, The Log Sept. 30 Tom Verlaine, JB Sept. 30 Widespread Depression, Hanover One, Haney, MA Sept. 30 Human Sexual Response, Paradise, Boston Oct. 1 U2, Albany, JB Oct. 1 Pretenders, Clark Center, Springfield	Blackfoot & Def Leppard, Palace, Albany Jonathan Edwards, Paradise, Boston Oct. 3 Persuasions, Rehoboth, Northampton Maynard Ferguson, Genesee School Auditorium, Greenbush, NY Oct. 4 Boston Garden Blackfoot & Def Leppard, Orchard, Boston Sept. 30 Stephen Grappelli, Berklee Performance Center, Boston Oct. 4 Johnny Copeland, JB Scott's Maynard Ferguson, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Dave Bromberg plays Saturday

by Charlie Pardoe

Guitarist David Bromberg and opening act Artie Traum will play before a Chapin Hall crowd Saturday, October 3 at 8:00 p.m.

Having previously dispersed his band and suspended a prolific career, Bromberg now studies full-time at a fiddle-making school in Chicago. However, he still tours occasionally, and this Saturday night, Williams will be treated to an evening of footstomping, singing, picking and fiddling ranging from ballads to bluegrass to blues.

Bromberg built his career around his lightning-fast guitar work. He had performed as a sideman on nearly 100 albums before forming The David Bromberg Band and cutting eight albums of his own. His roots are eclectic; they lie in blues, country, jazz and folk music and combine to create a sound that defies classification.

Concert goers this Saturday night can expect a lot of fast guitar picking and a special emphasis on fiddling as Bromberg and his sidemen, including Artie Traum, sway, swoop and saw through sometimes raucous, sometimes hilarious renditions of Bromberg tunes.

Fans love Bromberg's informal, intimate shows; they love the performer's chatty asides and jokes, and they love to participate. At the University of Delaware, Bromberg had a huge auditorium screaming, "I like to sleep late in the morning/I don't like to wear no shoes/I make love to the women while I'm livin'/Get drunk on a bottle of booze." Bromberg concerts often go beyond two hours, simply because crowds won't let him leave.

Tickets for the Dave Bromberg concert are available now in Baxter Hall daily from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and at the local record stores. Admission is $3.50 for students and $2.50 for freshmen buying tickets in blocks of ten.

ARTS·ARTS·ARTS·ARTS·

BSU film series

This evening (Tuesday) at 7:30 p.m. in Bronfman auditorium, the Williams Black Student Union presents the second film in a five part series, called Dark Symphony. Tuesday's film, entitled Nothing But A Man, is a realistic portrait of blacks living in the South during the 1960s. There will be a discussion after the film moderated by Vivian Buckhoy.

Williams Trio to Perform

The first of three Williams Trio concerts will be held on Friday, October 2 at 8:30 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. The trio, which is composed of Julius Hegyi, violin; Douglas Moore, cello and Paula Ennis-Dwyer, piano, will perform Kakadu Variations by Beethoven, as well as works by Shostakovich and Dvorak. Admission is free and open to the public.

"Frosh Revue"

The 1981 Freshman Revue, "And Now We Are Two," will be performed on the Jesup stage Thursday, Friday and Saturday, October 8th through 10th. Shows begin at 8:00 p.m. with an additional Sunday 2:00 p.m. matinee. Tickets will be available at the Adams Memorial Theatre box office between noon and 5:00 p.m. from Monday, October 5 through Friday, October 9. No tickets will be available at the performances. Freshmen whose parents have pre-ordered must pick up their tickets beforehand.

"Slithering" — To Express Original Personalized Hair Fashion

"SLITHERING"—SOFT AND EXCITING TO CELEBRATE THE DRESSED-UP LOOK!

The CLIP SHOP has three convenient locations:

Walk in or call for a free consultation or for an appointment.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

The fashion conscious woman is today being presented with a sensible variety of fashions. The Clip Shop is now featuring "SLITHERING"—A SENSIBLE SHORTER LOOK TO COMPLIMENT THESE GROWN-UP CLOTHES.

As a Sebastian Artistic Center the stylists at the Clip Shop have become familiar with this style by means of video-tapes. These programs are provided by Sebastian International, a leading educator in hair design of today.

Slithering starts out with a round look. Then it is modified with the slithering technique to create spaces and a somewhat stringy effect. This cut can be done on medium texture hair. The "SLITHERED" cut is easy to care for—just wash and towel dry—massage the scalp—and the style is ready to go.

Artists display and displayed: area exhibits

French studies

by Ric Johnson

The Clark Art Institute has mounted an exhibit, "In the Studio: the Making of Art in Nineteenth Century France," which will be on display through October 25.

As the title indicates, this show focuses on the artist in his studio as depicted in nineteenth century lithographs, etchings, engravings and oil paintings. Since the exhibit spans a century noted for its dynamic art movements, the works included vary dramatically in style and artistic intent.

The themes of the painters differ greatly also. Guérin's neo-classical lithograph of "The Diligent Artist" treats the theme of the heroic form of an artist fending off a personification of sleep. In this study of the artist at work, the surroundings are of minimal importance. Here the subject is the painter himself; the studio is incidental. However, in other works in the show, such as Renoir's oil painting of Monet at work in his garden, much is revealed about the interrelationship between the artist and his work place. For Monet, as for all of the Impressionists, the outdoors had become the focal point of his artistic endeavors and the garden had become his studio. The style of Renoir's painting speaks of this typically Impressionist's concern for light, shadow and color, and also highlights the ephemeral nature of the painter himself and the natural world that he depicts on canvas.

Among the 39 works in the exhibit, some are informal and familiar, such as Berthe Morisot's dypoint of herself giving her daughter a drawing lesson. Here the home doubles as the studio. Other works depict more formal studios, such as Bouguereau's atelier in the Julian Academy in Paris. In an engraving by Winslow Homer, the Louvre in Paris is the study of many aspiring artists, who came there to study and copy their own techniques and understanding of their art.

This one-room exhibit is an interesting one. Although short enough to allow a concentrated viewing, it is chock full of information about the artists and their styles and their views of their own works.

Student prints

by Peter Hodgson

The Mission Park Gallery honors our community with the first Student Art show of this year. Exhibited is an exciting assortment of prints, from black and white portraits to multi-colored abstracts, produced by a diverse blend of young talent. A small but enthusiastic group of viewers gathered at the MPG last Friday evening for the exhibit's opening.

All but one of the artists are presently enrolled in Studio Art 411: Advanced Printmaking. They are seniors Rory Dunne, Betsy Horan and Jon Scott, and juniors Irve Dell and Rick Gagliano. The exception is Laurie Palmer '81, who now performs the duties of studio assistant in the Williams Art Department.

Series by Scott and Dell are indicative of the contrasts in approach and technique amongst the artists. Scott's series, entitled "Walking Fence", which he says parodies Christ's "Running Fence" stretched across the California countryside, depicts walls of green rectangles moving across a grate of black and white squares. The resultant fabric of forms insinuates the appearance of motion, an effect also present in an untitled series by Dell. Dell, in contrast to Scott's large shapes and multiple colorations, uses progressive shades of black and white in four separate frames depicting minute checkerboard patterns.

Horan's and Gagliano's works exhibit a difference of form as well as of conceptual intent. Horan displays a knack for detail in three pieces entitled: "Vislon," "Coke Adds Life," and "Six-Pack." Her collage of images representing modern consumer products might either be a celebration or a denigration of mass-consumption society. Gagliano tackles the metaphysics of reality in a print entitled: "Compass and Slide." Manipulating multi-textured colorations and repeated forms, he calls to question the viewer's search for defined perspective and thematic synthesis.

Dunne's work alone manifests contrasting approaches to printmaking. His abstract self-portrait elaborates on the Yin and Yang symbol of duality with a flow of yellow substance proceeding from the forehead and a skate-lace framing the head. His series of four quasi-impresionist landscapes depicts black footsteps disappearing across a beach during the different seasons. While Dunne dwells on the passage of time in this series, he addresses the pleasure of the moment by equating Art and Sex in a print portraying three women and a paint brush.

Three works by Palmer exhibit a refined sensitivity for the printing medium, as well as an inclination to challenge the social and self-consciousness of her audience—an approach characteristic of much of her work while majoring in Studio Art at Williams.

The prints in this exhibit represent a potent mix of talents, and Professor Craig Dennis should witness the unfolding of a breadth of artistry in his Advanced Printmaking class.

THE RECORD STORE

Authorized Radio Shack Dealer in Williamstown
Rotary-Dial Desktop Telephone

34⁹⁵

Simple to Install, Simple to Use,
Easy on Your Budget!

Just as stylish, rugged and reliable as telephone company models! Cord plugs into any modular jack. Economical too! Saves on your monthly bill. Molded handset has coiled cord that stretches up to 4'. Bell with volume control, 7' base cord, modular plug. Beige, 43-302 34.95

We also stock telephone ext. cords, jacks, adapter plugs, in line couplers...everything for telephone hook-ups.

EPHS ALLEY
off SPRING ST.
458-5418

DAILY 10 - 5:30

MASTER CARD
AMERICAN EXPRESS

PARALLAX

Vol. 2, No. 5

September 29, 1981

par . al . lax (par e laks) , n . . . 1. the apparent displacement of an observed object due to the difference between 2 points of view 2 Astron. the

Reagan Slashes American Dream

by Beth Grossman

Money is power. This statement is meant to be neither laudatory nor condemning, but factual. In our society, money will provide one with not only the basic necessities of existence and the finer things in life, but also with that which is vital in the United States: political power.

To clarify this point for the doubtful, allow me to illustrate by example: clearly, he who donates thousands of dollars to a successful political campaign is more likely to have his pet cause championed by the victorious candidate than he who "simply" voted for said candidate. Politics is a matter of fiscal maneuvering. However, it would be an understatement to assert that they did not recognize this fact, and an overstatement of their altruism to claim that they attempted to eradicate the purchasing of political power. Instead, they sought to overcome the inequality inherent in such a system by "guaranteeing" equality of opportunity; any individual, no matter what his birth, could become rich, could even become President if he or she worked hard. Thus, the American Dream was born.

The fact that only approximately ten percent of the American people ever realize the American dream is indeed a disheartening one. Because only ten percent of the children of the non-rich become wealthy, one could surmise that a factor other than hard work is operating. Birth, not work, is assuming the prominent position. But, as if this is not enough, Ronald Reagan and his henchmen, through this Administration's domestic policies, are ringing the death knell for the already-ailing American Dream.

Nothing is more essential to the concept of the American Dream than the possibility of upward social mobility. Nothing is more vital to social mobility than education. Thus, the effects of Reagan's extensive cuts to education will be devastating.

In an indirect way, Reagan's cutting of the federal budget by "returning the responsibility" to the states can only hurt public education. Because public education is heavily financed by the state, an increase in the state's fiscal burden without an increase in its budget will, by necessity, result in cuts in the funding of education. Cuts to the budget of a school result in a drop in the quality of an education.

These indirect cuts are compounded by direct reductions in the federal budget for education. Although the education budget sustained massive damage in the Reagan-Stockman budget-slashing session, the end is not in sight. President Reagan just announced yet another seven hundred million dollar reduction in federal aid to public schools. And he predicts even more cuts.

These cuts will not harm the people in private schools, the children of the well-to-do, the children of today's elite. By virtue of their birth, they have been guaranteed a fine high school education (either from a prep school or a public school located in an affluent neighborhood), aiding in

by Matt Ryan

Deregulation, states' rights, less government and an unrestricted free-market are all terms known to elicit Pavlovian reactions among conservatives similar to those of a drug addict in a pharmacy. Although the Reagan philosophy is laden with these right-wing buzzwords, a few qualifications need to be made to accurately reflect the Administration's application of them.

The Administration advocates deregulation, for instance, so long as political allies aren't adversely affected. Consequently, Reagan acted quickly to decontrol oil prices, but halted further moves towards deregulation of the trucking industry. This anomaly in the free-market philosophy espoused by Reagan is almost entirely explained by the support Reagan received from the Teamsters in the '80 election. Aside from the distinction of having one of the more corrupt union leaderships in the U.S., the Teamsters also benefit from current trucking regulations. Thus, when Reese Taylor was recently named to head the ICC, it was not surprising to hear him discourage any further action regarding deregulation of the trucking industry.

Ironically, some of the deregulation

Keynesian Naysayers

by Gary Seinger

Old ways die hard. When Ronald Reagan ran for the presidency promising tax cuts along the lines of the Kemp-Roth bill then being proposed in Congress, the intelligentsia fell all over itself attempting to paint Reagan as ignorant of even the rudiments of economics. Even Vice-President George Bush, then fighting for the GOP presidential nomination, called Kemp-Roth "voodoo economics." Bush, you see, majored in economics at Yale University, where students are taught the Gospel According to Lord Keynes. In fact, if any Catholic believed in the infallibility of the Pope as strongly as the average economics professor believes in the sanctity of The General Theory (Keynes's magnum opus), that person would be seen as a living violation of the separation of Church and State.

The above should not be dismissed as mere fustian. In order to understand the current overwhelming hostility on the part of the mass media (i.e. The New York Times, The Washington Post, Time, Newsweek, CBS, and ABC) to the president's economic policies—popularly dubbed "Reaganomics"—one must understand the extent to which the teachings and writing of J. M. Keynes have become established doctrine, not to be tampered with under any circumstance.

Why, for example, did both Time and Newsweek run cover stories on Reaganomics—in the same week? The tone of each magazine was pretty much the same; respected professors of economics (e.g. J. K. Galbraith, Lester Thurow) expressed doubt that the president's economic program would revive the nation's economy. Great weight was given to the opinions of the high and mighty that Reaganomics is a foolish, if not dangerous, basis for public policy.

Time, in particular, went to great pains to show that Ronald Reagan himself is not absolutely certain that his programs will bring prosperity back to the U.S. economy. The magazine's cover photo showed Reagan in a most uncharacteristic pose—arms crossed, lips pursed, brow furrowed—as if to say that the smiling, jocular Ronald Reagan we once knew is no more. Faced with the awesome responsibility of restoring soundness to the American economy, standing up to the Soviet Union, preserving peace in the Mideast, and reducing the size and scope of government, Ronald Reagan is no longer a happy man. To quote an oft-used phrase, "Reality has set in." Or so the mass media would have us think.

It is important to realize that people have dismissed Ronald Reagan with a wave of the hand for many years. When he first ran for the statehouse in California, then-Governor Pat Brown (Governor Jerry's father) was forever missed as mere fustian. In order to understand the current overwhelming hostility on the part of the mass media (i.e. The New York Times, The Washington Post, Time, Newsweek, CBS, and ABC) to the president's economic policies—popularly dubbed "Reaganomics"—one must understand the extent to which the teachings and writing of J. M. Keynes have become established doctrine, not to be tampered with under any circumstance.

In 1968, there was tremendous "grass-roots" support for Reagan as the GOP presidential nominee. Only behind-the-scenes maneuvers by Strom Thurmond saved the nomination for Richard Nixon. In 1976, Reagan ran again for President, and lost a heartbreaker to incumbent Gerald Ford.

In 1980, Reagan tried once more; considered too conservative for years, he swept to the nomination with comparative ease. Belittled during the general election campaign for his steadfastly conservative principles, cracking wise about Reagan's lack of previous political experience. Reagan beat Brown by a million votes.

In 1968, there was tremendous "grass-roots" support for Reagan as the GOP presidential nominee. Only behind-the-scenes maneuvers by Strom Thurmond saved the nomination for Richard Nixon. In 1976, Reagan ran again for President, and lost a heartbreaker to incumbent Gerald Ford.

In 1980, Reagan tried once more; considered too conservative for years, he swept to the nomination with comparative ease. Belittled during the general election campaign for his steadfastly conservative principles, caricatured in "Doonesbury" as a man with little between the ears, he trounced an incumbent whose sole chance of victory lay in convincing the populace that Ronald Reagan's accession to the Presidency would precipitate poverty, race riots, and a nuclear holocaust, among other things.

"The teachings and writings of J.M. Keynes have become established doctrine..."

Realizing that his best opportunity to obtain passage of his legislative programs lay in getting an early start with Congress, he worked tirelessly to convince the uncertain and faithless of his viability and soundness of his policies. The New York Times was inherently incapable of imagining a world in which supply-side economics was national policy (crippled as it was by established thinking). The Washington Post Continued on Page 3

Exposing the Right-Wing Buzzwords

lation plans of the Administration will work to the detriment of the free-market principles Reagan so steadfastly defends. The repeal of regulations requiring manufacturers to print the ingredients of various products, for instance, is helpful to firms. But it hardly promotes the free-market notion of consumers making decisions based on a knowledgeable assessment of what they are buying. The myriad of mergers is another example of less government intervention benefitting businesses, while actually reducing an important characteristic of the free-market: namely, competition.

Reagan's promotion of increased states' rights suggests greater autonomy for states in governing their resources—but only so long as they intend to develop them. The hypocrisy of the Reagan Administration's position on this issue was made obvious when James Watt recently attempted to open various spots off the California coast for oil exploration, causing an uproar in the state. State Democratic and Republican leaders assailed Watt's plan. They claimed it posed a threat to the state's fishing industry and coastline for the sake of what the U.S. Geological Survey says is only enough oil to supply the U.S. for 12 days. Watt responded to protest by saying the leases were in the 'national interest.' States' rights apparently don't include environmental protection unless, of course, greater state control over environmental laws will allow for more development. Reagan's conception of states' rights has states competing among themselves for industry by seeing who can have the most lenient pollution laws. With this in mind, Watt recently attempted to close down various branches of the Office of Surface Mining which enforce federal strip-mining laws. So outrageous was this plan, that members of Watt's own Interior Department filed suit against him because of it. Fortunately, Congress "brought Watt to heel on the matter," as Jerry Brown so appropriately commented. Watt's action is symptomatic of the cutbacks in the enforcement budgets of both the EPA and Interior Department.

In trying to circumvent environmental laws by neglecting their enforcement, Watt and his counterpart at the EPA, Ann Gorsuch, are engaging in what could be called 'bureaucratic legislation.' Although Reagan is fond of criticizing the Supreme Court for 'legislating' by ruling on certain issues, his Administration is guilty of a much more serious sin when it legislates through the bureaucracy. Reagan seems to feel that even if environmental laws can't be repealed in Congress, a similar result can be attained through non-enforcement.

While the government may appear smaller to businesses benefitting from less regulation and enforcement, one look at the defense budget shows what a misnomer Reagan's version of 'less government' really is. The Reagan cry for less government apparently only applies to social programs. The Pentagon has emerged as an almost sacrosanct, quasi-autonomous government institution, immune from budget restrictions. Reagan cites the Russian threat in defending the massive defense budget. This obsession with the Russians is the focal point of the Administration's foreign policy and probably Reagan's dreams too. Projects emanating from the State Department seem marred by wild hallucinations. One can almost envision a glassy-eyed Alexander Haig staring at the walls of the Foggy Bottom, screaming about 'communists everywhere...'.

apparent displacement of a celestial body due to its being observed from the surface instead of from the center of the earth (diurnal paral-

Why Our GI's Can't Whup the Russkies

Written by Ed Anger. Reprinted from World News Weekly as an example of fine political hyperbole.

There's a joke about our Army going around that's got me madder than a doctor who's lost his golf clubs.

A guy goes to an Army recruiter to find out about enlisting. The recruiter goes into a 20-minute song and dance about what great job training and travel the Army gives.

"You can learn about electronics, computers and auto repair and have great travel opportunities in France and other great places," says the recruiter.

"Gee mister," says the guy, "I just want to kill people."

The point is, our Army has turned into a junior college with field trips to Europe instead of a crack team of top-conditioned soldiers ready to defend America.

"We need warriors protecting America—not auto and TV repairmen."

It the sneaky Russkies attacked tomorrow, the only thing our soldiers would know how to do would be repair the air conditioning in the Commie tanks.

Parallax

Editor-in-Chief
Managing Editors

Matt Simon
Meredith McGill
Willy Stern
Rory Costello
Dean Grodzins
Bob McGill

Letters should be typed in a 45-character line format and submitted, within 3 weeks of the issue to which they are responding, to SU Box 2536.

Parallax is printed monthly as a supplement to The Williams Record. For more information, contact SU Box 2536.

HUDSON'S VITAMINS SUPER SAVER SALE

HUDSON'S BIGGEST SALE OF THE YEAR! BUY ONE, GET ONE 1/2 PRICE FREE

39 great products including Vitamin C in regular, chewable and Time Release formulas

Hart's
Pharmacists, Inc.
Spring Street

It's All For Fun

by Brett McDonnell

It's enough to make you laugh. The nuclear arms game has a few oddities. The two big players seem determined to overlook these quirks so that the competition can be improved. At the risk of being called a spoilsport, I would like to point out a few of these idiosyncracies.

First of all, nobody really knows where all those missiles and warheads will go when the whistle blows and the two sides fire. All test flights have been in a north-south direction. Even these tests need constant adjustment. In real life, we would fire east-west and through the polar magnetic field. Of course, recognizing this fact would spoil the fun of boasting about pinpoint accuracy against targets half the world away. We have to give those nice generals in the Pentagon something to be proud of.

In the second place, there is the talk about "winnable" and "containable" nuclear wars. These wonderfully pleasant concepts are based on the idea that nuclear confrontation is a gentlemanly pastime. After both sides have destroyed Europe and maybe a few of each other's expendable industrial centers—Detroit and Cleveland come to mind—each side will call it a day. The problem here is that we all know those Russians are no gentlemen. They don't even believe in God.

Every game should have a certain childlike quality to it—the MX recalls hide and go seek.

And then there is the MX missile system. That is the one where we build all these missile silos and connect them by an underground railroad, then move our missiles from silo to silo so the commies don't know where they are. The MX shows that every game should have a certain childlike quality to it. The MX recalls shell games and hide and go seek. Unfortunately, the Russians could spoil the fun here by shooting all the silos (that is, if their missiles are really accurate enough), thus proving once again that the Russians have no understanding of the rules governing friendly competition.

Finally, we have overkill. Far be it for me to suggest that the capacity to destroy the world many times over is enough to defend ourselves. No, my question is, what do we do with the left-over bombs? Clearly, this sport needs a bigger field. In this light, killer satellites and space shuttles make sense. We need to expand our horizons. Boy, what a game this could be!

Of course, some provincials might point to side effects of this grand game. Look at the economic costs of nuclear proliferation. Look at how all that money might be spent on education, public health and the like. Look at how the garrison state curtails civil liberties. Look at how mankind is racing towards obliteration.

Hm.
It's enough to make you cry.

Letters

This letter was received in May, 1981, too late for publication in the last issue of Parallax.

Willy, Willy, Willy! Such an abrasive response to letters by a couple of liberals with a grudge to bear! Tsk, tsk, tsk! And from a man of your intellect! And your caliber! Your "bloody" conservative demeanor!

I certainly hope you're not the best tool for voicing liberal sentiment anywhere. Tools are to be used toward a productive end. Amusement devices are for fun. Your "ultra-right-wing" drivel is certainly non-productive. Therefore, you are an amusement device, not a tool. We take tools seriously, Willy—God forbid if we were to take you seriously. You are only kidding, aren't you? Sure, I knew you were.

In any event, any anti-Reagan, anti-conservative opinion must be distortion, gross exaggeration, purposefully misleading and libelous—otherwise there would be no liberals! Right, Willy?

Willy, you need not print your ridiculous stands on tax cuts, military strength, pollution, social programs or the Constitution because we know your stands.

Your stands are morally inherent among all "proper" human beings. Willy, you reek of some kind of conservative disease. The disease isn't in what you say, it's in the fact that you really believe what you think. Your mind is infected with some form of political syphilis and it is evident every time you put pen to paper. So don't bother writing about your stands. I can smell them. Libel? Here's libel (mixed with a little slander) for you: Your mother wears Army boots, Willy. Maybe not yet, but soon.

Please, Willy, stay in London. It's come to the point where you no longer humor me—you scare

"Any anti-Reagan, anti-conservative opinion must be distortion, gross exaggeration, purposefully misleading and libelous..."

me. Your ideals kill, Willy, and it's become part of the American Fiber—good guy kills bad guy. Commie kills Capitalist. Red kills White. Black kills White. White kills Black. Husband kills wife. Lover kills husband. Cowboy kills Indian. Indian kills Cowboy, and on November 22, 1963 you killed a lot of things.

That's right, Willy, you, you killed. You kill. You will kill. You grew up that way. Bang, bang—you're dead.

Excuse me for wandering from the subject, Willy, but you bore me. Incidentally, I do exist. Not at Williams but at the University of Colorado—and just to give you something to think about while you're away in London: You are a schmuck, Willy! There it is in writing. Oh boy, Willy! That's real slander, could be libel too! Come on now, a civil suit would be a great waste of time. Perhaps someday I will learn...

Duane Stillwell
2800 S. Reed Street
Denver, Colorado 80227

lax or geocentric parallax) or to its being observed from the earth instead of from the sun (annual parallax or heliocentric parallax). 3. the

Life in the Marketplace

by Will Foster

The pages of Parallax have been graced by arguments for Government intervention in the Marketplace rooted in a deep concern over the injustices of our society. Countering these have been articles based in a concern for freedom and efficiency. What has been missing is any significant discussion of what it means to be in the marketplace and to be concerned about the welfare of others.

Such an absence is undoubtedly a tragedy. Very few of us will ever escape the marketplace, and for many, most of our human relationships will take place within its boundaries. While we are destined for the market place, most of us are insecure about how we can fit in.

"How many Americans find their jobs intrinsically worthwhile? I suspect very few."

I would contend that the greatest interest in medicine at Williams can be explained by the fact that it seems on the surface to be the only career in which a concern for others can be interwoven with financial security, societal respect, and intellectual challenge. Yet society needs managers from Williams, not doctors—managers who are concerned with the needs and able to bring forth the gifts of others, managers who can reconcile the needs of investors with those of the society and ecosystem of which they are a part.

The Army of the Poor

by Bruce Kelly

I am frequently surprised that in the area of military services, most liberals favor allowing the whip of external necessity, i.e. the need to find a source of income, to determine who will serve in our nation's armed forces. As a result, the lower ranks of the services are primarily composed of people from working-class backgrounds. Actually, I'm not surprised. These people support a

For a very large portion of America, the workplace borders on hell. How many Americans find their jobs intrinsically worthwhile? Except for the small technocratic class in our society, I suspect very few.

Most of us work for the money we are paid or for the community that is so much a part of the workplace. Yet we still wonder how valuable these are. The things we buy often seem worthless. Our workplaces often turn oppressive as we try to find meaning by dominating or submitting to others. Even as I talk to Williams graduates, I sense that very few are content with their jobs. Marx was right, the bourgeoisie is no less alienated than the proletariat.

Since I read my Marx through John Calvin, I don't exactly agree with Marx's solution to the problem. In fact I don't have a solution. To the radical, who is me, I sent its finest scribes out in search of families (particularly black ones) that would be irrevocably crushed by Reagan's planned budget cuts. Informed Opinion everywhere put its heads together, and asked, "Can it work?", adding in an aside, "We hope not."

Naysayers

Continued from Page 1

What is going on? The Reagan administration wishes to return some element of strength to the U.S. economy. It wants to stop the seemingly endless cycle of inflation and unemployment, and make the American dollar once again competitive on foreign markets. Most of all, it wishes to offer incentives and tax breaks to businesses in order to create new jobs. Who could argue with these noble goals? You'd be surprised. Some enterprising individuals at Williams College decided to remind myself of the stories of people I have worked with who have been forced to rely on the State. If their stories are any indication, an increase in the powers of the State will not really change anything.

To the escapist, who is me, I remind myself of my older brothers and sisters of the sixties who are now stuck in the middle of a corporate bureaucracy. To the conservative, who is me, I ask whether if things continue the way they are going, will not society and I continue to wander in quiescent despair?

Certainly we must rethink one way we live in the structure of the marketplace. We need to rethink what we can do within those structures and what we can do to reform those structures. If we are not going to destroy ourselves, we are going to have to come together.

Discussion is the lifeblood of an intellectual community.

Parallax is an open forum for political opinion with the expressed purpose of encouraging discussion. All members of the Williams Community are encouraged to write articles or letters in response to articles appearing in Parallax.

for the administration's policy, the title might have been "Reaganomics: Ruin or Reconstruction?" But the sponsors of this pseudo-event wished to make it clear to all that this was the place to be if you wanted to jump all over the president and his henchmen. I think this was hardly an impartial manner of presenting a discussion on such vital issues. But it is not atypical, given the resistance to supply-side economics, not only in the groves of academia, but in the mass media. I think I may understand some of the hostility to Kemp-Roth economics among professors of economics, particularly at Williams College. It can safely be said that the majority of the economics department at Williams has been trained, shall we say, in the Keynesian tradition (if not the Marxist tradition). If the supply-side reductions really do spark the economy, nearly fifty years of intellectual dominance by J. M. Keynes will be at an end. A great deal of what the average economics professor has learned and taught will have been rendered largely moot. The discussion of income redistribution through confiscatory taxation will be of little use if, as Milton Friedman suggests, the marginal tax rate is reduced to a maximum of 25%. The achievement of full employment through public expenditure will be little more than history if supply-side economics (actually not much more than offering the correct incentives for production) lowers the unemployment rate to, say, four or five percent.

"The guest speaker... gave the stock talk about how Ronald Reagan is sacrificing the poor to the rich..."

It should be a very interesting three years to come. Ronald Reagan has to fight more than a tenuous Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. He must also do battle with Established Opinion in the media and universities. Old ways die hard.

— Fall Sale —

Full line of squash racquets for the beginning through advanced player.

Racquets by: Donnay
Bancroft
Manta
Grays

- Accessories
- 24 hr. restringing

Just arrived—Williams purple cow ski hats!

Goff's Sports, Inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Complete Line of BEDDING SHEETS
Cannon Designer
BLANKETS

MATTRESS
PADS
Esmond Mattress pad & Protection
by Chatham
Completely Smooth
& stitch free

Hopkins
(Next to the National Bank at 61 Spring Street
Williams town, Ma. 01260)

KINGS LIQUOR STORE

Cider and Rum
1.75 liter Port Royal Rum

Great for fall mixing!
$10.80
Krakus beer
Imported from Poland
$2.99/six

difference between the view of an object as seen through the lens of a camera and the view as seen through a separate viewfinder. Gk par

The Spy Setbacks

by Rory Costello

Recently, three absorbing cases with profound implications for American intelligence have surfaced. They demonstrate that the talent CIA and FBI personnel ostensibly have is only too often channeled into unsavory areas. The acts of subverted agents, when indeed they are discovered, raise a number of doubts about these agencies. This is most unfortunate; many Americans already have little confidence in the covert activities of the CIA, and their misgivings are fueled every time a disturbing new revelation is brought forth.

Christopher "the Falcon" Boyce was recently recaptured by Federal agents after 19 months on the loose from prison in California. He had been arrested in early 1977 for peddling CIA spy satellite secrets to the Soviet Union. Boyce was enthralled by the glamour of spy exploits and felt he could move with impunity through the world of espionage. As a communications clerk with TRW, Boyce took advantage of his top security clearance, bringing classified information to the tune of $76,000 to the Soviet embassy in Mexico City. Eventually, cockiness led to his discovery, just as it brought his escape to an end. Sadly, Boyce was deceived by his self-image, that of an indestructible superagent.

Broad legal issues have been raised by the activities of Edwin P. Wilson, an ex-CIA agent who is charged with shipping 20 tons of plastic explosives to Libya under the guise of oil drilling fluid, in order to circumvent customs laws. Federal investigators also state that Wilson contracted with Libyan military leader Qaddafi to train groups of terrorists on Libyan soil. Wilson's military and intelligence expertise, gained while working as a covert operative, was what Col. Qaddafi needed.

The Justice Department is now reviewing such laws as the seldom-invoked Logan Act of 1799, which prohibits American citizens from "taking actions contrary to the foreign policy interests of the United States." The Espionage Act of 1917 bars the transfer of classified information by government employees, but training terrorists does not necessarily entail use of classified information; also, Wilson had already left the CIA. This is the real issue before the government—control of former intelligence and military officials. It is shocking to note that Federal investigators estimate that hundreds of these former employees are making their talents and knowledge of technology available for hire abroad.

In a final sinister note, the FBI now believes that a double agent of 20 years' standing was really loyal to the Russians all along, feeding the Americans "disinformation." His code name was Fedora, but he was recently identified (although without FBI confirmation) as a Soviet employee at the U.N. named Victor Lessiovski. Some of his claims, which held fascination for Bureau director J. Edgar Hoover, included confirmation of so-called defected KGB agents who could easily have been more disinformation operatives, as well as the report that a copy of the infamous Pentagon papers had made their way to Russian officials. As a result, Richard Nixon formed the notorious plumbers unit on national security grounds. Lessiovski has now retired back home, which makes the FBI worry all the more about his damaging and malicious reports.

The CIA and FBI are organizations whose actions are largely screened from any inquiry, whether it be that of the American people or foreign entities. The security net that appears so impenetrable, however, is weakened by the misapplied abilities of trusted agents. The reverses that American intelligence has suffered lately may be a signal of more ominous problems in the future.

American Dream

Continued from Page 1

vate college. How, then, will Reagan's proposed cuts to, or perhaps elimination of, government-guaranteed student loans affect him? It may very well mean that he is unable to attend this college because his parents cannot afford it. Because of the economic status of the individual's parents, and because of Reagan's cuts to student loans, he may be denied the education his hard work earned him. Is this equality of opportunity?

Yet, those in favor of eliminating the loans assert that the program is abused, that because of the low interest rate, loans are secured for investments other than education. To prevent abuse, Reagan has proposed to implement a needs test, a maximum income level. As a result, many students whose income is over-assessed will be denied the funds they vitally need. The flaw in Reagan's argument is clear: he is forgetting that for many the loan is crucial to the financing of their education. The poor are paying for the abuse of the system by the rich. Cutting of the Guaranteed Student Loans simply serves to augment the already growing disparity between rich and poor. If the poor are not properly educated, this disparity can only increase. If it increases enough, the situation will be impossible to rectify. Equality of opportunity, that which makes America democratic, will be lost.

It is clear, then, that the best way to reduce this disparity is to create an environment in which every child will have a decent way of life, a fair chance, and perhaps even truly equal opportunities. It was with these concepts in mind (and, of course, the pressing needs of the Depression) that programs such as Food Stamps, Social Security, A.F.D.C., and welfare were conceived. Admittedly, welfare payments in no way guarantee that a child will "work hard and succeed," but combined with other factors (i.e., three meals a day and a decent education), they will guarantee that the child has at least a remote chance of success.

By eliminating or severely cutting back these programs, Reagan is eliminating or severely cutting back this chance. If the children of the non-rich are virtually denied this chance, where then lies equality of opportunity? Without this equality, where then lies our democracy?

Proponents of Reagan's policy argue that although money is taken from the poor (by reducing social programs) and given to the rich (by using the money saved to cut their taxes), in the long run, the poor will prosper, because the money will "trickle down" to them. Like Vernon Jordan, I wonder how the poor, will survive, let alone get ahead, while the money is "trickling".

Reagan's program is plagued by an interesting paradox. Implicit in his belief that the funding of social programs is not the role of government is the idea that these vital charities should be funded through the private sector. However, Reagan's tax incentives discourage such contributions. After all, investments in Money Market Certificates yield a much higher interest rate than do donations to the Salvation Army. Thus Vernon Jordan's question is left unanswered: how will the poor survive until the money "trickles down", if indeed it does?

Reagan leaves one other point ambiguous: just how are the poor, particularly the minorities, supposed to obtain their rightful political power in the American system? Clearly this generation does not have the means to purchase their power, and the next generations are being denied access to the necessary means.

With the repudiation of equal opportunity, with the death of the American Dream, I foresee the birth of a new, albeit traditional, American Aristocracy. The New Aristocracy will take from the poor, (their food, their homes, their education) to profit themselves through the clever use of tax cuts (though Reagan argues that tax cuts are exorbitantly necessary to revitalizing the American economy...).

Worst of all, the goal of the New Aristocracy is the same as that of all previous aristocracies: to maintain power at the expense of the poor. If the non-rich are denied access to wealth and to economic advancement, then the grip of the Aristocrats, the "nobly-born", remains unchallenged. Their political control, purchased at the cost of democracy, will be complete.

By denying the underprivileged that which is rightfully theirs—equality of opportunity—Reagan and his henchmen serve as midwives to the birth of an unchallenged, all-American Aristocracy.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

TONIGHT
LET IT BE LOWENBRAU!
Lowenbrau night at the Log.
Dark and light special.
Discounts and prizes.
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 30
2nd Nature will perform
an evening of jazz and much more.
Don't forget Monday night
Football on the Big Screen.
THE LOG

Welcome to Williams!

Free Plant! with $5.00 purchase and this ad.

At The Cottage.
Your decorating center for bedspreads, rugs,
pillows and
baskets.

96 Water St.
Open Sundays, Too!

But the point is made. When our society judges that there is a social need to muster forces for global security, should a full wallet be an exemption ticket?

Of course, there are possible rationales for an army of the poor. One idea is that the armed forces provide skills training, making people more productive, thus benefitting society and the individual. Well, if our country is going to run a job-training program, then let's do it out front! There's no need for a hidden agenda in a democracy. The armed forces have a purpose, and it isn't to train air-conditioner repairmen!

Two more valid arguments against the draft are that it hurts the nation economically by drawing young people into areas where they are less productive, and that draftees are unlikely to remain in the services. For the first point, it just may be that the values of discipline and determination, dedication and dependability, which our armed forces are

Williamstown at Night:

photos by Steve Farley and Sue Doherty

Sophomore fullback Sean Crotty rumbles through the trenches during Williams' 24-7 victory over Middlebury. (Farley)

Golfers drive over opponents

by Jim Clark

Freshman Randy Rogers was medalist with a 77 as the varsity golf team rolled over Middlebury for their third victory of the season. Friday's match at Taconic Golf Club topped off a busy week for the Ephmen that included victories over R.P.I. and North Adams State, the Yale Invitational and qualifying for the New England's.

The scores were unusually high for Williams as Rogers was the only man below 80. Captain Greg Jacobson posted an 80 for his first round above 79 this fall. Junior Charlie Johnson joined Jacobson with 80, and sophomore Eric Boyden fired 81. Mike Hennigan, another of the many freshmen starting this fall, shot 84. The Williams total of 402 bested Middlebury by 23 strokes.

Men booters trip twice

by David Woodworth

Co-captain Brian Daniell '82 knocked in a corner kick by Rob Kusel '83 to account for Williams' only goal in a 3-1 loss to Middlebury on Saturday. The defeat was a tough one for the Ephs, as they had lost to North Adams State College earlier in the week, and had sought to rebound in their home opener. The opening minutes of the match found the Williams defense a bit hesitant and the offense spotty at best. Unfortunately, this trend was to continue for most of the game. Middlebury's first goal came at 11:18 on a perfect play set up by an indirect kick. The kick was taken from the left side of the field and was crossed to the right, where Panther back F. W. Nugent took the ball in full stride and rammed it home with a blistering shot. Williams Goalkeeper Kenny Rhodes '85 did not have a chance. The fact that the score remained 1-0 at halftime is a tribute to Rhodes, who was brilliant in the nets all day.

The second half began much as the first, with the Ephs being beaten to the ball consistently. The offense lacked a short passing game, relying primarily on long balls to Dave Nasser '83 and Doug McKenney '85. Middlebury got its second score at 54:47, as W. Jamie Hutchins beat the fullback, forced Rhodes to come out, then knocked the ball toward the goal. The shot was a weak one, but was accidentally deflected into the net by a Williams back. Daniell's goal came a bit more than four minutes later, at 58:57, and momentarily put the spark back into the Ephs. The momentum swung to Williams as they pressured the Panther goal. The turning point of the game occurred when the referee called a controversial drop ball. Shortly afterwards, at 75:10, Co-captain Dana Mitiguy tallied for Middlebury, giving the Panthers what proved to be an insurmountable lead.

Middlebury outshot the Ephs, 23-18; Rhodes had nine saves for Williams while his Middlebury counterpart, Bart Lombardi, had seven.

Coach Leslie Orton continues to juggle the squad in her attempts to find the best combinations to get the most from the team. As the season goes on, stability gathered from having regular positions should give the team more strength.

In the team's season opener, the Ephs made a strong show in defeating Skidmore, 3-0, last Wednesday. A number of pre-

Season opener

Ephmen explode past Panthers

by Steve Epstein

Paced by two touchdowns by Micah "Instant Offense" Taylor and stunning defense in key situations, the Eph football squad defeated the Middlebury Panthers, 24-7, in their season opener Saturday at Weston Field.

The key to the game was strong play by linebackers Chris Woodworth and Mike Hawkins, as well as by an inexperienced defensive secondary. The pass rush did the rest, sacking Middlebury quarterback Jim Loveys six times. Middlebury led in virtually every category, but could score but once on the day. Their first possession typified the futility that would be their trademark all day long. On their second play from scrimmage, the Panthers fumbled setting up a 1-10 for the Ephs on the Middlebury 30.

On the second play from scrimmage, senior quarterback

John Lawler (9 for 18, 95 yds, 2 TDs) hit senior tight end Craig Overlander for a 14 yard gain which brought the ball to the Panther 14 yard line. From there, the Ephs got to the five, where the drive apparently stalled on fourth down. But in a gutsy call that would be typical on this day, the Ephs chose to go for the TD on 4th and 1. Freshman halfback Ted Thomas got the first down and travelled to the one, but the Ephs lost yardage on the next three plays and the drive stalled again. Ever the opportunist, Coach Bob Odell opted to bring in senior kicker Rich Coomber to put some points on the board. Coomber's 22 yard field goal put Williams in the lead, 3-0.

The Ephs lead held for almost twenty minutes as both offensive attacks had trouble shifting into high gear. But when Lawler's pass to Overlander was intercepted on the Williams 33 yard line, the potent Middlebury attack was not to be thwarted. Loveys found All-America candidate Ted Virtue alone in the end zone to give the Panthers a 7-3 lead.

Explosive offense

But the lead was short-lived, as the Ephs roared back to take the halftime lead in an exciting fashion. The Ephs took the Middlebury kick-off and advanced to about midfield, mostly thanks to strong running by soph. fullback Sean "Buckets" Crotty (10 rushes, 16 yards). The drive had apparently stalled at midfield when a personal foul penalty gave the Ephs a 1-10 on the Middlebury 32 just 0:38 left in the half. From there, it only took the Ephs one play to score, as Lawler found Taylor open over the middle, and the NESCAC spring champ did the rest, breaking a tackle and zip-

Continued on Page 7

Soccer falls to Wesleyan

Breakaway scores on two occasions gave the visiting Wesleyan Cardinals the edge over the Ephs by a 2-0 margin, in the women's soccer team match Saturday.

Coach Leslie Orton continues to juggle the squad in her attempts to find the best combinations to get the most from the team. As the season goes on, stability gathered from having regular positions should give the team more strength.

In the team's season opener, the Ephs made a strong show in defeating Skidmore, 3-0, last Wednesday. A number of pre-season injuries hampered the team and poor weather made the game even more of a challenge for both sides. Returning upperclassmen were aided by the play of some impressive freshmen. Junior Becky Baugh scored twice for Williams and Freshman Debbie Wickenden tallied the third score.

Following Wednesday's game, Co-captain Amy Wilbur praised the entire team's overall improvement in skills since last season.

The squad's record now stands at 1-1 with their next game against the Panthers of Middlebury tomorrow.

Junior Becky Baugh outprints her Wesleyan opponents to control the ball. (Doherty)

Spikers smash foes

Rallying from behind, the women's volleyball squad defeated North Adams State to wrap up a perfect day for the Ephs, who had earlier beaten Boston State at a tri-meet at North Adams Sunday.

The final match pitted Williams and North Adams who had both won their first matches. The hometown team jumped to a 7-0 lead in the first game and coasted to victory.

The turnaround came in the second game as juniors Lisa Pepe and Kathleen Gilmore contributed blazing spikes to power the offense. Coordinated teamwork keyed a 15-8 win to set up a showdown game.

A bolsterous crowd helped the Mohawks use their homecourt advantage to put additional pressure on the Ephs. Undaunted, senior Terry Danciewicz served Williams to an insurmountable 10-1 lead. The Mohawks battled back to within 12-8, but to no avail.

The win was the Ephs second of the day to move their record up to 2-2.

In the opening match of the tri-meet, Williams rolled over Boston State which couldn't handle the Eph offense. Gilmore and Pepe combined for 15 ace spikes in the three games. Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin was able to play many subs which should help the team in the future.

Goalie Finn

Sophomore star scintillates

by Ted Leon

What the National Sports Festival, held in Syracuse this past summer, amounts to is a showcase featuring some of the most talented and publicized amateur athletes in the country. The athletes there are top notch, often world class.

Perhaps it will come as a pleasant surprise to hear that, yes, even Williams was represented: Dan Finn '84 was chosen to participate in the hockey competition of the festival. Finn, a goalie and the M.V.P. of last year's successful Williams Hockey team, was among the 80 players, picked and divided into four teams—Midwest, New England, Great Lakes, and Central—that played each other in round-robin competition.

Initially passed up by the New England team, he was picked up by the Central squad for whom he played admirably. Basically a miscellaneous club drawing athletes from all over the country, they entered the tournament as heavy underdogs, then shocked everyone and left Syracuse with the silver medal.

Handicapped by being able to practice as a unit for only a few days, they defeated both the New England and Midwest squads before folding to a powerful Great Lakes team. In the championship game, a rematch against undefeated Great Lakes, they fell short, 5-2.

Finn performed well in the tournament, sharing time with one other goalie. He played the entire second and third games, giving up five goals and seven goals, respectively. In those two games, he had a total of 61 saves against an explosive collection of talent.

One of only a few players chosen from Division II schools, he has no regrets about having come to tiny Williams, nor does he still believe he is limited by a lack of "exposure." Nonetheless, this is the same Dan Finn who signed a letter of Intent to R.P.I. before opting at the last moment in favor of Williams. Ironically, it was the betrayed R.P.I. coach who, as coach of the Central team in the festival, picked Finn up and gave him his shot.

Essentially considered one of the outstanding college goalies in the country simply by being chosen to participate in the festival, he seems to have opportunities ahead in hockey, although he is very relaxed about his future. When asked about the possibility of going pro or making the 1984 U.S. Hockey team, he said, "It would be fun, I guess", but added, "I didn't come to Williams to play hockey."

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 4

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

OCTOBER 6, 1981

Library reserves stacks

by Collin Harris

Reserve room desk workers are spending more time in the stacks and students are waiting longer at the desks as a result of a new policy prohibiting students from entering the reserve stacks. Access had previously been restricted only during exam periods.

Under the new reserve room policy, students must give the name of any books or records they want to reserve room aides, who then get the requested materials from the shelves.

According to Lawrence Wikander, head librarian at Sawyer, the problem with allowing students direct access to the stacks was that "many students would take books without checking them out, and when the books were no longer useful, the student would bring them back."

At one point, library officials had considered installing an electronic detection system.

"That would have made the library a police state," said Wikander. "We didn't want that; it was more a problem of intellectual deprivation than a theft problem. If a student has a book out, his classmates simply can't get to it."

Reserve room supervisor Judy Jones said that there have been few complaints about the new reserve policy and thinks that "because it's working, it may be permanent." She added that "a large majority of college reserve rooms are closed."

A student worker at the reserve desk, who wished to remain anonymous, characterized the closing as "a pain in the neck, for both the student and the worker." Even so, she said, "It's necessary. If the books are being stolen, then you have to close it (the reserve room)."

Peter Mmusi, Botswana Minister of Finance and Development Planning, signed a formal agreement yesterday in the President's House that entrusts Williams to recruit specialists in economic and political affairs to serve as consultants to the government of Botswana. (Farley)

Keller refutes criticism

by Philip Busch

Director of Food Service Ross Keller vigorously defended recent changes in dining policy at last Tuesday's meeting of the College Council Food Service Committee.

Keller responded to a list of questions proposed by Council President Freddy Nathan and others. He first asserted that the question of whether the projected $104,000 annual saving from the elimination of Row House dining warranted its elimination was a question for the Gifford Committee, rather than for Food Service. He also defended $104,000 as a correct figure for savings.

In response to complaints that lines at Greylock have become "outrageously long," Keller said that their length "hasn't reached the levels of a few years ago. We've been having 600 students. Greylock has 300 seats, so that fits our estimated 'turnover' of two diners per seat. These lines are longer than usual, but then again they always are at the beginning of the year, when student's schedules haven't been worked out yet. I haven't stood longer than nine minutes in any line."

Keller admitted a special problem exists with brunch lines, especially at Baxter. He noted the proliferation of brunch items in recent years, especially labor-intensive ones such as pancakes and eggs cooked to order, as one reason.

Nathan suggested an 11:00 a.m. opening for brunch at Baxter, or staggered hours in the dining halls. Keller claimed that a mandated eight-hour shift for workers and the heavy workload of dining hall personnel made this impossible. He did agree, however, to extend the hours of continental breakfast at Baxter from a 9:00 a.m. closing to 9:30 a.m., to relieve some of the pressure.

Food Quality Questioned

While admitting that the quality of food has improved since the first week of school, several Committee members questioned the overall quality of dining this year. "There's no item every student likes," said Keller. "They have to tell Food Service what they want. We welcome ideas; we need them all the time... we make up samples of items suggested. We had one sweet potato pie that was not worth putting on the menu, I can tell you that."

Keller agreed to make raisin bread more often. The reason commercial raisin bread disappeared from the menu last year was its rise in price to $1.25 a loaf, he said. English muffins will also now be offered at continental breakfast, said Keller, although the meal was "not designed as an attraction, but as a service."

"The Doghouse will be open sooner than last year," Keller promised. "I can't say how long, but certainly no later than October 23rd."

"Contrary to Mr. John Segal, Ross Keller does a great many things for students," he said with some heat.

Computer Costs

Keller predicted a $20,000-40,000 annual savings due to the

Continued on Page 8

Special dinners make Wms. debut

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

"Special dinners" have replaced guest meals this year as a concession to the seating squeeze caused by the elimination of Row House dining, to help effect the Gifford Committee's recommendation that guest meals be "reconstituted as the student-faculty occasions they were originally intended to be."

Guest meals were formal, sit-down dinners served to house or entry members and their guests at least twice a semester. The new "special dinners" will be limited to one per semester for each entry or house, and the total number of students being served may not exceed the number of actual house residents.

Space Limitations

Student guests may be invited only to fill empty slots left by house residents who decline to attend. However, there is no limit for faculty guests, who may attend at no cost to the house.

"The number of participants allowed is dictated by available space," explained Director of Food Service Ross Keller. "There's still a considerable amount of leeway, because not everyone in each house is always interested in attending. At Bryant House's recent special dinner, 78 persons signed up, but only 68 came, including faculty guests."

Jay Hellmuth '82 said that the house asked guests from other houses as well as several faculty because Bryant used a sign-up sheet to determine how many open slots were available.

Keller explained that the elimination of Row House dining was the major reason for the reduction in the number of dinners offered and the change in the guest policy. The seating squeeze will make it harder for Food Service to schedule special dinners, Keller said, hence the reduction to one scheduled dinner per semester.

More for More

However, additional special dinners may be scheduled by any house, subject to availability of space, at a cost per serving of $2 for a chicken entree, $3 for seafood, and $4 for steak.

"The additional charge covers the incremental cost to Food Service beyond the normal board plan dinner cost," explained Assistant Director of Food Service James Hodgkins. "It's a real effort for us to offer special dinners. The varied menu is costly. We simply can't afford to have the same arrangement as last year."

"The people in my house are annoyed with the prospect of paying for a second guest meal," commented Spencer-Brooks house president William Grous '82. "The rates are pretty exorbitant for a dinner that isn't much better than the regular meal plan."

The change in policy also reflects the administration's desire to re-direct the emphasis of guest meal back to its traditional form.

"The concept of the guest meal has withered away in recent years," said Dean Daniel O'Connor. "It was originally intended to give students the opportunity to entertain faculty, but in recent years students only invited other students. Not that that was bad, but you can meet your friends for dinner anytime. The word 'guest' implies someone you would not normally invite."

Continued on Page 7

Sears declares for Governor

by Peter Nicholas

"I may get my head handed to me tonight by some young people here, but to me that's a better way to start a campaign than giving a speech in some stuffy hotel room in Worcester," said John W. Sears, Boston City Councilman announced his Republican candidacy for the Governorship of Massachusetts last Thursday night at Dodd House.

Sears maintained that the corrupt practices of political "wheeler-dealers and sharks" would be the theme of his campaign. He referred to "a certain Williams alumnus from the Class of '52,"

John Sears announced his candidacy for Governor of Massachusetts at an election rally in Dodd House Thursday night. (Farley)

Boston Mayor Kevin White, as "a person who does not care about solving problems—who is preoccupied with peripheral, superficial matters. The mechanism for change," said Sears, "is the Republican Party."

According to the Boston Globe, Sears made his formal announcement earlier Thursday at Faneuil Hall in Boston, proclaiming "something is rotten in Massachusetts." He joins Massachusetts Lieutenant Governor Thomas P. O'Neill III, a Democrat, and Independent candidate Francis P. Rich of Saugus in the gubernatorial race.

Sears said he chose Williams as the site of his address to demonstrate his concern with the problems of Berkshire County. He cited the failing economic and the poor transportation system of the Berkshires as symptoms of policies which cut the area off from the rest of the state.

Profession to be part of the "Reagan revolution," Sears called for the restoration of federalism and revitalization of the private sector. He described Dodd House as a symbol of the potential effectiveness of local government: "The College has adopted this building, has taken a beautiful large number of students. We can restore accountability and responsibility, and let local government work better. That's the challenge I am willing to work with you to undertake."

Amy Ferguson '82, an employee in the Sears campaign last summer, organized the gathering at Dodd House.

INSIDE

- Outlook looks at counseling services pg 3
- Bromberg slings pg 5
- Men among the Sisters pg 4
- REPHUSIONS pg 10

Reaping the benefits

As the Finance Committee considers the 1981-82 budget, it should carefully examine the outside funding of student organizations.

Some organizations have raised large sums of money through dues, and use these funds almost solely for private activities. At the same time, they expect supplementary College Council funding to meet their operating costs.

A prime example is this year's request the women's rugby club. It applied for $1035 in operating expenses, while raising an additional $1000 in dues—80 percent of it is allocated for banquets.

While eliminating banquets would be unfair, it is reasonable to ask the club to cover a greater portion of its operating expenses with the money it raises.

Groups that raise money on their own should direct more of these funds toward their operating costs. They would gain increased autonomy from the whims of College Council.

Students would also gain. These released funds would improve current offerings and promote a variety of new activities. The Finance Committee is obligated to reap the greatest benefit from all available funds.

Quit the Gouging

Two weeks ago Middlebury students paid the full $4 admission price to watch their football team battle the Ephrims at Weston Field. After the 3-hour drive from Vermont, and braving the threat of rain, those students deserved better than to be socked with the full admission price.

Football, men's hockey and basketball are the only College sports that charge admission to their events. However, revenues from visiting students are a small portion of the gate receipts that eventually go into the overall College general fund. Why then should a few extra bucks spoil the spirit of home team hospitality?

Presently, the College has reciprocal agreements with only Amherst, Wesleyan and Bowdoin. The quadrangle arrangement provides free admittance to athletic contests for visiting students with ID's. The Athletic Department should expand this agreement to include at least Middlebury, Trinity and Tufts.

When they travel here for football later this fall, Amherst and Bowdoin students will be covered by the plan. Athletic Director Robert Peck should ensure that Tufts students have the same privilege for the game October 24. If Peck cannot reach a reciprocal agreement with Tufts, he should at least institute a half-price ticket for the visiting students.

Hockey and basketball seasons are only a few months away. Setting up reciprocal agreements with other athletic departments should take no more than a few phone calls. The number for Tufts should be at the top of Peck's list.

Quote of the Week

"We played badly boys, but don't get too down. Remember, half of the football teams in America lost today."

Williams Football Coach Robert Odell

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS
Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT
Lori Miller

FEATURES
Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS
Mike Sutton

LAYOUT
Bob Buckner

ASSOCIATE EDITORS
Philip Busch
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson
Dan Keating
Jon Tiger

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS
Peter Burghardt
Paul Sabbah

AD MANAGER
Katie Miller

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Toub

OUTLOOK
Priscilla Cohen
Alyson Hagy

SPORTS
Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY
Sue Doherty
Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number: (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. All letters submitted to the RECORD must be typed and should not exceed 250 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters it receives.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA. 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

All fired up

To the editor:

I can put up with the licensing of animals. I can tolerate, somewhat, the disdain towards week-night parties. Even though it disquiets me, I'll bear the abolition of Row House Dining.

But with the clarion call for the abolition of most fireplaces, I cry enough!

After the rigors of academics here, it's comforting to join a friend by the fire, (formerly) relax in your house's intimate dining room, or enjoy Winter Study. Together with ascending Pine Cobble, these all relieve the tensions of studying and papers.

Such amenities, together with the taken-for-granted, but indispensable, matron service, are integral to Williams: they also make it unique. As a tour guide, I have seen how fireplaces in rooms, the mention of matron service, and Winter Study, to mention but three, impress prospective students and their parents. With the spiraling cost of college, $10,000 is easier to bear if it goes as much towards the body as the mind. Without these aspects of Williams, this college will meld into that melange of institutions through which thousands of students trudge each year.

If the College truly means to save money by conserving energy, I suggest they lower thermostats in Sage F and Williams F, among others, where last year the temperature was more conducive to an oven baking cookies. Furthermore, the lack of storm windows astounds me; the gales of Morgan are well-known to nearly all of that house's "alumni." The patching around many campus windows flakes off in your hands. An investigation (nay, let's appoint a committee) into the feasibility of solar panels is also in order.

I'm tired of being committed to death by groups approving the abolition of unworthy aspects of Williams. I welcome the opportunity to discuss with President Chandler, Dean Roosenraad, or Dean O'Connor, alternatives to the slow death of Williams' uniqueness.

I don't want to see yet more of this college's spirit in a fireplace, entombed.
Joseph Beach '84

"Little Things"

To the editor:

Think about those first letters you wrote home from Williams. Disregarding the chance gripe about the weather, an 8:00 a.m. class, or the beer stench of the entry (if writing on a Sunday), your reports sparked with enthusiastic accounts of this school's charms: the small classes, the great rooms (a lot even had fireplaces!), Pine Cobble, parties, those cool Row House dining rooms and their wonderful brunches. Well, it seems these days there are less and less little delights about which to write.

Letters to the editor should be typed and should not exceed 300 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters received.

I suggest that the administration, in its cold quest for economy and control, take into account the chain factor of certain facets of Williams. Do not underestimate the psychological importance of "the little things." By bagging Row House dining, coming down on parties, tightening parking, dining, and pet regulations and, now, threatening to seal fireplaces, our superiors are leaving us with an increasingly bland campus. To requite Will Layman, "This campus is becoming an elaborate cost-benefit analysis."

Be careful, administration axemen, where you cut; do not belittle aesthetics. When you remove one of the things that makes Williams so special, all in the name of money, you damage the aspect of the school as a whole. I fear that when one leaves the Williams family, sentimentality sets in nicely. It may not hit as hard should this UMass-ism keep up. Remember the old adage gentlemen: fond memories a fat endowment make.

Bruce Irving '83

Not to Worry

To the editor:

The proposal to close fireplaces is an imaginative suggestion for conserving energy, and the dollar savings would probably be significant. But a wood fire in an open fireplace is one of the most cheerful amenities of our long New England winters. There may come a time when this pleasure will fall victim to rising energy costs. For the present, however, the fireplaces in student residential houses may continue to be used as long as they are operated with proper regard for safety and in such a way as to minimize heat loss.

John Chandler
President of the College

Women Scorned

To the editor:

When we work so hard—running, sprinting, lifting, and jumping, it's rewarding to get recognition. But it seems that the work doesn't end on the athletic field. Women at Williams have to fight not only to succeed but also to get recognition.

Last week's RECORD had 380 lines on men's sports while only 97 on women's. This is a trend. Except for the press coverage, it's easy to tell the difference between men's and women's sports. Under the heading "Jock Scraps" women are disguised and disgusted.

Continued on Page 9

OUTLOOK

SUPPORT CAN BE BEAUTIFUL

Counseling Services Deserve Commitment

by Kevin Hirsch

At Williams, we live with the delusion that "well-roundedness" implies infallibility. In fact, our student body generally does possess great physical, intellectual, and emotional strength. However, as the pressures we face continue to grow, we must learn to recognize when our thresholds for stress are being approached or exceeded, and then take responsible steps to alleviate the problem.

Squeezed Flat

These pressures emanate from both the confines of the Purple Valley and from society-at-large. Externally, we are faced biannually with the skyrocketing costs of a Williams education which pose hardships for many and threaten the completion of formal education for some. The unstable economy creates the concomitant pressure to achieve academically, and in a field which yields financial success rather than (although not always opposed to) intellectual happiness. In addition, a significant number of us are faced with the trauma of family fragmentation: there is truth to the saying that many divorces take place "after the children leave home."

"A person must be able to admit when help is needed."

Internally, we must cope with inconsistent grading patterns in the wake of the Administration's concern over grade inflation. Also, crowding, both of the academic schedule and the physical plant, has increased the level of stress on campus. The Administration has decided to shorten final exam period by a full day, thus increasing the time pressure in an already stressful period. And our dorms are the most visible testimony to the problem of overcrowding: this year 15 freshmen were forced to live in the Infirmary for lack of space in the regular facilities. Combine all of this with the traditional social pressures on campus, and it becomes apparent that such a scenario could flatten even the most well-rounded of us.

This is not a theoretical framework. Last year the support services on campus saw a sharp rise in the number of students seeking help for a wide range of concerns. This may seem encouraging to some—that those in need of help are seeking it out—but just look around or possibly in the mirror. How many people do you know who are suffering from a drug or alcohol problem, mental or social dysfunction, anorexia, or depression, to name a few? It is evident that the need and demand for strong support services on campus exist. A number of services are available on campus at present, each showing a varying degree of effectiveness in serving the College community.

"the need and demand for support services on campus exist."

The Options

The Infirmary is the major health facility on campus. Here students can receive general, as well as orthopedic, gynecological, and mental health care. While the Infirmary is a complete, professional, and effective health facility, it has been traditionally plagued by a student perception of nonchalance and, to some degree, insensitivity to the concerns of adolescents seeking health care on their own, often for the first time. There must be an active campaign on the part of the Infirmary staff to inform students of the services they offer and the concern they have for the students they treat, in order to completely win the confidence of the College community.

The staff psychologists suffer from only one problem: underuse. The widely perceived notion that seeing a psychologist implies "weirdness or sickness" is sheer myth—and a destructive myth at that. Seeking out ways to improve mental well-being should be commended, not chided. Doctor Eugene Talbot and Doctor Barbara Joslyn are professionals who are sensitive to student concerns. Those who have seen them or other psychologists can attest to the value of professional counseling as a means of alleviating stress and improving one's ability to function in society.

Students often turn to the Deans Office as an avenue of first support when stress levels build to excessive levels. This places the Deans in an extremely important and potentially valuable position: the Office could serve as a coordinator of support services, channeling students to the proper source for their particular need. Unfortunately, the Deans Office habitually suffers from two distinct conditions which greatly reduce its effectiveness in this capacity: 1) the Office tends to automatically respond to initial pleas for intervention with the "Administrative 'NO,'" laying down the law before responding with sensitivity to student concerns; and, 2) the Deans, as is typical of American society as a whole, are less responsive to mental and stress-related conditions than to their physical counterparts. The Deans must become aware of the fact that students come to them generally when the chips are down, and the last thing they need is an aggressive or unsympathetic authority figure to confront them at the gateway for help. If the Deans worked more toward getting students to the right service for help, rather than as the keeper of the almighty extension, they would attack the cause rather than the symptoms of student difficulties.

A number of other services exist on campus, each serving a different although sometimes overlapping clientele with varying degrees of efficacy. The Chaplains Office is an extremely valuable support facility, capable of counseling on surprisingly diverse number of issues. The Office of Career Counseling is a marvelous and exceptionally underutilized service on campus. The professionals there can help with much more than resume preparation; their scope is wide and their desire to help is great. The Faculty Advising program is plagued by problems emanating from the core of its structure and would take many paragraphs to assess. From the students' side, Junior Advisors have unlimited potential as a primary support body for the freshman class. By becoming aware of the services on campus, and learning some simple techniques for dealing with those in need of help—compassion and an understanding ear, for example—the J.A.'s could help freshmen learn where they can get the help they need, as well as life-long habits of personal responsibility for their own well-being. The Gay People's Union is well prepared to intervene on the behalf of students who would like their help.

Peer Health

The major student-run, student support service on campus is the Peer Health Counseling Program. Peer Health's primary objective is to help students take responsibility for their own physical and mental well-being. This year the organization has greatly expanded its role on campus, improving both the quality and scope of the services it provides. Peer Health provides counseling and referrals in two major areas: 1) general and stress-related concerns; and, 2) contraception, reproductive health, and human sexuality. Peer Health offers general counseling hours, pre-gynecological exam counseling, pregnancy testing (which is done on an anonymous basis, independent from Infirmary files), and will likely offer a contraceptive clinic in the near future. As always, students can call any counselor 24-hours a day to get themselves pointed in the proper direction for help. Peer Health Counselors are an effective intermediary between outside and college-run services on the one hand, and the student body on the other. Thus, Peer Health can serve as the gateway into the student support system that many find so difficult to approach.

"The infirmary must actively campaign to win the confidence of the College community."

Compared to most undergraduate institutions, Williams is chock full of services geared to maintaining the mental and physical well-being of its student body. Two existing phenomena must change for the system to work optimally. First, the organizations providing support must work to improve student perceptions of their services as outlined above. Second, and most important, students themselves must recognize that to be truly well-rounded and strong, a person must be able to admit when help is needed, and seek the help necessary for reestablishing complete well-being. Working together, Williams will be able to boast of a happier, healthier, and more productive community.

Kevin Hirsch '82 has been a Peer Health Counselor for four years and has served as Peer Health Coordinator since the fall of 1980.

All Sizes and Varieties Available

by Daniel O'Connor

Williams is the kind of place where daily a great many interactions occur which might broadly be labelled "personal counseling." It must often be the case that the person who helps most with personal problems is someone other than a professional counselor—teachers and coaches, of course, but also staff members, security officers, matrons, custodians.

Compared to other colleges our size, Williams has maintained a surprisingly small professional counseling staff. Under the mandate of the 80's Committee further cuts were made in these student services. I would be alarmed at this development if I thought we were in danger of losing the generally strong rapport which prevails between students and those who teach and serve them. That rapport cannot be taken for granted. There will always be a need to encourage it and to honor it, when it occurs.

Role of Deans

Against that background, let me describe the services of those whose primary function is counseling students. The four Deans like to think of ourselves as advisers to students. Here's a list of some of the matters we help students with, any of which may end up as a counseling session. (1) Adjustments of all kinds: curricular planning, study away, housing and dining, scheduling of time (especially conflicts of schedule), violations of regulations, grievances about discrimination or harassment. (2) Planning extracurricular activities. We try to help groups struggling to bring forward issues of public policy: the military draft, nuclear power, energy conservation, the College investment policy, and so forth. Our concern is not to take sides but to see that all sides get a fair hearing in the spirit of an open campus. (3) Resolving tensions between individuals or groups. Here we are especially sensitive to tensions between male and female, black and white, gay and straight, foreign and native students. The particular adjustment problems of foreign students are met by a special adviser and the needs of visiting students are met by one of the Deans.

Career Counseling

The Career Counseling Office helps students to define their career interests. Students are aided in identifying their own skills and strengths, their own sources of personal satisfaction—and how all of these relate to career choice. Since many of the anxieties of the college years have some connection to long term goals, a session at the OCC with one of the four counselors is very much an instance of personal counseling.

"I'm satisfied that we have an adequate range and depth of counseling services."

Anxieties about paper writing are also common among students. This year we added the services of a person to diagnose student writing problems.

Three Chaplains

The three Chaplains of the College directly address the religious concerns of students in the context of a dominantly secular environment. For many students these persons are the natural ones to turn to for help in a variety of personal issues: relationships with the family, issues of love and intimacy, the frustrations of pursuing ideals in an imperfect campus and world.

Our medical staff offers advice and treatment on the whole range of medical problems. Within the large group of consulting physicians there are specialists in several medical sub-fields. In addition to the orthopedic clinic, gynecological clinics are available to students; two gynecologists, one a woman, and a nurse practitioner offer regular weekly clinics. The Infirmary maintains a few beds for students who just need a rest. Nurses are available around the clock.

There are three psychotherapists on our staff who offer short or long term therapy on a confidential basis. Occasionally, one of these three will lead group sessions as a way of working out tensions in an entry or a house.

Suggestions

All in all, I'm satisfied that we have an adequate range and depth of counseling services. My suggestions fall under the heading of "educational outreach." I would like to put more emphasis on educational programs and preventive measures, less on mere response to problems. For example, many of the persons mentioned in the above paragraphs have offered Winter Study projects. I'd like to encourage more of these. I'd also like to see more panels and workshops on such topics as alcoholism, nutrition, meditation and relaxation techniques, preparation for marriage and parenting.

Daniel O'Connor is Dean of the College.

Men invade women's schools

by Ron Issen

Twenty years ago, when "Williams men were men," and women were scarce, weekend fun centered around either inviting up (or more likely road-tripping down to see) women at neighboring schools. Williams was a different place then. Some would say that the winters were longer, the academics harder, and the sex rarer. Some would say that that still holds true today.

But this isn't a story about life in the Freshman Quad. Rather, as Williams enters its second decade of coeducation, it does us well to look at those schools who came to coeducation from the other side of the road; namely, Skidmore, Vassar and Connecticut Colleges.

Vassar, Skidmore and Connecticut Colleges were founded in 1861, 1911 and 1911, respectively, to provide women with an education equivalent to that available to men. Yet in the late '60s and early '70s, these schools, like many of their male counterparts, had also decided that the time had come for coeducation and have since, with varying success, admitted men to their once all-female campuses.

Men in the minority
Despite the efforts of each school's admissions departments, men are still in the minority at all three schools. The closest ratio exists at Vassar where the number is approximately 3:2. Connecticut's ratio is 1.7:1, while Skidmore's is around 3:1.

Although, as one student put it, the heyday of the "Wesson Oil Club" at Vassar is long since past, Vassar men still have to put up with what is often a somewhat negative image. The famous "Oh" that Williams students are so well familiar with (Williams and Mary? No? Williams in Massachusetts? Oh. That's nice.) is well known to men at Vassar also, but with a twist. "You go to Vassar? Oh, (raised eyebrow) That's nice."

As with their counterparts at Skidmore and Connecticut, not all alumnae are entirely pleased with coeducation, longing for the days when "girls were taught to be ladies" and the only men on campus during the week were professors and drunken Dartmouth and Williams men too hung over to find their ways home just yet.

At Vassar particularly, men have to contend with the remnants of a past that makes the atmosphere at times more of a women's school that happens to have men, than of a school that is completely coeducational. The lack of urinals in most washrooms is an appropriate twist to the extra ones that women at Williams seem to have lying around ("What's it for, Phyllis?" "I don't know. Maybe it's a planter or something.")

Vassar traditions

Vassar's colors of pink and gray, symbolizing the bloom of women's rights in the gray of male society, seem rather inappropriate with coeducation. In addition, such Vassar traditions as the "Daisy Chain" (when selected female undergraduates dressed in white gowns march behind the seniors at convocation) and "serenading" (when, starting at one house and going to the others, each in turn has its praises sung, culminating in a song contest in front of the President's house) have with only varying success been made coeducational. Although incorporating men into serenading wasn't too difficult (all men live in co-ed housing), the new tradition of having men dressed in white as ushers in the Daisy Chain has gone over rather less well.

And what of the men at these schools? Vassar men, in particular, often have to contend with what many feel is a largely undeserved reputation of homosexuality. As one student explained, this reputation is due mostly to the admittedly large numbers of gay males who did initially matriculate when Vassar first went co-ed. Yet, as one Skidmore co-ed described it, men on campus are viewed basically from one of two perspectives. Half are viewed as "artsy" and thus, somewhat suspect (from the women's view), or they are considered as being at school for basically the same reasons that their fathers roadtripped there and, thus, are equally suspect.

Male-female relationships

As far as male-female relationships go, by and large all three campuses seem to have more O.D.A. (open displays of affection) than is found at Williams—a fact that should please both Mills House and those mysterious "Boys from Colgate." In the words of one male at Connecticut, "I think I'm the luckiest guy in the world."

But the inequality in male-female ratios leads to complications. Although Connecticut is somewhat exempt, both Vassar and Skidmore are still heavily "into roadtripping." Men from Dartmouth, Hamilton, Union, West Point, Colgate (those mysterious "Boys" again!) and other schools regularly make the weekend trek in search of companionship and depravity. This leads, quite obviously, to some tension. Although the men to whom I spoke seemed to harbor only minor resentment at this influx of migrant males, women's reactions varied. At least some seem to prefer the Hi I'm Six Feet Two, Lift Weights, Build Cars and Have No Sense of Humor—type male who swoops down from the hinterlands of Dartmouth or the wastelands of West Point to the more artsy-type male

Connecticut's success

By all apparent standards, Connecticut seems to have been most successful with coeducation to date. Connecticut's lack of membership in the seven sisters, and the surprising successes of its male sports teams, seem to have, in their own ways, made the transition somewhat smoother than at Skidmore and Vassar. Insofar as masculinity, correctly or not, is often associated with achievement in sports, the success of Connecticut's male teams has helped to lower some of the raised eyebrows that, sly, a Vassar soccer player might receive when he plays Dartmouth. As of yet, none of the three schools have a football team.

Students trained to give sex advice

by Donna Imbasi

Everyone knows that Peer Health is responsible for freshmen entry "sex talks," and many know that Peer Health provides counseling for students, but few know about the training and preparation required to become a Peer Health counselor.

Prospective Peer Health counselors undergo a rigorous training program, two hours every Sunday night for eight weeks. Kevin Hirsch '82, the Peer Health coordinator, teaches. He is certified in Family Planning by Emory University in Atlanta.

The program is divided into two sections. The first section is technical training on contraceptives, sexually transmitted diseases, and abortion. The second section is training in emotional, pregnancy, and abortion counseling.

cut's male teams has helped to lower some of the raised eyebrows that, sly, a Vassar soccer player might receive when he plays Dartmouth. As of yet, none of the three schools have a football team.

Remembering the old days brings a tear to the eyes of many Williams alumni. Stories of roadtripping to Skidmore can still be heard at the tables of the Williams Club in New York, with supposedly a frat man from Zeta Psi holding the record of 45 minutes from Will-ams to in bed with a girl at Skidmore (won in the dead of winter through the ingenuity of taking the shortcut of driving over the frozen lake instead of around it). The large numbers of Williams - Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Vassar and Skidmore couples is also a testament to this past. Yet with football or not, a new era has been embarked upon: an era where a Williams man can be seen playing something other than merely "indoor sports" on the fields of Vassar, Skidmore and Connecticut.

selling. New this year is a condensed refresher course for previously trained counselors. Hirsch has instituted this and other changes so that counselors are "completely competent and up-to-date."

Since Peer Health is a student service for students, the training program is designed accordingly. Technical training aims at making counselors factually competent, so that they not only know the facts, but are able to tell students what the facts mean. This is important, because for most students, reproductive health care is new.

Counseling training teaches standard counseling techniques, and consists largely of role-playing exercises. These exercises, utilizing videotape in order for trainees to see how they come across in the counseling situation, simulate counseling situations so that trainees may become comfortable and confident through practice. Hirsch points out that counselors must project confidence and concern in order to be effective.

One area given particular attention is stress-related counseling. Williams students are under a lot of pressure, both internal including academic pressure to perform and produce, frustrated by increased tuition and a shortened exam schedule, as well as social pressures—and external—family problems, financial concerns, and career indecision. Although students usually have high tolerance thresholds for stress, these limits are often exceeded.

Counselor trainees are alerted to these stresses, and taught ways in which they may help students to deal with them.

An important aspect of counseling training is teaching how to be a good listener. Counselor trainees learn to be patient and ask questions that will help the student counselee think through personal situations, feelings, and concerns. The counselor acts, as a sounding board, to prod the student to self-examination. The counselor trainee also learns to be a guide to direct students to other counseling options available.

Rt. 2 Williamstown
458-8686

- Did tonight's dinner in the cafeteria not quite make it?
- Are you hungry but too tired to go out?
- Is it Monday night football and you have the Munchies?

WE DELIVER 7-11 p.m.

Freshman Revue raises curtain on Friday

by Marc de la Bruyere

Somewhere off the coast of New Brunswick, on an island connected to civilization only by the monthly passage of a Labrador bound tramp freighter, in the warm interior of a weather beaten lighthouse, sitting in a creaking, pine rocking chair with a kerosene lamp as the sole source of light, a Williams alum of the Class of 1913 sits, unfolding the program of his Freshman Revue and reliving his youth.

Although the existence of this hardy gentleman is yet to be confirmed, there is no doubt to those who have participated in a Revue, that few memories hold a fonder place. While they may go on to play Hamlet for the Royal Shakespeare Company, create the great American Musical, or revolutionize theatrical design, Revue-ers never forget the planks of Jesup where they first tasted the thrill of Williams theatre.

The memories probably would not be what they are if the show was not a challenge to produce. In addition to the usual difficulties such as producing it in only four weeks, this year's production, And Now I am Two, is an ambitious compilation of scenes by Woody Allen, Thornton Wilder, other great American playwrights, and by Dean Grodzins '83 treating the problem of relations between the sexes.

In typical Revue fashion, the production is not a cohesive story, but a collage of vignettes treating the problem of relations between the sexes. Director Ethan Berman '83, an alumnus of the 1979 Revue, Zoo! said "I was spurred to do it because I felt that while Williams does a fine job of educating us, our social education makes the Law of the Jungle look like a Disney flick."

Berman described the principal difficulties as "putting together a show from scenes that were not meant to be put together, and producing a result that was honest while at the same time preserving the sensibilities of parents."

He insisted that the Revue was not going to be a serious drama, but would concentrate on illuminating some of the absurdities of life by bringing up funny situations that are not far from the truth.

What makes the Revue special, and will come into prominence opening night, is that it is the unveiling of a good part of the new talent contained within the incoming class. Next Thursday sixteen freshmen, just one month ago complete strangers to each other, will make the opening artistic statement of their class.

But the Revue is much more than that; Cast member Kimerer LaMothe '85 summarized what it means to be in the Revue when she said, "It is much more of a fun show than serious drama, and it is the kind of show that really helped me get adjusted to the school, become involved, make friends; I know that when I look back it will be great."

The Revue will be performed on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. in Jesup, and at 2:00 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets are available for purchase or pick up at the AMT box office from noon to five until Friday.

Bromberg pleases audience

by Martha Platt

Last Saturday night Artie Traum and David Bromberg entertained a warm and receptive Williams audience in Chapin Hall.

Traum opened the evening with some speedy guitar licks before proceeding to his first number, "Homerun Kid," a song celebrating the achievements of a young ballplayer who wins the game in the bottom of the ninth. Most of Traum's songs were in a similar vein, depicting scenes from Americana laced with a mythical quality. The young homerun hitter, for example, is compared to Babe Ruth and the homerun ball to a UFO. Traum's voice weakened occasionally and went sharp at the end of phrases, but instead of detracting from his performance, this added a rustic, bluesy quality quite apropos to the idiom. His dexterity on acoustic guitar provided more than enough polish for his act.

After a brief intermission, David Bromberg appeared on stage with his quartet. As was the case with Traum, no electric instruments were used (although there was a tap on Nancy Bromberg's bass guitar), so there was a noticeable absence of equipment and modern technology on stage. This gave the concert a casual, homey ambience and allowed the wood panelling and carving around the hall to be brought out by the lighting.

The personnel in the group included Jeff Wiser on fiddle and doubling on mandolin, Gene Johnson on mandolin, David Bromberg on acoustic guitar and mandolin, and Bromberg's wife Nancy on bass.

From the opening chord to the closing bars of the second encore it was apparent that these were real musicians, genuine masters of their instruments and their craft. Without any musical or physical props to hide behind, the band was on open display. It was both exciting and relaxing to watch a band with so much control over their instruments and so much energy for the music they played.

Bromberg's choice of songs ranged from uptempo numbers ideal for picking and fiddling displays, to the sweet, melancholic ballads and blues selections. Bromberg was naturally featured in a solo capacity quite often, and was alone on stage for his hallmark "Travelin' Man." He has a very effective style of bending notes in dramatic situations, and picking with wild alacrity at other times. Mandolins were in abundance and all three soloists played them together several times, but the accolades go to Gene Johnson for his very intricate, dazzling solos on that instrument. Wiser was no less adept on his fiddle and treated the audience to very fast finger and bowing work.

Wearing jeans and long-sleeved Western-styled shirts, the three gentlemen dominated the soloing scene while Nancy Bromberg backed up solidly on the vocal and very steady bass playing. The three- and four-part harmony parts were resonant and right on target intonation-wise, and gave a feeling of power that amplification alone could not provide. This was particularly noticeable on the final song of the evening, a solemn discussion of the adage, "A man should never gamble more than he can stand to lose" with Bromberg singing the lead while the others provided the backing harmonies.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

HARVARD BUSINESS SCHOOL

MBA PROGRAM

An Admissions Representative from Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration will be on campus

October 9

to meet with students interested in the two-year MBA Program

Contact the Career Planning and Placement Center for more details and to sign up for an information session.

Harvard Business School is committed to the principal of equal educational opportunity.

Cast members go through their lines in a rehearsal for this year's Freshman Revue, which opens Friday at Jesup. (Farley)

Trio opens season

by Greg Capaldini

It was an unusually light program Friday night at B-R Hall as the Williams Trio played its first recital of the year. Trio members Julius Hegyi (violin), Douglas Moore (cello), and Paula Ennis-Dwyer (piano), music faculty members all, again picked works that are scarcely overplayed, but this time avoided the requisite academic-contemporary selection to which the typical reaction is a dazed "That was interesting."

This time, in fact, they made a rare excursion into the Classical Era, with Beethoven's "Kakadu" Variations. Written at a time when variations were more of an analytical than expressionistic venture, the work uses a popular opera tune of the time. The Trio made more of the brooding introduction than they did of the sprightly variations. Ennis-Dwyer could have seemed more secure in some of her fast-note passages.

Those who like Slavic folk music would best appreciate Dvorak's "Dumky" Trio. Using a rather free form, the composer quotes many native tunes, set in comparatively rough instrumental textures. Musicians are generally wary of Dvorak's tricky string writing, and for Hegyi and Moore, it seemed taxing to keep things moving. It is easy to treat this music superficially (typical gripe about Dvorak conductors), and in this performance, a certain sameness of approach to all the various sections was the rule. On the other hand, the audience responded quite enthusiastically, and there is always something to be said for that.

But the evening's most successful reading in terms of realization of the composer's intentions, was that of the Trio #2 by Shostakovich. The texture here is heretofore transparent, making it easy to hear what each individual instrument is playing. The Williams Trio was unfazed by such difficulties as the cello part floating in an obnoxiously high range, and it responded perfectly to all the composer's humorous devices—irony without vulgarity.

If you missed the recital (most of you did), the Trio will present part of their program again Saturday afternoon, this time with commentary.

CLASSIFIEDS

UPS Mailing, 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole.

BABYSITTERS NEEDED. Any student who is interested in babysitting for the children of Williams College employees should telephone Debbi Wilson, M-F from 12:30 PM to 4:30 PM at 2376.

SURPLUS JEEPS. cars and trucks available. Many sell under $200. Call 312-742-1143. Ext. 5924, for information on how to purchase.

HELP WANTED. Work in your own home. Send work history, name, address, and phone number to: Mike, P.O. Box 68, Water Vliet, Michigan 49098.

George: I love you — S & M

Joan: I know you're upset about the girl in the towel, but even cousins have to shower sometime. So what if she's from Smith? Don't leave me like this. S. F. I.

WANTED: Qualified folk guitar teacher. Contact Julia Geniesse at #2844; Box 1182.

WANTED: Life models for life drawing class. No experience necessary. $5.00/hr. Call Laurie Bolton 8-3912 or SU 2124.

Senior thinking of bicycling cross country summer of 82 is looking for a partner. Interested? Drop a note in SU 2354.

THE KING'S LIQUOR STORE

Tuborg Gold
8.59/case and 2.20/six

Principato
Imported from Italy
Medium dry white wine with a distinct apple taste
4.75/1.5 liter bottle

on Spring Street 312-458-5948

NEW CUTOUT AND SALE LP's

Who "Meaty, Beaty, Big & Bouncy"	$3.99
XTC "Drums & Wires"	4.49
Martha & the Muffins	4.49
Mike Oldfield "Tubular Bells"	4.49
Roxy Music "Flesh & Blood"	3.39
Rolling Stones "It's Only Rock & Roll"	5.49

Many more—
Limited quantities on some

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street - 458-5229 Open 10-6

Viewpoint Williams ethos endangered

by Jeffrey Lissack

Change, it's a vital part of life in the "real world," and it's become an increasingly familiar fact of life to Williams students during the past year. Changes ranging from obvious ones in physical structure, like the elimination of Row House dining, to more subtle changes in attitude, exemplified by the Deans' banning of waterfights in the Freshman Quad this fall, have many students, particularly upperclassmen, concerned and upset.

That concern is not shared by many underclassmen, who can't remember what Williams was like before these changes; nor is it shared by many faculty or alumni, who can recall much wider reaching (and therefore apparently more significant) changes. This lack of concern stems from a failure to recognize that the sum of decisions made around here in the past year represents a threat to the Williams "atmosphere"—the small, intimate, informal, friendly ethos which ideally both affects and is a result of everything that goes on here. One reason why it may be hard to consider student complaints about these changes (more seriously) is the quantity and constancy of complaining on this campus. "I've got too much work to do!" "Why does it always seem to rain just when I've got free time?" "I've got to find myself a girlfriend!" . . .

"Bitching" is probably one of the most reliable parts of life at Williams, along with such other "b" words as books and beer. Still, the steadiness of student complaints should not dull one's ear to their validity. What kinds of complaints am I talking about? To mention only a few: the elimination of Row House dining, with its as yet undetermined effects on Row House unity and its impact on Greylock dining; the initiation of the computerized ID system; the banning of animals from campus. All of the complaints center around a fear that Williams is losing the atmosphere which has in the past made it special.

One could object that Williams has gone through major changes before, such as closing the fraternities, and both the school and its atmosphere survived, and in the eyes of many, improved. In a sense, that's just the point. Everyone realizes the potential impact of a decision of that magnitude, and so it isn't implemented until much study and input by all has taken place.

Each decision, such as the current proposal to close fireplaces, looks like a wise move if considered by itself. There's not much doubt that money could be saved. But when added to the rest of the decisions of the very recent past, its potential costs become much higher, chipping away further at Williams' strengths. Isolated decisions made to save money may result in a much larger, unwanted outcome—the threatening of the "Mark Hopkins and the Log" ideal, which a year long study group, the Committee on the 80's, considered to be the defining characteristic of Williams.

The very existence of that committee two years ago attests to Williams' desire to plan big changes, rather than simply letting them happen. But planning once a decade isn't enough. Everyone at Williams needs to remember to step back from the particular decision they're involved in to see how it fits into the "big picture." Change is most productive when it is determined by considering all the potential costs and benefits.

Most people come to Williams largely because of its academic reputation; yet that is a strength which can be found at several other schools. Choosing Williams is ultimately a matter of selecting the qualities which make it unique—that small informal, friendly atmosphere which forms the basis for so much of what we learn here.

Taking that atmosphere for granted is a risk that none of us can afford.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

An exhibition of the works of Henri de Toulouse Lautrec will be on view through November 1 at the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute. Selected from the Institute's extensive holdings of Lautrec's graphic works, it will include this color lithograph, FEMME AU LIT, PROFIL LAU PETIT LEVER.

ARTS ARTS ARTS ARTS

B.S.U. Film Series

Tonight (Tuesday) at 7:30 p.m. In the Brontëman Auditorium, the Williams Black Student Union will present the third film in its five part series, A Hero Ain't Nothin' But a Sandwich concerns a black family's struggle to cope with the problem of childhood drug addiction. There will be a discussion afterwards, moderated by Prof. Carol Marks.

Art Film

On Friday, Oct. 9, the Clark will show the first of a ten-film series depicting Romantic and Classical tendencies in 19th century art. Friday's film, The Romantic Rebellion, will be shown at 1:00 p.m. at the Clark and will be repeated on Sunday at 3:00. A 50¢ donation will be collected.

Berkshire Symphony

The Berkshire Symphony opens its 1981 season on Friday, October 9 at 8:30 p.m. in Chapin Hall. The program will include Variations on a Theme of Paganini by Boris Blacher, Andante & Rondo Omgarese by Weber with Stephen Walt, bassoon, Benevenuto Cellini Overture by Berlioz, and Symphony No. 8 in G major by Dvorak. Admission is $2.50 at the door; free to Williams I.D. holders.

Williams Trio

On Saturday, Oct. 10, the Williams Trio will perform a short concert with comments on the program. The concert, which begins at 3:30 p.m. in Brooks Rogers Recital Hall, is free and open to the public.

tg!photoworks

DUE TO THE OVERWHELMING RESPONSE ANOTHER SECTION OF "BASIC 35 MM TECHNIQUES" WILL BEGIN WED., OCT. 7th, 7-9:30 PM

Reservations and a deposit will be required as seating is limited.

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL

Mon-Sat 9:30-5:30 4 Water Street Williamstown 458-3113

The Mole Hole

UNIQUE GIFTS for all family members

118 Water Street Open 9-6 Seven Days

... NEWS

Dorms to get warmer

by Lorraine Driscoll

College dormitories are becoming cooler in the daytime as a result of a new effort by Buildings and Grounds and the Energy Conservation Committee (ECC) to heat College dorms when students are most likely to be using them.

Two years ago, some energy-minded students circulated a questionnaire which asked "If, for some reason, the College were forced to restrict heating to 12 hours each day, during what hours would you prefer the heat be turned on?" Respondents clearly favored the following three general blocks of time: 6-10 p.m., 10-2 a.m., and 6-10 a.m. Now Buildings and Grounds has installed timers in each dorm to regulate the weekday heat (Saturday and Sunday will be excluded from daytime heat set-back).

This is the first year the system will be used in all dorms. On weekdays, thermostats will be set back from 65° to 60° from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and the temperatures will not be lowered at night until 1 a.m. Previously, the temperature settings were 65° from 6 a.m. to midnight and 60° from midnight to 6 a.m.

Students get new dinner program—

Continued from Page 1

Dating faculty

O'Connor acknowledged that the old concept of guest meal allowed students a free opportunity to date other students.

"The cost of eating dinner out for a couple is prohibitively expensive," he said. "But there was a conflict between student requests. Students wanted to improve faculty-student relations while at the same time having the option to ask out a date."

Entertainment options

O'Connor hopes that the task of improving student-faculty relations will not center solely on the special dinners.

"I hope students will feel free to invite the faculty to dinner any time. We're encouraging this. Going through the line doesn't tie up seats the way the longer sit-down special dinners do. We only ask that houses bringing a large number of faculty through the line alert the food service as to which dining hall they plan to visit."

He pointed to a recent informal guest meal held by Fitch House as an example of this low-key approach.

O'Connor also cited cook-outs as a cheap and easy way to entertain faculty, worthy of consideration by the houses.

"Spencer-Brooks had a very successful cook-out on September 25," said Grous. "We sent out special invitations to faculty, and about 40 showed up. It was great! Everyone felt more comfortable than if it had been a guest meal."

House unity?

Keller stated that the change is also a response to student requests for greater house unity. The emphasis of each

Faculty examines Gifford report

The Gifford Committee's proposal for house advisory councils has met with criticism from some Residential House Senior Associates.

Senior Associates are faculty members who are connected with each residential house and who have jurisdiction over house cultural funds.

The Gifford Report proposed grouping houses together and forming advisory councils composed of the presidents and faculty associates of the houses in the group. These councils would control cultural funds and a percentage of the House Maintenance Tax. According to the Gifford Report, the councils would concentrate on student-faculty interaction and minority interests.

Associate Barbara Jan-Wilson of A-Gar-Wood remarked, "I'm not sure that the advisory council is the best way. It seems to add one more governing body (to the house system). Emphasis needs to be on strengthening house government within each house."

Fitch-Currier's Peter Kramer supported this proposal. It allows "experimenting without affecting the existing system," he said, "A lot of things could be done with the right administrative guidance. I'd like to see what develops from the clustering concept."

Concerns remain in the area of the relationship between house governments and faculty associates. Offered Barbara Jan-Wilson, "I don't think house

Council looks at budget requests

by Laura Sellgsohn

Discussion of club budgets and travel reimbursements dominated the College Council meeting September 30 at the Log.

Treasurer Steve Spears '83 explained the Council's new policy on student activities' travel reimbursements. The change, established by the Finance Committee, requires clubs requesting reimbursement for automobile expenses to be paid "at the rate of 11¢ per mile, when a regular funds voucher is submitted with a Student Activities Tax (SAT) voucher and (when possible) receipts for gas expenses," Spears said. The 11¢ covers 8¢ for gas and 3¢ for "wear on the vehicle," according to Spears.

He explained that in past years, clubs have failed or neglected to submit gas receipts. Under the new rules, a voucher will be sufficient to secure reimbursement, although the receipt is welcomed. To concerns that groups traveling in gas-guzzling station wagons will suffer losses at the 11¢ per mile rate, Spears replied, "This seemed the easiest and most uniform way to go about it. Our hope is that it will even out, and we are trying to encourage people to use gas-economizing cars."

Two groups are excluded from the travel expense policy. Lectures and performers, whose travel expenses are not always car expenses, rely minimally on SAT funds for travel. Users of College vehicles are also excluded. The College charges 22¢ per mile, so users of College vehicles will be encouraged to find more economical means of transport.

Discussion turned to SAT grant recommendations approved on September 17. The Gulleimiansian received $5700, the Water Polo Club was allocated $850 and the Williams Hunger Action Project was granted $520. These allocations were equal to the groups' requests. The Purple Key Society had its request for $400 trimmed to $325.

The Council will discuss the Gifford Report next week.

The Record will run classifieds at 25¢ per line. Deadlines are 4:00 p.m. Fridays. Total amount due must accompany this form. Mail or bring in person to Classifieds, The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Mass. 01267.

NAME _____	PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____	TOTAL ENCLOSED _____
AD TO READ AS FOLLOWS:
	lines
	1
	2
	3
	4
	5
	6

TANNING BOOTHS ARE DANGEROUS

HAWAIIAN TANNING TABLETS

Beautiful tans without the sun. Keep your summer tan without the use of dangerous tanning booths. Safe, natural food colorings. Millions have taken these tablets without any known side effects. Send for your box of 72 tablets specially priced at...$29.95 plus $3.00 handling (check or money order) from...

CREATIVE MARKETING

1810 E. Michigan Ave. Dept. A-813
Lansing, Michigan 48912

JUNIOR NIGHT

Discounts for all card-carrying members of the class of '83.

WEDNESDAY

Marc Hummon and friends will perform.

THURSDAY

The Octet will entertain!
8:00 p.m.
$1.00 at the door.

THE LOG

MOON CHILD LEATHER

THE JEWELERS SUN

If you Love the Smell of Leather and the Gleam of Fine Jewelry

A Wide Selection of Brass Earrings
Belts and Wallets
Sheepskin Rugs

115 Water St., Williamstown, Mass.
Tues.-Sun. 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

458-5898 458-3270

GO BASS OR GO BAREFOOT

Bass

#7499 $47.00 TAN

#8569 $43.00 Burg.

Salvatores

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

CONCERNED WITH FASHION, FIT AND QUALITY

Faculty receives new blood

Thirty-one new teachers joined the faculty this year. The Record continues to interview a few of the 11 assistant professors, two instructors, two lecturers, and 17 visitors each week.

Sara Suleri

Sara Suleri, in her first teaching position this fall, will take on a role she will "definitely have to get used to," as assistant professor of English. She earned her B.A. at Kinnaird College and her M.A. at Punjab University, both of which are in Lahore, Pakistan, as well as another M.A. at Indiana University. She is presently working toward her Ph.D. from Indiana and hopes to complete her dissertation by the end of the year.

Suleri is pleased to find the English department "very diverse and open" and is looking forward to teaching Modern Critical Theory, which embraces her specialty, contemporary criticism, in relation to 20th century poetry. Suleri finds Williams very different from the universities in Pakistan, which are "much more rigorous and structured, once one enters a specific discipline."

"I do find Williams quite small," says Suleri, "but it is very easy to live in. You enter an isolated, academic world that is extremely pretty. I'm delighted."

James E. Hall

James E. Hall, visiting professor of mathematics, has taught at the University of Wisconsin in Madison for the past 20 years. He earned his B.S. from Northern Illinois University in 1958, his A.M. from Harvard in 1959, and his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin in 1965.

Acquaintances within the Williams mathematics department brought Hall to the Berkshires for his first experience as a visiting professor. His major field of research is differential equations. When asked if he has noted differences between classes at Wisconsin and Williams, Hall remarked, "Students taking similar courses are about the same." After enjoying a WOOLF trip up and around the Taconic Ridge last weekend, Hall hopes to join more WOOLF trips or organize some jaunts of his own.

William Darrow

William Darrow comes to the Williams religion department from Harvard's Center for Study of World Religion. A Californian, he graduated from the University of California at Santa Barbara in 1970 and received both his M.A. (in 1973) and his Ph.D. (in 1981) from Harvard. Darrow is "absolutely delighted" with Williams and finds its faculty "uniquely committed" to students. He specializes in Iranian studies, concerning himself with both pre-Islamic and Islamic Iran. For Darrow, religion is "a study of human beings, human phenomena in totality, approached through thought, literature, actions, and rituals."

Married, with small children, Darrow says his family and teaching duties take up most of his time. When asked to compare the quality of education at Harvard with that of Williams, Darrow said that at Harvard one often hears lectures given by "Mr. Big Name" but other than that, sees only graduate students or teaching fellows, who "often are very good but are simply pulled too many ways." Here, Darrow remarked, "there is a clearer commitment to liberal arts."

John J. McMahon

John J. McMahon of the chemistry department graduated from Southeastern Massachusetts University in 1975, received his M.S. from the University of Massachusetts in Boston in 1978, and received his Ph.D. from Michigan State in 1981. He specializes in surface Rayman studies, a branch of physical chemistry that deals with radiation. He intends to continue his research here.

McMahon is interested in German history, particularly the war tactics of the Third Reich. He also enjoys backpacking, and was originally attracted to Williams by the beauty of the area while hiking in New York State.

Tom Hodgson

Tom Hodgson '74 has returned to the Berkshires as a part-time instructor in philosophy for the fall term of 1981. Since receiving his M.A. from Yale in 1976, Hodgson has taught at Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., and will return there at the conclusion of this semester. A teacher in the department of philosophy and religious studies at Andover, Hodgson also found time to coach basketball and baseball. He enjoys spending time with his wife and 2-year old son and also likes basketball, tennis, hiking, cycling, and backpacking.

Hodgson double-majored in philosophy and religion at Williams. Hodgson would like to spend time reading and studying philosophy here, something for which he has lately had little time.

James White

James White, a newcomer to the economics department, comes to Williams from California via New York City. He spent his undergraduate years at Berkeley and received an M.Phil. from Columbia in 1979. He is currently completing his doctoral dissertation on urban area economics. This year he is teaching Economics 101 and Economics 370, Studies in the Public Sector, (Econ. 370) a course about the urban economy. White cites as his two major reasons for coming to Williams the excellent reputation of its economics department and its location in the heart of New England. As an avid skier and outdoorsman, he is looking forward to experiencing his first winter in the Berkshires. He explained that when he was growing up in California "winter was something you drove to." Professor White is excited about teaching at Williams this year, but his career goals extend beyond the world of academia. He would someday like to work in Washington, D.C. in applied economics.

Keller defends dining changes

Continued from Page 1

new computer system, since unauthorized students and visitors can no longer steal meals. Since the system cost $40,000, it will pay for itself in two years or less, according to Keller.

"I am sensitive to the entire matter of computers," Keller noted, "but last year, you have to admit, we had a no-system system." The chosen system is much less cumbersome than other possibilities such as punch cards, he claimed. "If students hadn't cheated to some degree, this system wouldn't be necessary."

Keller defended a $1 charge for a forgotten ID as necessary in order to prevent the system from being deluged with blue chips like last year's "thousands per month. You've got to have your driver's license when you're stopped by a cop. Now you've got to have your meal ticket at Williams," he said.

Keller explained why the 14-meal plan costs only $120 less per year than full board. Food Service cannot reduce the number of workers, he said, and very little is saved on food since the 400 students on the 14-meal plan did not eat breakfast as a last year anyway.

Such options as a 10-meal plan are possibilities, noted Keller.

However, he said of such ideas as snack bar credit for missed meals and carryover of credit to the following week that "the money has to come from somewhere—anything you get you have to pay for. Assuming that students won't eat all meals keeps costs down. There has to be a shutoff point, otherwise there's a concomitant increase of Row House dining kept this year's board costs from rising much more than they actually did.

Nathan issued a statement later in the week describing his reactions: "Well, we were pleased to get those three concessions, yet we still feel strongly that something can be done to reduce the long lines at brunch."

The Committee will be meeting in various dining halls in the future to investigate their food, and may even make some fact-finding to trips to other colleges.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

For those of us, like so many, who need a little recognition in the community and who want to know what other women's teams are doing, please acknowledge our athletic competence and allocate equal attention to our teams.

Sue Smith '82

Ed. Note: For the 9/22 issue mentioned, 59 inches of men's sports were printed, out of 92 inches that were submitted. Articles on men's golf, crew and rugby were cut completely. Fourteen inches of women's sports were printed, out of 18 inches of copy received. This equates to 78 percent of women's sports printed, to only 64 percent of men's. We would appreciate and are actively encouraging longer articles by women's sports correspondents.

Book Report

To the editors:

In an advertisement in last week's Record, Ralph Renzi of Renzi's College Bookstore posed the question, "Is 'poaching' ethical?" This question was in reference to the practice of Williams Bookstore's Joseph Dewey. Mr. Dewey has begun ordering books for courses to which only Renzi's was given the official college order. In reply:

Mr. Renzi, we don't think ethics enters into the picture. We don't care if Mr. Dewey is not being nice to you. All we understand is that the booksales system here at Williams stinks. Please don't misunderstand us, Mr. Renzi, this is not an attack on you; it's an indictment of the system.

We've been unable to buy all the books we need for Art History 101. Thus, we go to that class three times a week totally unprepared. There are several hundred other students enrolled in that course, and we wonder how many other people are facing the same problem. It's not just a shame; it's a tremendous waste of educational opportunity.

It should be mandatory that a college insure its students that required texts will be made available. Books are a primary element in a college education, and it's beyond belief that a school of Williams' caliber and reputation is unable to reasonably guarantee this element.

Mr. Renzi, our gripe is not with you, or with Mr. Dewey for that matter. We're sure you both have been doing all that you possibly can to supply the students with the books they need. We're just unhappy with the system, and we hope something will be done to strengthen its weaknesses.

Respectfully yours,
Scott Pileggi '84
Lee Ordeman '84

P.S. We also hope our art history professor doesn't read this.

Honor and trust

To the editor,

I would like to respond to a passage in the editorial section of the September 15 Record that was recently brought to my attention

The editorial was devoted to the changes that Williams College and Williams students are experiencing at present. The paragraph that concerns me is the one dealing with the Honor Code and its general "disregard" and "abuse."

To set the facts straight (which I thought it was the reporter's job to do), there are two corrections I would like to make. First, in regard to the two "stolen" major final exams: the Econ 101 exam which was cancelled and rescheduled was most probably never even stolen. In hindsight it appears that a clerical error resulted in a single copy of the exam turning up in the wrong place. At that time the circumstances were unknown, however, and a decision was made to postpone the exam for the protection of the students. The second problem with final exams was definitely more serious, and is being looked into to decide whether self-scheduled and take home test procedures should be modified.

Another misrepresented fact is the "ever larger numbers of students brought before the Honor . . . Committee for cheating." In 1979-80 fifteen people were brought before the Honor Committee for alleged Honor Code violations. In 1980-81 the number of students accused dropped to ten. Granted one cannot discern a trend by looking at only two years of data, but the claim that "ever-increasing" numbers of people are being brought in for violations of the Honor Code is misleading.

The final and most serious issue I would like to address is the "crippling trend . . . of a loss of trust between students and faculty." I would like to believe that this trend really does not exist, and if it does I would like to see it halted and reversed. Our job as a committee is to make sure students know and respect the Honor Code and we are trying to fulfill that goal. I personally believe that students are becoming much more aware of the Honor Code, and as a member of the Honor Committee have seen surprisingly few serious and intentional breaches of the Honor Code agreement. We as a committee will do our best to maintain the integrity of the Code, and try to restore any lost trust between members of the Williams community.

Lee Buttz '82

Chairman, Honor and Discipline Committee

COME SEE

Flams Stead skirts,
Book Bags and Totes,
Knitting wools, needlepoint,
cross stitch and gifts.

UPSTAIRS

115 Water Street
458-8485
OPEN 9:30-5:30
SUN 12-5:00

Does your room need help?

UPSTAIRS has everything you need—comforters comforter covers sheets

rugs towels window shelf
&
very special accessories

We will mail to all your family and friends.

Gift finances new theater

by David Battey

Construction of a small experimental theater next to the Adams Memorial Theater may start as early as this spring, according to Jean-Bernard Bucky, chairman of the Williams theater department.

The new theater, which will seat approximately 100 people, will replace the present studio theater located in the basement of the Adams Theater.

The idea of building the small theater began last spring after the theater department received an anonymous $300,000 donation for that purpose. Since then further money has been collected.

"The studio theater will be used for smallish, modest productions—most of which are student-directed," said Bucky. "Attention will be focused on the performers because of the thrust stage, surrounded on three sides by the audience, and the lack of space for complicated set designs requiring a great deal of scenery."

"The most grievous inadequacy of the present Studio Theater is its insufficient separation from the other working spaces of the AMT," he noted. "Thus, in practice, there can be no free simultaneity of operation. Activities in the shops of the AMT, and on its main stage, cannot take place without creating substantial noise in the studio."

The proposed studio theater could accommodate production classes (primarily in acting and directing), theater rehearsals, and small-scale theatrical productions. The latter category would include faculty-directed productions, senior honors productions, curricular production projects, and appropriate theatrical lecture/demonstrations.

"The theatrical lighting and the discreet use of stage properties would constitute the major scenic emphasis in the theater," said Bucky. "Opportunities for flexible and imaginative stage lighting will be an important part of the fundamental characteristics of the new space."

The current plans for the new theater call for access from the Adams Theater shops to the back of the studio theater stage. Ramps to be built for the new theater will allow access for handicapped persons to not only the new theater but also the AMT, which currently does not provide ramps for the handicapped.

"SPLASH-LONG" ...a two-level cut blended to create a difference FROM THE CLIP SHOP

Short cuts have been dominating the hair scene for the past few years, but we are again hearing serious overtures toward longer cuts from The Clip Shop.

The time has come to begin designing new and interesting long hairstyles . . . styles that will keep fullness on top and achieve the desired length. The Clip Shop would like to introduce one of their latest long hairstyles — "Splash-Long!"

It is a two-level haircut artistically blended to produce an effect of volume toward the top, and still keep the sides very close and tapered.

The exacting techniques involved in executing their new design was introduced to the stylist of The Clip Shop on video tape. It is part of their continuing program for progressive, professional salons.

This cut will satisfy those fashion seekers who have been reluctant to give up length but want to march to the beat of modern dressing. Take some well designed advice . . . jump into the fashion scene with a "Splash-Long" . . . a truly soft feminine experience that awaits you at The Clip Shop. Just walk in, or if you prefer, make an appointment at one of their three locations.

The CLIP SHOP has three convenient locations:

Walk in or call for a free consultation or for an appointment.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

SPECIAL ON CARNATIONS!

1 dozen carnations for $3.99
(Regularly $9.00)

Town & Country
Flowers

EPH'S ALLEY
on Spring St. Williamstown
behind First Agricultural Bank

458-5030

Get ready for cold weather!

Turtlenecks by:

Skyr
Duofold
Roffe
Obermeyer-Medico
Woolrich

A great selection of prints, stripes and zippered turtlenecks.

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Booters can't kick back

by Dave Woodworth

Bowing to Dartmouth by a 2-0 score, the Williams varsity soccer side lost its third straight match on Saturday afternoon.

Although the Ephs entered the match definite underdogs, they dominated play for the first ten minutes of the game and seemed to be on their way to an upset victory. Several missed scoring opportunities, however, swung the momentum back in Dartmouth's favor, and the Big Green went on to control the rest of the game.

Williams unveiled a new offensive system for the match, adding a forward "to put a little more punch in the attack," according to Coach Mike Russo.

This offense gave Dartmouth fits at the outset. Doug McKenney '85 and Dave Nasser '83 each had a good shot on goal, but failed to tally. The turning point of the game came moments later, when Rob Kusel '83 was awarded a penalty kick after a Dartmouth foul in the penalty area. Kusel's shot caromed off the post, and instead of being up by two or three goals, the Ephs came away empty.

From this point on, Dartmouth was in the driver's seat. The Green's first goal came at 25:12 of the first half, as Sean Rai blasted a loose ball past Goalkeeper Kenny Rhodes '85. Williams hung tough to keep the score at 1-0 until Chris Morrison, with a fine assist from Rai, got the second goal at 29:45 of the second half.

Williams outshot Dartmouth, 18 to 14, thanks largely to the flurry at the start of the match. Rhodes had four saves for Williams while Andy Krahling recorded six in shutting out the Ephs for Dartmouth.

Russo acknowledged the fact that the Ephs were a bit over-matched against a Division I opponent, and also noted that the Ivy League "is as strong as any in the country" when it comes to soccer. However, he also pointed out that Williams stood a good chance of winning the game had they been able to score early.

The next match for Williams comes today against UMass, another tough Division I team. Russo feels that, with the new offense, the return of Co-captain Reg Jones '82 to the back line, and a little luck, the Ephs may pull an upset.

Ephs downed by Rochester, 7-3

by Steve Epstein

An injury to senior quarterback and offensive leader John Lawler resulted in a disoriented attack as the Eph footballers fell to Rochester, 7-3, last Saturday on the Yellowjackets' home field.

The game saw the Ephs punter John Hennigan as the most overworked competitor, punting 9 times (33.7 avg.) as the offense was able to gain only 97 yards total and 10 first downs throughout the game.

The defense was susceptible to the run, giving up 107 yards on the ground—mostly to Rochester fullback Mike Cunningham. But inside their own 20 yard line, the defense was rock solid, giving up only one touchdown on the day, and playing the final 34 minutes of shutout football.

The Ephs got on the scoreboard first on their fourth possession of the first quarter. Runs by senior backs Tom Casey and Jay Wheatley put the Ephs on the Rochester 24 yard line. There the drive stalled, and kicker Rich Coomber booted a 41-yard field goal to put Williams into a 3-0 lead.

But on the next series for Williams, Lawler was hit on a bootleg play and injured ligaments in his knee. The Eph offense never recovered from the loss of their field general, who had led them to a 9-2-1 record since he became a starter two years ago.

"From the moment John left the game," commented wide receiver Micah Taylor, "our offense just lost its continuity. Things got confused. The two backups (quarterbacks) are both good, but we weren't used to the way they reacted to certain situations."

A poorly judged punt return, and a big superturf bounce led to the Ephs gaining field position on their own one-yard line with about 8 minutes left in the first half. The Ephs punted after three plays and gave Rochester a 1-10 on the Williams 35 yard line. Four big plays brought the Yellowjackets to the Ephs' 1-yard line, where QB Gary Espino scored on a dive play to give Rochester its 7-3 margin of victory.

The second half was a second-guesser's paradise. The Ephs and Rochester played to a stalemate. The defense continually held Rochester in check, but good Rochester field position backed the Ephs deep into their own territory.

Sophomore quarterback B. J. Connolly played most of the game, after Junior Scott Garabedian came in for a spell and was intercepted. Many Eph fans were surprised at Coach Odell's short look at Garabedian and his limited use of senior halfback Tom Casey, who had his biggest game of the year last season against Playing both games to a deadlock, the women's soccer team neither improved nor worsened its record this week.

Women's soccer ties

The squad encountered Mount Holyoke Saturday and battled to a scoreless tie. Neither team had an advantage with respect to personnel or tactics. There was an evident rivalry for shots, with both offensive lines realizing that the first goal could well spell the difference in the game.

Although Holyoke outshot Williams, 28-23, the Ephs had definitive control of the contest. There were eight corner kicks—five for Williams and three for Holyoke—but they were all for naught.

Earlier in the week, the team travelled to Middlebury, bringing with them the memory of last year's substantial victory over the Panthers. Becky Baugh '83 opened the scoring, but it was apparent that the contest would be close. Middlebury notched two goals on freshman Laura Napolitano who played an otherwise flawless game despite hampering injuries. Debbie Wickendon '85 evened the game with a powerful corner shot. The rest of the match was well-played but scoreless.

Trinity has already beaten Tufts and Hamilton the last two weeks, and was ranked number one in N.E.S.C.A.C. last season. The Ephs could greatly atone for their poor showing this week by garnering a victory in Hartford. The game starts at 1:30, and discount tickets are available to visiting Eph rooters.

Field Hockey edges Holyoke

by Bea Bast and Emily Sneath

Retaining its undefeated record, the women's field hockey team beat Mt. Holyoke, 2-1 Saturday. Williams got off to a slow start, and the first half proved unworthy of the talented team. Mt. Holyoke scored with their first shot on goal, when the left wing tipped the ball over the goal line in the midst of the two muddled teams.

Despite their discouragement, Williams' determined team came back with a goal by freshman Jane Rech within the first ten minutes of the second half. The attack put the pressure on, and the defense also fought hard, allowing Holyoke only three shots on goal. A new combination of players on the field provided more motion and speed. Sue Harrington scored the winning goal for the Ephs, sealing the final score at 2-1. Coach Chris Larson was pleased with the game and commented that despite their slow start, Williams came on to dominate most of the contest.

On the preceding Tuesday the varsity team caught Springfield College by surprise, tying the nationally ranked team, 1-1. Springfield has traditionally been a tough rival of Williams, and this match was the best of that tradition.

The teams fought for the ball steadily at midfield until Springfield broke through to finish the first half ahead by one goal. The second half saw Williams' defense again protect their goal exceptionally well; in the entire game they allowed Springfield only ten shots on goal. Wendy Brown, with the help of the attacking line, scored the goal that tied the game.

Ephman touches down in enemy zone

by Dan Keating

When I played football in high school, we took a bus across town to our games. Meanwhile, I read about Onio State flying to theirs—even the home games. So I didn't know what to expect at Williams. This weekend answered my questions, but as far as classifying our trip, it has to go under "Twilight Zone."

I was singled out, along with four other players, for the dubious distinction of not riding in the team bus. Rather, we took a van, with two reporters, the head trainer and one of his student assistants. Leaving at noon on Friday, we expected to arrive in Rochester, N.Y. at 5 p.m., so we could practice on their astro-turf, an experience I eagerly anticipated.

Little did I know that, instead of directions, all the van had was the student trainer who lived in Rochester and could supposedly direct us to the University. Since she couldn't locate the University exactly, she used the technique of bringing us downtown then commencing concentric circles outward until we hit paydirt. We hit mud (construction sites with potholes bigger than the van).

At approximately 6:15 p.m. our "clueless" navigator tearfully confessed that she had no idea where we were or how to get where we wanted to go. By that time, we had surpassed irritation, annoyance, anger, fury, and rage and had settled into complacent hopelessness.

No Keating

Finally stumbling across the inconspicuous Route 15 which we had been pursuing all along, we arrived at the field as the rest of the team was boarding the bus for dinner. Our total time in the van was six-and-a-half hours.

Our accommodations for the night were in the Marlott House, a lavish hotel on the outskirts of Rochester. With two large, comfortable beds and one cot per room, trouble was inevitable. Being gentlemen, we saw no alternative but to wrestle for the beds.

A hotel error turned to our benefit in one room: instead of getting room 379 as assigned, three players got room 479, the Ambassador's Suite. Unfortunately, they didn't take full advantage of it, as one tackle slept on the couch in the spa-

Golf fourth in New England

by Jim Clark

Howling winds and a wet course made for cold golf and high scores at the 1981 New England's held at Taconic Golf Course last Monday and Tuesday.

The five Ephmen who participated, Greg Jacobson, Randy Rogers, John Hennigan, Charlie Thompson and Chris Harned, combined for a two-day total of 651, capturing fourth place honors out of the field of forty teams.

Beating Williams were Bryant College, with 627, Central College, at 628, and the University of Rhode Island, which tallied 630. The individual winner was Jim Hallett, a junior from Bryant who fired 69-71. His total of 140 bested the nearest linksman by nine strokes, and was made even more remarkable by the inclement conditions.

The wind and cold claimed many victims during the event, one of whom was a disappointed Greg Jacobson. Williams' top golfer shot 76 the opening day, but then fell to an uncharacteristic 84 on Tuesday. Jacobson, considered by some to be the pre-tournament favorite, admitted the weather had an effect on his playing, but blamed the final results on "bad putting and a lousy round." His finish at 160 was good enough for seventh place.

For Hallett, the win is another feather in his cap which includes several Massachusetts and New England amateur victories in 1981.

Rudy Goff, head coach for Williams, was not disappointed in the finish, but was with the scores.

"Fourth out of 40 is not bad, but being 21 strokes out of third place is not the best we could've done."

The Ephmen finished up the disappointing week with a loss to UMass and a victory over North Adams State at a tri-match at Taconic Golf Club. The season record now stands at 4-1, with the final match this Wednesday at Springfield.

cious living room and found out in the morning that he had been sleeping on a fold-out bed.

We couldn't visit the cocktail lounge that evening because we knew the coaches would be there. My roommates and I decided that calling room service would be fun. Fun isn't the word to describe it; expensive is. Three sodas, three fries, one sandwich and $16 later, we decided to go to bed.

After the game, the van got lost again on the way to the restaurant. Eventually we got to the steak house with high expectations. These fell quickly. The waitresses, frightened by our four skinheaded players, sprinted in and out bringing soda by the case and rolls by the armload. The navy bean soup added an "air" to the final ride which few will forget.

What disturbed our waitress the most was the injured quarterback next to me who iced his knee throughout the meal. Of course, that meant that his pants spent the meal around his ankles. Thank goodness we had large cloth napkins.

Our van limped back to reality, the Purple Valley, at 11:15 p.m., over 35 hours after departure. And Mom wants to know why I play football.

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 5

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

OCTOBER 13, 1981

Town wages Hill battle

by Jon Tigar

Sixty acres of land abutting Stone Hill Road, south of the Williams campus, have become the center of dispute between Walter S. Hoover, Jr., who wishes to sell the land, and the recently formed Stone Hill Preservation Committee, which hopes to preserve the land as it now stands.

Hoover, who is selling the land on behalf of his father, has petitioned the Williamstown Planning Commission to open Stone Hill Road, which was closed by town vote in 1966. Although anyone can buy the land as it now stands, the road must be reopened and upgraded before development can proceed on the property.

Two controversies have arisen from Hoover's petition: whether or not the road should be opened, and who would be responsible for upgrading the road if the petition is granted. Although the Planning Commission has discussed the proposal in earlier meetings, it is waiting for attorneys from both sides to formally present their case before making any decision. The subject is not on the agenda for tonight's meeting, and the next meeting of the Commission will not be held until November 10.

The Preservation Committee, which is headed by Claire-Anne Oakley, has issued a statement of purpose which defines the Stone Hill property as an "extraordinary resource . . . an area whose natural beauty has served over the years to refresh the spirits and enhance the quality of living for any and every citizen who chose to take advantage of it." The Preservation Committee feels that opening the road would expose the land to "the hazards of development" and ruin its beauty.

The Committee lists as one of its goals "the seeking of alternative ways of keeping the Stone Hill area unspoiled for the continued enjoyment and recrea-

Sixty acres of Stone Hill may well soon attract developers. The Stone Hill Preservation Committee plans to fight the petition to open the area and to oppose developers all the way. (Milloy) tion for all the people of Williamstown."

In the long run, this would involve more than blocking the current petition, which is not the first attempt to open the road. Rumors that the land might be purchased by the College, which already owns land on Stone Hill, were denied by Treasurer William Reed.

David Westall, Town Building Inspector, said that the possibility that Williamstown might buy the land "was mentioned at the last meeting before the Committee was formally set up."

Dagmar Bubriski, who owns land on Stone Hill, pointed out another difficulty with road and land development. "You've got to have water and sewer and lights . . . and there's an awful lot of ecology involved. It's a very fragile environment up there." Both Bubriski and the Buxton School, which also owns land on the Hill, have made presentations to the Planning Commission urging that the road remains closed.

If Hoover is successful in his petition, the Commission must decide who will upgrade the newly opened road. If Hoover's property extends to the middle of the road, then he will be responsible for renovation. If, as his lawyers assert, the Town owns the road and Hoover owns only the land on either side, then the Town will be required to upgrade.

Dodd hit by burglar

by Sara Ferris & Ben Bahn

Over $1000 in cash and jewelry was stolen from four unlocked rooms in Dodd and Sewall Houses last Monday by a suspect who Security Chief Ransom Jenks says may be linked to burglaries in Bascom House last spring.

The suspect entered at least six student rooms between 12:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. Monday afternoon. He knocked on the door of a room before entering; if a student answered, he would ask for a match, according to Lee Ordeman '84. The man is black and in his mid-twenties. Ordeman described him as "about 5'11", 160 lbs., with short hair and a scruffy beard."

Seniors George Ahl, Tom Buckley, Debbie Faunce and Margaret Collins reported missing possessions, mainly cash and small items of jewelry. Other Dodd residents had small sums of money taken, according to Collins. She added that some students said their rooms were entered but that nothing was missing.

Jenks said he believes that "these same people were here last spring." He added that two security officers reported that they may have seen the same man about three weeks ago on campus. He noted, "It's pure speculation that he was here earlier this year."

Jenks defended his decision not to inform students of the man. "At that point he hadn't stolen a thing. He was only a suspicious person." We had no evidence that he had been stealing."

Jenks added that he had spoken to security officials from the Five College area who reported similar thefts by a man matching this description. The Williamstown Police Department is investigating the thefts but so far has released no information. However, Jenks said that witnesses had identified the suspect as a "convicted felon."

Dean Cris Roosenraad characterized both this and last spring's thefts as "hit and run jobs." Jenks added, "I don't think he's staying here," noting that Dodd residents sighted him only between 12 and 6 on Monday.

Roosenraad and Jenks cautioned students to lock their doors and windows and to report all thefts and strangers to Security immediately. "Nobody in Dodd was too suspicious," said Jenks. "Williams College students are very trusting."

Freshman parents register for the annual Parents' Weekend Program held this weekend. Relatives of 275 freshmen from 29 states and several foreign countries descended on campus to enjoy special concerts, lectures and the Fall foliage. (Carpenter)

Tutors wrestle writing

by Brett McDonnell

Amid concerns that Williams students do not write as well as they could, the College has started a writing Workshop in which students can discuss ways of improving returned or in-progress papers with upper-class tutors.

Workshop hours are from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays and from 6:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Sunday through Thursday. There are six student tutors and five sophomore apprentices.

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor summed up the motives behind the workshop, saying, "Sure, I'm preaching about the importance of good writing. But my message is not repent, but, revise. All Williams students can write better than they do. What they need is practice, lots of practice . . . and revision."

According to Suzanne Graver, lecturer in English and coordinator of the workshop,

"The workshop is not thought of as a substitute for assistance from an instructor, but rather as a supplement." She added that the workshop is for students "who want to improve their writing, but do not have severe problems." Those who have a hard time writing, she said, should take English 103.

The workshop, according to a recent announcement, "is designed not for students who are acutely deficient in writing skills but rather for those who need help with more advanced problems: thinking critically, expressing ideas clearly, structuring them logically, writing coherent paragraphs and arguments."

"Among the things considered in the choice of tutors," said Graver, "was a wide range of majors. Another factor was students who are experienced in many different kinds of courses. The first and primary criterion

Continued on Page 6

Winter Study value questioned

The Winter Study Period Review Committee this week will begin a series of meetings with faculty members to discuss the educational value of Winter Study and possible modifications and alternatives to the program, according to committee co-chairman Larry Graver.

The Committee will also distribute a questionnaire to upperclass students after Fall Break as a first step towards determining student attitudes and suggestions about Winter Study.

The Committee hopes to make its recommendations in a report to be released sometime in early April, in time to be deliberated at the April Faculty Meeting. The Faculty must vote on any changes made in the program.

"We have been asked to do a complete review of the educational value of Winter Study," said Graver. "That means we have to consult with all constituencies of the College community and to evaluate the success of Winter Study in its own right but also in relationship to the whole College curriculum."

Graver stressed the length and complexity of the preview process and the ample opportunities for student, faculty, and administration input throughout the year in small meetings, open forums, written communications.

Members of the Committee pointed out that the review was designed to strengthen Winter Study rather than eliminate it. "There is a misconception that the process will be a struggle to 'save' or 'destroy' Winter Study, with the students and faculty forming opposing lines of battle," said student member Rich Henderson '83.

"People should devote their energies to working out an educationally viable medium instead," Graver concurred, saying, "It's not a matter of voting for or against Winter Study but a matter of evaluating what its strengths and weaknesses are."

The Committee consists of four students and four faculty members from the Committees on Educational Policy and the Winter Study Committee, plus Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor. So far the group is "talking about the format and mechanism of the review," said Graver. "We are not talking about substantive proposals or modifications."

A Rising Phoenix

Something new is in the air of College Council meetings these days. Someone in charge cares. Through the determination of Council president Freddy Nathan, the often criticized Council has demonstrated competence and initiative unknown to previous administrations.

In the past, Council drifted through academic years with little more than long-winded jawboning or attempts at political power plays. Ineffective leadership mired Council activity and drew the disrespect of most students.

Nathan has shown he means business. Running well-organized meetings and following specific agendas, Nathan has steered student government away from its lethargic tendencies and put it on the road toward effective leadership.

Council's newsletter outlining issues and concerns represented an innovative, tangible product of this enlightened administration. The postcard writing campaign, organized to protest proposed cuts in Federal student financial aid programs, gave students the opportunity to voice their concerns. Finally, Nathan has laid the groundwork for student organizations to cooperate with the Winter Study Review Committee in the latter's study of the January program.

By no means is Council ready to bow to Nathan's every desire. He still needs to work on his diplomacy and smooth out the rough edges in his dealings with fellow Council members and officers. Still, he realizes the present limitations of the Council and recognizes its tarnished reputation among students.

Through constructive efforts, Nathan is working hard to improve that image. He deserves the support of the entire Council and College community. A stronger Council means greater student representation all the way around.

Final Exams

With the airline traffic controllers' strike and the tightening of airplane flights and reservations during the winter holidays, it's increasingly important for students to make their travel plans early. With this in mind, Dean O'Connor has pushed the faculty and has released this semester's final exam schedule. Posted on the second floor of Hopkins, next to the Registrar's Office, the early final exam schedule may help students take advantage of special discount rates.

Quote of the Week

"You have a reputation for being straightforward and honest."

—President John Chandler's fortune cookie on Chinese night last Thursday.

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS

Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS

Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT

Lori Miller

FEATURES

Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS

Mike Sutton

LAYOUT

Bob Buckner

ASSISTANT NEWS

Philip Busch

Sara Ferris

Kalya Hokanson

Jon Tiger

OUTLOOK

Priscilla Cohen

Alyson Hagy

SPORTS

Rich Coomer

ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Dan Keating

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Paul Sabbah

PHOTOGRAPHY

Sue Doherty

Steve Farley

BUSINESS MANAGER

Chris Toub

AD MANAGER

Katie Miller

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Letters to the Editor should be typed 57 characters per line, double-spaced. Letters should not exceed 250 words. The RECORD reserves the right to edit all letters received.

Inaccurate

To the editor:

An editorial in your October 6 issue cited the Women's Rugby Club as an example of an organization which should cover a greater percentage of its operating costs through funds the club raises itself. Since the editorial was misleading we would like to correct and clarify the situation to the College Community. Presently the Women's Rugby Club spends $2000 annually, half of which the club raises itself and half of which the College Council allocates. The Record cited that approximately 80% of the money the team raises is used for "banquets." This actually includes interaction with opposing teams after games and both fall and spring team dinners.

It is important to stress that the Women's Rugby Club is not just a club and not just a sport, but both. Over 50 women are involved, enough for three full squads. Since rugby remains a club sport each member is required to pay for the bulk of their equipment, which is over $50 plus $24 a year in dues. Council funding helps to cut these costs so that a student's membership is based solely on her desire to play and not whether she can afford it.

The issue of College Council funding is an important one, but we feel the Women's Rugby Club has been misrepresented by the quoting of inaccurate figures and a very one-sided discussion of how the financial aspect of the club operates. In the future we hope you will refrain from using one club or sport as a generalized example in an editorial. It tends to distort the club's purpose to those who are unfamiliar with it and ends up an attack on that group rather than the intended discussion of a controversial and important issue.

Liz Berry '82 President
Tina Gimaz '83 Treasurer
Barb Good '82 Captain
Kirsten Toiman '82 Captain
Women's Rugby Club

Editor's Note: The figures in last week's editorial were based on the Women's Rugby Club preliminary application to the Council. According to the final application, the Club estimates a total budget of $2,250. It requested $1,205 from Council, more than half of their total budget. Additionally, the club lists $600 for "Banquets" and $200 for "Entertainment," both to come from its $1,000 dues income.

Outsiders

To the editor:

We'd like to express our concern over the recent robberies in Dodd House, and the lack of communication between

Security and students, as well as among the members of the student body regarding disturbing incidents on campus. Although we'd like to believe that our ivory tower soars above big city problems such as vandalism, theft, and rape, we should not allow ourselves to be unrealistically optimistic.

It is our responsibility as mature and intelligent college students to take precautions against crime by locking our doors and windows and by travelling across campus after dark with a companion. (J.A.'s especially should encourage their freshmen to follow in this mode.) Yet it is also the responsibility of Security and the Administration to inform the campus of any suspicions or actual happenings so we are able to exercise extra caution.

Security had been aware of the "outsider" that struck Dodd House for at least two weeks and also had reason to believe that he was a threat to our personal security, yet most students were unaware of the situation. The reluctance of Security and the Administration to admit that crime exists on campus induces the members of the student body to behave carelessly. Had we been warned, we would have been able to take the necessary steps to prevent the loss that some Dodd House members incurred.

We as victims have learned through personal experience that Williams is not a perfectly safe campus. This is not to imply that Williamstown is a high risk area but rather, that a certain amount of caution is expedient. We hope that other students will realize that carrying a key isn't too much of a hassle before they suffer a similar loss.

Pretending that crime doesn't exist on campus doesn't prevent it from happening.

Submitted with concern,
Margaret Collins '82
Deborah Faunce '82
Ann Murray '83
Laura Travaglini '82

Asceticism

To the editor:

Week after week, to my amazement, students write to the Record out of fear of being told that they can no longer use their fireplaces. As a first-year student who has spent the last few weeks exploring, among many other things, the notions of asceticism and the search for a higher life so praised by Socrates, Plato, and Henry Thoreau, I am shocked by both the indulgence and lack of purpose I find everywhere, including in myself. Perhaps the time has come for us to try a little asceticism and to see whether self-discipline does or does not improve the quality of the soul, as well as improving the world in which we live.

There are plenty of places to start, with our eating or drinking or clothes-buying habits, for instance, but I propose

Continued on Page 8

OUTLOOK

WILLIAMS RECORD

Page 3

After Sadat: Diplomacy is more important than guns

by Raymond Baker

Egypt is not Iran and Sadat was not the Shah. The proposition heard in Washington that the former Iranian monarch might have been saved by a show of American military power is at best doubtful. Applied to Cairo that interpretation of the lessons of the Teheran debacle would without question be disastrous. Sadat's vision of Middle East peace demanded more of the United States than military muscle. Most essential to his successor Husny Mubarak will be American political and diplomatic support.

The first official reaction to Sadat's assassination by the Reagan administration is not reassuring. Secretary Haig's indirect warning issued to Colonel Qaddafi of Libya (and perhaps to the Russians) that America "would view with great concern" any attempt by other nations to take advantage of Egypt's current political uncertainty is irrelevant. Qaddafi is himself perfectly capable of exaggerating Libya's importance. The Russians are in no sense a threat in Egypt.

Mubarak's vulnerabilities

Parallels with Iran are not helpful in clarifying the precise nature of the vulnerabilities Mubarak will inherit. Egyptians and Israelis have a clear interest in carrying Camp David forward. By the spring of next year Egypt will have recovered the Sinai and Israel will have strengthened its peace with the most populous and important Arab state. Both Prime Minister Begin and Mubarak have reaffirmed their commitment to this achievement. That much is secure.

But Camp David initially had a broader reach. It was to provide a general framework for an overall settlement that would bring peace with all of Israel's Arab neighbors and deal with the central Palestinian question in all its aspects. It is here, with the Palestinian autonomy issue, that Camp David has faltered. Israel,

"Egyptians and Israelis have a clear interest in carrying Camp David forward."

led by Menachem Begin, has not been able to come forward with an interpretation of autonomy that is even close to a minimally acceptable approximation of self-determination. At the same time the Israeli policy of establishing settlements on the West Bank has gone forward.

West Bank

The basis for Camp David is the formula of land for peace encapsulated in U.N. Resolution 242. It will be necessary to broaden the Camp David framework or replace it by another that allows the application of that fundamental principle to the West Bank.

The impasse on the Palestinian issue contributed in a central way to the climate of vulnerability that marked

"The sentiments of the assassins should not be confused with the will of the Egyptian people"

Sadat's last year. To see in the Egyptian opposition to Sadat's policies only the fanatical face of militant Islam is to succumb to an image built more of American dismay over Iran than Egyptian realities. A reasoned critique of the Camp David peace process had developed across the political spectrum in Egypt. It is not peace that is opposed but the meagerness of the Camp David peace on the Palestinian issue. Articulate Egyptian public opinion was concluding that Sadat had been led by confidence in the United States to compromise too much. It did not require the perspective of the mosques for Egyptians to understand the settlements as an Israeli colonization of the West Bank. Moreover, to informed Egyptian opinion the United States appeared to be tacitly supporting annexation. Sadat—and Egypt itself—was being humiliated.

Sadat's Dream

Sadat's dream was larger than Peacock thrones and empire. He invited America to be full partner in realizing a dream of security for Israel built on justice for the Palestinians. Perhaps he was right to compromise so generously to win Israeli trust and confidence. Sadat knew the risks. He took those risks on faith that the Israeli people were as war-weary as his own. He believed that secure in their peace with Egypt and their military power, Israelis would one day soon face the challenges of a peace with justice for the Palestinians as courageously as they have faced the challenges of war. He took those risks with the confidence that his American partner would act with the necessary diplomatic imagination and political will to share in the most courageous dream of our generation.

Raymond Baker, associate professor of political science, recently spent two years at the American University in Cairo. He is the author of Egypt's Uncertain Revolution Under Nasser & Sadat.

Resolution of Middle-East conflict peace by piece

by Miriam Sapiro

The bullets which killed Anwar el-Sadat must not also destroy the peace process between Egypt, Israel, and the Arab nations. The death of Sadat does not signify a repudiation by the Egyptian people of the Camp David agreements. Neither negotiations with Israel nor greater reliance upon U.S. support caused Sadat's untimely death.

President Sadat's vulnerability was more the result of his domestic politics than his isolation in the Arab world. Sadat's journey to Jerusalem showed him to be a man of vision in the international arena. On the domestic scene, however, he made several mistakes. His dictatorial powers allowed him to deal with internal criticisms and dissension

U.S. aid and also ease the military's drain on the economy. By playing the role of peace-seeker Sadat could regain the Sinai, become a strong U.S. ally and also deepen the divide which had emerged between the United States and Israel after the October War.

Sadat's redefinition of Egyptian national interest meant the subordination of Palestinian interests. As long as the two interests were on the same level, Sadat was manipulated by the PLO's refusal to recognize the reality of Israel. It was the prospect of another stalemated Geneva conference that gave him the final impetus to risk Arab wrath and travel to Jerusalem. The PLO's rejection of U.N. Resolution 242 and the Soviet penchant for encouraging instability in the region were contrary to his perception of Egyptian interests.

Role of Israel

Sadat recognized the reality of Israel's existence and expected to receive whatever it desired in return. It is unfortunate that the highly positive international reaction to this move built up Sadat's ego and the Egyptian's expectations to such an extent. Political leaders and the press simultaneously overlooked the major concessions made by the Begin government. The fact that Prime Minister Begin is the only Israeli leader who could have handed back the Sinai and still managed to retain political legitimacy has been downplayed. Trading a tangible asset such as land for the intangible concept of normal relations is a rather large risk for a leader to incur.

It is not the Camp David accords which made Sadat vulnerable and cost him his life. For nationalistic, financial and military reasons, Sadat negotiated both a bilateral and a comprehensive document. It was not his intention to abandon the Palestinian issue. The peace treaty provides for the participation of Jordanian and Palestinian leaders in determining the future of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Sadat wished to deal with the uncertain issue separately, so as not to

It is crucial that the successor to Sadat pursue Egypt's national interests and continue the Camp David process. The sentiments of the assassins, whatever their identity, should not be confused with, nor interpreted as, the will of the Egyptian people. Mubarak can best convince his domestic opposition of where Egypt's interests lie by persuasive arguments and not by arbitrary imprisonment.

"Sadat took those risks on faith that the Israeli people were as war-weary as his own."

obstruct the establishment of Egyptian-Israeli ties.

Camp David

It is wrong to view the Camp David agreements as the final solution to the problems of the Middle East. There is no magic formula to the resolution of a conflict that has raged for more than 30 years. A conference similar to the one which had been planned for December 1977, involving the US, USSR, PLO and other Arab nations, is simply not feasible at this point. It is still in the best interests of both Egypt and Israel to conclude the negotiations started at Camp David in 1978. The Israeli government announced last month plans to implement civil autonomy on the West Bank. A piecemeal approach to the conflict is the only solution until the other Arab actors come to the same realization that Sadat did: Israel is a living entity.

ment. It is hoped that Prime Minister Begin will live up to his pledge to return the rest of the Sinai by April 1982. With respect to the future role of the United States in the negotiations, perhaps the best action is no action.

U.S. role

The United States should let events stabilize by themselves. President Reagan might be wise to use this saved time and energy to reconsider his intent to sell Saudi Arabia sophisticated weapons. With patience and perseverance on the part of Egypt and Israel, the Camp David documents will eventually transform Sadat's vision of peace from the realm of hypothesis to that of reality.

Miriam Sapiro '82, a political science major, spent her junior year at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. During the year, she travelled to Egypt.

by Eric Schmitt

Ross Keller leans back in his chair, combs his fingers through a thick, white beard and ticks off a few of the improvements he has made as director of Food Service: expanded menu offerings, an elaborate salad bar, home-grown alfalfa sprouts, the Dog House and the all-College picnic in the spring.

Since Keller made his Williams debut in 1976, his name has become synonymous with change—good and bad—in the world of College dining.

The elimination of Row House dining, the advent of the computerized ID system and expanded meal plans brought these changes to the forefront. During the past year, the 58-year-old dining czar's name has been on more student tongues than the finest delectables Baxter has to offer.

As the College-appointed David Stockman of Food Service, Keller has taken a lot of the heat for the problems and inconveniences the financial decisions have imposed. His deep, husky voice and somewhat gruff demeanor have led many people to believe he relishes the budget-slashing role.

However, behind the face that reminds one of Burl Ives, lies a man who is sympathetic to student concerns and sensitive to the problems the new Food Service policies are causing.

Keller serves up dining changes

"Change has been through the Impetus of the College," Keller says. "Food Service can operate any number of dining halls the College wants. We were operating (the Row Houses) and we were operating them successfully with no particular problems or difficulties. The decision made was not to operate them. This impetus was strictly financial."

Keller feels he has been stuck unfairly with the Bad Guy image in regards to the changes.

"I didn't make the changes; I'm just trying to make them work," he says.

Pointing to the innovations Food Service has implemented in his six years, Keller glows with pride.

"Five years ago at Williams, there was almost no choice in food. Williams was very late in making changes that several colleges had already undergone. Every Thursday night, it was roast beef and baked potatoes. You could count on it. Students were asking for the change."

Keller's first act of business was to triple the number of canteen offerings.

"It was obvious that the College needed to pay more attention to the student cafeteria offerings and expand them," Keller says. "At that time we also started this very elaborate salad bar. Now, its offerings are Hotels, Keller managed restaurants and directed food and beverage services.

Working in large cities failed to plique Keller's palate, and he moved his culinary and management skills to St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., where for 20 years he directed that college's food operations.

The outdoors has long been one of Keller's loves—he owns a sailboat on Lake George in upstate New York—so the move to Williams in 1976 fit well into both professional and personal plans.

"I didn't make the changes; I'm just trying to make them work."

unequaled in most of the local restaurants."

Pushing through new ideas in the food business is nothing new for Keller. Raised in Ridge-wood, N.J., and a graduate of the University of Missouri, Keller jumped into the restaurant business right after a state-side stint in the army during World War II.

First for the Stouffer restaurants and later for the Sheraton

In other Ivory Towers

Middlebury College The Middlebury School of Arabic, the eighth such school of language at Middlebury College, has been formally approved by the Board of Trustees and will open during the summer of 1982. According to the report submitted by the Committee on the Feasibility of Arabic Studies, the new school would help to "define and maintain high academic standards" among the extremely variable curricula in Arabic currently offered in the U.S. The School of Arabic is the first addition to the Middlebury Language Schools since the Japanese School was added in 1970.

Also at Middlebury, the new phenomenon of "snarfing"—inhaling one's dessert through one's nose—has been gaining currency as a favorite after-meal diversion. Steve Benton

'82, a snarfer who specializes in dling peaches, explains that "snarfing peaches is an art just as playing the banjo is an art." Another notable Middlebury snarfer, senior John Buerger, is a jello specialist. Asked about his technique, Buerger replied that it is beyond description; said Buerger emphatically, "a snarf is a snarf!"

Amherst College After an absence of three years, the activist group, the Amherst Action Coalition (AAC) has been revived. The Coalition, which is not officially organized as yet, is comprised of various campus groups interested in issues ranging from El Salvador, to disarmament, to South Africa. Coalition members this year have already participated in an

Now responsible for a $2.7 million annual budget and 102 full-time employees, Keller envisions his greatest challenge as trying to integrate the new system, with the changes it has imposed on students, while maintaining a high dining standard.

The satisfaction of such a task is not easy for Keller to define. "The attraction (of my job) is the happy combination of being up and away from a desk, and at a desk. I'm not locked into either. There's a substantial amount of work at both."

Keller's frustration with the job reveals the complementary side to his cost-consciousness: his deep commitment to run-

Continued on Page 7

Albany rally protesting the tour of a South African rugby team, and in the Solidarity Day March in Washington, D.C. Scott Busby '82, a member of the AAC, explained that "the major point of the organization is to forge an alliance of the various progressive and radical student organizations of the Amherst campus."

Bates College Mating moose have become a public nuisance in the Lewiston-Auburn area as the large mammals invade inhabited neighborhoods. Over one weekend this month, two cars (in separate accidents) collided with moose, resulting in some $1200 combined damage to the vehicles, and one moose fatality. In other news from Bates, one of the college's most illustrious alumni, Edmund Muskie, Class of 1936, plans to allow his alma mater to house his papers in the near future. According to the Bates Student, Bates president T. Hedley Reynolds, who has been negotiating with Muskie for the past four or five years, is "optimistic" that the Muskie papers will be housed on campus "within four or five months." A small museum is projected to contain the papers, which will be available for scholarly research by students and others.

Muskie, who has served as a senator and the governor of Maine, as well as a presidential candidate, had most of the papers transferred to Bates after his appointment to the post of Secretary of State under President Carter. These papers, currently stored in the basement of the Ladd Library, will join the rest when final arrangements for the transfer are made.

THE RECORD STORE RADIO SHACK DEALER

When in need of batteries remember; we stock
ENERCELL SIZES D, C, AA, AAA, 9 VOLT, N
CARBON SIZES D, C, AA, 9 VOLT
NICKEL CADMIUM SIZES D, C, AA, 9 VOLT
13 SIZES WATCH, CALCULATOR, PHOTO
9 SIZES MERCURY BATTERIES
3 SIZES HEARING AID
SMOKE ALARM
LIGHTING AND LANTERN BATTERIES

NICKEL & REGULAR BATTERY CHARGERS

Eph's Alley
Off Spring St.
458-5418
DAILY 10-5:30
VISA
MASTER CARD
AMERICAN EXPRESS

ENTERTAINMENT

CONCERTS

Tues., Oct. 13 Robin Williams, Passim's, Boston
Wed., Oct. 14 Son Seals, Jonathan Swifts, Boston
Alex DeGrassi, Passim's, Boston
Widespread Depression, J.B. Scott's, Albany
Thurs., Oct. 15 Roy Harris, South St., Northampton
Chieftains, Bushnell Memorial Hall, Hartford
Fri., Oct. 16 John Hall Band, JB Scott's
Al Jarreau, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
Sat., Oct. 17 Gariand Jeffries, JB Scott's
David Bromberg, Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, Page Hall, SUNY at Albany

Don McClean, Usdan Student Ctr., Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass.
Joe Val & His N.E. Bluegrass Boys, Town Hall, Orange, Mass.
Sun. Oct. 18 De Dannan, Iron Horse, Northampton
Jimmy Cliff, Fine Arts Ctr. U.Mass., Amherst
Foreigner & Billy Squire, Hartford Civic Ctr.
Mon. Oct. 19 Dan Fogelberg, Providence Civic Ctr.
Tues., Oct. 20 English Beat, Channel, Boston
Oct. 21 Earth, Wind & Fire, Civic Ctr., Providence
Bob Dylan, Orpheum, Boston

by Ric Johnson

Many past Freshman Revues have centered on themes that are pertinent to the Williams experience. This year's Revue followed in that tradition.

"And Now I Am Two" portrays through a series of skits, the pains and pleasures of male-female relationships. According to the program, the show hails "from the mind of Ethan Berman, via the pen of Dean Grodzins, and the songs of Greg Pliska"—with choreography by Ned Stiker '84.

The Revue opened with a solemn prologue representing a passage from Aristophanes' speech in Plato's symposium—a heavy beginning. Dramatizing a tale of the separation of the hermaphrodites by Zeus, it operates as a framework for the show, implying that the rest of the Revue will explore human attempts to rediscover that original union with a member of

Symphony plays varied program

by Greg Capaldini

At last Friday's Berkshire Symphony Concert—the first of the season—conductor Julius Hegyi whipped up an ambitious and varied program with a Romantic leaning. The results were mixed, improving as the evening progressed, but respectable on the whole.

Blacher's Paganini Variations, based on that ubiquitous theme by the 19th-century violinist, attempts to be an enlightened modern approach to the variations genre. But its jazzy effects and clever orchestral devices are not well-placed in time and in this performance, the players were also a bit stingy on inflection.

Principal bassoonist Stephen Walt was the soloist in the Andante e rondo Ungarese by Weber. This composer's style is light and somewhat whimsical, and it tends to require playing a lot of notes. Mr. Walt handles these with facility, and his sound is uniformly strong in all registers; essentially, his technique brings out the unique qualities of the instrument. There were some perceptible tempo problems in this rendition, mainly in the beginning.

With Berlioz' Benvenuto Cellini Overture, the musical voltage went up for good. Berlioz is really the first symphonic composer whose music could be listened to merely for its orchestration. Some of his writings on the subject are still germane over a century later, and some of his achievements in sound remain striking. The present work demands a lively, active approach, which it got. The most exciting moment of the concert was on a sudden crescendo near the end of this work.

The music of Dvorak would probably appeal to a lot of people that have never tried it. Such a consistently pleasing stream of tunes, free from sentimentality as one finds in the Symphony #8 is not too common. The Berkshire Symphony's technical execution had imperfections, but their sense of spirit was right on target, making for a fine close.

ARTS ARTS ARTS ARTS

W.B.S.U. Film Series

Tonight (Tuesday) the Black Student Union will present the fourth in a series of five films depicting the black experience here and abroad. Tonight's film, entitled Black Like Me, concerns the experiences of a white writer who chemically dyes his skin and travels through the South. The movie will be shown in Bronfman Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. and is free and open to the public. Discussion afterwards will be moderated by history professor Thomas Spear.

Dance Residency

The Williams College Dance Society will sponsor a dance residency with Alice Helpen on October 14-15. Ms. Helpen will lead two Master classes on the Martha Graham technique at 4:00 p.m. in the Upper gym of Lasell on Wednesday and Thursday Oct. 14 and 15. On Wednesday evening, she will also lecture on the Martha Graham technique and discuss the Graham film, "A Dancer's World" at 8 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers.

Readings

Tess Gallagher and Raymond Carver, professors at Syracuse University, will read from their poems and stories on Wednesday, Oct. 14 at 8:00 P.M. in Room 3, of Griffin Hall.

Opera

The English version of Donizetti's three-act opera Lucia di Lammermoor will be performed with orchestra on Thursday, Oct. 15 at 8:30 P.M. in Chapin Hall. Tickets which are available are $4 for general admission and free to those with a Williams I.D.

Clark Film Series

The second of six films on Romantic and Classic Art will be shown on Friday, Oct. 16 at the Clark Art Institute, beginning at 1:00 P.M. Entitled Francisco Goya and Jacques-Louis David, the film is free and open to the public, and will be repeated Sunday at 3:00; 5:00 donation.

Do you know what day it is?
Select from more than 100 calendars to make sure you'll know where you are.

Renzi's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

Halloween Parties Are Fun...

and Halloween paper partyware makes them easy too. Our pretty pumpkin design is festive and makes clean up a snap.

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown

Telephone 458-4920

Revue explores sex roles

the opposite sex. The interpretation of such a philosophical idea through song and dance showed daring on the part of the directors; unfortunately, some excessive steps and awkwardness marred Stiker's otherwise competent choreography.

As the program continued, the tone became lighter and more energetic, allowing a more comfortable atmosphere for the players to work in. Skits representing generalized college male-female situations such as mixers and dating were amusing and effective. One such skit, representing the separation of a girl from her college-bound boyfriend was highlighted by a particularly touching song, "Sometimes You're Not There", was delivered simply and melodically by Joilyn Stinson, who was a continuously appealing stage presence throughout the Revue.

One of the most exciting parts of the Revue was the original music by sophomore Greg Pliska. The highlight was "In a Maze of People" which featured freshmen Pete Polcra and Kate Prendergast as two lovers torn between independence and commitment. The opening theme "Now I am One", a haunting theme which reappeared throughout the scene, was also very well done.

The players in "And Now I Am Two," exhibited real talent. However, many of the roles they enacted were archetypes, rather than real characters—a problem which was intensified by the use of scenes from such works as Our Town and Play It Again Sam. Unfortunately, some life situations are too complex and ambiguous to be effectively presented in short skits and altry musical numbers.

Overall, the performance was uneven but not unimpressive. Great energy was evident throughout, and one must laud the directors for having the courage to attempt a more profound statement than is usually found in the Freshman Revue. Although sex and the representative twin beds which dominated the stage, are not the only irreducible factors in relations between men and women, they are significant. While one might wish that other aspects of human relations had been explored to broaden the panorama offered by the Revue. However, in the area of human experience that it does describe, "And Now I Am Two" was lively and entertaining.

Let the Music speak

Currently, WCFM is broadcasting a series of musical specials entitled, "Let the Music Speak." Heard every Thursday from 8:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., the shows explore the various styles of music that have been popular during the 20th century.

Following in the wake of last year's successful Black Music Series, "Let the Music Speak" attempts to fulfill a similar function—exposing listeners to musical styles that they might not otherwise hear on WCFM.

Described as a "cooperative venture" by Carl Johnson, one of the coordinators of the series, the programs draw upon the musical knowledge of students, professors Jeff Parker and David Smith, and Mr. Johnson. Each participant selects both the music that he or she will play and the background material on the artists or genre.

Having begun the series with shows on Folk vocals, Blues, and Rhythm and Blues, the series will continue this Thursday with a program on "Rockability" hosted by Catherine Hartley '82. The schedule for the rest of the semester is as follows:

Oct. 22 - Blue Grass - Jeff Parker
Oct. 29 - Jazz Vocals - Carl Johnson
Nov. 5 - Big Bands - Matt Shapiro
Nov. 12 - Jazz Instrumentals - Will Layman
Nov. 19 - Early Rock & Roll - Tom Malarkey
Dec. 3 - Protest Music - David Smith

Call collect
1-800-24-6580. Positions must be filled quickly.
SCIENCE/MATH SKILLS WANTED: Oversees opportunity demanding self-confidence and maturity. You'll work with people of all ages in urban or rural settings. Tremendous challenge. Learn about yourself and others. It's the Peace Corps. Is it for you?
SCIENCE TEACHER: Elementary school has openings for two science teachers.

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film & info - 7:00 p.m., Oct. 27,
Interviews - 9:00 - 4:30, Oct. 27 & 28,
OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING.

open 8580 or visit the recruiting office on campus.
NATION-BUILDERS NEEDED: All over the world, developing countries need people who can work independently and unselfishly — Peace Corps volunteers. Whether it's teaching, health care, agriculture, planning, marketing or engineering, we've got the challenge. You'll learn a language, learn a people and learn about yourself. Peace Corps — it's more important now than ever.
NATIONAL FIRM: Seeks recent line

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film & info - 7:00 p.m., Oct. 27,
Interviews - 9:00 - 4:30, Oct. 27 & 28,
OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING.

Customs & camels—Williams abroad

by Cathy James

In the Record two weeks ago, Eric Schmitt noted that, while his year abroad "was not my most academically challenging year, the time off from Williams in a different living and learning environment was my most productive educational experience ever." And if you ever read any of the reports filed by Study Abroad students (available in the Dean's Office), you will find Schmitt's sentiment echoed fervently. The questions "Was your trip worthwhile?" and "Would you recommend it to others?" are usually followed by a barrage of yes's across the page.

Last year students attended school in such places as India, Greece, Kenya and Yugoslavia, as well as in the more frequented countries of England, France, Germany and Spain. The uniqueness of an experience abroad appears to come from the country as much as from the specific school.

"There is a feeling of being a foreigner."

"Exposure to a foreign culture is exciting in itself, a chance to get the education that doesn't come out of books (but) that is very, very real," reflected Fred Freundlich, who spent a semester in London. "(There is) a feeling of being a foreigner and being an American; you are viewed in a special light. Issues outside of personal ones become more important because they seem more important to foreigners. (You become aware of) how large a role the U.S. plays in the world."

Study abroad students

"In Israel, people really put a value on living."

encounter people with completely different backgrounds and heritages.

"Over there, there is such a diversity of students, attitudes and lifestyles . . . so much more of everything," noted Lee Allison (London School of Economics).

Miriam Sapir commented on encountering a different sense of time: "In Israel people really put a value on living; most people there have suffered some kind of loss . . . there is more of a sense of living day to day."

Katherine Downey found much the same true of Greece, explaining, "People there live more for the day . . . they are really poor, but they open up their hearts."

Patricia Chambers found that students in Germany were much more politically aware than in the U.S.: "They knew more about the American government than I did." Chambers also discovered a difference in the campus atmosphere in that there was no notion of organized social activity. "People tend to do things in small groups, independently of each other."

But despite the generally favorable impression the foreign experience left on most students, study abroad can also entail sobering, unhappy, and even frightening moments. The people of the country you visit may not always be as happy to see you as you are them, either because you are a foreigner taking up classroom space, or simply because you are an American.

One student (who asked to remain anonymous) told of being cursed and yelled at by a man in a bar when he found out that she was an American student. Communication may also pose problems—for example, a Dartmouth student was offering to fix his host family's bicycle but as a result of his sign language wound up being accused of wrecking it in the first place.

In an Eastern Bloc country, chances are you may be restricted as to the places you can go and the things you can do. Even the foreign universities themselves are often intimidating and impersonal; Tomaz Remec remarked that "it made me realize how privileged people are to be able to go to a school like Williams, where there is so much individual attention."

"They knew more about the American government than I did."

A student may take either a semester or a year at a foreign university, applying through a Williams-approved program at another school (Sweet Briar, Hamilton and Ithaca Colleges have some of the more popular ones), through a foreign exchange program like the International Exchange Service, or directly to the university itself. Each choice for studying abroad has its peculiar problems and peculiar benefits. For example, a program usually has a set academic structure and sometimes supplies housing; however, these programs may conduct classes in English specifically for the exchange student, thus reducing his contact with the regular students at the university.

Not all Williams students see scenes like this during their year abroad, but Miriam Sapir was able to take this picture in Israel.

In contrast, a student who applies directly to a university will find himself treated no differently than regular students, and thus will have more opportunity to immerse himself in the culture of that country. Unfortunately, this student must also arrange everything—from housing to transfer of academic credit—himself. The Dean's Office and Weston Language Center have information helpful in overcoming these problems. In most cases study abroad will not be as academically

Writing workshop

Continued from Page 1

was how well the students themselves wrote."

The majors of the six tutors include German, History of Ideas, Economics, Russian and English. Prospective tutors were recommended by faculty members, after which they were invited to submit applications, including writing samples. About 30 applications were received.

One of the tutors, Meredith McGill '83, says, "I think a need for something like this has been there for a long time. Everyone has trouble writing." Another tutor, Dave Lipscomb '83, remarked, "I think it's a fantastic idea."

The other tutors are seniors Cheryl Martin and Louise Pratt and juniors Jonathan Hay and Debora Phipps. The sophomore apprentice tutors are Susan Oppenheimer, Erin Sahr, Arunas Gudaitis, Deborah Claypoole and Dianne Valle.

A freshman who prefers to remain unnamed said, "It's a good idea, but I probably won't ever use it. The thing is, if you use it, you have to put on the paper that you used it."

Part of the impetus for the workshop comes from a Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) report on student writing released last spring.

This report found that "the faculty seems reasonably well-assured that few students admitted to Williams are acutely deficient in fundamental writing skills. But a persistent impression remains that many students fail to display or achieve a really satisfactory degree of competency in writing."

English professor Lawrence Raab, the primary author of the CEP report, said, "The creation of the writing workshop is in some way a response to the report itself. It kept the issue of student writing visible. I hope it will continue to be visible."

by Paul Sabbah

I was dead tired. Who wouldn't be after reading three hundred pages of the Reader's Digest version of War and Peace and then realizing that you're still in chapter 2. I needed a break from serfdom and wheat, so I headed down to the tube. Figured I'd do up a little daytime T.V., or, as the networks advertise it, "sex in the afternoon."

I planted myself down in an easy chair, propped my feet up, and soaked in the murder, blackmail, adultery, and anything else they could dream up. Well, after a few minutes, it looked like my horizontal hold was on the fritz . . . wavy lines, heavy eyelids, and, finally, lights out. I assumed the fetal position and drifted off to soap opera land.

What took place next can only be described as a nightmare. A van drives through the gates and on toward a brick building. . . the credits come on . . . welcome to General Infirmary . . . we'll be right back after a word from our sponsor, L. L. Bean. The plot to this program is beyond belief!

It's a soap opera set at a small, rural New England college that is besieged with internal conflicts, scandals, and the threats of a Greek megalomaniac. His name is Mikkos Constantine, and he runs the local pizza parlor. He is, however, holding the college in a grip of terror and indignation because he is the only pizza maker in the civilized world who knows the

Life in a Daytime Soap Opera

"Ice za" formula. Mikkos eventually wants to force all schools into submitting to his formula, thereby creating a "brave new world" in which all college students will use those small numbers claim checks to order frozen pizza for every meal.

That's where Luke and Laura come in. They met at an alumni mixer in Winnetka. Later on, while both are studying for exams, Luke rapes Laura in the reserve room, by the government documents office, thereby winning her everlasting love. Together they plot to defeat

Panorama

Mikkos with the help of Scorpio, a spy posing as a college trustee. Scorpio uses vast interests in South African mining stocks as a front for his clandestine activities, which include acquiring the Amherst playbook every year before Homecoming, and reporting Honor Code violators.

Meanwhile, back at the Infirmary, the college physician, Dr. Noah Drake, has taken a few days off to begin recording his new album of college drinking songs. He's a big hit with the nurses down there, simply because they all want to sing back-ups on "The Mountains." Well, back on Spring Street, Mikkos has offered an ultimatum to the college: either sign a food service contract with Colonial or suffer severe indignation every night around 11:30. The deans respond in desperation: "Give us time, give us time, in all human decency!" Mikkos sends back his answer: "You have . . . fifteen meenites."

On that note, Luke, Laura and Scorpio cook up a plan. With the help of the W.C.O.T. (Williams Committee to Oppose Terrorism) they plot to blow up the freezer in Colonial. After disguising as preps, they infiltrate the Constantine Stronghold, order a tuna grinder as a diversion, and plant the bomb. Meanwhile, the college administrators have no idea that our heroes are on the verge of defeating the menace, so they begin wholesale firings in the food service department. The first to go is the Row House dining system.

Next, special dinners are done away with. To top it all off, they agree to give in to Mikko's final demand, so they write the Constantine name next to those of Homer and Shakespeare on the Stetson facade.

How long can this go on, you ask? Well, consider the fact that the trustees have not adopted a policy of no-negotiations with terrorists yet. Are they just asking for trouble? Have they burned up the "ice za" formula yet? I, for one, sure hope so.

Keller cooks up changes

Continued from Page 4

ing a quality food operation.

"The only frustration that occurs is when a student says 'That was a good dinner; how come?' It's not surprising, but it's frustrating," Keller says with a sigh. "I wish students here realized more what a good Food Service we have."

Despite such earnest convictions, Keller recognizes the flaws inherent to a college dining system.

"Monotony is a problem in a college food service," he says. "Students are coming three times a day, seven days a week for nine months. It gets monotonous; I know that. We work all the time to relieve that by preparing interesting menus, and putting on ethnic dinners like the Chinese dinner we had (Thursday)."

When the last table is wiped off, and the office is closed for the day, the pressures of the job still plague Keller. It is a job that follows him home.

"I think about it all the time," he says. "I wish I didn't but there are always problems concerning students, menus, staffing and finances."

The effect on Keller's family life, however, is not detrimental. His wife, Carolyn, is tuned into College problems as secretary in the chaplains' office.

"She does souls, I do bodies," Keller says wryly.

Keller plans to retire after his tenure at Williams is over, but his eyes sparkle, and he talks like a little kid the day before Christmas when the dream of all food service operators is broached: owning your own restaurant.

ALMOST FOREVER,
THE House of Walsh
 HAS STOOD FOR
 FINE CLOTHING FOR MEN AND WOMEN
 . . . AND THE LEGEND CONTINUES
 Spring St. Williamstown Mass. 01267 (413) 458-5010

Williams, Botswana cement relations

Representative of Williams College and the African nation of Botswana, represented by its Finance Minister, Peter S. Mmusi, signed an agreement on Monday, October 5, formalizing a relationship in which Williams will commission specialists from throughout the world to serve as consultants to Botswana's government ministries.

"Harvard has contacts of this sort through its Institute of International Development," remarked President John Chandler earlier, "But I'm not aware of any other small liberal arts college that does anything like this."

Economics Professor Stephen Lewis Jr. will coordinate the recruitment program, an

"open international search with no restrictions on nationality."

Lewis has served as an adviser in Botswana for two of the last three years. Next summer he will return to Williams, where the project will have its permanent headquarters.

The "Special relationship" between Williams and Botswana developed out of the Center for Development Economics graduate program, which several Botswanan civil servants have attended. In addition, several specialists from Great Britain who served as advisers to the Botswanan government have subsequently come here to teach.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
 9:00 - 5:00
 Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
 458-5717

Bermuda College Weeks 1982

March 7th-April 17th

Information on this exciting program just came in. Stop by for details.

THE TRAVEL STORE
 105 Spring Street
 WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
 Pabst Beer 64 oz.
 pitchers $1.50
 7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
 (reduced prices)

Wednesday

Watch Record for specials.

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
 Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
 Any Vodka drink
 $1.00

Friday

Lunch special
 Beer and Deli
 Sandwich with I.D.

All curly perms are not the same.

THE CLIP SHOP

will make the difference!

Curly perms are easy to style and easy to manage. And they continue to be in style. Soft, uniform curls that are luxurious and shiny definitely make a difference.

The stylist of the Clip Shop believes in continued education. Weekly they learn from the leaders of the field via video. Thus they are able to keep up with the latest and best techniques for perming, styling and coloring for all types of hair.

And once more the stylist of the Clip Shop wants you to get the results you want. Stop in for a free consultation.

The Clip Shop at 49 Spring St.

or if you prefer, make an appointment by calling 458-9167.

The Clip Shop is also located in Pittsfield and Bennington.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Letters

Continued from Page 2

that we start with fireplaces. The senselessness of burning wood so that all our nice warm air is sucked up the chimney, necessitating more oil-burning as well, is evident. Burning wood wastes energy and money and fouls up our air. A few candles and a warm radiator can be just as magical.

For those of us without fireplaces, or who have already had them closed, there are as many other kinds of self-discipline as there are indulgences. We could stop eating meat or salting our food, or we could go to the Log and drink water. We should do something, though.

The classical Greeks lauded Temperance. Thoreau sang of simplicity. Why is it that we do not aim as high as they did and do, the great ones whom we study? It might make us happier. And it can all begin with our fireplaces, with our decision not to use them.

Steve Petersen '85

Driven Away

To the editor:

Tonight I was treated to a spectacular film—"Taxi Driver." It was an overwhelming film, to say the least. I was intrigued by the wonderful sociological interactions depicted in the film. The delightful montages of New York City nightlife tickled me to my toes. It was so exquisite that I felt compelled to leave, my senses no longer able to endure the wonders on the screen.

The Film Society should consider reviewing policy—perhaps it would be wise if it attached warnings onto posters informing students of possible stomach upset (due to the violence). Watching people being torn apart by bullets at length, close up, and in very graphic detail holds absolutely no appeal for me. If I were interested in blood and guts, I could easily go home to N.Y.C. and get on a subway, where I could watch the action in truly living color.

Dial-a-Menu: Fun phone fad

by Steve Epstein

Here's to the Administration. I don't see why everybody's on its tail. People on this campus are so darn selfish. They look at things like the abolition of Row House dining and the threats to ban fireplaces and they get mad. I try to look at the bright side.

How about all the added things this year. Well there's... well, then also... er, uh... oh yes, we've all forgotten the best move of all, DIAL-A-MENU. How can anyone say this campus is depersonalized, when one can call any time day or night, and get a personally recorded message, telling him what the wonderful bill of fare will be at Baxter tonight.

Yes, it's true. The Administration has countered all the bad stuff with this one stroke of genius, and its spin offs. Here's how it works. All one has to do is dial 597-MENU to get the scoop. The recording is totally true to life. You'll think you're at Baxter... even while sitting in the privacy of your room. A squeaky voice comes over the line and impatiently asks you for your I.D. The recording reads the menu, and also tells you that the computer fouled up or you've already used up your eight meals for the week.

But the administration is still getting negative feedback about all sorts of 'little' issues like summer thievery, so more such wonderful recordings are in the works.

597-JOHN gives one a two-minute inspirational message from President Chandler. First, he repeats over and over again, "You're one of the few, the select, the chosen," to make a student feel important during those times of pre-exam tension. Then, he promises to keep your fireplace intact and finishes with the fading cry, "That reminds me of a joke I just heard..."

597-MTRN puts one in touch with the recorded voice of a matron, in case a student hasn't seen one in the last few weeks. It's a true to life recording. She begins with, "My boss says I'm not supposed to vacuum except between 6-8 AM," and then follows with, "So Gertie, let's take off early and hit Price Chopper."

Off the Record

597-PREP is a goodie too. One can call this number and hear a licensed campus representative from L.L. Bean. He talks about three subjects—the joy of Top-siders, fashion hints in pink and green, and how to wear an alligator on anything. Finishes with, "Taa-taa, see you on the links at two."

597-JOCK gives one a threatening message from the football team. It's a must for anyone who hasn't fulfilled the phys. ed. requirement and wants to feel inferior. It ends with sophomore Sean Crotty reading an Irish limerick, dancing a jig, and insulting your ancestry.

597-DEAN gives you two minutes of inspiration from (get this innovation) the dean of your choice. Feeling guilty? Dean Roosenraad will convince you to visit his office and admit setting off that fire extinguisher. Keeping your flue open nightly? Dean Dan will lecture you on energy waste. Even Wendy Hopkins will give a two minute talk on the advantages of a 3' by 5' room. "At least you've got a single, and don't have to live like a savage 12 to a room like they do in Asia," is one of the most moving quotations in her proposed speech tentatively entitled, "Williams Housing: Plumbing isn't everything."

Surely these ideas will add so much to the quality of life at Williams. After all, we'll never realize we've lost everything—if little remnants remain. Thanks Administration, for working so hard to keep us happy. But until the new tapes come out, at least we'll always have MENU to tell what to eat, and more importantly, where to go.

Locked out

To the editor:

I find it very interesting that Dean O'Connor calls students a "soft touch" when it comes to locking their rooms. I, for one, am not at all surprised at their reluctance. After all, if a student should lock himself out of his room more than once, he must pay $25 fine to the security officer whose necessary duties he has disturbed (this, at least was the reason given for instituting the fine—to free security so that they could carry on with more pressing business). Perhaps these duties should include guarding against stereo theft?

David E. Woodworth '83

Welcome to Williams!

Free Plant!

with $5.00 purchase and this ad.

96 Water St.

Open Sundays, Too!

At The Cottage.
Your decorating
center for bedspreads, rugs,
pillows and
baskets.

SPORTS

Ruggers shine in battle

Once again the Women's Rugby Club showed its outstanding talent and ability. On Saturday the A-side dominated the Colby A's and handily won, 8-0, with one try scored by Kathy Kraft '82 and the other by a pack-supported Tina Gimmas '83.

Colby stood no chance against a solid scrum and the awesome power of Barb Good '82 and her line. The B-side was downed by one try, five minutes into the game, and although they controlled the game in the second half, they were unable to even the score.

Saturday's strong play was the third consecutive win for the women's club. On September 26 the B-side beat Siena 4-0 with a scrum-half score by freshman Leslie Ganyard. On October 3 the A-side defeated Yale, 12-0, with two weak side tries by Barb Good and one 75 meter dribbling run by Jane Parker '83.

On the men's side, ruggers from Colby visited Williams.

"A" side played a bestial game worthy of the rivalry which has developed between these two teams.

The game was a brutal battle. Punishing defense resulted in four concussions and two hospital trips for Colby. An early field goal and a latter try were the only scores for Colby, but they proved to be enough. The only points for Williams came from a fine run by Hugh "Huge" Hulzenga '84 and Jim Steggall '83.

The "B" side was a 23-0 romp. Sophomore sensation, Eric Russell, provided nine points. Bobby Robinowitz '83, Jeff Desmond '82 and Dave Lipscomb '83 added more icing to the cake.

Women ruggers ferociously surround and subdue alumnae foe in Sunday's match. (Farley)

WUFO flies at Ultimate Affair

by C. Williams

WUFO frolicked in fine form at Zoo Mass last weekend at the Ultimate Affair, the largest ultimate frisbee tournament ever.

Thirty teams, coming from as far as Michigan and Washington, D.C., competed from dawn till dusk for two days in this double-elimination tournament.

Earlier in the week, the women battled Dartmouth to a scoreless deadlock. Knowing that the offense was what needed improvement, the team had worked on a series of drills in preparation for the Dartmouth game.

A combination of cold and rainy weather and unexpectedly aggressive play by the Big Green upset the Williams plans: Both teams threatened many times but failed to punch through the tough defenses to score. The teams were very evenly matched in almost all aspects of the game. The game went through two overtimes without either team breaking the deadlock.

Williams football woes—

Continued from Page 10
attitude seems to be spreading like a disease.

Signs of discontent were slow to surface during the Trinity game, but they broke water soon after it was over. But still, this reporter saw little things even before the game began. In what had to be their biggest game of the season after a demoralizing defeat at Rochester, the team seemed emotionally flat. Was it my imagination, or didn't the team jump up and down in pre-game huddle like a team psyched for a win?

I can't make any charges, because only the players themselves know what went on inside their minds, but after two tough defeats, I wonder.

No one says the team didn't try. Mike Hawkins and Joe Ross both played a fine game on defense. Micah Taylor gave 100 percent to the end, catching a great touchdown pass. Steve Doherty and Mike Chambon played hurt the whole game, and did the job. At Williams, with no big pro contracts on the line, there would be no reason for players to play and not try. Every Williams player thought he gave his best effort on Saturday, but was that best effort

CLASSIFIEDS

To my silly goose, my Suzuki babe—You are my blue sky, you are my sunny day—with love from silly duck, Bannani, I love you

Bicycle repairs done on campus. Dial 2796 for appt.

Williams wins wild water wars

Three victories at Muir pool raised the water polo team record to 10-2 this past weekend.

Friday night the Ephs defeated a determined Trinity team, 13-9, fighting from behind after a 3-1 first quarter deficit. Goalee Brendan Kiernan was sensational in the nets, stopping 15 shots, 7 in the last quarter. Senior Co-captain Jerry Treiman and junior Jeff Mook led the Williams attack with six and four goals respectively, marking the Ephs' fourth consecutive victory over Trinity since the Bantams won the New England Championship two years ago.

Williams stopped a bigger and stronger UNH team Saturday afternoon, relying on a pressure defense and fast break offense. Freshman Greg Masters, playing the finest game of his young college career, scored four times and Kenny Irvine added two more to pace the Ephs.

Williams next faced a Deerfield team it had never beaten. Once again falling behind 3-1 in the first quarter, Williams rallied back to a 9-5 victory. Williams was forced to play a very physical game against the quick Deerfield squad, and relied on "holesetter" Bill Hymes to provide the offensive firepower. Co-captain Hymes scored twice and shut down the Deerfield inside game until Williams' superior depth wore Deerfield down.

LEARN THE LONG ARM FIRST HAND

The Public Defender Service of Washington, D.C., offers a unique internship for students wishing first-hand legal experience before making a career commitment. Interns serve as investigators for attorneys representing criminal defendants. In addition to their investigative duties, interns testify in court and attend plea-bargaining conferences.

If you are interested in spending a semester with us, contact:

Ray Dennison

451 Indiana Ave., NW
Washington, D.C. 20001

(202) 393-1539

Call Collect

TONIGHT

Beat the Clock Night at the Log.
Come early to beat the prices

Play-off and World Series games on the big screen
all week.

Saturday, October 17

The Log will be open before, during and after the football game.

THE LOG

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Senior Laurie Super is this week's recipient. Super is the goaltender for the women's field hockey squad, which has a 4-1-1 record on the season. She has two shutouts to her credit, including a 1-0 victory Saturday over Trinity in which she had 10 saves. Laurie, this Bud's for you.

this Bud's for you!

GREYSTONE GARDENS

Fine Vintage Clothing

Fine antique clothing, jewelry and accessories for ladies and gentlemen. A full line of Victorian whites, vintage silks and cottons, guberline jackets, pleated pants, vests, animated wool sweaters, silk scarves and kimonos, laces, velvets, furs, hats, lingerie as well as antique wicker. Fashions may change but beautifully made clothes are never out of date.

TELEPHONE (413) 442-9291

436 NORTH STREET

At PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

Special Costumes for Halloween

Falstaff

6.99/case

1.80/six

Paul Masson

1.5 liter chablis

4.89

save $1.16

Volleyball spikes to four wins

Winning all four matches, the women's volleyball team upped its record to nine wins and six losses this week.

Kathleen Gilmore '83 led the victory over Skidmore on Saturday, as the opponents proved futile in trying to stop her powerful spiking. Williams won 15-4, 13-15, 15-10 in what proved to be its third win of the week.

The Purple then handily defeated R.P.I., 15-2, 15-13 in a match which gave Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin an opportunity to let her substitutes gain some experience.

In their first home matches of the season, the team swept Union College and North Adams State last Thursday night in the friendly confines of the Lasell Gymnasium. The Ephs lost the first game to North Adams, 13-15, but then rebounded impressively to win the next two, 15-7 and 15-8.

The Union match was even less challenging for the volleyballers, as they swept Union allowing their opponents only 12 total points for the evening. The scores were 15-4 and 15-8.

Three seniors and one sophomore excelled in the two Thursday matches for the Ephs. Senior Anne Dancowitz bolstered the scoring effort with her combination of hard and off-opped spikes; Gibson Rymar '82 kept the team ahead with strong serves; Kenwin Fuller '82 played superbly at the net; and sophomore Carol Dorfman also contributed strongly to the winning effort.

Coach Hudson-Hamblin feels the team is starting to round into top form, but has yet to reach its potential. Williams travels to Springfield on Thursday to play Div. I U.N.H. and Springfield College.

—JOCK SCRAPS—

Field Hockey

Junior Bea Fuller gunned in the winning goal with under five minutes left to give Williams a 1-8 victory over previously undefeated Trinity in field hockey this Saturday. The win moved the Ephs record up to 4-1-1.

The game was a hotly contested battle between two strong defensive teams. Senior Laura Soper played superbly in goal for the Purple, making ten saves.

The difference in the game was Fuller's tally, which came off an assist from Co-captain Beth Connolly. The defense continued to hold Trinity scoreless to end their undefeated season.

Middlebury handed Williams its first loss of the year earlier in the week by a 5-2 margin at Middlebury. Adverse weather and four missing starters hampered the Eph squad. Connolly and Allison Earle '84 garnered the goals for Williams.

Men's X-country

Eph runners had a run-in with some of "the Big Boys" at Dartmouth Saturday, and came away a bit humbler, a bit more tired than usual, and hopefully a bit wiser.

The team which had not been beaten in four years (34 straight meets) fell to three tough Division I goes: Dartmouth, UMass, and UConn. Clearly out-classed but not intimidated, the Ephs turned in some good races: John Nelson '84 was first for the Ephs in 20th place, and Lyman Casey '83 was second taking 29th. Chuck Stewart '82, Brian Engle '84, and Bennett Yort '84 rounded out the scoring for the team.

The team is anxious to get their next streak started on Saturday at NESCAC Championships.

In JV action Saturday, Dan Sullivan '82 led the harriers to a strong win over Berkshire Christian and Berkshire Community College. Also running strong for the JV were Nick Osborne '84 and Eric Schmitt '82.

Allen Rosenberg
(Cirone)

Senior Anne Dancowitz spikes past Union as teammates Carol Dorfman, Terry Dancowitz, Kenwin Fuller and Gibson Rymar watch attentively. (Doherty)

Eph gridders lack confidence

by Steve Epstein

There's something really wrong after three weeks with the Williams football squad, but it's hard exactly to pinpoint.

It has little to do with the 27-14 loss last Saturday at Trinity. The Ephs were beaten by a bigger and better ballclub. Even with an offense, the Ephs would have had trouble. A 14-play, 80-yard Trinity drive in the first quarter against the usually rock-solid Eph defense proved that Trinity was a juggernaut. Few teams would have beaten them last Saturday. But still, something's just a little bit rotten in Billsville.

Since quarterback John Lawler went down two weeks ago with a leg injury, the Ephs have gradually lost more than their entire offensive punch. They've lost a share of confidence that comes from the leadership Lawler had instilled over the last two seasons. His absence and the team's subsequent decline shows through perfect hindsight the mistake the Williams squad made in not naming Lawler offensive captain for this season.

But Lawler is down and temporarily out, and Bowdoin awaits this week-end. Yes, Bow-doin, beaten by the Ephs last season in a game that went down to the wire and victors over behemoth Tufts last week.

EPHUSIONS

The Ephs will need 110 percent this week to score points, beat Bowdoin, and turn their season around before it collapses completely. But do the Ephs care enough at this stage to turn things around?

This isn't a charge that anybody played less than 100% against Trinity on Saturday. Nobody threw a game, or even let up. At least physically, that is. Mentally, if for one have some questions after talking to many players after the game.

Maybe it was just a release of post-game frustration, but talk Saturday and Sunday revolved around escaping with a 2-6 season, and how to explain a senior season that failed. Players were extremely pessimistic about making football fun again in 1981.

Defensive players, the rock of the squad last season, griped bitterly about the offense. "We'll have to shut out Bowdoin to beat them" was a common response—something these defensive stars just didn't see as a reality.

Former Olympic gold medalist

Rowing great coaches oarswomen

by Ted Leon

Allen Rosenberg, perhaps the finest rowing coach in the United States, spent some long hours on Lake Onota Saturday and Sunday working with the Williams College women's crew team. A close friend of Eph Head Coach George Marcus, he came up to counsel and direct yet another intensive clinic for the team, a tradition which began a few years back.

Although he no longer actively coaches, Rosenberg's past coaching history includes several world championships and an Olympic gold in 1964 at Tokyo. He finds himself visiting with the specific purpose of offering some wisdom to Marcus and some inspiration to the girls. As Co-captain Sue Smith '82 said: "Allen is just about the best there is. He is very insightful."

Yet this is more than a guest appearance or celebrity lecture, for he brings with him a whole philosophy of sport and its role in ones life.

Women sports concept

Speaking with Rosenberg and Marcus provides many insights concerning the interesting issue

Booters take Trinity, topple Bantams, 2-1

by David Woodworth

Freshman standout Doug McKenney scored one goal and assisted on the other in leading the men's varsity team to a 2-1 victory over Trinity last Saturday. The win was the first in five starts for the Ephs, who were finally able to put together offense and defense in the same game.

The offense, which had had particular problems in getting on track this season, started quickly, with McKenney's goal coming at only 1:02 of the match. Taking a good chip from Rob Kusel '83, McKenney beat his man to the ball and rifled it past the Trinity goalkeeper, who probably did not even see the shot. A short time later, at 14:42, Jim Peck '82 took a perfect pass from McKenney and booted it past the keeper. Trinity's goal came at 30:48, as some confusion on the part of the Eph defense allowed Peter Miller to put a loose ball into the net. The defense tightened up on both sides in the second half, and there was no further scoring.

Once again Williams outshot its opponent, this time by a 20-13 margin, and was finally able to find the net with them. Kenny Rhodes '85 and Vince Brandstein '84 shared the duties in goal for the Ephs, combining for six saves.

Coach Mike Russo had nothing but praise for just about everyone on the squad, calling it "a great team effort. We knew that we had to win, and took it to them in the opening moments."

Football fails 27-14

Displaying a precise and powerful offense and an equally impressive defense, the Trinity Bantams handed Williams its second loss, 27-14. The game was ruled throughout by the Bantams who were playing in front of a large crowd on their Parents' Weekend.

Rolling smoothly on their first possession, Trinity opened the scoring when star fullback Bill Holden snuck behind the Eph defense for a 26-yard touchdown reception.

Three plays and punt was the pattern all day for the Williams offense. The ground game compiled only ten yards and the Purple and Gold completed only one pass in the first three quarters.

With Holden piling up 153 yards in 35 carries, the Bantam offense was able to keep ball control and dictate the pace of the game. The Eph defense often held the Bantams in check until third down, but the scrappy Bantams had great success in converting third down plays to keep their drives alive.

Williams also made a considerable number of mistakes which contributed to the lopsided score.

Sophomore quarterback B. J. Connolly, playing the fourth quarter, put two tallies on the board for the Ephs to help maintain respectability. He hit sophomore wide receiver Mark Hummon for the first touchdown and Micah Taylor on a 70-yard catch and run for the second.

Bowdoin will travel to Williamstown this week to take on the 1-2 Ephs who are playing home for the first time in three weeks.

Crew goals

And these qualities, according to Marcus and Rosenberg and thousands of others, are exactly the qualities that sport aims to develop. "We are trying to teach them that they have a limited amount of time; every stroke must be perfect, and every stroke must mesh with the other seven," said Rosenberg, adding, "There's no next time, and no substitutions once the race has started."

Serious sport

Indeed, many are scared away. The sport demands precise execution and the ability to adapt to subtle changes in rhythm, and this comes only

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 6

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

OCTOBER 27, 1981

Peer health plans contraceptive clinic

by Jon Tigar

A student-run contraceptive counseling clinic will open soon on campus, according to organizer Kevin Hirsch '82. The clinic, which will be run by Peer Health Counseling, will also sell non-prescription contraceptives at wholesale prices.

Hirsch predicts that the clinic will open "around Thanksgiving" in either Room 6 in Mears House or Weston Language Center.

"I envision this thing running from 1 to 5 on Friday afternoons," Hirsch said. "I figure we'll have three or perhaps four counselors."

"We have two people who are certified Family Planning Counselors; they were certified by Emory University. One of them is an underclassman, so there'll be some continuity," he added.

The clinic hopes to receive a $250 start-up fund from the Student Activities Tax. Initial prices will be "a few cents higher," in order to pay back that money; then prices will drop, Hirsch said.

Students should realize that the clinic's "primary function is counseling. The sale of contraceptives is secondary," said Hirsch. "The reason that our primary function is counseling is that the most popular methods among this age group are the prescription methods such as the diaphragm or the Pill... Non-prescription contraceptives such as condoms or foam are not the popular forms of contraception on this campus, although I think sexually active persons should use them as a back-up."

The administration has been "cautionary," according to Dean Nancy McIntire, who said she tried to make sure the students "knew what they were getting into."

"When the question first came up, they were not told not to do it... It just seemed to me that they should know what they were selling, what the costs are, what the liabilities are, etc.," she said.

"The liability lies with the manufacturer as long as the Peer Health counselors have told the students how long the contraceptives can be stored, have read the labels... and presumably it's the user's responsibility to know the risks."

McIntire also felt that the clinic might shock some parents "who saw the clinic as a way in which the College was encour-

Continued on Page 6

Last November, the Williams community rallied in prayer at the site of the cross-burning. As the first anniversary of the event approaches, racial tensions remain.

November 1

Cross burning: tensions persist

by Susan Kandel

As the first anniversary of last year's cross burning incident approaches, feelings of racial tension persist at Williams.

"Things aren't hunky dory around here, that's for sure," said Kathy Finnell '84, secretary of the Black Student Union, "and, personally, I don't think anything has changed since last year."

Last November 1st, two shrouded figures burned a cross on the lawn of Perry House in view of students attending Homecoming parties at Perry and Wood Houses. The incident was followed by a series of threatening notes and phone calls to members of the College's black community.

"The cross burning and what came after," said Finnell, "were an insult not just to blacks, but to anyone who isn't Caucasian. They shouldn't be celebrated or forgotten."

In order to continue the dialogue initiated last year following the cross burning, the Committee on Undergraduate Life is sponsoring a speech by Reverend Muhammad Kenyatta '81 entitled, "Race, Ethics and Education at Williams." The speech, to be held Sunday night in Chapin Hall, will be followed by small group discussions among students and faculty members.

The B.S.U. will also hold a worship service in Chapin Hall Sunday, and hopes to invite at least two speakers.

Dean Cris Roosenraad emphasizes that the events planned for Sunday are not intended to commemorate what happened here a year ago.

"There were positive energies that followed the crisis when the campus pulled itself together. It's those energies we want to rekindle, using November 1 as a date to think about," he said.

Roosenraad acknowledges, however, that despite the supportive response of the College last year, racial tension has not significantly eased.

"I don't think we found the right mechanism last year to resolve the crisis. With work pressures, and the fact that it was close to the end of the semester, the issue was pushed to the background. The tensions are just lying underneath the surface," he said.

Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta says she has not seen a dissipation of the tension that makes it "difficult for white and black students to interact," but does not view this tension as unique to Williams.

"The problem isn't Williams it's society. Students come here and bring the baggage of their upbringing and culture with them, and it's hard, even at an ivory tower like Williams, to forget that," she said.

Black students agree that racism at Williams is not a problem conceived at Williams.

"Those feelings of superiority weren't created here, and they can't be stopped here. All we can do is deal with what we are able," said Finnell.

"We're pleased with the efforts of the College," she said, "but those people who only want to hang around with whites will, and those who only want to hang around with blacks will. It's become more habit."

"We're under extra pressure," Finnell added, "and you have to have someone to identify with. In an environment like Williams, it's impossible to avoid... cliques."

Kenyatta maintains that some of the responsibility for the elimination of the racial polarization on this campus lies with the administration.

"The College must set a tone that goes from administration to faculty to students that racism is not tolerated here. There are definitely people here working for that," she said.

"The real solution, however," said Kenyatta, "would be for white students on this campus to deal seriously with their own racism."

Applications to Williams from Afro-Americans declined precipitously last year as a result of the cross burning. There were 96 black applicants to the Class of 1985, as opposed to 165 each for the Classes of 1984 and 1983. "Obviously the cross burning

Continued on Page 6

Computers multiply on campus

by Katya Hokanson

Campus computers are seeing increased use by students, faculty and administration following the recent expansion of computer facilities.

By the time they graduate, almost half of all Williams students will have taken at least the introductory course in computer science, if the present enrollment level of 250 is maintained, according to Computer Center Director Lawrence Wright.

A major in Computer Science was offered for the first time last year, said Wright, and this year seven students plan to become the first Williams graduates to have earned a B.A. in Computer Science.

In addition to Food Service and library computers, Williams College now owns three quarters of a million dollars worth of computer equipment, housed for the most part in Bronfman. This compares with the College's initial purchase in 1966 of a $75,000 IBM 1130 computer, which had a capability equal to a "quite inexpensive microcomputer" of today, according to Wright.

The equipment includes a central Univac 1100/60 unit (installed in 1970), 29 academic terminals, two graphics terminals, seven staff terminals, and six administrative office terminals. Two word processors and 10 brand new microcomputers have been installed in the new Weston computer laboratory. Three people were employed to work with the computer in 1966; the staff now numbers 13. "About 30 to 40 professors are fairly routine users of the computers," remarked Wright. "The (Introductory Comp. Sci.) 231 course takes a lot of computer time. There are also another seven or eight computer courses, and about the same number of non-computer courses that make a lot of use of the machines, especially Political Science 206 (statistics). The Economics department, surprisingly, uses the computers a lot. Williams is unusual in that respect. Also, some science courses utilize our equipment. Computers are becoming a common tool for more and more fields."

The computer expansion has included lowering the costs and speeding the varied jobs of administrative offices. Admissions was the first office to receive a terminal. Alumni, Development, Business, Financial Aid and the Registrar have since had terminals installed.

"Now that they don't have to ship data over by hand, it solves some problems. Things were always being lost in translation," Wright said. "Our goal is to centralize all the student information into a student data base, so that registration, names, addresses, housing information, major, grades—every piece of information needed would be in one spot. There will be one list. Right now every office has its own particular list."

Patty Reilly of Financial Aid concurred. "Financial Aid is the first office to be on a student data base. We have a computer

Continued on Page 6

In an innovative move, trustees and administrators mingle over sherry and dinner with about fifty student leaders during the trustee's weekend visit last week.

Inside the Record

Interview with Chandler p. 1
H.W. Janson visits p. 4
Octet '41-'81 p. 5
Footballers fall ... p. 8

Cross still burns

A year ago this week a cross was burned on the Williams campus. Classes were cancelled as students and faculty met to discuss race relations and ways of promoting greater black/white interaction. We pledged to reach out to each other, to touch, not just co-exist. And yet now, a year later, we seem to have forgotten those terrifying days which so briefly brought us closer together.

The fiery cross which burned outside Perry House Homecoming night was most certainly a malevolent attack by outsiders who sought to terrorize a portion of the student body. Yet it wasn't the burning cross which scared us so much; rather it was the realization that Williams students shared in a less violent manner the racial suspicion and hostility which the act represented. Black students were segregating themselves from their white classmates in Baxter and at private parties. White students in turn made no effort to understand and destroy the barriers which a white-dominated society had erected against the contributions of black citizens. We were separate but equal, and we were all poorer for it.

Now, as we examine ourselves a year later, we find we have made little progress in addressing the racial problems revealed by the incident. Black students continue to cluster in two residential houses and to eat as a group in Baxter. At Homecoming this year, there will be a private B.S.U. party. White students continue to avoid contact with Afro-American culture in curricular choices and in informal conversation. Whites and blacks try to ignore their differences, rather than benefiting from their mutual diversity.

As November 1st approaches, students will undoubtedly hold the usual rallies and make the usual statements. What we need, however, are continuing solutions, not band-aid platitudes. With the memory of the cross burning clearly in our minds, we should recommit ourselves to a continued awareness of racial issues at Williams and to an honest willingness to discuss them openly.

Faulty justice

The Honor Code at Williams is relatively consistent on paper, but in practice it takes on a different look.

Two disciplinary cases in the last six months highlight the inconsistencies that can occur. One group of students received a harsh penalty for a misunderstanding they freely admitted to. Another group stole an exam, yet they remain unpunished, despite tips that could have led to their discovery. Results like these confuse the honest mistakes with blatant cheating. Are we to conclude that honesty is not always the best policy?

The responsibility for strengthening the Honor and Discipline system rests with three segments of the College: students, faculty, and the Honor and Discipline Committee.

Foremost, the students must be responsible for reading and understanding the Honor Code. Every effort should be made to avoid a possible violation.

Nevertheless, misunderstandings of the Code are inevitable. It is at this point that the H & D Committee should exercise particular care in deciding punishment which will affect a student's academic career. The Committee and the professor involved should determine why students break the Code.

Often the facts of a case are unclear. Sometimes it is a matter of the professor's word against the student's, but when the issue involves whether or not a professor clearly explained his interpretation of the Honor Code, other students in the class should be consulted to confirm what was said.

Honesty is the best policy, but the Honor and Discipline system must act to reinforce this belief. When students admit to an accidental violation of the Code, and there is no proof of willful intent to break rules or disguise the infraction, then the Committee and professor should use moderation when choosing the appropriate punishment. Permanent grade penalties in these cases are inappropriate and only damage the student's view of college justice.

As for the guilty walking away scot free, it is up to the non-violators to protect their own honor by notifying the proper officials. This mutual cooperation will help avoid a police state mentality both inside and outside of Hopkins Hall.

We know that the Honor Code is right, but we must all join to make it work.

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number (413) 597-2400) Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA. 01267

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

No swing

To the editor:

On behalf of everyone who helped to plan and stage the swing party at Greylock last Friday night, we would like to express our regret that so few faculty members chose to attend. The sizable crowd of students, parents and alumni who enjoyed themselves as much or more than at any party in recent years. If there is any way in which we can offer a clearer invitation to professors when the Stork Club returns to Greylock next fall, we would like to know what it might be. To all the faculty members who decided not to come, we missed you there and hope you'll reconsider next year.

Jennifer Weeks '83
Jonathan Light '83
Katie Kelly '84
Oliver Johnson '84
Sue Ressel '83
Peter Worcester '83
Peter Graffagnino '83

Vassar reply

To the editor:

I was amused to read Ron Issen's article in the October 6 issue of the Williams Record. Although Mr. Issen's treatment of Vassar was enlightening, I would like to make a few clarifications in light of my own experience as a member of the oppressed minority.

My first objection to Mr. Issen's piece concerns his statement that "despite the efforts of each school's admission departments, men are still in the minority." Whereas the number of applicants for the Class of 1985 registered a moderate gain of 9 percent over the previous year, male applications rose by the astronomical rate of 22 percent over the previous year, despite our lack of a football team. We at Vassar regard this statistic with pride.

Back in 1979, many Vassar students claimed that their biggest gripe with Vassar was the inadequate athletic facilities. Athletics are still inadequate at Vassar, despite construction of a new multi-million dollar sports facility. However, if Mr. Issen's standard for successful co-education can be most adequately measured in terms of the sports teams, I beg him to digest this: Our male varsity soccer team has posted a 7-0-1 record in Division III play this fall.

I am proud of our traditions and our colors. If you walk into our library, you will immediately stand face to face with a large stained glass window. The window portrays the first woman to receive a doctoral degree. Our pink and grey colors originated in the same spirit. Should we not exult the achievements of women academics? Our colors symbolize to me a testimony to the advent of women as co-equals in our society.

My last source of contention arises from Mr. Issen's assertion that Vassar women are "still heavily into 'roadtripping.'" This is a blatant misrepresentation of the truth. I have shown his article to many women; they unanimously rejected Issen's notion. Black women, as the New York Times correctly asserted, are outnumbered by over a four-to-one ratio at Vassar. Many of them do frequent West Point during the week-ends. For the most part, however, Vassar women either cling to Vassar men, or to their books.

Respectfully,
Josh Hinerfeld '83
Vassar College

Sexist

To the editor,

The Freshman Revue displayed a distressing lack of taste and perception in the jokes and characters depicted. Men's and women's roles were portrayed very stereotypically and frequently insultingly to both sexes. We believe that the students at this school engage in more meaningful and mutual relationships than the play suggests. Although it was a satire, the Freshman Revue reinforced the type of stereotypes that mutually respecting men and women see as demeaning to their relationships. We regret that the parents and freshmen who saw the show were given this impression of male/female interaction at this campus.

Sincerely yours,
Elena Bertozzi '83
Jane Fischberg '82

The Williams Feminist Alliance

Up in smoke

To the editor:

I read with interest the article on the first page of the September 29, 1981 issue of the Record entitled "Heat Loss May Cool Fireplaces."

I think that someone had better explain to you people up north the difference between a flue and a damper. A fireplace without a flue does not work at all. Closing the damper on a fireplace without a fire tends to reduce heat loss.

Lighting a fire in a fireplace with the damper closed can lead to problems, as I discovered after installing a smoke alarm. My face was red and the faces of the volunteer firemen may have been purple, but fortunately it was too dark to see.

Sincerely,
Richard Hooker '85
Dagget, Colby & Hooker
New Haven, Conn.

Chandler discusses the issues

The following is an edited transcript of the press conference given by President John Chandler on Thursday, Oct. 22. Chandler opened the conference with a few general remarks concerning the October Trustees' meeting and then proceeded to answer questions from the RECORD editors Henderson, Spears and Willard.

RECORD: We've heard much of the negative reaction to the new dining changes. What would you say are some of the positive results of the new dining system, and CHANDLER: To look at the positive results, I think one has to look beyond the dining itself. That particular move was merely one action recommended by the report of the Committee on the '80s. I think one has to ask "what is the College gaining in other areas?" We can look at computers, for example. We've spent well over a million dollars for hardware over the past two years. We've expanded the offerings of the Math Department related to computers. That's a gain that can't occur unless there is a savings at some point. The general improvement of faculty salaries is another gain.

So, the College is definitely gaining educational strength, but unfortunately, that gain in strength can only occur with the diminishing of amenities. If one looks at the dining situation simply in itself, one has to conclude that the current arrangement is not as attractive as it was before. But if one looks at the total institution, one would have to say that the College is becoming educationally stronger.

RECORD: Because of the projects to expand the art museum and Adams Memorial Theater, some of the emphasis has been taken from plans to renovate and expand Lasell gymnasium. What is the status of renovation plans for the gym, and will there be an effort to get money for the project?

"One has to conclude that the current dining arrangement is not as attractive as it was before."

CHANDLER: There's no effort right now, but the College is simply going to have to respond to the inadequacies of the gymnasium. In fact, it's high on my list of things to begin to explore. It involves looking at what can be done, and done well, with Lasell, and it also involves looking at the field house. I think there's no question that something is going to have to be done. I see that in the not so distant future.

RECORD: How is the selection of new faculty going to progress over the next few years?

CHANDLER: The College is going to go rather slowly on that. It's going to be the middle of the '80s before anybody really knows what the impact of the enrollment drop is going to be. It's conceivable with the worst forecast being made that even highly selective institutions like Williams will have to make a choice between retaining quality and retaining size. In ten years, the decision could be made to shrink the size of the College. If the faculty was way beyond the size necessary for a smaller student body, that decision to shrink would be much harder to implement. So, I think the College will go rather slowly on this until about the mid-1980s.

RECORD: There has been some concern about who will purchase Stone Hill and what that land will be used for. If someone considered "inappropriate" in the eyes of the College were to make an offer for the land, do you think the College would enter the market and make an offer for the Stone Hill property?

CHANDLER: The College would certainly explore the possibility. I would doubt that the College would actually step in. I think it would be a questionable public relations move for the College to be doing something that might be adversely affecting the tax revenues of the town.

RECORD: With the first "anniversary" of the cross burning coming up, what are your reactions to any changes that have occurred on campus? Do you think the racial relations have improved any? And do you see anything in the future that might better the situation?

Faculty rejects tenure related motion receive an oral summary of the pertinent comments from their department chairmen. Classics professor Charles Fuqua tried to change that with a motion that would allow faculty to see sections of the reports containing personal evaluations upon request.

Fuqua said the basic idea behind this motion is simple. "Just as individuals are entitled to know, and departments are required to provide, the standards by which they are judged," he remarked, "so also should they have access to the reports in which they are evaluated."

Sherron Knopp, who became an associate professor last year, did not feel Fuqua's proposal was necessary. "I'm absolutely in favor of junior people knowing everything important in the decision," she remarked, "but I also think it is important to the discussion process, especially in large departments, to keep certain information confidential."

"Other people," Reichert explained, "feel that some of the information in the staffing report ought to remain confidential." Such information includes student evaluations, comments from outside experts and comparisons of professors.

"There is a feeling," added Reichert, "that inevitably the nature of a written document is altered according to the audience it is written for and that it makes sense that the mode of communication between departments and the CAP should be different from the mode of communication between chairmen and assistant professors."

The faculty unanimously approved a motion directing that the Steering Committee and Dean of the Faculty work on ways to improve communication between department chairmen and assistant professors. The Steering Committee is scheduled to report back to the faculty in March.

One alternative was proposed by Vincent Barnett of the political science department. Barnett suggested that department chairmen give written summaries of the report to the junior faculty, to assure that they are fulfilling their duties properly. This could be done in three ways, Barnett said.

"It could be done by a letter of memorandum to the individual member," he commented. Alternately, department chairmen could "have a conversation with the junior faculty member as they now do, but then summarize the conversation in a memorandum and give it to the junior faculty member." Finally, "if the chairman wanted, and the junior member agreed, they could give the report itself to the junior member as Fuqua's motion made mandatory."

Fuqua rejects Barnett's proposal as "another layer of bureaucracy. That amounts to doing no more than we do already."

An assistant professor, unidentified by request, voted for Fuqua's motion, "but only as a strategic move." This professor "got the feeling that people were paying lip service to the problem."

The unidentified teacher hopes the Steering Committee will devise a satisfactory solution, but remains skeptical. "The lopsided vote against the Fuqua motion," he noted, "indicates that there may not be a mandate for them to go out and reform the system." The professor and Knopp both support Barnett's idea.

The American Studies name change brings Williams in line with other schools. The program chairman, Robert Dalzell, explained that "programs like ours at other institutions are generally called American Studies, rather than American Civilization. American Studies really more accurately describes what is in the program, what we do now, in that it is a broader program."

Janson: Portrait of an author

by Karin Kettel

When Professor H. W. Janson began to study art history in the 1930s, it was still "something for the ladies." "When I was a graduate student at Harvard," he recounts, "a story was circulated about a fine arts major from the Midwest, who, when he went home, would pronounce the phrase 'fine arts' in such a way that the listener thought he was saying 'finance'."

Today, art history is enjoying enormous popularity. Janson's tome, History of Art, has sold three million copies in thirteen languages since its 1962 publication.

"I became somewhat of a monk for the three years it took to write it," says Janson. "I have no intention of doing it over again. Once is enough." Janson finds that the tome's strength and weakness is that it was written entirely by one man. "It has my personal bias but it also has a coherent approach," he says.

If he had to do it over again, Janson would change his approach to art history. "I am now skeptical of stylistic divisions," he says.

Janson was invited to teach at Williams by the History of Art Graduate Program. "I had visited Williamstown," he says, "and liked it. A fellow classmate of mine is here." Janson and Whitney Stoddard, Professor Emeritus of Art, were both graduate students at Harvard, receiving doctorates in 1942 and 1941, respectively.

Janson teaches Art 301, a required course for art history majors, entitled "Form Follows Function."

"We look at art from the point of view of its function," he explains. "Art has a specific function. In older art it was usually religious or political. Modern art is more complicated."

Janson is also teaching a graduate course on 19th century sculpture. He will give a guest lecture in Art 101 on Donatello, whom Janson characterizes as the "greatest sculptor of the early Renaissance."

Horst Woldemar Janson, called Peter by friends, was born in St. Petersburg, Russia to Swedish-German parents. He first became interested in art history in high school.

"I had a history teacher who would smuggle bits of art history into his lectures," he remembers. He first studied art history at the University of Hamburg, but left when Hitler began his rise to power. "Hitler was a catastrophe in every field," remarks Janson.

Janson found transition to the U.S. relatively easy. "I was not yet established in a field so it was easy to leave Germany," he explains. "Harvard also had graduate fellowships for students with previous academic work in Germany."

Art has always been limited to a minority of the population, Janson asserts. "Michelangelo had a limited number of patrons. Artists and patrons agreed that art wasn't for everyone."

Today, Janson identifies three groups in the art world: critics, museums, and prominent collectors and dealers. "The artist must persuade the dealer to feature his works," he says. "The dealer is the first to take a chance."

Some art is for everyone, according to Janson. "Post cards and advertisements appeal to a lowest common denominator," he states. "But they can generate high art. Janson cites Pop Art which was inspired by comic strips. "Art can have a popular and a sophisticated level," he adds.

Janson sees changes in the art market. "Prices have risen tremendously because of increasing demand," he states. "It has become a mark of a civilized man to own art." Prices rose first in paintings, then in drawings and finally in prints. "A Picasso lithograph which may have cost $50 in 1950, will now cost $2,500," he remarks. Some art is overvalued, according to Janson. He cited Impressionist art. "When people get bored with the Impressionists prices will come down." Likewise, Janson sees a "sifting out" of Picasso works.

Janson himself has what he terms a small collection of artwork. He tells the story of finding a small brass pot in the window of a Parisian store. "It happened to be the original of a pot depicted in a 15th century Flemish painting hanging in the Cloisters in New York," he recounts. He uses the pot as a teaching device to demonstrate techniques of the Flemish artists.

Distinguished art historian, H. W. Janson, author of the landmark text HISTORY OF ART, is a Robert Sterling Clark visiting professor at Williams.

His favorite museum building is the Mellon Gallery in New Haven. "The art is shown by daylight," he explains "so that the works change as the lighting changes." He criticizes the new East Wing of the National Gallery in Washington, D.C. for its lack of natural lighting. "The offices are flooded with light, but the galleries get none," he says.

A book of tribute to Janson, entitled Art, Ape of Nature, was recently published. It contains essays by 45 art historians.

Samuel Edgerton, director of the Graduate Program in the History of Art, adds his own tribute to Janson. "Every undergraduate art history major is weaned on Peter's book," he adds, "Williams students are in the presence of a world class scholar."

Recently, Janson collaborated on a catalog for an exhibit of 19th century sculpture entitled "From Romantics to Rodin." The process of compiling a major exhibit from North American collections is an arduous one.

"We first surveyed holdings and wrote letters of inquiry to every museum, institution or individual whom we thought would have sculpture to loan," Janson says. "Then we asked for loans. Some collectors were unwilling to take the risk involved in loaning a piece of sculpture for the two year show." Much of the work also went into the writing and compiling of scholarly entries for the catalog. Janson is currently collaborating on a history of 19th century art, to be published in 1982. That Janson is a man happy in his field is obvious. "Art is my profession and my pleasure," he concludes.

In Other Ivory Towers

Amherst College

Professor Dennis Brutus, South African anti-apartheid activist and poet, and currently a visiting professor at Amherst, faces deportation from this country following the refusal last January of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to grant him a visa. According to the Dennis Brutus Defense Committee and Congressman Dennis Savage (D, Mich.), Prof. Brutus may find himself the target of assassination attempts by South Africa's secret police should he return to his native country.

Brutus had travelled in the U.S. on a British passport until May 1980, when the British government revoked it. Brutus then applied for a Zimbabwean passport, which was delayed because of the unsettled nature of the new regime in Zimbabwe.

This January Brutus's request for a visa was refused.

Cautioning that there is no reason to believe that this refusal was prompted by political bias and that "this may be merely a bureaucratic mix-up," Brutus told the Amherst Student that he "recognize(s) that there is a climate of increasing political repression in this country..."

Representative Savage, in an interview with the Amherst Student, communicated his fears for Brutus's life should the poet be forced to return to South Africa. Also in an interview with the Student, South African Ambassador to the U.S.A. Donald Sole called Savage's fears "ridiculous," stating, "we don't react to silly statements of that kind."

Brutus will appear before an Immigration judge in Chicago on November 10, when a decision will be rendered.

In other news from Amherst, four alumni are drawing up a proposal aiming to use Amherst's investment policies as a means to put pressure on companies with interests in South Africa. The alumni group—Ken Propp, Glenn Kesselhaut, Arne Abrahamson, and led by Eric Fornell—advocates a retention of Amherst's influence in such companies and the use of proxy votes as a medium for pressure. The group views divestiture as a last resort. According to Fornell, "we want to deal with the issue (of apartheid), not wash our hands of it."

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film & info - 7:00 p.m., Oct. 27,
Interviews - 9:00 - 4:30, Oct. 27 & 28,
OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING.

Aging Octets still sentimental

by Steve Epstein

"It's an Octet concert!" exclaimed one young teenie bopper from Mission Park. "Let's go!" quickly responded another. A third jumped into beat without hesitation, "Ooooooh! I love that Leeman Clancy." And a fourth retorted, "It's Lyman Casey and he's all mine. You can have that A.J. guy."

All four sweet young things retired to Chapin Hall to see a concert far different than they had imagined. The Octet was there, but it was 24 members of past Octets who stole the show from their younger compatriots.

The Octet alumni gathered from all over the U.S. to sing the old songs for two hours of non-stop energy and entertainment. Members ranging from the original Octet in 1941 to last year's graduating seniors performed everything from a memorial Schubert piece in honor of dead Octet members to whimsical Octet favorites like "I Love the Ladies." Their final big number, however, might have been the most powerfully staged. It was selected sections from the musical "Brigadoon," complete with a surprise bagpipe interlude.

Kevin Wiest and Vern Macall returned from an all-too-lengthy summer absence with the rest of the 1977 'renaissance' Octet which was well represented, except for Chuck Hirsch who was away getting married and buying a small Third World nation.

Of course Wiest had the crowd in stitches with his humor, despite his admission that "We just haven't heard too many good jokes lately." He therefore created some jokes with the help of the audience, and to their rapt approval.

The present Octet was also superb, proving that a group with A. J. Moor can still have some redeeming social qualities. Bill Menard has taken over the group's comedic duties with considerable personal charm. Lyman Casey continues to woo the women, despite lowered hormone levels necessary to hit those key high notes. Mike Winther is just plain crazy, giving the group a lack of direction it needs in Wiest's absence. George Liddle and Mickey Longo have great voices as do Rick Gagliano and Tom Hulberg who deserve mention, as they are former entrants and I still owe them money. Gregg Walker is a freshman.

Members of the pre-war Octet however, really stole the show. On one day's rehearsal, the cohesion was magnificent.

Even for those of us unacquainted with much of the old music, the energy and enjoyment levels of the performers was great entertainment.

After the show, I happened to spy the four teenie boppers. They got into the car and drove away with one of the guys from the octet. Those Octet guys have all the luck... but what's a guy from the Class of '44 going to do with four teenie boppers? Sorry, Lyman, better luck next time.

John Setear, we love you.

The Williams Octet alumni entertained a large crowd last Saturday night in Chapin Hall.

Art Ensemble creates visual images in African sound

by Stephanie Brown

The Art Ensemble of Chicago's performance on October 23rd truly expressed "the arts," presenting not only (brilliant) musical virtuosity, but also a visual display of African culture.

An extraordinary collection of musical gadgetry including bongos, African tom toms, wind chimes, conch shells, temple blocks, cabassas, cow bells, gongs, chimes, and an array of cymbals filled Chapin stage to its capacity. Members of the Art Ensemble wore traditional African dress and painted their faces, thus adding visual authenticity to their music.

After a prayer, the band began its first act which continued non-stop until intermission. A series of sustained notes played by the trumpeter, the flutist, and the saxophonists accompanied by random jingles, crashes, clicks, and booms from the percussion instruments began the piece. The group then used its variety of percussion instruments to stimulate visual images in the mind of the listener. In sequence, which sounded like the soundtrack for an auto accident or a fire, the trumpet and the saxophones produced siren-like noises and screams, while the percussionists, using gongs and whistles, created "frenzied crescendos" typifying calamities, fear, and life in a big city.

Later in the number, the musicians combined their ability to produce animal noises with a heavy emphasis on bongos and cowbells to produce a "jungle" sound. In the following sequence, one percussionist breathing heavily into a megaphone began a gradual fading back into the three-part harmony which introduced the piece.

The second half of the show allowed the musicians to demonstrate their virtuosity. Unfortunately, the trumpeter put too much of an emphasis of short, loud blasts and "raps," and only rarely displayed his talent for creating soft, clear tones. On the other hand, the saxophonists displayed remarkable agility and versatility during their solos. One saxophonist managed to play two saxophones simultaneously.

A lengthy drum solo highlighted the second piece, a celebration of rhythm and drums. After the solo, all five musicians played only rhythmic instruments, producing a wonderful series of syncopations. This piece was the highlight of the concert for all neophyte listeners as it appealed to the "basal" instincts.

The Art Ensemble of Chicago presented a new glorification of untamed sounds. Whether the group created bucolic music, or whether it offered an auditory scenario of city life, it certainly exposed the audience to a unique interpretation and style of music which was interesting and extremely well-conceived.

Concert Listing

Tues., Oct. 27 Foreigner & Billy Squier, Civic Ctr., Glens Falls
Jorma Kaukonen, Paradise, Boston
Herb Ellis Trio, Van Dyck, Schenectady
Wed., Oct. 28 Slouie & Ban-shees, Paradise, Foreigner & Billy Squier, Boston Garden
Lonnie Brooks Blues Band, Jonathan Swift's, Albany
Thurs., Oct. 29 King Crimson, The Metro, Boston
Jorma Kaukonen, Fine Arts Ctr. Concert Hall, U. Mass, Amherst.
Henry Paul Band, JB Scott's, Albany
Friday, Oct. 30 Capitol Jazz, La Cocina, Pittsfield
Penetrators, Beacon St., North Adams
Sat., Oct. 31 Biotto, JB Scott's, Albany
Ken Perlman, 8th Step Coffeehouse, Albany

Tubes, Orpheum, Boston
Gladys Knight & The Pips, Berklee Performance Center, Boston
Doc Scanlon's Rhythm Boys, Dewitt-Clinton Hotel, Albany
Shaboo All-Stars, Hulabaloo, Rensselaer
Sun., Nov. 1 TrapeXoid, Iron Horse, Northampton
Tues., Nov. 3 Moody Blues, Boston Garden
Nov. 4 Nazareth, Civic Ctr., Springfield
Jerry Garcia, Palace, Albany
Nov. 5 Devo, Orpheum, Boston
prepared by
Toonerville Trolley

ARTS-ARTS-ARTS

H. W. Janson to Speak

H. W. Janson, Robert Sterling Clark Visiting Professor of Art and author of the well known History of Art, will lecture on "The Image of the Human Soul" on Thursday, Oct. 29 at 8:00 p.m. in the Clark Art Institute. Admission is free.

Art Lecture

Professor J. Kirk T. Varndoe, Institute of Fine Arts, New York University will talk on "Early Modern Painting in the Development of Photographic Vision." at 5:00 p.m. on Friday Oct. 30 at the Clark Art Institute. An opening reception for the exhibition "Cubism and American Photography 1910-1930" follows.

Music in the Round

The next Music in the Round concert will be held on Friday, Oct. 30 at 8:30 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. The program will include Hindemith's Quintet for clarinet in B flat and E flat for two violins viola and cello; Beethoven's Serenade, Opus 8 for violin viola and cello; and Faure's Quartet Opus 15 for piano, violin, viola and cello. Admission is $2.50 general admission and free to Williams I.D. holders.

Art Film

The Romantic Versus Classic Art Film Series at the Clark continues this Friday, October 30 with a film on "Joseph Mallard William Turner." Admission to the movie, which begins at 1:00 p.m., is free.

A TOUCH OF EUROPE • • •

• • • IN WILLIAMSTOWN

GEIGER of Austria, Inc.

Lanz of Salzburg

FINE CLOTHING FOR MEN AND WOMEN

House of Walsh

Spring St. Williamstown Mass. 01267

THE BOOTING OF AMERICA.

Frye® started benchcrafting boots over 100 years ago, using only the finest leather available. Today, we still make them the same way, paying attention to details and handcrafting them in the old fashioned tradition. You'll love the durability and fashionability of Frye's new styles. The times change, and styles change, but our quality and craftsmanship remain the same. The best.

2955

Salvatore's

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
CONCERNED WITH FASHION,
FIT AND QUALITY

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

D4/5
TELESCOPE
WORLD FAMOUS, SOLID HARDWOOD DIRECTOR CHAIRS

$35.00
Complete

ESTABLISHED 1888
Hopkins
Next to the National Bank on Spring Street
Student and Home Furniture
61 SPRING STREET Tel. 458-3719 WILLIAMSTOWN

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.

458-3306

458-5441

College Grads

- Agriculture
- Business
- Engineering
- Fisheries/Forestry
- Home Economics
- Mathematics
- Natural Resources
- Nursing/Health
- Science
- Vocational Ed

Your degree experience could qualify you for PEACE CORPS positions in Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Caribbean, So. Pacific. Learn a new language. Experience a new culture. Must be US citizen, single/married, no dependents. NO UPPER AGE LIMIT. Generous living allowance, paid travel, health benefits. Contact Reys.

MATH DEGREE: Emerging nations need people with strong math backgrounds. Interested in international development? PEACE CORPS pays travel, generous living allowance, health benefits for positions in Latin America, Asia, Africa.

SCIENCE DEGREE: Your degree could qualify you for teaching positions or work with fisheries in the PEACE CORPS.

FORESTRY/FISHERIES: Your science degree could give you a start on a career in resource management.

FORM BACKGROUND: Put your experience in grain/dairy, poultry, lge/sml animals to good use overseas with the PEACE CORPS.

Skilled Trades: Auto/diesel mechanics, Cabinet Makers, Carpenters, Electricians, Industrial Arts, Masons. Experience/degree in one of these fields would qualify you for PEACE CORPS programs in Latin America, Asia, Africa.

BUSINESS/ECON. GRADS: Work with small farmers and business people seeking to obtain credits. Set up cooperatives. Implement savings programs. Set up accounting systems for small businesses or co-ops. Get your career off to an unusual start with PEACE CORPS.

FOR INFO. & FILM, 7:00 p.m. Oct. 27. FOR INTERVIEWS, 9-4:30 p.m., Oct. 27 & 28, OCC

Get Ready!

Ski season is just around the corner!

—Special Cross-Country Sale—

All Karhu cross-country skis 1/2 price!
All Fischer cross-country skis 40-50% off!
Selected Trak, Alfa, and Karhu boots
$10-$25

Selected ski clothing
1/2 price!

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

"Naturally curly hair can be controlled" says THE CLIP SHOP

You don't have to give up good condition for less curl. The 80's offers new techniques and products when it comes to relaxing or straightening over curly hair. And the stylists of the Clip Shop have kept up with all the new advancements. After examining your hair they know just what would be best for you, whether you want to have straight hair or just a wider pattern and wear one of the soft flowing hairstyles like our model pictured here.

Stop in one of the Clip Shop's three locations and see what possibilities there are for you.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

Mead offers unique opportunity

by Trish McHugh

The Mead Internship Program helps Williams juniors and exceptional sophomores finance summer government internships.

Mead interns may receive either a grant or an interest-free loan of up to $1000 depending on financial aid status, and a letter of introduction, but are responsible for finding their own summer position, according to program coordinator Dan Cohen of the Office of Career Counseling (OCC).

In past years, interns have held jobs in all areas of local, state, and federal government in addition to posts with public interest groups. Most internships, however, take place in Washington, D.C.

Doug Jebb '82 spent last summer on the Global Issues Staff of the State Department

Bureau of Intelligence and Research. He described his experience as "very valuable—it allowed me to pursue my interest in public policy, which is a direct application of political science, which I'm majoring in."

The program is fairly competitive, with approximately 50 percent of all applicants chosen as Mead interns. The Mead is open to students of any major with an interest in government. The selection committee bases its decisions most heavily upon a personal essay describing why an applicant wishes to become an intern. The committee also considers an applicant's academic record and the recommendations of two professors. The application deadline for the program is November 13. Interns are selected by November 19 and all applicants are notified by the 24th.

The OCC will assist students in applying for the program or finding an internship. Jebb noted that the OCC has "a resource pool of experience in summer internships. We can come back and help other people out."

Computers added

Continued from Page 1

file for every student this year for the first time. Until now we had hand lists and spent the end of the year just adding up all these lists of numbers by hand. This year we didn't even have to hire anyone to print out the letters for Financial Aid awards—the computer did it. It doesn't yet compute how much aid should be given to each student—that's very complicated and anyway, we like to look at those things individually."

"I can say with pride that Williams has a very good computing capability relative to other small liberal arts colleges," Wright said. "It's a game of leapfrog. The real problem is getting enough faculty members, because competition is stiff, especially from industry. We're in the process of retraining faculty members to teach computer science. We have to keep up, because students recognize that they need to know about computers. Many freshmen coming in have already had a year or two of computer science. In '74-'75, 26 students were enrolled in computer courses. This year 358 are enrolled. It's quite an explosion."

Aside from academic concerns, the Computer Center's largest undertaking at present is the writing "from scratch" of a student data base system for the Registrar, a project that is taking "three to four man-years of labor," according to Wright.

"I could find any student's name listed in at least 50 locations in this office," said Registrar George Howard. "Student names are in one part, data on students in another part, class lists and grades somewhere else. To change any piece of information, we have to go to each separate list and change it. Amazingly, we make very few mistakes. But under the data base, we'll be able to have everything together. Changing information will be a one-step process. For any student, we'll be able to call up a schedule, list of courses taken, grades, and so on. We have to generate class lists, produce the information for the telephone book, and accommodate changes on registration day. This will all be much easier in the future."

Contraceptives

Continued from Page 1

raging or promoting contraceptive use."

Hirsch anticipates "a very enthusiastic turnout" for the clinic. "We have done surveys over the past three years," he said. For example, Hirsch cited a written survey taken last year, answered by about 700 people, to which ninety percent of the respondents replied that they agreed in principle with a student-run clinic and would use the clinic if the need arose.

Cross-burning anniversary—

Continued from Page 1

had a major impact on the numbers," said Director of Admissions Phil Smith, "but we were saved because we worked like crazy."

"We've gotten a lot of questions about it from applicants this year, but if this anniversary doesn't get picked up by the national press," said Smith, "we're thinking we'll do as well

"The point is that the need is obviously out there. I've gotten calls from people asking when the clinic was going to open, even before we knew if it was going to open," Hirsch commented.

He sees the clinic as a "powerful supplement to some of the other programs we (Peer Health Counseling) offer, such as free pregnancy testing."

"Above all," Hirsch concluded, "this is another means of getting someone to take care of his own health."

or better than last year."

Mike Reed, assistant director of admissions, who is in charge of minority admissions, says that during his recruiting and interviews this year, no one has mentioned the cross burning.

"Racism doesn't seem to be associated with Williams in people's minds, but at least for this year, it's too early to tell," he said.

Field hockey beats NASC

by Bea Bast

This past Saturday, Women's Field Hockey shut out North Adams State College, 4-0, and thereby finished its season with a winning record of 7-2-1. Attack and defense worked very well together to dominate the half and score the four goals of the game. Freshman Emily Sneath started the scoring with two goals, the second one pushed past the goalie after a corner shot from Beth Connolly '82. Wendy Brown '82 scored the third goal for Williams on a centering pass from Emily Sneath. Williams' final goal was scored on a penalty stroke by Allison Earle '84. Though the second half remained scoreless, Williams continued to control the play and secure the victory.

The varsity lost by one goal last Wednesday to Dartmouth's aggressive Division I team. The fatal goal was scored within the last three minutes of the tied 1-1 game. Williams dominated the first half of the game, taking the initial lead after Bea Fuller '83 scored the first goal.

Saturday, Oct. 17, both varsity and JV defeated Amherst by respective scores of 2-0 and 3-0. The varsity's attack passed the ball well during the game enabling Brown and Jane Rech '85 to score the two goals for Williams. During the JV game left wing Peggy Southard '84 scored all three goals. This victory made girls' field hockey the Little Three Champions.

This new honor was celebrated immediately with champagne and cake on the field.

Cross-enrollment criticized

by Julia Geniesse

Mix-ups, a lack of communication, and a lack of information have led to a vaguely defined and unpublished policy on cross-enrollment between Williams and North Adams State College. Several Williams students are now enrolled in Italian or Accounting courses at NASC.

The exchange program began in 1972 as an agreement between the Deans of both colleges to allow up to ten students from each institution to cross-enroll free of charge. If the number of students from either school were to exceed ten, then tuition would be paid by the extra students.

Problems have arisen, according to Dean Daniel O'Connor, because the tendency each year is for more than ten Williams students to want to enroll at NASC, while only one or so from North Adams comes here. "From their point of view,

NOTICE

Any student interested in taking Italian 102 this Spring at Williams should contact Dean O'Connor immediately.

NOTICE

Tuesday night's Housing Committee meeting will address the possibility of converting West College into a permanent member of Spencer-Brooks house. Interested students should attend the meeting at 7 p.m. in Spencer House living room.

CLASSIFIEDS

SURPLUS JEEPS, cars and trucks available. Many sell under $200. Call 312-742-1143, Ext. 5924, for information on how to purchase.

UPS Mailing, 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole.

A North Adams defenseman challenges a Williams onslaught in last Saturday's action. Williams shut out their North Adams foes, 4-0, bringing their final season record to 7-2-1.

Gridders bow to Tufts—

Continued from Page 8

field goal attempt was blocked. One final attempt came when a Tufts quick kick gave the Ephs the ball on the Jumbos' 36 yard line. A 10-yard Connolly to Taylor hook up brought the ball to the 26. Six yards and three plays later, Coomber tried yet another field goal in hopes of tying the game. The 47 yarder went just wide to the right—as did the Ephs' hopes of victory.

Beat Bowdoin

The previous week, the Ephs turned around a potentially disastrous season by showcasing a new offense and crushing Bowdoin, 15-0. All the scoring came in the first half thanks to a new I-formation option-oriented offense led by Connolly, Wheatley, and Thomas.

The defense, led by junior lineman Gary Pfaff, had 12 sacks against All-America candidate John Theberge, the Bowdoin quarterback. They shut down the potentially awesome Bowdoin offense, just one week after Bowdoin toppled Tufts.

The scoring came on a safety by Thomas Alejandro, who blocked a Bowdoin punt out of the end zone for the Ephs' first two points. The Ephs took the ensuing free kick to the Polar Bears' 41 yard line. Strong running by Connolly and Wheatley (18 carries, 105 yards, 1 TD) set up a 22 yard touchdown pass from Connolly to senior tight end Craig Overlander. Coomber's kick made it 9-0.

A second quarter Connolly 16 yard pass to Wheatley capped a 50 yard drive to give the Ephs an insurmountable 15-0 lead. Next week the Ephs travel to Schenectady, N.Y. to take on Union in hopes of improving their 2-3 seasonal record.

didate John Theberge, the Bowdoin quarterback. They shut down the potentially awesome Bowdoin offense, just one week after Bowdoin toppled Tufts.

The scoring came on a safety by Thomas Alejandro, who blocked a Bowdoin punt out of the end zone for the Ephs' first two points. The Ephs took the ensuing free kick to the Polar Bears' 41 yard line. Strong running by Connolly and Wheatley (18 carries, 105 yards, 1 TD) set up a 22 yard touchdown pass from Connolly to senior tight end Craig Overlander. Coomber's kick made it 9-0.

A second quarter Connolly 16 yard pass to Wheatley capped a 50 yard drive to give the Ephs an insurmountable 15-0 lead. Next week the Ephs travel to Schenectady, N.Y. to take on Union in hopes of improving their 2-3 seasonal record.

It looks like freeloading," said O'Connor. The issue has been confused further by the fact that the option of paying tuition had been lost or forgotten over the years.

Because the conditions of the cross-enrollment program have never been printed in the Bulletin, several students were unaware that cross-enrollment for a fifth course is not allowed, except to make up a failure. Jenny McPhee '84, who had registered for Introductory Italian as a fifth course, pass/fail, said, "I never would have known I was in violation of the rule unless I had gone to Dean O'Connor."

Several possibilities have been suggested. One is to allow students who wish to enroll after the 10-student limit has been filled to pay tuition. When asked why that option had not been proffered, when it was part of the original plan, O'Connor answered, "You're right, that's an inconsistency."

Another possibility that O'Connor has considered is reinstituting Italian classes at Williams, which have not been offered since 1976. According to Anne Marie Camerota '84, also enrolled at NASC in Italian, her professor there would "be more than willing to have more Williams students come to his classes."

O'Connor also agreed to consider permitting Williams students to audit courses at NASC, which is forbidden as the policy now stands.

Loan authority contemplated

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Because sources of government financial aid may soon dry up, the Massachusetts state legislature is expected to approve the formation of a bonding authority which will provide funds to colleges and universities to supplement student loan programs.

This measure was proposed by the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Massachusetts' (AICUM) executive committee, which is chaired by College President John Chandler.

The authority will be called the Massachusetts Higher Education Student Loan Authority. It will sell bonds, lending the resulting money to Massachusetts colleges, thus partially offsetting next spring's projected cuts in the Federal Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program.

"The main purposes of the authority will be to sell the bonds and to determine the credit worthiness of the borrowing institution," explained Chandler. "The colleges will then be free to lend the funds as they see fit, but will be responsible to the authority for payment of the loans."

Colleges will be required to put up a college building or a fraction of its endowment as collateral. Chandler expects that Williams will use a combination of the two.

The loans will probably carry

13 percent interest. Part of the interest will be used to cover the administrative costs of the bonding authority, leaving a slightly lower return for the investors.

"It makes more financial sense to be using the authority's money at 13 percent interest for student loans than to dip into the college's endowment funds, which currently earn between 16 and 17 percent," Chandler said.

The plan calls for interest earned by investors to be tax-free, thus requiring its approval by the state legislature.

"There may be a lot of dependence on this program," responded Chandler when asked how much Williams will rely on the authority for assistance. "For the '81-'82 school year about 1200 students borrowed $2.8 million under the GSL program. The college lent about $641,000 to financial aid students. It is we hope that the authority will help us take up the slack caused by the expected cut in the GSL program. It depends on how large the cut is."

AICUM is a lobbying organization which in the past has fought against bills allowing local governments to impose per student head taxes on colleges and classify dormitories as hotels, permitting a similar tax. The executive committee, chaired by Chandler, is responsible for planning and policy.

The Record will run classifieds at 25¢ per line. Deadlines are 4:00 p.m. Fridays. Total amount due must accompany this form. Mail or bring in person to Classifieds, The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Mass. 01267.

NAME _____	PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____	TOTAL ENCLOSED _____

AD TO READ AS FOLLOWS:

	1
	2
	3
	4
	5
	6

1-800-24-6580. Call collect. Positions must be filled quickly.

SCIENCE/MATH SKILLS WANT-ED: Overseas opportunity demanding self-confidence and maturity. You'll work with people of all ages in urban or rural settings. Jobs in over 60 foreign countries. Tremendous challenge. Learn about yourself and others. It's the Peace Corps. Is it for you?

SCIENCE TEACHER: Elementary school has openings for two science teachers.

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film & info - 7:00 p.m., Oct. 27,
Interviews - 9:00 - 4:30, Oct. 27 & 28,
OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING.

Soccer team tops Tufts

by Dave Woodworth

Running its unbeaten string to four straight victories, the men's varsity soccer team knothed a 1-0 win over Tufts on Saturday, and improved its record to 3-4-1.

The lone goal of the game was posted by John Campbell '84 at 76:48, as he took a cross from Jim Leonard '82 and hit a twlst-ing drive that just cleared the post. The Williams defense made the score stand up, as goalkeeper Vince Brandstein '84 registered 13 saves in shutting out the Jumbos.

The unbeaten streak began two weeks ago with the Ephs' 2-1 win over Trinity, and was extended to three straight as Williams beat Bates and tied Bowdoin over Fall Reading Period. Both games were played in very windy conditions, and forced the Ephs to resort to a short passing game that proved to be quite effective.

The Bates game featured a rare goal on a corner kick. With 12:22 gone in the first half, Doug McKenney '85 hit a cross that was deflected over the endline by a Bates fullback, giving Williams the corner. Rob Kusel '83 hit the ball on net, and Bates goalkeeper Tom McQuillan hesitated, undecided on whether to catch the ball or punch it over the crossbar. McQuillan wound up punching the ball into the net, giving the Ephs a 1-0 lead. What made the goal even more remarkable was the fact that it was hit into the wind. Kusel's tally was the only one needed by Williams, as goalkeeper Ken Rhodes '85 made six saves and showed a strong kicking game.

The Bowdoin game marked the first time this year that Williams has come from behind to win or salvage a tie. The first half was scoreless, as the Eph defense, led by Aytaç Apaydin '83 and Co-captains Reg Jones '82 and Brian Daniell '82 keyed on the Polar Bears outstanding forward Kwami Poku and held him in check. At 58:28, however, some confusion on the part of the Ephs led to a loose ball which the ubiquitous Poku deflected into the net. Williams, however, would not be denied, and pressed the attack. Finally, at 85:18, Austin Lehr '83 penetrated the Bowdoin back line and made a perfect pass to Dave Nasser '83, who chipped the ball into the goal. Although Williams had the better of the play in overtime, it could not tally, and was forced to settle for the 1-all tie.

Coach Mike Russo said that the team "is playing with confidence and composure. Without the first third of the season, we are 3-0-1; the final third, which starts today against Babson, will decide our season."

Ted Chase here outdribbles a stocky Tufts opponent. Williams soccer went on to victory, beating the Jumbos 1-0 in the game last Saturday. (Govan)

Offense falters as Gridders fall, 9-6

by Steve Epstein

The revitalized Williams offense played a solid first half for the second consecutive week, but failed to score on two key opportunities, and the Ephs fell to Tufts, 9-6, last Saturday at Weston Field.

Two missed Rich Coomber field goals in the second half spelled defeat. The Ephs had hoped to fare better against an uncharacteristically vulnerable Jumbos squad that has beaten them in their last six straight meetings.

The football gods seemed to smile on the Ephs in the first half, but still they could manage only two field goals by Coomber, who looked good all day despite his two misses.

Halfback Jay Wheatley ran the first offensive play for a 10-yard gain to give the Ephs a 1-goal situation, but an incomplete pass and a sack left Williams with a 4-goal on the Jumbos' 19 yard line. A 36-yard Coomber field goal was automatic to propell the Ephs into a 3-0 lead—just two minutes into the game.

On their next possession, the Ephs had another three. A B.J. Connolly to Micah Taylor pass completion set up a first down and goal inside the 10—but for the second time the Ephs couldn't get the ball into the end-zone. Coomber's 22 yarder made it 6-0.

For the next 20 minutes, both teams played scoreless football, with the Ephs defense led by Steve Doherty, Gary Pfaff, and Tom Bouchard.

Possibly the best Eph scoring drive of the season occurred in the final minutes of the first half, but the drive would be emblematic of the frustration the Ephs would suffer all day long. They traveled 70 yards on 7 plays thanks largely to a 31 yard run by freshman fullback Ted Thomas, and a questionable pass interference call, which set up a 1-10 on the Trinity 34 yard line. From there the drive stalled again, and Coomber's 49 yard field goal attempt had the distance, but was wide right.

The first play of the second half was indicative of a swing in momentum. Williams took the opening kickoff to their own 5, and on the first play from scrimmage, Connolly was dropped in the end zone for a safety, to make the score 6-2.

The ensuing free kick by Coomber was a masterpiece, giving Tufts the ball on their own 10 yard line. From there, Tufts began a 19 play, 90-yard drive that resulted in the only touchdown of the day.

The conversion made it 9-6 Tufts, with 22 minutes still to play in the game.

A third period drive by the Ephs began when defensive back Darrell White intercepted a pass on the Williams 34 yard line. Connolly's passing and running on the option brought the Ephs to a first down inside the Tufts 5-yard line. For the third time of the day, the Ephs couldn't hit paydirt from inside the 5. Things went from bad to worse when Coomber's 27 yard

Continued on Page 7

Despite this fine run by Jay Wheatley, and two field goals by Rich Coomber, Williams fell to Tufts, 9-6, in last Saturday's football game. The loss brings the Ephs' record to 2-3. (Farley)

Field hockey: confusing but fun

by Steve Epstein

Saturday was a perfect day for football. It wasn't as nice two hours earlier on Cole Field when the Eph field hockey squad took on North Adams. The day brightened immeasurably, however, when the first few goals were scored and it was apparent the women would coast to victory.

I've gotten a small amount of grief from Coach Christine Larson and various field hockey stars who happen to live near me, so I decided to take to Cole Field on Saturday, and see just what the game was all about.

The first thing that seemed outrageous was the team's dress, in lieu of the gale that was blowing in from the mountains and almost lifted Coach Larson off the bench on a couple of occasions. The short skirts blew in the wind, and the whole thing looked like a rather horrible ordeal, on a frigid windy day.

But despite frozen legs, the women seemed to be enjoying themselves thoroughly. Bea Fuller continually penetrated the North Adams defense, Beth Connolly hustled continually (with the wind chill, stopping might have killed her) and the whole team was doing great. I think.

There wasn't much I understood, except that each team was trying to score by hitting a little ball into the other team's net. But every couple of minutes, half the defending team would get out of the way, while the other half stood toe-to-toe in the net trying to stop the opposing team from scoring. It was incomprehensible, but it probably was good strategy in that huddling together made it both harder for the opponents to score, and also helped conserve body heat.

EPHUSIONS

The key realization is that field hockey could never be played by men. First, there's no contact. Nobody was getting hurt. No blood, no screaming, no arguments with the referees.

How sportsmanlike, how gentle, how un-American! Also, one can't really get one's aggressions out on a field hockey ball. Nobody just winds up and wacks the sucker. It's a game of finesse, passing, teamwork. And these girls were doing it fantastically. Yuck!

Another fun realization was how low key the whole game was. Christine Larson shouted instructions from the sidelines like, "Please pass more," or "Try to do better," rather than the regular football-esque cries, I'm used to hearing from defensive coordinators like "Hit that $%-&$%*!!!"

Despite a serious head cold, I think I'm the better for checking out field hockey. I'm sure it's fun for those who play—and it's probably fun to watch if someone explains the rules.

One thing though, it seems like a good idea, if the team is going to play in a windstorm, that they put out a few bucks for skipants. Compared to football, think of all the bucks they save on padding.

Women's crew cruises

by Martha Platt

The weekend of fall reading period once again included that classic of crew regattas, the Head of the Charles on the Charles River in Boston. Boats from over one hundred colleges and rowing clubs gathered for the event. Williams copped honors for the women's varsity eight, which came in 16th out of forty entries, and the youth eight, which placed fifth.

Senior Janet Harmon said of the three-mile race, "This is what we worked for all fall, and it was over so fast I'd just love to do it again."

The novice squad's enthusiasm is of a similar nature as they anticipate learning more about the sport they are so new to. All are first year oarswomen at the college level, and only Janeth Keally '85 rowed in high school.

Sophomore Hope Bigelow expressed the general feelings of the team, saying that as people lerned to work together and improve, they became addicted to the sport. "Because most people had a good time," she said, "they're psyched to keep going and learning."

Crew flounders in Charles

by Lee Farbman

The men's crew closed out a good fall season with a trip to the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston last week. Williams entered the Championship Eight and Championship Four events, as well as two alumni boats in the club and mixed eights.

The Championship eight boat started out a bit on the shaky side, but after being passed by Trinity, quickly settled down. Unfortunately, the eight never got to prove itself. The University of Pennsylvania's crew hit the Williams crew as the boats were passing under the Weeks

Footbridge. The Penn stroke, in a rare display of poor sportsmanship used his oar as a bludgeon, poking a hole in the Williams boat, and narrowly missing four-man Dave Steyert. Williams completed the remaining mile and a half with the boat rapidly filling with water. Williams finished 33rd in the event; with Navy the eventual winner.

The Williams Four overcame some minor difficulties to row a good race. Number three seat Kevin Rochford broke a finger the night before the race, and Raf Francis was stroking a boat for the first time. Freshman coxswain Molly Tennis handled the tricky Charles course like a seasoned pro. Co-captains John Lodise and Mark Kindig completed the boat, which finished 35th.

The previous week, the crew journeyed to Middletown to take on the grueling 3½ mile Head of the Connecticut race. The Williams eight, stroked by Senior Greg Narver, started slowly, but quickly passed a boat anyhow. Andrew Grimes, Chuck Willing, and Rick Goldstein helped to provide the power that Coxswain Lee Farbman persistently called for. Williams finished in 15th place, only a minute behind the eventual winner, W.P.I. The Williams pair, George Baumgarten and Scott Schweighauser, rowed a powerful race to finish fifth. Coach John Peinert also rowed his single in a morning race.

The final event of the season was a 40-mile team row down the Hudson River last Saturday. The fall season ends with the captains and coach pleased with the crew's talent, and with the oarsmen psyched for winter training. The crew will be bolstered in the spring by the return of several fine oarsmen who sat out the fall season.

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 7

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

NOVEMBER 3, 1981

Former officers implicated Council abused SAT funds

by Philip Busch

A Record investigation has revealed that last year's College Council officers spent over $550 of Student Activities Tax money in direct violation of Council funding guidelines.

In addition, over $90 was spent for questionable although technically legal purposes. The total amount spent improperly was over one quarter of the Council's anticipated budget of $2000.

The Council Budget Guidelines state that SAT funds may be used only for entertainment open to the entire student body. Any such entertainment must be advertised campus-wide.

Despite this provision, then Council President Darrell McWhorter '81, Treasurer Russell Platt '82, Secretary Rachel Varley '83, and, in one case Vice-President John McCammond '81 used SAT money for two costly dinners at Mill on the Floss. In addition, McWhorter used funds for several private parties.

SAT money also was used to pay for champagne, beer, and snacks at several Council meetings.

McWhorter and Platt both admitted that the expenses may have been excessive, but defended their basic validity. Varley and McCammond are in Europe, and were unavailable for comment.

McWhorter, Platt, and Varley spent $110 at the fall officers' dinner at the Floss on November 11, 1980. The same three, plus McCammond, spent $177.45 at the same restaurant for the spring officers' dinner on March 11, 1981.

"At the time, the officers deemed the dinners a proper use of SAT funds," commented Platt. "The rationale was that we had discretionary funds, and that the dinners were traditional."

McWhorter, reached at his home in Cincinnati, also emphasized the traditional nature of the dinners. "Maybe they were a little excessive," he said, "but the Council presidency is a totally thankless job. I had a lot of support from the officers; they were a big help. I thought it was fine to take them out to dinner. I don't think that's greatly excessive."

Eugenia Smith, in charge of student accounts for the Comptroller's Office, could find no records of any restaurant bills having been paid with SAT funds in 1979-80, the year before McWhorter took office, nor any large cash payments to individuals that could have been used for dinners.

"They didn't go out that year," said Smith. "Or if they did, they paid out of their own pockets."

Allocations for every organization except the Council must be approved by the Finance Committee. SAT money is almost never allocated for food and drink, and any payment vouchers are (or should be) monitored by the Council Treasurer. The Council allocation, however, is not subject to Finance Committee approval, and its treasurer approves his own spending. The Comptroller's office does not thoroughly check vouchers. "If the treasurer has okayed it, it usually goes through," said Smith.

A $225.44 check was paid on January 31, 1981, to Thomas Black '81, a resident of Lambert House, also McWhorter's residence. It covered costs of a dinner and reception for Dizzy Gillespie held at Lambert House before his concert. The voucher was supported by a receipt from King's Liquor Store for $91.44 and from a supermarket for $82.05. No receipt was submitted for the additional $51.95. Although technically no money should be disbursed without a supporting receipt, it commonly is.

The reception was not open to the student body. Rather, McWhorter invited "everyone involved in bringing Gillespie to the campus." There were about 80 people there, including quite a few faculty. "Unfortunately, Gillespie was not among them. 'He got in late,'" explained McWhorter, "and he was doing sound tests."

When asked why the dinner was paid for by the College Council rather than by the Concert Commission, McWhorter responded, "It was my idea, and the Concert Commission was on a tight budget."

The Concert Commission was not the only organization on a tight budget last year. In the Record of February 17, McWhorter declared "we are under economic constraints."

Last year's Finance Committee trimmed $25,000 from campus organization's budget requests, and later in the year Pique and

Continued on Page 8

Muhammed Kenyatta '81 speaks out against racism in Chapin Hall (Farley)

Kenyatta raps racism's roots

by Susan Kandel

Reverend Muhammed Kenyatta '81 attributed the cause of racism at Williams to the competition for limited resources in an address held last Sunday, on the first anniversary of last year's cross burning.

Speaking to a capacity crowd in Chapin Hall, Kenyatta focused on the issues of racism and responsibility in a speech entitled, "Race, Ethnic and Education at Williams."

The speech was followed by small group discussions led by various faculty members and student leaders.

Kenyatta maintained that the roots of racism at Williams are largely institutional, rather than attitudinal.

"Eighteen years ago, 1150 spots for one of the best educational bargains in this country were offered to white American males here," said Kenyatta. "But today, there are only 975 spots for those same males."

"Racism is thus not a question of attitude, but has to do with the objective reality of how scarce goods will be allocated," he said.

Kenyatta pointed to the faculty as being equally guilty of this competition, specifically for tenure spots, to the detriment of minority faculty recruitment.

"There is a tendency to blame the administration, but everyone at Williams knows that the last word on faculty recruitment isn't made in Hopkins Hall unless the departments happen to be holding their meetings there," he added.

Kenyatta sharply criticized the student body for not doing enough to convey to the College the notion that education at Williams would be enhanced by an interracial faculty.

"In our heart of hearts, we know that the institution and the students haven't quite concluded that just as people of color are fit consumers of an education at Williams, so people of color have something of invaluable worth to add to the production of that education," said Kenyatta.

"Just as we wouldn't attempt to run a college without a chemistry department in this day and age, neither can we call ourselves an institution achieving our best when there is de facto segregation of our faculty because of that competition," he said.

Kenyatta further noted that a potential source of racist attitudes might be found within the College's curriculum.

"Does our curriculum even bother to address the world outside the North Atlantic? And if so, is it with eyes that are Westernized, patronizing and even at their well-meaning best, paternalizing?" asked Kenyatta.

Kenyatta also urged the administration to take a hard look at its investments in South Africa and the implications they might hold for racial attitudes.

"We can take what I call the 'Ronald Reagan attitude' of openly embracing the apartheid regime as a partner," said Kenyatta, "or we can take a position of total ostracism of that regime, which is a position I have advocated for a long time."

Kenyatta claimed that solutions can be found to the problem of racism, due to "that self-proclaimed responsibility of this institution."

"The administration should be praised when it is doing well, but it also has to be nudged when it isn't," said Kenyatta, "and a vital part of our education is taking the responsibility to do that."

"If there is a responsibility here, it is tied up with the idea of leadership," he concluded. "These are not issues we can start answering when we walk across this stage to get our degrees. They will be answered here and now by the leadership we show now."

Overcome by a Kafkaesque change, some students were seen climbing the walls over Monday's Art 101 exam. (Doherty)

Inside the Record

Winter Study	p. 3
All-nighters:
A study	p. 4
Gaudino: A legacy	p. 7
Complain, complain	p. 9
More faculty	p. 10
Honor Ephraim	p. 11
XC wins
Little Three	p. 12

West to join Spencer, Woodbridge

by Lynn Vendinello

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) last week approved a Housing Committee proposal to affiliate West College with Spencer and Woodbridge Houses and to combine Brooks House, currently linked to Spencer, with Perry, Chadbourne and Bascom Houses.

The Housing Committee decided at an open meeting last Tuesday against making West a separate house because it would receive insufficient college funds and would have inadequate facilities for parties and other functions.

The proposed new housing combinations would each have about 100 students. West is currently overflow housing for Spencer-Brooks and Perry-Bascom.

"Changing West is a great idea," said Sherry Blum '83, a West representative to the Housing Committee. "West is too segregated, no one feels any house spirit. Floors gather but the house doesn't as a whole."

The Housing Committee suggested that several bedrooms in West be converted into a common meeting room to encourage unity.

Changing West's affiliation may affect the students living in the other Row Houses. William Grous '82, Spencer House president, remarked, "No matter what combination of houses we decide on, whoever doesn't have Spencer is going to be unhappy."

Dean Grodzins '83 said, "I'm in Woodbridge for this year, but what about next year? Can I still go to Brooks?"

Members of the committee also noted that affiliating West with another house would not necessarily mean the two houses would unite. Tim Caffrey '82, Perry House president, said, "Look at Agard and Wood—the people there don't really know each other."

The plan received unanimous approval from the CUL and will be implemented next fall. Dean Cris Roosenraad, chairman of the CUL, remarked after the vote, "This is an excellent, creative proposal."

He noted that the elimination of Row House dining had made this realignment possible, since "Brooks had the dining for Spencer."

Cure the Winter Study Blues

Winter Study's long-running performance is up for its most critical review in years. While such an evaluation casts a shadow over future encore performances, it also represents an opportunity to address dissatisfaction with the format, propose constructive changes, and recharge enthusiasm for the January term.

Winter Study's current malaise stems from perceptions held by faculty and students that the program has become a designated play-time: a reward for first semester's efforts and a promissory note for a productive second semester. Both faculty and students deserve partial blame for this attitude. Faculty feel guilty demanding too much of students during the non-graded period. This often leads to watered down courses, presented out of fear no one will enroll in a rigorous study or project. Students sense this reluctance and exploit it, often bragging about choosing the least demanding and least time-consuming course. The vicious circle is completed when faculty rightfully wonder why they should devote valuable time to prepare an additional course when students are unwilling to reciprocate the time and work commitment.

The essence behind Winter Study has been muddled. Clearly, the workload should not mirror the academic pressure cooker of the regular semester. However, Winter Study should be a time to redirect the semester's creative energies from pure academics to alternative forms of education.

Unique academic and experiential opportunities provided by Winter Study courses are just a few of the many advantages the January term offers. Winter Study is a valuable time for students to pursue honors theses, off-campus 99's, and to participate in organized study-travel trips. For the faculty, who are currently required to offer a Winter Study course every other year, January is a prime opportunity to work on personal research and publishing.

On campus, theater performances, concerts, lectures and outdoor sports are all at a premium during the month. For upperclassmen, Winter Study is a good chance to visit Career Counseling and investigate summer internships, graduate schools, and post-graduate employment opportunities.

Perhaps Winter Study's greatest asset is its relaxed social atmosphere. Without external academic pressures, students can enjoy and strengthen friendships. At the same time, Winter Study can be a period for personal reflection. Students can catch their breath after a harried semester and have the chance to evaluate the educational value of being at Williams.

Despite its advantages and positive attributes, Winter Study needs a renewed commitment from both students and faculty. Grading course offerings is not the solution. While it would improve the commitment to Winter Study, grading would serve only to discourage students from experimenting in unfamiliar academic and experiential realms. Academic pressures of the regular semester would hang over students' heads and take much of the luster off January's extracurricular activities.

Replacing Winter Study with extended semesters would force students to take first semester final exams after Christmas vacation. Junior faculty, under pressure to publish or perish, would be at an even greater disadvantage without the January research time.

The solution rests in correcting the disparity between present course requirements. Wide-ranging differences in courses' time and work demands have drawn many students to the lower end of the commitment spectrum. Equalizing time commitments among courses may in itself serve to amend most existing flaws.

Winter Study is a valuable and unique educational opportunity that should be retained. While the Winter Study Review Committee should advocate greater student and faculty commitments, the committee should leave the program's basic structure intact.

Especially for students, the time to pledge renewed faith in the January term begins now. As with Row House dining, one truly appreciates the finer points of Williams only when they are gone.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

All offended

To the editor:

I would like to say that I was quite offended at the quote in last week's Record's article on the Cross burning that read "The cross burning and what came after were an insult not just to blacks, but to anyone who isn't Caucasian." Excuse me, Kathy Finnell, but I beg to differ. The cross burning was an insult to everyone, regardless of their race. I am white, and I was profoundly disgusted and insulted by this expression of bigotry and prejudice. I do not ignore the sad fact that there are many whites—and for that matter many others—who are prejudiced. But to therefore assume that all whites are racists is to condemn the whole because of the actions of the few. This is prejudice, as bad as any other form of prejudice. Kathy Finnell's statement personifies the attitudes that are hindering our progress towards a prejudice-free future for ourselves and our children, an attitude that excludes whites as the enemy in attempts to abolish prejudice forever.

In the editorial on racial problems at Williams was a line that read, "Whites and blacks try to ignore their differences..." I would contend that the opposite is true. The differences are announced loudly and frequently, so that little opportunity is given to students to realize their similarities, and to become friends. Many people—believe it or not—do not see the world's population in terms of racial, religious, economic or ethnic divisions. I am one of those people. But the way in which racism is dealt with on the Williams campus—on an adversary basis—frustrates my every attempt to go beyond the barriers. I don't ignore the fact that someone is black but I really don't consider this fact in any way to be of primary importance in terms of that person. The essential quality of a person has nothing to do with his color. So what if you are black? I'm white. So what? Now why don't we stop worrying about it and start thinking about each other as people, not colors.

I am not a racist or a bigot. I don't care what your skin color is, what your religion is, what your income level is. And I

Continued on Page 6

OUTLOOK

Winter Study: Promise and Performance

By Rich Henderson

Editor's Note: The following article presents a comprehensive history of the Winter Study Program at Williams. Its concentration on the changing and various perceptions of the program is particularly appropriate as Winter Study is, once again, the current subject of controversy and criticism. The preliminary report of the 1981-82 Review Committee is due.

There is confusion on the Williams campus regarding the purposes and potentials of Winter Study.

Some people see it as a time to enjoy the intellectual, social, and natural pleasures of Williamstown at their own pace rather than one imposed by the pressures of tests and grades. A few use it as an excuse to spend a month at a ski resort. Others look forward to it as a chance to do some intense research or to explore something not offered in the normal curriculum. And there are those who see it as a pain in the neck, a month that adds problems far out of proportion to any benefits received.

Without a clear perception of what Winter Study is intended to be, each of these viewpoints becomes valid. After 13 WSPs the meaning of the program seems to be up in the air; Winter Study can become whatever the College community wants it to be. The time has indeed come for a recommitment, either to Winter Study's original principles or to a new doctrine. If Williams cannot make such a commitment, some say the noble experiment ought to be abandoned altogether.

Original Proposals

The Winter Study Period was an integral part of a major curricular change proposed by the Committee on Educational Policy in the spring of 1966. The changes, designed to relieve the "regularity, fragmentation, and overload" present in the two-semester, five-course curriculum, featured a reduction of the student's semester load from five courses to four and the establishment of the Winter Study period in the month vacated by newly shortened semesters.

The Winter Study Program was intended to relieve the "insistent pattern" of twelve straight semesters, by giving "the student a change of pace and opening new horizons for him." According to the C.E.P. proposal, the courses "should encourage students to participate in an educational experience which, with its concentration in one area and its emphasis on individual initiative, should be significantly different from that of a four course semester."

Academics Stressed

For the C.E.P., Winter Study's value was as a serious educational endeavor. The expected effects of the program upon students were seen in academic terms: "a chance to concentrate on a single subject or single problem," encouragement of independent study, and an opportunity to expand intellectual horizons by taking courses in new fields.

Values now frequently associated with Winter Study—experiential programs like traveling, internships, and skill-oriented courses; more free time; better social life; more opportunity for cultural activity—were conspicuously absent from the proposal. "It was assumed that January would be a less intense period than the frenzied regular semesters," Chandler recalls. However, the emphasis was on academics of a relatively conventional sort. "There was a lot of stress on the experimental character of the program," Chandler says of the mid-sixties debate on the proposal. "Faculty members could experiment with subject matter and techniques," but the basic structure was that of an intensive academic mini-course.

The first Winter Study period in 1968 was dominated by these academic mini-courses; only 10 percent of the catalog offerings were classified as experiential or skill courses. But the next year saw a new trend, when "experiential education became popular throughout the country," Chandler says. As the easiest place in the Williams curriculum to fit in experiential courses, "Winter Study became the vehicle for this new curricular mood," says Chandler. "I suspect that the regular curriculum was not buffeted by these currents because Winter Study was a kind of safety valve."

Changing Mood

This changing mood is reflected in the course offerings presented in the 1968-77 Winter Study catalogs. Through the decade, the percentage of academic courses declined steadily, dropping below 50 percent by 1976. Experiential, skill, and independent/thesis courses became more frequent, while the number of students taking independent 99's grew quickly in the first five years.

Also changing over the years were attitudes towards Winter Study among faculty and students. While in 1971, the faculty voted unanimously to support the program, Chandler recalls, by the middle of the decade many faculty members were expressing dissatisfaction with it.

The Annual Report to the Faculty from the 1975 Winter Study Committee concluded that the current criticism had "been voiced, and considered, during the five years in which the Faculty debated the Winter Study plan before they finally adopted it" in 1966. "Many who have joined the Faculty recently... do not really understand what it was designed to accomplish."

Recommitment

The Committee called for a recommitment to the original principles of Winter Study by "explaining to newer faculty members... which of the things normally required by the academic courses in the two semesters the study in the January term deliberately undertakes not to do, and demands to the initiative of every student."

A surprising premise from 1966 restated by the report was "that if one-third of the students did superior work during the Winter Study Period, another third satisfactory work, and a remaining third work that was only indifferent, the program would be considered a success." The committee expressed its conviction that "though a student can flub off easily in his WSP for one or two years... we doubt that any number of them will be content to do so through all of their four Winter Studies."

The report also contains a now-common admission that Winter Study's greatest value to the students was not necessarily gained from academic courses: "much of the educational value to them of the January term comes from using their free time on campus... in individual ways which our mere pass-fail grade in a single course does not measure."

While affirming Winter Study's value and appeal for students, the committee recognized the problems the program caused for faculty members. The extra course was difficult to prepare, involving a lot of extra work and pressure for faculty, and if students did not take it seriously it felt to many like a waste of valuable time and energy. Despite the demoralization some faculty experienced during Winter Study, the committee still saw great opportunities for faculty in the program: "By asking each member of the Faculty... to consult his own intellectual interests, and not just the academic needs of his department, we hoped to bump us all a bit out of our ruts in the teaching of our semester courses."

The report reiterated the 1966 hope that the program would act as "a mechanism for loosening up and vivifying the entire yearly curriculum." The committee was convinced that this had indeed happened, when new subjects or methods developed in the January period spilled over into the regular semesters to form successful, imaginative courses.

Continued Dissatisfaction

Despite this 1975 attempt to reunite the Faculty behind Winter Study's performance, many faculty members continued to have serious reservations about the Program. A 1977 re-evaluation report admitted that "a number of faculty have criticized the trend" towards more experiential and skill courses "and urge a 'tightening up.'" Yet the report concluded "that the present diversity of WSP offerings is no cause for alarm and is, in fact, more in keeping with the original philosophy of Winter Study than was the earlier overwhelming emphasis on academic mini-courses."

A special reviewing committee working in 1978-79 based its considerations upon a 1978 faculty survey on Winter Study that revealed considerable concern among faculty over a deterioration of standards within the program. One of two plan criticized it as a further withdrawal of the faculty from the program and a further devaluation of Winter Study's stature in the curriculum.

Guidelines

In an effort to encourage students to do more than just the bare minimum of work to pass their courses the committee proposed to institute a "perfunctory pass" grade for those students who fulfill the requirements of a course without putting any serious effort into it.

A third proposal adopted by the Faculty was a set of guidelines regarding the amount and quality of work that students were expected to do in their courses and 99's. The guidelines were a significant step away from the attitudes still expressed in 1975. No longer were students supposed to work or not work as they saw fit; they were now expected to produce "a minimum effort of 20 hours per week" in their projects, which were to be graded not "exclusively on expertise or command of subject matter per se, but also on the effort and seriousness of purpose which students have devoted to their projects."

These recommendations were a far cry from the "individual initiative" and freedom to "flub off" and do "indifferent" work accepted in earlier years as basic premises of the program. Apparently students' initiative was insufficient; many did not take their courses seriously. Guidelines and a new grade fourth expressed a desire for more consistent standards; one-fourth preferred more stringent academic standards; one-fourth wanted to see the entire program substituted or abolished; one-fifth said they would like a reduced teaching load. One-third of those surveyed felt that there was a lack of rigor and seriousness displayed by students, while one-fourth felt the same was true of the faculty.

Modifications

The committee's five proposals, adopted by the faculty in April 1979, were directed at alleviating these concerns by setting up a structure that would ensure a certain level of standards by which faculty offerings and student work could be judged, and by reducing the faculty time commitment to the Program.

The most controversial proposal was that "faculty teaching loads be reduced to offering a project one of every two WSP's instead of two of every three." Proponents argued that the move would respond to the common complaint, mostly from younger faculty, that the extra work Winter Study requires did not allow them enough time to do their research or to prepare their second semester courses. Opponents of the one-were needed to enforce some minimum work level.

Let's Be Serious

The students were not the only people at fault in not taking Winter Study seriously. Some courses required practically nothing of students. The committee proposed to have Winter Study courses reviewed more stringently by appointing a Coordinator of Winter Studies who would screen course offerings. Proponents hoped that this broader view would produce more consistent workloads.

The 1979 modifications seemed to have failed. The usual student reaction to the 1979 guidelines is an incredulous "What, 20 hours of work? Who are they kidding?", while faculty continue to shake their heads, mourn the failure of learning for learning's sake, and give up on even trying to teach seriously in January. If the present reviewing committee, called for in the 1979 proposals, is to produce a viable educational program for Winter Study, it must overcome these attitudes; whatever form Winter Study may assume over the next year or two, it must have the serious commitment of both Faculty and students. Otherwise, we'll have yet another painful review process a couple of years down the road.

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

All-nighters: An exhaustive study

by Ron Issen

Jon (not his real name) sits in a darkened room. The shades are drawn. A lone lamp is on, pouring light over a small pile of books. Papers are scattered all over the floor. Jon's shaking, a broken and shattered man. Every five minutes or so, Jon lifts his head, glances about himself wildly, and shrieks, "Bismarck ate avocados!" Jon is not a happy man. Jon's lonely. Jon's studying for midterms. And... Jon's had too little sleep.

Muffy (also not Jon's real name) is studying in the lounge. A syllabus rests on her knee, twenty books are in her lap and a hi-liter is in her mouth. With a cigarette in one hand and coffee in the other, Muffy peers woozily at the clock. Her green hair ribbon clashes with her skirt, her cardigan sweater doesn't match her bobby socks, and her ponytail is off center. Her monograms are misspelled and she's wearing socks with her Toppers.

Muffy is a confused and distraught young woman.

Muffy is also studying for midterms and... she's had too little sleep.

The stories of students not getting enough sleep are legion. One junior related to me how, in his opinion, food and sleep were the big "yins" and "yangs" of life, and that a deficiency in one could be made up by simply adjusting one's intake of the other accordingly. This logical conclusion led one follower of this philosophy to ingest 16 eggs for breakfast at one sitting, a feat almost as impressive as the 98 straight hours he had stayed up working on his paper prior to his gastronomic accomplishment.

Others attempt to stay awake by trying to work in the most uncomfortable position possible: writing while standing up, with one leg resting on a chair behind them, with alarm clocks going off every fifteen minutes... well, you get the picture. Not getting enough sleep is like the Deja Vu Lounge: we all know we've been there before.

It's 4 a.m. WCFM just went off. Your stereo is broken, your coffee pot is empty, your palms are sweaty and your arms are shaking. You consider calling President Chandler, just for kicks, to find out what he really thinks about eating garlic in a pink taffeta dress.

You are confused. You are beginning to lose it. Your mind begins to wander while your bed opens her alluring arms and beckons you to come join her. Frustrated, in a mad, crazed animal passion, you try calling Colonial Pizza.

You are a deeply disturbed individual.

Desperate, you run out of your room, and empty your roommate's pipe on your head. But it is of no use. You too are studying for midterms. You too are lonely. And... you too have had too little sleep.

Welcome to... The Twilight Zone, and the world of the never turned off lamp.

For some of us, the problem is not only chronic, it is almost a way of life. And yet, it wasn't always this way. Chris O'Neill came to Williams a mere 14 months ago with a song in his heart, and a check for Phil

Smith in his pocket. A small, scrappy fighter, he came to this city of big lights, this city of broad shoulders, this hub, this Williamstown, a different man. He was young. He was impressionable. He was free from acne. Now, he studies at all hours of the night. "But I can't! I have to read Queen Elizabeth by tomorrow," Chris tells the scantily clad freshman in his room.

Chris is a sick young man. And... he's been getting too little sleep.

Concerned for Chris's health, as well as my continued access to his coffee pot, I went to Prof. R. G. L. Waite, historian, to get a perspective on the problem. "The problem is chronic. The problem is historic—for years undergraduates have been suffering," responded the professor.

What a crazy college life. All around, the "bleary eyed" look seems to be in. Studying til' 6 a.m., that's the life, eh baby? Dr. Talbot, college psychiatrist, thinks not.

Talbot maintains that with a chronic lack of sleep people "can feel desperate, truly quite desperate." All of us have cyclical sleep patterns—times of the day when we are more awake than at others. Yet academics, preoccupations, worries about other affairs, and problems "with one's social life or lack thereof" can all contribute to the making of what is a chronic sleep problem. Especially around what Talbot refers to as "crunch" time, the number of people seeing him increases. As the doctor notes, this feeling of getting inadequate amounts of sleep can compound other problems to the point that insomnia becomes only a root of what is now a much larger and more serious set of problems.

Although not getting enough sleep can thus be a vicious circle, we often overestimate the

Continued on Page 8

Would you hire a Liberal Arts graduate?

by Donna Imhese

A disturbing amount of negative publicity about the practical value of a Liberal Arts education in the job market has surfaced recently. The majority of this publicity has focused on the increasing demand for college graduates with degrees in areas such as engineering, computer science, and business, and the consequent decreasing demand for graduates with degrees in arts and letters.

The New York Times published a series of articles over the last year on this subject. A major source of statistical information in these articles used to be the College Placement Council, an organization that conducts surveys and studies of beginning salary offers for college graduates. The Times states that "63 percent of the job offers reported by 184 placement offices at 161 colleges and universities around the nation had gone to engineering graduates, even though they made up only 7 percent of the graduating class." This has been coupled with the statement that the job market for liberal arts graduates has been relatively flat, and the prediction that it will continue to be so.

A College Placement Council report indicates that the most offers were made to graduates with degrees in electrical, mechanical and chemical engineering, computer science, and business—accounting, business administration and marketing.

In fact, Williams has been doing better than ever in recent years in terms of interviews on campus, job offers, and starting salary offers. Both Barbara-Jan Wilson, the director of the Office for Career Counseling, and Fatma Kassamali, the assistant director, believe that this has been due to the caliber of the Williams education and the quality of students that graduate. Wilson strongly believes that "It is not the major that is so important, but the type of student."

Williams presently has 95 companies, banks, and firms scheduled to interview on campus this academic year, up from 54 in 1979. Among these are accounting firms, such as Ernst & Whinney; companies, such as IBM, Mobil Oil, and Procter & Gamble; financial institutions such as Bankers Trust, Merrill Lynch, White, & Weld, and Morgan Guarantee Trust Co., as well as insurance companies, government organizations, and schools. In the past few weeks alone, nine companies have been added to the list, including Westinghouse and Owens-Corning.

The dramatic increase in the number of companies coming to Williams to interview in the past few years indicates that interest in Williams grads is strong. Kassamali points out that many of these companies have found that, in the long run, students from good liberal arts schools such as Williams are valuable employees.

While graduates from business and technical schools may be more productive in the short run because of their specialized training, Williams graduates prove to be superior in the long run because of organizational, analytical, writing, and interpersonal skills. In order to accommodate strong liberal arts graduates, companies, firms and banks are providing management/business training programs as part of the first year or two of employment.

President Chandler, in his

Princeton University

The Princeton University marching band was banned from performing its halftime show during the Princeton-West Point football game on October 10, Associated Press reports. Officials at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point objected to the sexual innuendoes of the Tiger band's halftime skits, especially after the furor raised by the band's skit at the Princeton-University of Delaware game on September 26. That performance, which included word-plays such as "organic" for "orgasm," reportedly offended some elderly Princeton alumni and, according to Princeton band president Michael Sanford, brought to bear "the very strong suggestion—lots of verbal heat—that it would be wise for us to change our ways."

The scripts for Princeton band's halftime skits—read over the stadium public address system as the band marches onto the field—are reviewed by a three-member panel of Princeton administrators before they take the air. One member of the panel, assistant dean of student affairs Karen Tibor, said that in the future she would be more cautious about approving such scripts.

The band's absence from the Army game was the first such absence from a Princeton game convocation address this fall, indicated what he felt were strengths of a Williams liberal arts education: "Learning as an end in itself is the central purpose of a liberal arts college."

In Other Ivory Towers

In 49 years.

Wesleyan University

About 200 people rallied October 12 against the Ku Klux Klan in response to demonstrations by that group in Connecticut. The event was marked by a rather small turnout, according to the Wesleyan Argus. If prospective students and their parents had not supplemented their ranks, the demonstrators were in danger of being outnumbered by the local press. Eight speakers addressed the crowd on topics ranging from a brief history of K.K.K. activities in Connecticut to racism and atrocities in South Africa.

One recurring theme in many of the speeches, however, was the connection between the spirit of the Klan and the activity of the government under the Reagan administration. "The Klan applauds when affirmative action programs are diluted," pointed out one speaker. Another common idea in the presentations was the discounting of the Klan as much of a threat in itself. The true danger, they said, lies in the spirit the group represents.

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute

The students eat, sleep, and work in the "hockey line."

Living out in the cold 24 hours a day for over a month, they devote their lives to the acquisition of prime seats for hockey games. Life for these R.P.I. students is in the line... apparently consists largely of huddling in their sleeping bags in an effort to stay warm; no permanent structures and no heating and cooking devices are allowed. A pizza man makes regular visits to feed the students and a "student senator" constantly checks to make sure the proper number of people are in line. While there are relatively few students who stay in line for as long as a month, in the last week before tickets are available the whole student union building is surrounded by students and sleeping bags.

After ten years of existence, the line has finally achieved national recognition. A CBS film crew went to R.P.I. in early October to do a feature on the line for the show "Morning with Charles Kuralt." The film crew interviewed the students in line, the hockey players and coaches, and others on campus in their attempt to document this ultimate manifestation of sports fanaticism.

The importance of good seat selection is apparently due to many poles which block the views of fans in the Field House where the home hockey games take place. The games, unsurprisingly, are well attended, with about 3,900 people usually turning out for each match.

Perry stages student drama

by Lori Miller

Students walking through Perry House this week may be surprised by the bright lights and unusual dialogue emanating from the living room. What these unsuspecting people will have encountered is a performance of Margaret, Are You Grieving, a play by Williams senior Cheryl Martin, which will be shown in Perry House the evenings of November 5, 6 and 7.

Margaret, Are You Grieving? focuses on a young career woman who returns home for her father's funeral. The father, we learn, was a drunk who frequently neglected his family, and the funeral, consequently, evokes more in his daughter than mere grief.

Although Martin denies that the play is autobiographical "In the real sense," she admits that her personal involvement in the piece runs deep. "The main character is in some ways really me," she says. "She expresses a facet of my personality which many people would never believe is there, but which exists nonetheless."

Margaret, Are You Grieving? represents Martin's first effort at playwriting. She accomplished much of the actual writing of the piece in a workshop held by theatre professor Jill Nassivera last spring. Additional revisions occurred when the play went on stage this fall.

"At that point I discovered that a lot of the dialogue I had written was impossible to speak," Martin says. "In the first version, I had made the language extremely direct and expressive of what the characters were feeling. Unfortunately, the result was very melodramatic. As I revised, I placed less and less stress on the dialogue, so that the final version has its greatest emphasis on the characters implied rather than stated communication."

Bringing Martin's characters to life is a small and surprisingly young cast. With a single exception, all of the actors are freshmen, and hence new to the Williams stage. The cast, in order of appearance, is Leslie Williams as Maggie, Dom Ferro as Maggie's boyfriend Brian, Beckie Kravetz, as Maggie's mother, Amy Chapman Smith as Maggie's younger sister Carla, and Sam Bentley as an old friend of the family.

The staging of a production in a residential house represents a breakthrough in the use of theatrical space, according to director Diego Arciniegas '82. Most other smaller productions have gone up on the stage of either the AMT's studio theatre or Jesup Hall—both of which leave something to be desired in terms of atmosphere and physical space. The interior of a Row House, however, with its smaller dimensions and wood-paneled floors and walls creates an intimate environment for both actors and audiences, as well as providing a ready-made set for indoor scenes. Arciniegas calls the living room in Perry "the greatest space in the world. It's small, intense and intimate—just the thing we need for a play such as this one in which all elements must fit together."

Arciniegas is quick to credit the members of Perry House for their cooperation in the venture. In addition to encouraging the use of their living room as a mini-theatre, house members have offered the production extra funds, to supplement those given by Cap'n Bells and have also offered their assistance in serving refreshments after Thursday's opening night performance.

Curtain time for the Thursday, Friday, Saturday performances is 8:00 p.m. Tickets are available at the door of Perry House at 8:00 p.m. each night and a 50¢ donation is requested.

Concert Listing

Tues., Nov. 3 Moody Blues, Boston Garden
Wed., Nov. 4 Jerry Garcia, Palace, Albany
Nazareth, Springfield Civic Center
Thurs., Nov. 5 Devo, Orpheum, Boston
Garland Jeffries, Paradise, Boston
Karl Devito, JB Scott's, Albany
Fri., Nov. 6 Albert Collins, RPI, Troy

Iron City House Rockers, Channel, Boston
Sat., Nov. 7 Frank Zappa—Changed from Cape Cod Coliseum to Case Ctr. Boston U.
Nazareth, Orpheum, Boston
Tubes, Stage W. Hartford, Conn.
Nov. 11 Jerry Garcia, Symphony Hall, Springfield

prepared by
Toonerville Trolley

ARTS·ARTS·ARTS

Slide Lecture

John Brearley, Chief Conservator at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, will speak on the treatment of paintings on Wednesday, November 4 at 1 p.m. at the Clark. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Ives Films

Two films which profile the composer Charles Ives will be shown on Wednesday, November 4 at 4:15 p.m. in Brooks Rogers Recital Hall. The two movies, "A Good Dissonance Like a Man" and "Are my Ears on Wrong?" will be shown in conjunction with Music 114F and are free and open to the public.

Goldberg to Read

Gerald Jay Goldberg, Visiting Professor of English and author of the award winning "The Lynching of Orin Newfield," will read from his forthcoming novel, Heart Payments on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. in room 3 Griffin Hall.

Art Film

Jean-Francois Millet and John Constable will be the subjects of the next film in the ongoing series on Classic and Romantic art. The film will be shown Friday at 1:00 p.m. in the Clark auditorium, and will be repeated on Sunday at 3:00 p.m.

Favorite French Film

"Mr. Hulot's Holiday," the first in a series of six favorite French films will be shown this Friday evening at the Clark Art Institute Auditorium. Admission is $1.00.

Young Artist's Series

Robert Mayerovitch, award winning pianist will give a performance on Friday, November 6 at 8:30 p.m. in Brooks Rogers Recital Hall. His program will include Czerny's, Variations on a Theme by Rode, Bartok's Dance Suite and Sonata, and Musorgski's Pictures at an Exhibition. Admission is free.

Ragtime Concert

The Peabody Ragtime Ensemble will present a concert of popular ragtime numbers on Sat., November 7 at 8:30 p.m. in the Clark Art Institute Auditorium. Admission is $3.50 for the general public, $3.00 for members and $2.50 for students and seniors.

Vegetarians sprout roots on campus

by Lynn Vendinello

Vegetarians are appearing on the Williams campus with greater frequency. There are basically three types of vegetarians: those who omit all types of animal protein from their diets, those who avoid red meat but consume fish and fowl, and those who eat milk and eggs but not poultry or fish.

Reasons for becoming vegetarian vary. Many students did it upon arriving at Williams. One student commented, "I just thought I'd give it a try." Others were converted by taste. "Given the choice between mushroom and spinach quiche or meatloaf, I choose the quiche," said another. Many simply prefer to eat more natural, more healthful foods.

Some students stress the nutritional value of vegetarian meals as compared to meat dishes. Mara Bun '84 remarked, "We waste so much energy feeding cows to suit the American tradition of the meat and potatoes dinner. We'd be much better off learning to consume other, more efficient protein sources."

Kevin Rocap '82, of the Williams Hunger Action Project, suggested that people read A Diet For A Small Planet by Frances Moore Lappe to learn the inefficiency of using meat as a primary protein source.

The vegetarians on campus have some complaints about the variety and taste of the vegetarian dishes served. "I don't know why they have to make it taste so bad," noted Andree Corroon '84. Rocap realizes that cooking for large numbers of students is difficult, yet he comments, "Vegetarian meals need more seasoning; without seasoning nothing is going to taste good."

Besides taste, many vegetarians complained of the limited variety of low-fat protein sources. Some complained of finding too many fillers and not enough natural foods. Susan Bragdon '83 questioned the serving of good fish and vegetable dishes on a particular evening, following the next night by a selection of Salisbury steak and stewed lentils that forced her to dine on peanut butter and ice cream.

Williams' dietetic nutritionist, Virginia Skorupski, selects the vegetarian dishes. Occasionally she experiments with new recipes, later questioning the servers about students' responses.

"I don't know if a dish like kidney bean and rice pie is going to go over," said Skorupski, "so I ask the servers. But it's mainly the non-vegetarians who complain. I may find a dish that is nutritionally great, but flops because there are more non-vegetarians eating the dish than there are vegetarians."

"If we served a choice of only two dishes, omitting the vegetarian option, it would be easier for the cooks and the budget but we'd have a lot of unhappy students to deal with," she added. Skorupski's office, located in Baxter, welcomes students' comments and suggestions.

Vegetarians may find the food here bland and boring. Yet overall, most said they thought the vegetarian food options are better at Williams than at other schools. Also, many vegetarians choose the option of living off-campus, which gives them absolute freedom over their diets.

Daniel Phillips, violinist, will perform with the Marlboro musicians at the Clark Art Institute this Wednesday, November 4, at 8:30 p.m. The program will include works by Mozart, Schoenberg and Dvorak. Admission is $4.50 for the general public, $4.00 for Clark members and $1.00 for students.

Recital spotlights Faure and Beethoven

by Greg Capaldini

One does not need to be a connoisseur of music to appreciate the works of Gabriel Faure (1845-1924). Anyone who likes Hellenic art would recognize a parallel in Faure's elegant, refined, and supremely balanced style. Someone with a sense of history would be interested in the way Faure's administrative moves as head of the Paris Conservatoire threw France to the forefront of modern music.

The songs from this master's huge catalogue would strike connoisseurs of poetry as incredibly astute settings, as many manage to endow the text with greater meaning.

This year's second Music in the Round recital Friday night at B-R Hall afforded such a listening opportunity, offering Faure's Piano Quartet #1 in its first half. This early opus (only his second chamber work) exhibits all the hallmarks—melody, fluidity, slowness of texture—for which its creator is famous. The MITR players seemed to understand the potentially elusive style, but technical considerations precluded a total success. Rhythmic impetus was lacking until the finale, and the string timbre could have been better blended at times.

Selections of a less genteel nature made up the second part of the program. Hindimith's Clarinet Quintet dates from what could be called that composer's "vulgar" period, in which elements of jazz, parody, and Dadaism were not uncommon devices. There are some truly interesting moments in this score, particular in the fast central movement, in which the clarinetist is required to switch from a normal-range B-flat instrument to the squally, higher-pitched E-flat one. Here MITR's ensemble work was tight as a drum, resulting in the best performance of the evening.

The recital ended with Beethoven's Serenade in D for string trio. This piece always surprises those who imagine Beethoven a humorless, grim fellow (as portrayed in the bust of him in the Music Center lobby). There is plenty of whimsy in its seven brief movements, and the playful feeling of the whole piece remained intact in this performance, despite rather broody interpretations of the slow movements.

All offended

Continued from Page 2

am tired of being told that it must make a difference to me. As long as that idea persists, so will the problem. We must get together as friends, we must stop barricading ourselves behind our defenses, because it is only together that we shall overcome.

Caroline Kettlwell '84

Insulting

To the editor:

We, as well as many others, were greatly offended by the comments of Kathy Finnell in the October 27 Record article, "Cross Burning: Tensions Persist." Quoting Finnell, "The cross burning and what came after . . . were an insult not just to blacks, but to anyone who isn't Caucasian." This unfortunate statement displays the type of reverse racism which has been partly responsible for the very tensions that Ms. Finnell decries. If she is indeed concerned that "(nothing) has changed since last year," perhaps she might do her part by reconsidering her harmful we/they attitude.

The comments of Finnell were distressing for two reasons. First, by subtly insinuating that only "non-Caucasians" were insulted by last November's occurrences, Finnell shows a great deal of insensitivity to the struggles of many minority groups who have been persecuted throughout history. The burning cross is not only a symbol of hatred towards non-Caucasians. It has also been used by groups like the KKK as a terror-tactic against Jews, Catholics, and other "Caucasian" minorities.

Secondly, Finnell chooses to forget that the outcry against the cross-burning came from many others as well as members of the BSU. Out of the 1600 people who attended the anti-cross burning rally and the anti-racism forum, Finnell may have noticed more than a few Caucasians present, who were obviously concerned and upset as well. By ignoring these people in her comments, Finnell is being both unfair and inaccurate.

In conclusion, we feel that Finnell's comments in last

LIQUOR SPECIALS

Kahlua

Save $2 a bottle on 750 ml. size

Ristoro Suave

$3.49/1.5 liter bottle

Molson Golden Ale

$11.99/case

413-458-6548

week's Record were an insult, not just to "Caucasian" minorities, not just to the many Caucasians on campus who were indeed distressed and by the cross burning and its aftermath, but to everyone, regardless of race, who condemns hatred and persecution.

Sincerely,
Scott Corngold '84
Beth Grossman '84

Try us

To the editor:

In the Record article on the new Writing Workshop, a student was quoted as saying: "It's a good idea, but I probably won't ever use it. The thing is, if you use it, you have to put on the paper that you used it." This student's concern seems also to be shared by others. Use of the Writing Workshop, some students think, can have an adverse effect on their grades, if only because to seek help may look like an admission of incompetence. I hope I can help to correct this unfortunate misconception.

The faculty is fully aware that the purpose of the Writing Workshop is to give students help with composition not subject matter, expression not ideas. Since most faculty feel that a great many students need to improve their writing, and that greater efforts need to be made in this direction, use of the workshop is far more likely to be viewed positively than negatively. If you are still concerned that going to the workshop might lower your grade, ask your instructors to tell you how it will affect their response to your papers.

Let me mention, too, that we have simplified the procedure for acknowledging use of the workshop. For work you have discussed with a tutor and will be submitting to class, we will give you the following note to attach to your paper: "I have used the Writing Workshop as a resource for this paper and saw (name of tutor)." .

Sincerely,
Suzanne Graver
Dept. of English
& Coordinator of Student Writing Tutorials

Stereotype

To the editor:

Last week's editorial comment entitled "Cross Still Burns" voiced certain stereotypical misconceptions that continue to exist with regards to the black student body on this campus.

It is very easy to place the burden of racial segregation on a mere six percent of the student body with the statement "Black students continue to cluster in two residential houses . . ." Indeed, it implies that all black students on this campus are involved in building racial

Johnny's Rent-a-Lemon

$10 a day
10¢ a mile
Will deliver and pick up the cars in the Williamstown area.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY

9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

458-5717

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

barriers through self-exile, and failing to extend to, or interact with the rest of the student body. Of course, the remaining 94 percent of the student body is involved in breaking down the barriers of racial isolation.

It is undoubtedly true that a significant number of black students request to be housed together. It is also true that the location just happens to be the Berkshire Quad. However, how do you explain the number of black students who find themselves in the Berkshire Quad, despite all efforts to be housed elsewhere?

The observation that "Black students continue to eat together as a group in Baxter" creates the illusion that the black student body racially segregate themselves from the rest of the student body. I suppose that when the football players, or the theatre majors, or the runners, or the poli sci majors etc. . . . are racially segregating themselves when they eat as a group? It has become obvious that the idea of the 'Black Table' as a form of racial segregation needs to be changed. Could a new explanation involve social and not racial segregation? That those who live with each other might want to eat with each other, or that those who share a common background or activity might feel more at ease with each other? Furthermore, it is hard to believe that all one-hundred and some odd blacks eat at the same table, at the same time, in any one of the college dining halls.

In closing, it should be pointed out that these two misconceptions were addressed, and explained by the black student body in the discussions that followed the cross burning. Obviously, very few of the student body were listening . . . as usual, right?

Herve Jean-Baptiste '84

Refunds

To the editors:

Regarding the recent criticism concerning the Film Society's failure to advertise the "disturbing nature" of the film Taxi Driver, it has never been our policy to provide any more information about a film than its rating by the Motion Picture Association of America. It is impossible to predict what an individual's reaction to a film will be: what some find "disturbing" others may find thought-provoking. While it may be true that a film's rating does not say much about the nature of the film, we do not consider it feasible or reasonable to preview every film and specify scenes or aspects of the subject matter we consider might be offensive to viewers.

Every viewer runs the risk of disappointment in a film, and the Film Society does not guarantee that all its films will satisfy the tastes of all viewers.

In future, If anyone feels the need to leave a film because he or she finds it disturbing, the Film Society will be glad to refund his or her money.

Barb Guillno '82
Pete Struzzi '82
Coordinators, Williams Film Society

Fixed ideas

To the editor:

Commemorations of the first anniversary of the cross burning to further dialogue concerning racism and racial tension are, I am afraid, doomed to a very limited success unless we all take time to consider some essential facts about Williams life.

First, to be at Williams College is to have certain pretensions. By matriculating here, one is implicitly subscribing to the self-created Williams myth, according to which a Williams education makes one a member of the intellectual elite (have you ever noticed how impossible it is to discuss Williams without the word "elite" cropping up?) The beliefs and behaviors of a Williams man or woman are presumably justified by the four years of intense soul-searching and socratic dialectic which is the essence of a Williams education. Much of our behavior is subconsciously determined by the fact that someday President Chandler will be handing each of us a desiccated animal skin which affirms, in effect, that the bearer can do no intellectual wrong.

Secondly, at this college most people seem inclined to identify themselves with one or more of the stereotyped sub-cultures which make up the Williams community. Diversity at Williams must be working, because while in years past our older siblings apparently had a single monolithic model of the Williams Man to live up to today one is free to adopt the outer trappings of any of a number of sub-group characters: corporate, preppie, pre-med, social activist, artiste sensitive intellectual, athlete, and so on.

Despite our conscious opposition to racism and segregation, it always seems to turn out that a de facto apartheid system prevails not only with regard to various ethnic groups whose existence is acknowledged by the world at large, but also with regard to almost any sub-group on campus except one's own.

What must be done? Demonstrations of anger and concern such as those of November 1st have value, certainly, but I can't help but worry that the strange alchemy which seems to act on everything on this campus will convert the sincere desire to improve matters into more of the complacency and self-satisfaction which is the root of the problem.

I wish to suggest that what is most urgently needed is an alteration of our ideas about what a Williams education should be. Instead of affirming our previously conceived systems of value and thought, our education should challenge, even insult, these systems. Instead of knitting our brows and reaching for our highlighters, we need to be shocked into seeing the degree to which we sleep-walk complacently through our four years here. Our professors should do all in their power to help us destroy reassuring notions of our own self-worth. Only then can we begin to rebuild a world view which reflects the multiplicity and lack of absolutism perceived by those who wish to face their fellow human beings not as members of rival clans but as members of the same imperfect community and the same flawed species.

Jeffrey Perry '82

Women object

To the editor:

In the article on the alumni Octet concert in the October 27th issue, Steve Epstein managed to insult nearly half the student population and at the same time reveal just how well he knows the females on campus. What's even better, he accomplished this in just five words, "teenie bopper from Mission Park." What a guy.

Grow up, Steve. There are no teenie boppers at Williams College, only intelligent women who resent being called "sweet young things," because this implies that we are sex objects without brains. Without offending Lyman Casey, I would point out that his looks are not why we attend Octet concerts; we attend for the same reasons that men do—in expectation of good music and good (sic) jokes.

Sincerely,
Marcia Voorhis '84

. . . and object

To the editor:

I have tried to ignore Steve Epstein this year and his superfluous, conceited, insipid "sports articles." But I cannot let it go anymore. Up to now I have ignored his trivialization of women's sports, his delegating women's articles to the bottom of the page and to Jock Scraps. I have ignored the lack of equal coverage, legitimized by the famous excuse "no articles were submitted." I had even hoped that after Sue Smith's letter of the October 6 issue, he might have reformed; but he is getting worse.

His most recent articles, "Field Hockey: Confusing But Fun" and "Aging Octets Still Sentimental" are outrageous. I am not interested in Epstein's stock characterizations of "coeds." Frankly, I am too tired and pressed for time to sift through his "narrative style." Epstein refuses to treat women as capable and intelligent. Instead he writes about his preoccupation with the team's legs, skirts, and appearances.

Epstein made a charming observation that field hockey is not like football. Football is not the norm for all things; nor is field hockey the epitome of feminine sports as he implied by characterizing it as "a game of finesse, passing, and teamwork." What team sport isn't a game of finesse, passing, and teamwork? Does skill and agility pertain only to female sports? And what about the men's field hockey teams in Europe?

Women athletes are as serious and as dedicated to their sports as men, and deserve to be treated as such. If Epstein feels unable to treat the women's sports articles fairly, he should not hesitate to contact the team captains. It would be a refreshing change to read, enjoy, and understand the sports section of the Record.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Jex '83
Continued on Page 8

Bob Gaudino lives on in those who loved him

by Michael Govan

When most Williams students think of great college professors, they think of someone like Mark Hopkins or Charles Keijer. People who knew them are never able to forget the impact that these professors made in their lives. One such professor was Bob Gaudino, who taught Political Theory at Williams from 1955 to 1974.

Gaudino died on Thanksgiving Day, 1974, but his spirit lives on through colleagues and alumni who are incorporating Gaudino's ideas in many proposed programs on and off campus. Some may begin as early as this spring.

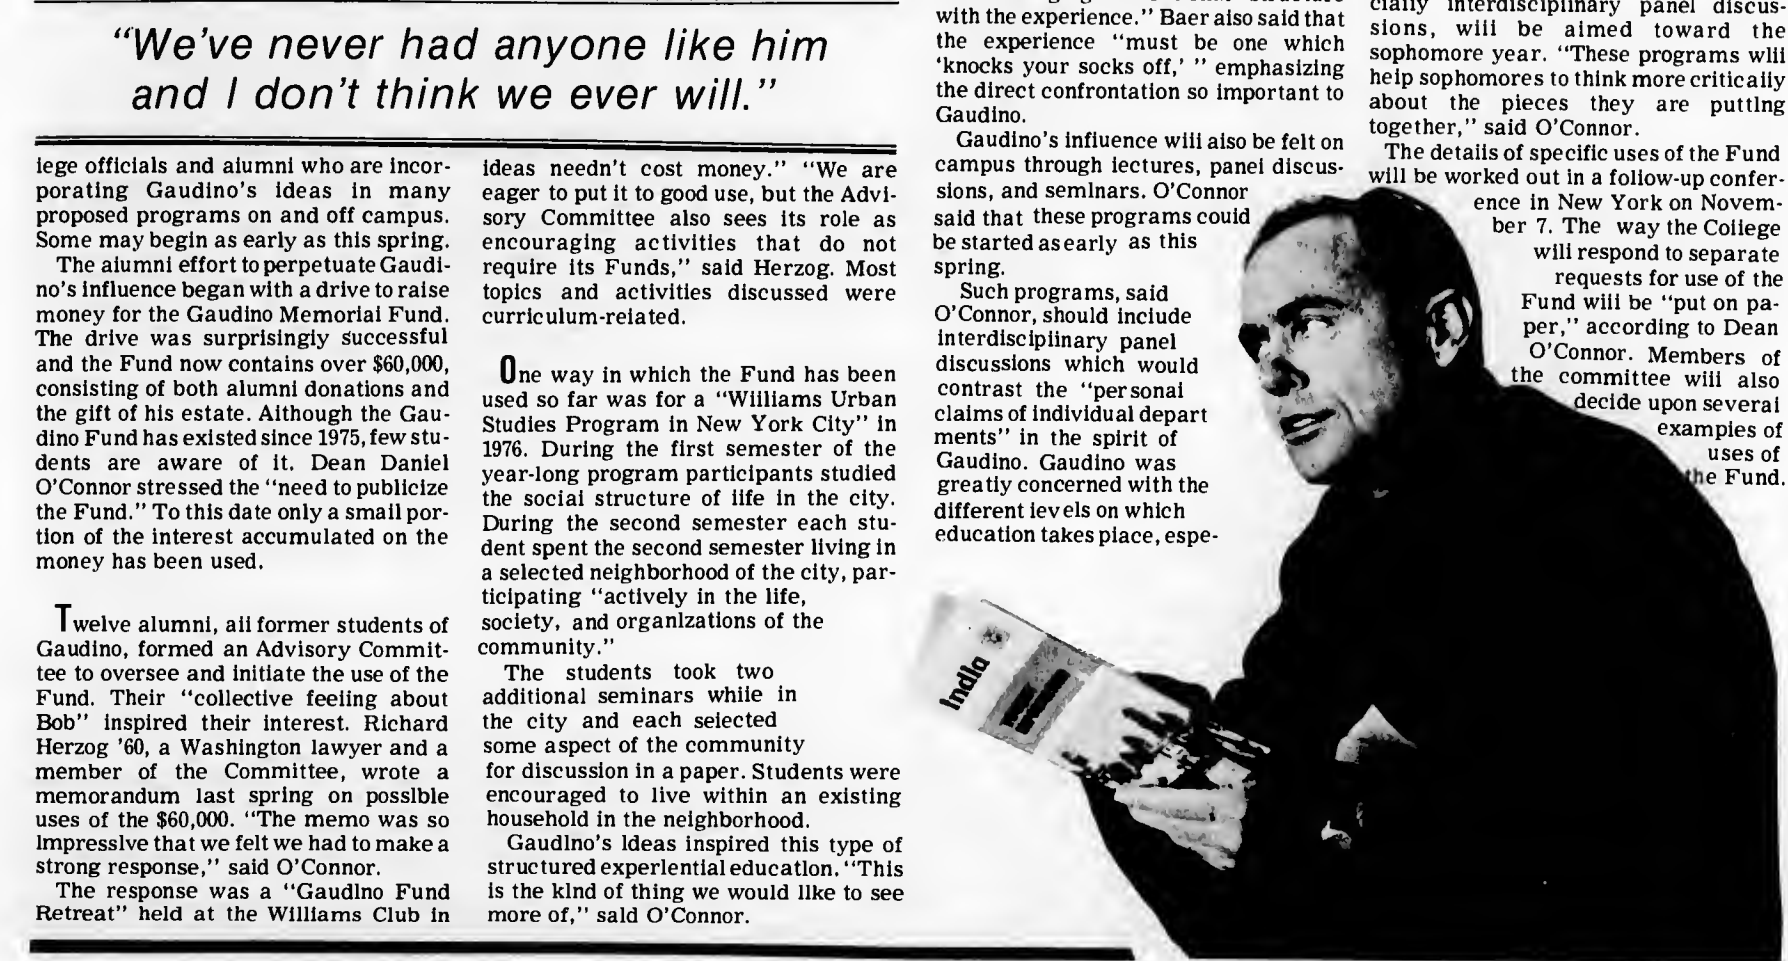

The alumni effort to perpetuate Gaudino's influence began with a drive to raise money for the Gaudino Memorial Fund. The drive was surprisingly successful and the Fund now contains over $60,000, consisting of both alumni donations and the gift of his estate. Although the Gaudino Fund has existed since 1975, few students are aware of it. Dean Daniel O'Connor stressed the "need to publicize the Fund." To this date only a small portion of the interest accumulated on the money has been used.

ideas needn't cost money." "We are eager to put it to good use, but the Advisory Committee also sees its role as encouraging activities that do not require its Funds," said Herzog. Most topics and activities discussed were curriculum-related.

One way in which the Fund has been used so far was for a "Williams Urban Studies Program in New York City" in 1976. During the first semester of the year-long program participants studied the social structure of life in the city. During the second semester each student spent the second semester living in a selected neighborhood of the city, participating "actively in the life, society, and organizations of the community."

The students took two additional seminars while in the city and each selected some aspect of the community for discussion in a paper. Students were encouraged to live within an existing household in the neighborhood.

Gaudino's ideas inspired this type of structured experiential education. "This is the kind of thing we would like to see more of," said O'Connor.

Friends remember Gaudino's magic

by Michael Govan

The current interest on the part of both alumni and faculty in perpetuating Bob Gaudino's ideas is an example of the great impact Gaudino had on individuals in the Williams community.

"I was a student of his for 12 years," said Associate Provost David Booth, one of Gaudino's colleagues and closest friends. "He was unique," said Booth, "We've never had anyone like him and I don't think we ever will." Gaudino made his impact on a very personal level.

Gaudino was described as a master of the Socratic Method. "His greatness was in the power to provoke," said English Professor Larry Graver. "His genius was to sense the 'heart' of a debate."

Gaudino confronted his students directly. "He was not a mass popular teacher because he wanted to encourage a genuine opening up of yourself," said Political Science Chairman Kurt Tauber. "Gaudino remembered what you said last time," recalled alumnus Bill Bennett '66.

In the classroom Gaudino was a teacher with "extraordinary skill and extraordinary energy," said David Booth. He forced conclusions from his students. "Gaudino created a situation in which you felt obliged for self-reflection," explained Math Professor Neil Grabois. "He made me feel uncomfortable . . . He was teasing you to examine yourself."

Gaudino felt that it is through this unsettling experience—through direct confrontation and tests of personal opinion in discussion—that each opinion can be clarified and refined. "The discussion," wrote Gaudino, "necessarily forces contradictions, distinctions, and a moderate amount of abuse."

He believed in "a sense of startling juxtaposition of illumination by contrast, bringing seemingly unrelated learning into contact," said Richard Herzog '60, a former student of Gaudino.

"What would Mao-Tse-Tung think if he saw a Williams-Amherst game?"

dino. Gaudino would pose questions such as: "What would Mao-Tse-Tung think if he saw a Williams-Amherst game?"

He advocated close reading of the classics, urging students to understand not only the content of Aristotle's work, but also the outlook and feeling with which he wrote it.

Gaudino believed that study of the liberal arts—philosophy, literature, history, and art—provides a "culturally induced wholeness."

But Gaudino also advocated the addition of experiential education, with unsettling confrontations. Although liberal arts is "universal in its intention," he saw a danger that this education alone might cultivate "contempt for other cultures and for other classes of people." This experience would threaten a student's basic lifestyle.

The last of many of Gaudino's

"direct experience" experiments in education was a program which he developed and called "Williams-at-Home." In his memo on possible uses of the Gaudino Fund, Herzog explained the program:

"As the program was run in the 1971-72 academic year, students took courses at the College from September to December, and lived with families in different parts of America from January to June.

The required course was in public authority and was oriented around schools, hospitals, churches, and police. Students visited and did papers in those institutions in and around Williamstown. Course materials included documentary films.

In the spring semester, each student lived in a home in Appalachia, in Iowa, Detroit" or three southern states. They were poor families, some were farmers and some were unionized auto workers. Many were on some kind of public assistance.

"Generally, the students worked with the people with whom they were living," the memo continued. "In between each home stay, the students met for about a week of conversation and reflection. During these intervals, they were to produce a paper on their experiences."

The Williams-at-Home program had inherent problems and was not 100 percent successful. The program, however, completely changed the lives of some student participants. "Our purpose," Gaudino wrote "is not just to have experience. It is to use it. It is to reflect upon it, to let it enhance or inhibit our sense of self."

CC funding questioned—

Continued from Page 1

Backtalk magazines were forcibly merged for financial reasons.

Nevertheless, on March 13, McWhorter spent $50.22 on Popov, Kahua, Johnny Walker Red, Bailey's, and Barcardi at King's. Platt was unsure of the purpose, although he approved the transaction. "I had a good working relationship with Darrell," he noted, "the officers trusted each other."

McWhorter explained that the liquor was served at a reception for Sonia Sanchez, a black poet from Haverford College. McWhorter, who had arranged Sanchez's visit, invited members of groups that had helped pay for the visit. "It was a discretionary thing on my part," he said. "... The guests were mostly BSU and Feminist Alliance people, who had a specific interest in her (work)."

About $90 was spent for refreshments at Council meetings. The meetings are open to any student, but non-member attendance is usually small.

A payment of $25.15 went to the Log for pitchers of beer and snacks on several dates in January. "In January, people weren't inclined to come to meetings," noted McWhorter. "My idea was to entice people to come down for the meetings, to have them view them more as a break than as a chore."

"It comes down to a difference in style," McWhorter added. "It's how to get people interested. It worked—attendance was high. I don't know if it was me, or us always f---ing something up, or the beer."

A $65.65 payment went to the Spirit Shop for champagne and beer served at the final Council meeting. "The last meeting is always an occasion for champagne and beer," McWhorter asserted, "and it was flowing."

Eugenia Smith had no records of any Council money spent at any liquor store in 1979-80.

McWhorter admitted "technical violations" of the budget guidelines. "I took the responsibility last year... yes, perhaps the expenses are excessive, but they're basically valid... I'm not willing to let you point the finger at the Council or at bad bookkeeping, you can point it at me. I did everything openly, and it's documented."

Platt also emphasized that all spending records are public. "We were more open than past administrations," he commented.

However, there are discrepancies in the record. Voucher numbers for several of the transactions are duplicated. Voucher number 523, $177.45 to Mill on the Floss, paid on March 23, is not entered in the official Council spending records. Instead, number 523 is listed as a $30 payment from the Lehman Service Council of April 2. In addition, numbers 530 and 531, to King's and the Spirit Shop, are listed in Council records as payments for Purple Key and Williams Coffeehouse expenses.

Copies of both sets of vouchers exist only in the Comptroller's office, where the duplicate numbers were not noticed. The result was that current Council Treasurer, Steve Spears '83, did not know about over $300 in expenses charged to the Council. He did not learn of the expenses until he noticed them on tally sheets received from Eugenia Smith in October of this year, six months after he took office in April. As a result, Spears was not well informed of the Council budget situation last year.

Platt described the discrepancies as mistakes due to his neglecting to record the voucher numbers and expenses in his logbook. "I would imagine I filled out the vouchers immediately before or immediately after spring break," he said. "I'm to blame for the whole process, which I admit was done perfunctorily."

"Mistakes did happen, but not with willful intent," said Platt. "We were, if not noble, at least well-intentioned... I feel a little embarrassed as the bad record-keeping, since I pride myself on being well-organized." Platt is currently business manager of the Student Activities Board.

According to Smith, the Council spent $3,756 (2200 under the former administration) last year, compared with about $1,300 in 1979-80 and $2,232 in 1978-79. This year's Council is planning to spend about $2,000.

Platt said that last year was the first time that the Council allocation had even been an item in the budget. "Council expenses were previously just deducted from the buffer fund," he noted.

"The Council should have a stricter budget," said Platt. "The way it's stated now is an invitation to trouble. I think the dinners are a good idea, but they should be put down in the budget, as should all expenses."

Current Council President Freddy Nathan said that questionable spending is not a feature of his administration. "The records are open for anyone to look at," he said.

"In the end, you just have to trust the treasurer," said Spears.

Frosh elect Council, Committee reps.

by Laura Seligsohn

The Class of '85 elected its first contingent of representatives to major College committees on October 28, 29 and 30.

Seventy-five percent of the freshmen voted Thursday and Friday, resulting in—except in the case of the Honor and Discipline Committee—run-offs on Friday, in which 55-60 percent of the freshmen voted, according to Freshman Council President Lee Berinstein.

The freshmen elected the following five at-large representatives to the College Council: Jennifer Gilbert, Kelly Havig, John Irwin, Pam Maloney, and Jan Van Eck. In addition to the five at-large representatives, Vidisha Dehejia will remain a voting member of the College Council, according to Council President Freddie Nathan '83. Dehejia has been the liaison between the freshman and College Councils since the beginning of the semester.

In order to ensure a continuity of policy and frequent student input, the Freshman Council decided that freshman representatives to the College Council are automatically members of the Freshman Council too.

Freshmen voters elected John Hull and Laura Volpe to the Honor and Discipline Committee, Michael Govan as representative to the Committee on Educational Policy, and Omar Wohabe to the Committee on Undergraduate Life. Newly elected freshmen generally were enthusiastic about holding office. Council Representative Pam Maloney declared, "I am greatly looking forward to this opportunity to serve on the College Council. Student involvement is essential to a vital school community, and I would hope this year to increase freshman involvement and to heighten the interaction between freshmen and upperclassmen."

Election procedure was more formal this year than last. The Freshman Council's Election Committee required petitions bearing at least 50 freshman signatures. The Freshman Council also held a Candidates' Night at the Log, giving the Class of '85 a chance to meet the candidates.

All in all, commented Freshman Council President Lee Berinstein, "The Election Committee put in a lot of hours and did a great job."

Race issues confronted

The Williams Black Student Union addressed the problems faced by Blacks in America last Sunday at a service entitled, "The Issue of Institutionalized Racism." The program, held in Thompson Memorial Chapel, was "provocative," according to Craig Venable '84, and included performances by members of Essence and remarks by Ray Headen '82, Venable, and Kathy Seward '80.

"The service offered yet another opportunity for the College community to be exposed to the perspective of the black student body," said Venable. While the student comments focused on bilateral commitment in approaching the problem of racial polarity at Williams, Seward's address offered specific suggestions to the black students on campus. Among these was the task of explaining to their white classmates the problems they face in trying to realize their goals and obligations as members of society and as members of a minority within society.

"We are an anomaly, a minority, and no matter how hard we may try to disappear into the mainstream, we cannot," said Seward. "Our goal should never be to disappear into the mainstream, be it white or black, but to stand out and to use and influence that mainstream... Black people in the United States share a heritage, a history and a culture that are unique and separate from the experience of the majority. That is reality."

A year after the incidents that compelled Williams students to question their society, "the crowds have thinned out considerably," said Venable. One student estimated attendance at about 75 persons.

Lack of sleep—

Continued from Page 4

amount of sleep we need. Talbot refers to the number of eight hours as a "mythological figure; many of us can do with less sleep, while some may actually require more. We may trap ourselves into the position that, because we haven't had exactly eight hours of sleep, we ought to be tired. And so, we do feel that way, regardless of whether we actually needed those extra hours of sleep or not."

As I watched yet another poor wretch descend into the bowels of academia, the reserve room, I contemplated our bitter fates. It's not pretty and it's not nice, but (yawn) someone's got to do it.

Viewpoint Complain, complain...

by Jonathan Meer

When I applied for admission to Williams College in the fall of 1978, I thought I had some pretty good reasons for doing so. The academic reputation of Williams is second to none; students and faculty grow emotionally and intellectually in an atmosphere that is conducive to improving oneself in countless directions. For a kid from Brooklyn, Williams was (and still is) breathtakingly beautiful; the Purple Valley and the Ivy-covered campus within was a greater determining factor for my applying to Williams than for any of the other fine institutions I had visited. Finally, but not least importantly, the people at Williams are the greatest.

No, you may be wondering, I am not spouting administration propaganda. Nor am I a nostalgic alumnus (although I hope to be someday). What I am is a content Epherson. Complacent? No; content. Indifferent? No; content. One might say there's not a heck of a big difference among these words, but I disagree.

Can't one be concerned about the future, and at the same time be content with the present? Can't we all be informed about issues at Williams, while at the same time be supportively appreciative of our representatives at Williams.

Lastly, can't we all understand that Williams, just like a tree in a storm, must bend with the wind, or break? Change, including financial cutbacks, have become a reality in the richest nations of the world, the United States notwithstanding. Why should Williams be any different?

I believe that change, (for better or for worse), when carefully considered and unmistakably needed, should be implemented gradually, but without bureaucratic delay. I believe that our Administration, with ample input from the College Council and committees, is trying to do just that. Those at Williams that would like to see our Purple College standing tall and stiff, without bending in the wind of change, are being unrealistic and stubborn. This is more dangerous than all of the changes I've seen.

We can lessen the severity of change if we recognize its inevitability; I don't think we should surrender to change, but I do think that if it is necessary, we must implement it.

To conclude, I'd like to return to the reasons I had for applying to Williams; if one of these attributes is in danger because of any changes in the next 1000 years (barring nuclear war),

I'll become the most penitent reactionary this college has ever seen. Is the emotional and intellectual atmosphere at Williams shattered because of the phasing-out of Row House dining? Will the beauty of the campus and the Purple Valley itself become desecrated in the absence of our four-legged friends? Will people at Williams cease to be the greatest simply because we have to wait for the computer to give us the "O.K." before we eat? Is the ethos of Williams College really endangered? I think not.

Jewish activists organize groups

by Stuart Smith

Two new Jewish groups have been formed on campus this year to provide services different from those of the Jewish Association, according to the groups' leaders.

The Jewish Political Action Committee was formed with a political bent, according to co-founder Rich Cohen '82, while the Israel Alliance, formed by Miriam Sapiro '82, focuses on Israel as a country. Both remain affiliated with the Jewish Association.

The purposes of the three groups often overlap, says Cohen, but the action committee was set up to "provide services that the Jewish Association hadn't, such as the opportunity to come into contact with other groups and to hold discussion meetings." In addition, Cohen said, the group is "prepared to take positions on political and social issues," whether on the cross burning or on AWACS.

Aims of the Israel Alliance, according to Sapiro, include promoting "the image of Israel and to encourage people to study there, or at the very least to visit the country." Sapiro noted that there are many opportunities for study in a variety of fields in Israel, whether studying at a university or working on a kibbutz.

Though they are independent, the new groups do maintain ties to the Jewish Association and their memberships overlap. "There has been a lot of confusion, even among Jewish students," about the relationship between the groups, said president of the Jewish Association Richard Wentz '82. Sapiro said the Jewish Association, which she characterizes as more religious in orientation than the new groups, has offered the Israel Alliance some funds, and that the Alliance plan to go to College Council within two weeks to apply for their own funding.

Though it has no plans to seek funding, the Jewish Political Action Committee will have one member on the Jewish Association's executive board, according to Cohen. "They want to keep us, if not under their wing, at least allied with them," he noted.

The Political Action Committee's activities have mainly involved dinner meetings, including one on the topic of "To be a Jew at Williams."

In order to effect a Black-Jewish dialogue on campus, Professors Dennis Dickerson, Nathan Katz and students from both committees will lead a discussion Wednesday at a joint meeting of the Jewish Political Action Committee and the WBSU.

Welcome to Williams!

Free Plant! with $5.00 purchase and this ad.

At The Cottage. Your decorating center for bedspreads, rugs, pillows and baskets.

96 Water St. Open Sundays, Too!

the COTTAGE

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday
Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday
Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday, Nov. 4

Tuborg Night
Assorted Tuborg advertising
to be given away. 9-12

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

GUNS DON'T DIE—PEOPLE DO is such an important book that we are selling it for $3, what it cost us.

Renz's COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN
Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-3306 458-5441

The Clip Shop. The hair salon of the 80's for He & She

Your hairstyle should match your individual looks and personality. The stylists of the Clip Shop know the importance of giving their clients something they can handle by themselves when they leave the salon. And also something that suits their individual bone structure. In essence, that's what's evident in the styles worn by the models pictured here.

Stop in for a free consultation and see what possibilities could be in store for you.

The Clip Shop has three convenient locations.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

The Williams balloon man, a regular attraction at all Eph home football games, will make his final appearance of the season Homecoming Weekend. (Govan)

Debaters argue abortion legality

by Collin Harris

A proposal to ban abortion throughout the United States was discussed at the Adelphi Speaking Union debate in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall last Wednesday night.

The debate formed the first half of a two-part forum on abortion; the second half was a panel discussion. The panelists and debaters fielded questions from the audience after their speeches.

The Adelphi Union debaters were Jim Johnson '84 and Beth Grossman '84.

Johnson spoke in support of a nationwide ban on abortion. He contended that "the human fetus is protected from abortion by murder laws. There is no millisecond in which the fetus is anything but human. The fetal stage is but one stage of life maturation. There should be no individual choice on the matter of abortion; a collective decision must be made and that decision must be that the practice of abortion be made illegal."

Beth Grossman spoke against banning abortion. Grossman maintained that abortion "should not be legislated." She asserted that "according to the philosophies on which the constitution is based, murder is illegal only when it undermines the stability of the state. The murder of a criminal in cases of capital punishment or of a soldier in times of war is not illegal. In these instances," said Gross-man, "murder is not only legal but venerated."

Grossman felt that "by not letting a woman make the choice of getting a legal abortion in the United States, you make safe abortions available only to the rich who can go abroad." She concluded that "the poor woman is forced to face the repulsion of the bloody coathanger."

Father Augustine Graap, assistant Chaplain of the College, was the first of two panelists to speak. Graap noted that a distinction must be made between morality and civil law. "God's law is higher than man's law," he began. "The church says, 'Thou shalt not kill.' This law is intended for the common good of society. If abortion is to remain legal, it will multiply, endangering society, killing it from within."

Debbie Gregg '82, a member of the Feminist Alliance, followed Graap. She affirmed that a woman should be allowed to abort her pregnancy. "Because the fetus isn't viable outside the womb, it is not a life, but only a potential life. To give it rights would be to abridge the life of the parents. The fetus isn't as important as the lives and plans of its parents. As private citizens, the question of whether to abort should be a decision left to the individual. We're in a democracy, not a totalitarian state," she said.

This was the first in a planned series of Adelphi-sponsored debates.

Faculty size enlarged

by Sara Ferris

The size of the faculty is up by about 3½ full-time positions this year, according to Dean of the Faculty John Reichert. "We've got more (faculty) than we think we ought to have," he said.

Reichert explained that the faculty size fluctuates around 150 full-time faculty slots, with "a significantly greater number of people filling these positions."

He attributed some of the increase to fewer faculty leaves this semester. "The number of leaves is down by about three full-time equivalent leaves," he commented. Visiting Bernhard and Luce professors have also inflated the faculty ranks.

According to Reichert, the College will try to reduce the faculty size before adding the six new full-time faculty positions called for in the Report on the '80s. "Faculty growth comes about by planning, not by a gradual drift upwards," he said.

He explained that "nothing is going to happen soon or all at once... the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) is looking at the curriculum and curriculum needs each year. No actual decision has been made yet on any particular area to be covered."

Zirka Filipczak, head of the faculty-student Committee on Priorities and Resources, added, "We're looking for a sense of where those faculty would be most needed."

One possible result of this year's faculty increase is that the number of courses offered this semester has increased by 17 over the 24 given during first semester last year. Reichert cautioned, however, "It's hard to tell how much impact (faculty size) would have on that."

Class sizes have not changed significantly from past years. Figures released by Registrar George Howard show that over 80 percent of Williams classes have 30 or fewer students while 50 percent fall within the 6 to 20 student range. The student-faculty ratio is about 12 to 1, said Howard.

Howard noted that his figures do not include labs and conferences. He explained, "Different departments have different philosophies about class sizes. Some favor many small sections while others choose one large lecture with smaller conferences."

He contrasted English 101, with an enrollment of 340 broken down into 18 sections, with Art 101, which has two lecture sections for its 251 students.

CLASSIFIEDS

CRUSH WESLEYAN!
ECKANKAR-Day of Eck., talks & creative arts, Nov. 7, 1-5 pm. Brooks Rogers Discussion class every Tuesday 8 pm, Driscoll Lounge. Free. Your right to know.

FOUND: sterling silver butter knife. Kappa Alpha fraternity, 1901. Best offer x6435.

UPS Mailing, 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole.

Ruggers roll over Babson

by Dave Weaver

Scoring a stunning upset, the Rugby Football Club soundly thrashed the visiting Babson squad last Saturday.

In the A-side match, the Eph ruggers got the ball rolling early on with a score from Kevin Drewyer '82. The backs continued their attack as seniors Phil Sheridan and Kirwan Webb combined for some neat plays, but a tough Babson defense only allowed three more points in the half: a 41-yard field-goal by Jeff Hilger '82.

In the second half the Williams ruggers began to open things up. The scrum, led by co-captain Jeff Desmond '82, began to dominate the rucking and mauling, pushing the Green scrum down the field. The backs followed suit, slashing holes in the opposing line. Veteran Chris Smythe '82 led the way, ripping in for two tries as the score mounted. Junior standout Bill Donovan scored his third try of the season, putting the icing on the cake. The final tally was 19-3.

Rugby Rules

After a successful road trip against Dartmouth last week, Williams women's rugby A-side continued its undefeated streak by triumphing over Mt. Holyoke, 20-0, Saturday.

An unrelenting performance by the line and scrum led to five skillfully executed tries in the course of an hour. Two lightning runs by Martha Paper '82 up the weak side led to two tries. The powerfully cohesive effort of the scrum provided two additional Williams tries. The fifth score was achieved by a quick run by Barb Welcher '83.

The B-side lost in an abbreviated contest with Albany Law School A-side. Although the game was difficult and disap-

Honor Ephraim

by Darrell White

I'm a big fan of college holidays—fall break, Thanksgiving, Christmas, spring break, they're all great. But I realize that we're here with an eye toward the future and that it would be somewhat presumptuous to ask for another college holiday, especially since summer is always just around the corner. There is a grave injustice here at Williams College, however; why don't we celebrate Ephraim Williams' birthday?

It wasn't always this way. Ephraim hasn't been neglected like this throughout the history of the College. In fact, there is a modest endowment set aside for the express purpose of celebrat-

Halloween parties Saturday night buzzed with excitement over students' creative costumes.

Sport shorts sport shorts pointing. It provided a valuable experience for the young B-side.

Field Hockey Stars

Placing more players on the first team of the all-star squad than any other school, Williams field hockey had great success at this weekend's competition to select the Northeast college all-star team. The all-star team will play in two weeks at the Northeast regional tournament where players will be chosen to play in the nationals.

Three players were named to the first squad. Senior Beth Connolly is on the team for the second time. Two sophomores also made the team: Sue Harrington and Dorothy Briggs.

Three other players were also honored. Emily Sneath '85 made second team. Mary Pynchon '83 was named to the third team. Holly Perry '82 was named as an alternate.

J.V. Soccer

Winning 4-0 over Vassar on Saturday, the men's junior varsity soccer squad improved its record to 5-3-1. The team is led by goalies Ted Murphy '85, John Dagnello '85, and Steve Willey '85. Co-captains Bill Harrison '83 and Jamie King '84 provide the defense and the team with leadership and acute soccer minds.

Austin Lehr, a junior who is playing his way back to the varsity after suffering an injury at the start of the season, leads the attack, which has outscored its opponents, 14 to 7.

Goal eludes booters

by Dave Woodworth

Defense ruled the day in men's varsity soccer action on Sunday, as Williams and Springfield battled to a scoreless tie. Springfield opened the game with good pressure, but failed to capitalize on its early chances.

Williams' defense, led by senior Co-captains Reg Jones and Brian Danelli, held up under the attack and turned the flow of the game back to the Ephs. The first half ended with the momentum clearly in favor of Williams.

The Ephs continued to dominate the play for most of the second half, with the midfield, led by Rob Kusel '83 and Eric Stein '83, controlling the ball. The Springfield defense, however, led by goalkeeper Dana White, denied the score. The double overtime featured end-to-end action, but again neither team was able to tally.

The Ephs outshot Springfield, 32-23. Williams goalkeeper Ken Rhodes '85 had 14 saves while White had 17 in preserving the shutout for the visitors.

Earlier this week, the Ephs' four-game unbeaten streak came to an end against top-ranked Babson as Williams went down to a 2-1 defeat. Babson's goals were scored by Bobby Fischer and Tom Silva, with Guido Florentine assisting on both. Dave Nasser '83 put the lone Williams goal on the board, but it came too late to affect the outcome of the game.

WINE SPECIALS

Cartier Blanc De Blanc	1.99/750ml.
Kressman Bordeaux Blanc 1978	2.99/liter
Coviro Bianco	2.99/mag.
Grand Yvecourt Bordeaux Blanc	4.99/mag.
All California Cellars and Inglenook
4 liter jugs 6.99

IMPORTED BEER SPECIAL

Krakus (Poland)	9.99/case	2.75/six
-----------------	-----------	----------

WEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

Budweiser KING OF BEERS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Sophomore John Nelson is this week's recipient. As the Ephs' leading runner, he led Williams to its twelfth straight Little Three cross-country championship and the recovery of the "Bear". John, this Bud's for you.

this Bud's for you!

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS M.B.A.

Students of All Majors and Fields Invited

Come to our meetings to hear about our MBA and PhD Programs and to ask any questions about the curriculum, admission, financial aid, and career opportunities available in the following fields of management:

Finance	Health Administration
Economics	Public and NonProfit
Marketing	Human Resources
Accounting	Management Science
General Management	Policy

Monday, November 9

Contact Office of Career Counseling for sign ups.

458-8686

SPECIALTY SANDWICHES:

NEW VEAL PARMIGIANA	1.85
ROAST BEEF	1.85
CHICKEN	1.75
FISH	1.45
HAM & CHEESE	1.65

SOFT DRINKS sm 49 med 59 lg 70

COCO COLA* TAB

DR PEPPER ROOT BEER ORANGE

SHAKES Regular

VANILLA CHOCOLATE STRAWBERRY	.70
COFFEE - REGULAR, SANKA, MILK	.37
NEW APPLE PIE, ALL NATURAL SLICE	.75

The QUICK and EASY way to relieve the MUNCHIES during studying, Monday nite football, etc.

DELIVERY SERVICE MENU

Hours 7:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. Daily

Last orders taken at 10:30 p.m.

* Minimum Order for Delivery is $10.00 *No coupons accepted on deliveries Orders of $10.00 or more called in and picked up at the restaurant subject to 10% student discount. ID Required.

MENU

HAMBURGER SANDWICHES:

WHOPPER* SANDWICH	1.39
WHOPPER* SANDWICH W/ CHEESE	1.49
DOUBLE WHOPPER*	1.99
DOUBLE WHOPPER* W/ CHEESE	2.09
DOUBLE HAMBURGER	1.10
DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER	1.30
HAMBURGER	.57
CHEESEBURGER	.67
WHOPPER JUNIOR*	.79
WHOPPER JUNIOR* CHEESE	.89
FRENCH REGULAR	.52
FRIES LARGE	.68
ONION RINGS	.75

The men's varsity cross-country squad crushed archrivals Amherst and Wesleyan Saturday

(Doherty)

Gridders trample Union, 30-6

by Ted Herwig

Soundly trouncing Union College, 30-6, the football squad played what head coach Bob Odell called its best game.

"This was definitely our best game of the season," Odell said. "We played well on both sides of the ball. Offensively, we were able to move the ball consistently. And, our running defense was excellent—we held Union to only 26 yards in 38 tries. This was also the first game we've been able to score on the ground. We were beginning to have a complex about our inability to run the ball over the goal line, but we did that twice against Union."

Williams sophomore line-backer Dan Wilen opened up the scoring for the day when he intercepted a Dan Stewart pass and ran it back 60 yards for a touchdown on the ninth play of the game, after 2:37 minutes of play. Senior placekicker Rich Coomber added the extra point. Union responded several possessions later with an attempt to even the score up with a three play drive. Stewart's 41-yard pass to John Johnson was good for a touchdown, but the extra-point attempt failed. Williams led 7-6.

B. J. Connolly '84 engineered the Eph's first scoring drive of the day as he advanced the Ephs 45 yards in nine plays. He put the points on the board himself with a two-yard quarterback keeper. This was Williams's first touchdown on the ground of the season.

The Ephs put together another drive on their fifth possession of the second half. Micah Taylor '82, the Ephs' leading receiver, made a 25-yard gain on a surprise-play reverse to help advance Williams to the Union four. Left with four yards to the goal on fourth and goal, Odell sent Coomber in to attempt a field goal. The 21-yard try was good.

The Ephs scored again on their very next possession after Eph Gary Pfaff '83 forced and recovered a fumble by Dutchmen quarterback Dan Stewart on Union's 25-yardline. Connolly hit Taylor in the end zone with an eight-yard pass four plays later. Williams led, 24-6.

Junior Scott Garabedian relieved Connolly at the Eph helm and he too orchestrated a scoring drive. An interception set up an Eph drive that a Union face-masking penalty accelerated. Garabedian tried a new variant by running left, found enough of a hole, and scored 5:55 remained in the game; the kick failed.

Williams led in all the statistics except for passing. Jay Wheatley '82 led in rushing with 74 yards in 20 carries. Connolly had 33 yards from 16 tries. The leading Dutchman, John Johnson, had 22 yards from 7 carries. The entire Union offense mustered 26 yards on the ground in 38 carries.

Connolly threw 14 passes and completed 5 for 48 yards. He had one touchdown pass and no interceptions. The Dutchmen quarterbacks completed seven of 18 for 89 yards but gave up three interceptions.

Williams fumbled four times and lost three, Union seven times, losing four. The Ephs had four penalties for 25 yards; Union was docked 52 yards for seven infractions.

"We were very apprehensive about Union but our guys rose to the occasion and denied them what they'd done well all season," Odell said. "It was a good game, we needed the win, and it gives us a springboard for the Little Three."

Wrap up season

Spikers second in Northeast

Competing in its second major tournament in two weeks, the volleyball team once again sailed into the championships but was denied first place in a dramatic, seesaw match.

The pressure reached a peak in the third game of the final championship match between Williams and Smith College when the score became knotted at eleven. The winner of the Northeast Intercollegiate Athletic Conference tournament, which included the eight best teams in the 22 member league, would be determined by the last four points.

The entire match was perfectly even as Williams won the first game 15-11 after it had been tied at ten. The Dancewicz sisters made the difference as Anne '82 served and Terry '82 attacked the net. Smith got rolling in the second game and kept Williams on the defensive all game. Smith won, 15-8.

The teams traded points in the deciding game up to eleven. Smith, which had been seeded number one, came through and took four straight points to end the battle.

For Williams there were no stars. The team jelled and played with precise teamwork. The team ended their season with a record of 18 and 12 and second place in both the Northeast Volleyball Tournament and the Northeast Intercollegiate Athletic Conference tournament this weekend.

The Ephwomen glided to the championship relatively smoothly. They romped over

Regain "Bear"

Harriers capture twelfth Little Three

by Lyman Casey

"For the first time in recent history, the possibility exists that . . . the men's (cross-country) team might win the Little Three championship . . ."

—Last week's Amherst Student
"Don't ever underestimate the power of an angry Bear" was the lesson the Lord Jeffs were taught last Saturday, as the Eph harriers decimated Amherst's dream of winning the conference title for the first time in 25 years, 27-41 (Wesleyan finished third with 65 points).

The Eph squad was merciless as it sought to avenge the theft of its good-luck mascot, the Bear, who was kidnapped last winter by an Amherst indoor trackster frustrated by repeated Amherst losses.

The race went off at a fairly relaxed pace for the first mile, and by mile two Williams had clearly taken charge of things, putting most of its team right behind Amherst's second man. By the fourth mile, John Nelson '84 and The Lord Jeffs' Jeff Poor had opened up a sizable lead over the rest of the field. Dan Riley '83 was running strong behind them, and Lyman Casey '83, Chris O'Neill '84, Brian Angle '84, and senior co-captain Chuck Stewart all followed within thirty seconds, well ahead of Amherst's third man.

The finish had Williams taking second, fourth, sixth, seventh, and eighth. The Ephs also managed to put their sixth, seventh, and eighth men in front of Amherst's fourth man.

Amid the post race excitement, the team barely noticed when Amherst began to cheer, "Gimme a B, Gimme an E, Gimme an A, Gimme an R; What've we got? We've got the Bear!" The team then broke its huddle to reveal The One And Only Bear. His return was met with the cheers of 30-plus crazed harriers, some of whom (the freshmen) had heard the legend of the Bear, but never actually seen him.

The JV team also proved themselves equal to the task of squashing Amherst Saturday.

Women runners in two places at once

by Patricia Hellman

There was a lot of activity in the science quad last Saturday, as a series of four cross-country races started from and finished in this area in rapid succession.

The day began with the annual alumni race, followed by the women's, men's, and J.V. Little Three meets. Ordinarily, the Williams women would have been highly favored in this race, but this time, due to a conflict in schedule, the top 5 were unable to compete. Coach Bud Fisher tried to change the meet to another weekend, but was unsuccessful, as the Wesleyan coach would not agree to the change. Therefore, the team was forced to race its second squad against Amherst's and Wesleyan's first teams.

Despite the odds, the Williams girls put up a valiant effort, placing four in the top ten. Unfortunately, Amherst runners took first and second, with Betsy McKay and Bonnie McLeod running in in 20:59 and 21:12, respectively. Williams' first finisher was Susan Baer '85 who was seventh, followed by Liz Moore '85, Tracy Kling '84, and Betsey Kepes '82. Amherst won the meet with 38 points, beating Wesleyan with 39, and Williams with 47.

In previous years, it would not even have been possible for Williams to field two separate teams. The fact that they were able to give Amherst and Wesleyan a run for their money attests to the depth and dedication of this year's team.

Meanwhile, in Keene, N.H., the 1981 New England Championships were held, attended by some 32 teams, and 200 or more racers. The field comprised many of the top U.S. runners, including most of the Eastern division I, II, and III schools. The Williams women who ran in the meet regretted missing the Little Three, but felt, as did coach Fisher, that the larger, more competitive race was irreplaceable in a training schedule building up to a peak for division III NCAA Easterns, which take place in two weeks. Williams took second in the Division III New England schools and eleventh overall.

The race was won by UMass runner Patricia Moores, who beat out Westfield's Cindy Sturm. Sturm had a bit of trouble, taking a spill and sliding down one of the many 45° slopes on the course. Williams placed all five runners in the top half of the field, with the following finishes: Tricia Hellman 34th, Sue Marchant 47th, Liz Martineau 54th, Kerry Malone 80th, and Chinyere Uwah 99th.

It is predicted that there will be a similar schedule conflict between Little Three and New England's next year. Hopefully, the conflict can be resolved. The Little Three will begin to lose its meaning if the top five runners are never able to compete in the event.

WUFO smokes foes, going to regionals

Qualifying for the regionals for the first time in its history, WUFO came through when it counted and placed fourth in the sectional tournament at Amherst this weekend. The hosting team, ZooMass, placed first, followed by the Tourists and the Dukes, both club teams from Connecticut. WUFO and the three teams will return to Amherst next weekend to face the four top teams from the other two Northeastern sections in the regional tournament. One team from there will go on to the nationals in Austin, Texas.

WUFO was inspired and confident after the Purple Valley Ultimate Classic last weekend. The Ephs defeated four out of five teams, including the Rude Boys from Boston. The Rude Boys are strong contenders for the national title and feature two former WUFO presidents.

WUFO began Saturday morning by walking past Whoo-Pie in a relaxed but spirited game. The intensity mounted in the next game against the Tourists, the second seed. WUFO surged ahead by four early in the first half, but this was countered by an extremely consistent Tourist offense, which capitalized on WUFO mistakes. They took the lead at halftime and kept it for the rest of the game.

WUFO then faced UConn. in a match that would determine which team would go to the regionals. Williams played with vigor and precision, but slipped to give them the lead at the half. WUFO psych rose to unprecedented heights for the second half. With exceptional play by virtually everyone, WUFO glided to a monumental seven point victory. With this triumph, WUFO made it to the regional tournament for the first time in its history.

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, NO. 3

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

NOVEMBER 10, 1981

Co-op living at Susan Hopkins House means cooking and cleaning for oneself. (Milloy)

Supply, demand for co-ops rise

by Jeffrey Brainard

Many upperclassmen opt to live in one of the eight College-owned co-op houses for a year to get a taste of living on their own in a residential house. They are responsible for their own cooking and maintenance work in preparation for the big leap to "living in the real world" after graduation.

"Seniors see it as a stepping stone towards being responsible for planning and budgeting on their own," said Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta. "Many of them are tired of the dorm scene and see co-ops as a living situation that is not so uniform. They have a better chance to express their individuality."

There are currently eight co-ops scattered around the perimeter of the campus: Seeley, Goodrich, Lambert, Dewey, Rice, Milham, Susan Hopkins, and Doughty, with a total capacity of 79 beds. Co-op residents cook their own meals, sharing food costs and cooking duties, but pay the standard room fee to the College. They are also responsible for cleaning and minor maintenance work.

"The whole point of providing kitchens is to give students some experience with cooking," Director of Student Housing Wendy Hopkins explained.

The co-ops are converted homes which have in the past been used to house faculty. Many of the rooms are larger and better furnished than the average dorm room, and feature fireplaces and carved woodwork.

But Kenyatta concluded, "the main attraction for most students is probably the ambience of the co-ops—being able to do your own thing, living in a less central area of the campus."

"Greylock did not really fit my style of living," said Cynthia Roat '82 of Dewey House. "With a co-op you get to live with a small group of friends. The option to cook your own meals is a nice extra."

Roat said the removed location of the co-ops is "good and bad. Sometimes I feel isolated, but on the other hand now that I have to make a conscious effort to see my friends who live on campus, I actually see more of them than I did last year."

Demand for co-op space is high: last spring 150 persons applied for the then-available 70 beds. The selection process involves using a computer to randomly assign ranking within the applicant pool. The application allows the group to express a preference for up to three co-ops.

Seniors receive preference in the selection process because of the preparational emphasis of co-op living. Juniors may be included with a group of seniors, but no one is allowed to live in a co-op for more than one year.

Rice House, converted into a co-op over the summer, has provided nine more beds to meet the demand.

"The house stood vacant last year," said Hopkins. "Faculty weren't interested in living there. In the interest of maintenance it's better to have it occupied, so the Committee on Undergraduate Life decided to make it into a co-op."

However, the College had already rented out part of Rice to Timothy E. Cook, a new assistant professor of political science this year. He will be living in an apartment connected to Rice which has a separate entrance.

"My main concern was that I wasn't informed by student housing before they implemented the decision on Rice," said Cook, "but so far everything seems to be working out all right, and I don't foresee any problem."

The use of Rice for student housing before they implemented the decision on Rice, Continued on Page 7

Lambert House is a co-op on the corner of Walden and Hoxsey Sts. Co-ops like this are becoming more popular. (Milloy)

CC spending expose causes dissension

by Sara Ferris

Campus reaction to alleged violations of College Council funding guidelines reported in last week's Record has prompted the Council to examine discretionary funding at its meeting tomorrow night, according to Council President Freddy Nathan.

Nathan said he would reserve further comment until the meeting.

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor said that the administration plans to leave the matter in the hands of students. "We regard it as a policy matter for the Council. It's an open disagreement about how discretionary money should be used."

O'Connor noted that "this sort of thing has happened commonly in the past... I believe the officers' dinner is an old tradition. The new thing seems to be that people took account of it."

He asserted that no College rules were violated. "It was a case of bad judgment... My understanding is that (the Record's) intent was not to label it a violation of school rules. If I thought there was dishonesty, of course (I would take action), but I don't see that anything dishonest or wrong was done."

Council Treasurer Steve Spears '83 said that the Council is responsible for any changes in its budget procedures. Currently the Council receives about $2,000 in Student Activities Tax (SAT) funds. The SAT is set at $66 per student per year and produces a total of almost $130,000, which is allocated to student organizations by the Finance Committee. Council money, however, is not subject to Finance Committee approval.

Spears explained that for all organizations, with the exception of the Council, a member of the organization must submit a voucher in triplicate to the Treasurer with supporting receipts for all expenses drawn on the group's allocation.

Jonathan Light '83 said he "felt the article was basically an editorial on the front page. I think the story was legitimate, but the article seemed sensationalistic."

Marcia Voorhis '84 remarked that she "was shocked that student officers were spending money that belonged to students to have an expensive dinner just for themselves."

"It did sound a little bit exorbitant," Ann Judge '84 commented. "I think there ought to be a little more input into the spending process."

"I thought it was startling because you don't think that sort of thing goes on at an intellectual place like Williams," remarked Kathy Bell '85. "I wish they were found out earlier."

Laura Travaglini '82 disagreed. "I think it's very Williams-like to invest money like that in such discriminate activities," she said.

"It's not surprising," concluded Mark Rutkowski '84. "It happens everywhere, but that's not to say it's right."

Council discusses calendar, Record

by Susan Kandel

Debate over the proposed 1982-83 calendar, which features an intensified exam schedule, dominated last Wednesday's College Council meeting.

Next year's calendar, which the faculty will vote on November 18, follows the new pattern of the current year, which has been adopted to move Commencement forward one week. This spring, the combined time for reading period and final exams will be reduced from 10 to 9½ days, with fifteen exam periods scheduled in five days, as opposed to this fall's twelve in six days.

The otherwise routine meeting concluded with a charge by Dean Mary Kenyatta that an article in last week's Record

"threatened the livelihood" of one of the previous year's Council officers.

"The article in the Record was a spurious piece of trash," Kenyatta shouted, directing her comments at College Council Treasurer Stephen Spears '83, who is also managing editor of the Record.

"People last year did not misuse funds... you have threatened the livelihood of last year's President, who works in a bank with Williams alumni who will read this, (last week's article) all to make yourself look good," she said.

Spears denied the accusation and also denied writing the article.

Kenyatta said after the meeting that "I wanted to say something because I felt Steve Spears was making snide remarks about past officers... referring to the article, making jokes about it. I wanted to give the College Council the other side of the issue."

In discussion of the new calendar, Professor Paul Clark, head of the Calendar and Scheduling Committee, said his committee wrestled with some way to restore the six day exam schedule for next year, but came up against too many obstacles.

"We seriously questioned whether we could return to the pattern of twelve time periods in six days, but the consensus was that every one of the other possibilities had more disad-

Continued on Page 8

Inside the Record

Agony on the gridiron	p. 10
Outlook: Commencement speaker selection	p. 3
Southside Johnny preview	p. 4
80-year-old tennis champ	p. 9

Divided Houses

A house divided cannot stand. This is the lesson some 320 Row House residents are learning this year after the elimination of Row House dining. Clearly, the financial advantages of the changes were carefully studied. However, the human costs in terms of residential house unity were not. The College should assume more than a passive role to help Row House residents redress the situation.

Residential house unity is a nebulous concept with an elusive definition. Feeling at home in one's house and knowing most fellow members are two ways to put a concrete foundation under the intangible structure. The daily social activity of dining probably brings house members closer together than any other single factor. Unlike their centralized counterparts, the separate Row House units are spread over a large physical area. While some may argue the Row Houses became too dependent on dining's unifying aspect, it was the focal point that brought three or four houses together as one. This year, without the lunch or dinner tables, Row House residents often do not see each other, and are left to wonder, who lives in that "other" house?

For all its extensive deliberations, the Gifford Committee did not fully understand how fragile Row House unity could be without dining. Exacerbating the problem was the College's poorly executed transition from dining to no dining. The final Gifford Report was released after students had left for the summer. Over the summer, Row House kitchens were dismantled and their contents auctioned off. When students returned this fall, kitchenettes, promised by the report, were not yet completely installed. As a result of the uncoordinated effort, the College now has had to buy new, more expensive coffee pots, cookware and utensils to replace the auctioned items.

The College placed seminar classes in Perry and Wood House without consulting residents' opinions. This fall, in an apparent effort to mollify student protests, the College offered to buy the Row Houses new living room furniture. The new chairs and sofas, which are not due until March, will hardly cushion the impact of the dining loss.

In the most critical transition time, the College has proven insensitive to student concerns. The present dissatisfaction may well lead to a weakening of the Row House appeal, thus placing greater housing demands on such units as Greylock and Dodd.

Despite the loss, Row House residents need to cast off their mourning shrouds and devote that negative energy to renewed enthusiasm and effort to improve in-house unity. Weekly parties and snacks, however, cannot fill the dining void; the monies for daily social activities are unavailable. Nor can Row House presidents tell house members when and where to eat. Finding a seat, much less a group of housemates, has become a challenge at Greylock, the most convenient dining hall for most Row Houses.

The College can—and needs to—help, in several ways:

- remove the classrooms from Wood and Perry.
- direct Food Services to give added consideration to special in-house meals and desserts.
- direct the Committee on Undergraduate Life, the student Housing Committee and the Director of Student Housing to monitor Row House unity problems.
- examine the present house transfer policy that allows students almost at will to move from house to house.
- allocate a portion of the Dean's discretionary fund for small, frequent student-faculty coffee/desserts in the Row Houses.
- speed up the furniture deliveries.

An effective residential house system is an integral part of the social and personal maturation process the Williams experience offers. The Row House change has weakened this system and the College needs to respond to its consequences.

By eliminating Row House dining, the College took a large step in the name of cutting costs. Yet the followup to this change has proven so uncoordinated and ineffectual that the human costs soon will outweigh any dollar savings.

The article on College Council officer spending in last week's RECORD neither stated nor implied that disciplinary action should be taken by the Dean's Office.

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS
Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT
Lori Miller

FEATURES
Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS
Mike Sutton

LAYOUT
Bob Buckner

ASSISTANT NEWS
Philip Busch

Sara Ferris

Katya Mokanson

Jon Tiger

ASSOCIATE EDITOR
Dan Keating

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
Paul Sabbah

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Toub

OUTLOOK
Priscilla Cohen

Alyson Hagy

SPORTS
Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY
Sue Doherty

Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Yellow journalism

To the editor:

Philip Busch's article in the November 3 issue, headlined "Council Abused SAT Funds," was a prime example of irresponsible journalism. By reporting half-truths and by engaging in sensationalist reporting, the RECORD stepped beyond the pale of responsible news coverage. The article was not objectively written.

To say that "SAT money is almost never allocated for food and drink" is only half true, as members of the RECORD staff should know. As a percentage of total expenditures paid for by SAT money, the amount used for food and drink is probably very low indeed; however, it is not rare, as shown by an expenditure of $21 on June 7, 1981 at the Slippery Banana by College Council Treasurer Steve Spears (who appears in these pages as Managing Editor—this seems a violation of the principle that reporters should be disassociated from those they report on.)

As a further example, there was the RECORD staff dinner at one of the area's finer local restaurants in May, 1981. The tab was $274 and was paid for out of RECORD advertising revenues. Advertising revenues are used for the same purpose as College Council grants to the RECORD, namely publishing the newspaper. Thus, $274 taken out of advertising, revenues meant $274 had to be taken out of College Council-provided funds to publish the RECORD.

In reporting half-truths in a sensationalistic light, the RECORD put forward its editorial views as news. The result has been a great deal of damage to the lives of those editorialized against, last year's College Council officers. I believe that the RECORD owes a sincere apology to the 1980-81 officers of the College Council for unethical and irresponsible journalism.

Sincerely,

Geoff Mamlet '83

Ed note: The $21 allocation dated June 7 was voucher #722. Spears paid this bill to the Slippery Banana. The $20.97 bill had been paid due since January 18. It was charged by the Concert Commission.

Sentence missing

To the editor:

I was pleased to see The RECORD reporting on the possible misuse of funds by the College Council last year. Bravo RECORD! But the obvious missing sentence is this one: "Of course many other campus organizations are just as guilty of this passive, 'traditional' misuse of money." Yeah, like the RECORD itself.

Last spring, at a College Council meeting, The RECORD begged for more funds so it could properly serve the student body. A week later the RECORD staff enjoyed a meal at the British Maid. They excused it as "traditional" (sounds familiar, huh?)

Tradition ain't no excuse. College Council funds should be used to fund efforts that benefit the whole College community.

Keep up the good work fellows,
Will Layman '82

Ed note: ON May 7, 1981, the RECORD spent $263.63 on dinner for 26 members of the RECORD staff at the River House. No SAT money was used for the dinner. Subscription funds were used. More than 60 percent of all RECORD funds come from outside sources.

Misparaphrased

To the editor:

I am writing to clarify the next to last paragraph in the article. "Former Officers Implicated: Council Abused SAT Funds" which appeared in the last issue of the RECORD.

While he was writing the article your reporter asked me, "Does this year's Council spend its funds in a questionable way too?" I replied simply, "No."

This was paraphrased in the RECORD to read: "Current Council President Freddy Nathan said that questionable spending is not a feature of his administration."

This, however, could be taken to imply that my statement was passing judgment on the past officers, which it did not do. Although this will sound minor to most, I feel the distinction deserves to be drawn.

Sincerely,
Freddy Nathan '83

Report biased

To the editor:

While we applaud the investigative effort which went into your recent article, "Council Abused SAT Funds," we feel that the language of the report showed an unfortunate bias against Russell Platt, former College Council Treasurer.

The article implies that the money saved from budget cuts was used for the Council's discretionary expenses. Rather, the Council funds were set aside for use by the officers before funds to any organization were allocated.

We feel that it was ill-advised to make a joke of Platt's cuts in SAT allocations, whatever "hype" value this may have added to the RECORD report. Based on estimates presented by Platt the SAT would have encountered serious financial difficulties. Anyone who dealt with Russell Platt last year, at a time when he was forced to make unpopular cuts in the SAT allocations, knows of his dedication and sense of responsibility.

Finally we believe that, contrary to Philip Busch's insinuation, Platt will continue to serve honestly and respon-

Continued on Page 6

OUTLOOK

Commencement: for them or us?

by Alyson Hagy

It is late fall in Williamstown. It is quiet and we aren't likely to hear any disturbing sounds as we pass from quad to quad. We aren't likely to hear the echo of hammers pounding on the pieces of the graduation day grandstand. We probably won't notice the early morning walls of the Williams College Pipe Band preparing for a parade. Realistically, it is November and the noises of those last rites of spring are buried in the back of our minds. Those dangerous days are so far off.

But the air is not as dead as we might like to think. Commencement '82 is alive

From Down Under

It is true that the senior class is represented on the President's committee by two or three of its members. In fact, the junior class is also represented by a single student who will sit on the committee for two years in an effort to establish some sort of continuity. Undergraduates are, indeed, involved in the selection of a commencement speaker. But, the representation is merely symbolic.

The students who represent the senior class are self selected (i.e., they apply for the committee through the President's office and are not chosen by the class). Often, there is very little competi-

"The College has silently chosen speakers for commencement and baccalaureate" and well, friends and seniors. The College has not only double-checked the names to be formally printed on our diplomas, but it has silently chosen speakers for Commencement and Baccalaureate. The fate of the final day has been sealed.

A Matter of Tradition

The fact that a Commencement speaker has already been chosen surprises no one in Hopkins Hall or in the offices of Stetson. The "closed" process by which candidates for honorary degrees (including the speakers) are selected is a time honored one involving the President and a few faculty members. Students will most likely be at least a little shocked. After all, graduation is months and months away. We've hardly thought about it. Also, the opportunity for student participation in the selection of speakers and recipients of honorary degrees has hardly been thought about. The student role is neither time honored nor substantial.

It happens something like this: The President of the College organizes a committee to present a list of possible degree recipients to the Trustee Committee on Honorary Degrees. The committee of recommendation includes the president, a faculty member from every academic division, and students who apply for positions.

The committee meets once in early October to discuss a list to be offered to the Trustees for approval. In mid-October, when the full Board of Trustees is meeting, the recommending committee presents its list. Once approved, the president begins to contact the nominees for degrees and for speaker to see if they are available in May. Throughout the process, the working list of suggestions is known only by the Trustees and committee members. The identity of the actual Commencement speaker (once he or she accepts), though probably known to the president by early November or so, does not become public knowledge until very late in the spring.

The "hush-hush" method used to determine who will have the last word at Commencement is steeped in "tradition." That is the description offered by the Administration which also holds that Commencement is a ceremony "for" the College. Seniors are to march up and back and all around in their black robes for the spirit of Williams and Ephood. Dandy. That is a useful tradition of some sort. What seems objectionable is the efficient application of tradition which has become habitual and inflexible.

Students are just barely involved in a process of which the end result is a speaker whose words will finally punctuate their careers at Williams. There is room for change and a need for change. Students can easily organize themselves to suggest speakers that really might speak to their feelings as a class of graduates.

The current state of affairs, based on voluntary representation, seems less than satisfactory. Many of those involved seem to perceive students as merely going through the motions of representation on a committee dominated by Trustee and administration opinion. By the time we are seniors at Williams, our opinions are worthy of more serious consideration. We can take some responsibility upon ourselves, and we ought to. The senior class should elect its officers at the end of junior year and those officers ought to represent the graduating class in these matters. We shouldn't raise the historical howl that is heard by the College community every May when the identity of the commencement speaker is revealed. We shouldn't sulk or gripe in the spring (or even in November) when it is too late. If we wish to be properly represented we should see that the current process is revised.

On the Other Side

All of this idealistic shouting for action is, of course, contingent upon the Administration's attitude. Hopkins Hall will have to "let us" establish a mechanism that will insure that student opinion is fully presented to the Trustees. As it is, the President's Office is content with the input of two or three or four interested students, students who have no concrete responsibility to their classmates. Commencement, according to the powers that be, is indeed, "for" the College and not "for" the students. A student vote would "be too involved," "take too long," "might be embarrassing." There really isn't any need for it; there are students involved . . . somehow, somewhere.

The Administration also comfortably relays to us that a traditional secret process is practiced by most comparable institutions all over the country. Harvard is most usually invoked as the outstanding example of a university which uses its commencement to institutional advantage. They keep their speaker a secret while the world waits expectantly. They choose him or her covertly, and he who spills the beans does so at his own risk.

Well, bravo. Williams College is not Harvard. But it might more easily be considered in the same league with Mount Holyoke, Wesleyan, or even (heaven forbid) Amherst. And down there, in the far off parts of the Five College Area and beyond, the student voice does manage to echo.

At Mount Holyoke, the senior class organizes, through an election process, a list of speaker recommendations to present to the President of the College. Elections are held early in the fall and (surprise!) tend to take place without a hitch. Student officers present the president with their suggestions in order of preference, and although the president has the right to veto any suggestions considered "inappropriate," she has never done so. Because the preliminary list is public, there are fewer secrets kept at Holyoke. The process is completed in the middle of the first semester as the president mails invitations to the chosen ones and (surprise again!) there has thus far been no rioting or use of the national guard to quell radical student sentiment.

Our friends at Wesleyan are more mired in the old tradition. Still, they have managed to allow for useful student input when attempting to choose a speaker. A committee composed of faculty, administrators, and student officers meets in the fall to discuss viable options for a speaker and recipients of honorary degrees. The student officers poll their class for preferences and are expected to involve themselves in committee discussion. Though Commencement is considered an "institutional event" at Wesleyan, faculty and students are actively involved in the selection process. Like Williams, Wesleyan degree recipients are often suggested by the Trustees and the Alumni Office, and the final confirmed choices are administrative secrets until May.

"We should see that the current process is revised."

Our foes and radical comrades at Amherst have truly gone all out to flex the tiny student muscle. Student officers organize an annual election to choose a Class Day speaker to be honored during a ceremony separate from Commencement. Class Day is a time when students have their own way and their own speaker. And dear old Amherst is also the scandalous example offered to appease students at Williams and other placed who might want a bigger piece of the pie. A few years ago, a senior class invited a fellow to speak at Class Day and then proceeded to uninvite him causing quite a blush in the Five College Area. The students (you might have known it) embarrassed the college.

Remodeling

Students and the Administration should consider remodeling the Commencement process. The junior class could easily get its act together late in the spring and submit a responsible list of suggestions to a committee in the fall. A student election would not fail or embarrass the College. Students would not demand a podium for Abby Hoffman or the Weathermen year after year. Public knowledge of a list of possible speakers would not destroy expectation, and even a tear in the shroud of administrative mystery would not be tragic.

Commencement is for the students as they are a part of the College. We are not irresponsible radicals. But we may have a hidden personality. If each class is asked to consider the force and meaning of Commencement by voting for speakers that have a realistic chance of appearing and telling a few truths, then those last days in May might actually embody more of the real spirit of the College. There might be more real energy. Recognition of the present is within a commitment to tradition.

Southside Johnny to perform

by Charlie Pardoe
Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes make their way to Williamstown this Thursday night for Williams' 1981 Homecoming Concert. The show begins at 8:00 p.m. in the Towne Field House with a four-piece opener, Mr. Lucky, paving the way for Southside's rock and roll band.

Southside Johnny, 32, grew up wearing a leather jacket and slicked back hair in the rock and roll ferment of Asbury Park, New Jersey. His musical roots are eclectic, stretching back to his parents' record collection at home in Neptune, New Jersey. The collection included such diverse artists as Billie Holiday, Wynonie Harris and Joe Turner. Southside's music has also been influenced by rhythm and blues, and by the Asbury Park reaction against the British Invasion of the early '60s.

Throughout most of his career, Southside has been associated with Bruce Springsteen. Like Springsteen, his music can be powerful and loud, or slow and sensitive. He describes himself, "I just don't think in terms of what image might sell more records. Those things don't come together in my mind and I've never had anyone, like a manager, do that for me."

The band has had six LP's since they began playing in 1974. Of their best known album, Hearts of Stone, Southside says, "Hearts of Stone was what we were aiming for all along. We wanted to transform our rhythm and blues roots into a more modern format. I still think that's what I do best."

The length and intensity of Southside's live performances bring to mind Springsteen. His shows tend to emphasize the "spectacular", with light shows and flashy brass section.

Tickets for Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes are available daily at Baxter Hall, the Record Store and Toonerville Trolley in Williamstown, Lily's in North Adams, and New Wave Music in Pittsfield. Prices are $9 for the general public and $6 for Williams students.

Director of Security Ransom Jenks stated Sunday that there is absolutely no smoking, eating and drinking permitted in the Field House. Violators of the rule will be ejected.

Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes will appear in the Townesend Field House this Saturday.

Twelfth Night opening at AMT

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night will be the first offering of the Williamstown Theatre 1981-82 season, opening, appropriately enough, on the 12th night of November at the Adams Memorial Theatre.

One of the most popular of Shakespeare's comedies, Twelfth Night deals with disguise and its consequences. When the shipwrecked Viola takes on the appearance of a young man, she becomes a servant to Count Orsino and romantic messenger between the Count and his beloved Olivia. What follows is a classic tangle, with Olivia falling in love with Viola, who in turn falls in love with Orsino—a plot further complicated by the appearance of Sebastian, Vi-ola's twin brother. Meanwhile, the subplot is carried by the clowns: the incorrigible Sir Toby Belch, his foolish sidekick Sir Andrew Aguecheek, and the cynical Feste, all of whom unite to confound their pompous adversary, the steward Malvollo.

Director Jean-Bernard Bucky calls Twelfth Night a play "about gender, about acting, playing, disguise, magic... perhaps most significantly, about the magic of words."

Scenic and lighting designer Bill Groener and costume designer Bruce Goodrich have departed from the traditional Elizabethan style. It is a spare production which emphasizes

Continued on Page 6

Dance class offered by Remy Charlip

Remy Charlip, the internationally acclaimed author, artist, dancer, choreographer, actor, designer and director will be at Williams on Tuesday, November 17, to teach a Master Class and lecture on his video tape made for WGBH-TV Boston, Remy Charlip Dances.

Charlip has choreographed over 100 dances for domestic and foreign dance companies. His work outside the United States started during his four-year residency in Paris, beginning in 1972 with the creation of Dance, an evening-length work for the London Contemporary Dance Company. In Dance, the dancers told in their own words and movements the stories of their dancing experience. Sets were painted anew each night, and the dance sequences included material from the performers' own fantasies and dreams.

At the first performances of The Remy Charlip Dance Company in September 1977 at the Dance Theatre Workshop in New York, there was a concurrent exhibition of 24 large drawings, called Air Mail Dances. For these dances, Charlip draws 20 to 40 figures on a page and mails them to dancers all over the world. The dancers must then devise the transition from position to position. These Air Mail Dances have been performed all over the world. During his visit at Williams, Charlip will work with the dances in the Master Class as they construct a dance using the Air Mail Dance entitled Garden Lillacs.

Prior to his travels, Charlip's major dance work was Differences, choreographed for the Joffrey Ballet in 1968. In 1969, he created Homage to a Lole Fuller for the Osaka World's Fair in Japan. He returned in 1970 to create and direct members of the national Theatre of the Deaf in Biography. He has recently completed the filming of a video-tape, Remy Charlip Dances for WGBH-TV Boston which will be distributed nationally.

A founding member of the Paper Bag Players, Charlip has also directed and choreographed many plays at Judson Poet's Theatre, including A Beautiful Day for which he won an Obie Award for Distinguished Direction. He has performed in the companies of Katherine Litz, Merce Cunningham, Jean Erdman, Donald McKayle and Charles Weidman.

Charlip will teach a master class in the second floor gym of Lasell Gym from 4:50-6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, November 17. The same evening at 8:00 p.m. he will show his video tape and lecture on the process of making this television program in Stetson Media Center Room A. Both the Master Class and lecture are free and open to the public.

Remy Charlip, renowned dancer and choreographer (as well as many other things) will lecture on his dances on Tuesday, Nov. 17th.

Concert Listing

Fri., Nov. 13 U-2, JB Scott's, Albany
Jerry Garcia Band, Orpheum, Boston
Mike Love, Channel, Boston
NRBQ, Stage West, W. Hartford, CT
Pousette-Dart Band, Rusty Nail, Sunderland, MA

Sat., Nov. 14 Tommy Flanagan & J. R. Montrose
The Chambers, Albany
Bill Staines, Spencertown Academy, Spencertown, NY

David Crosby, JB Scott's, Albany
Chris Smithers, Iron Horse, Northampton
Dave Brubeck Quartet, Symphony Hall, Boston
Taj Mahal, Hotel Bradford, Boston
U-2 & David Johansen, Orpheum, Boston

Sun., Nov. 15 Eric Anderson, Iron Horse, Northampton
Mike Love, Stage West, W. Hartford
Rossington Collins Band, Henry Paul Band, Civic Center, Glens Falls
Natalie Cole & Luther Mandross, Berklee Performance Center, Boston
Sonny Fortune, Page Hall, SUNY at Albany
Nov. 17 George Thorogood, Hotel Bradford, Boston
Nov. 19 Hall & Oates, Orpheum, Boston

courtesy of Toonerville Trolley

The Mole Hole

UNIQUE GIFTS
for all family members

118 Water Street

Open 9-6 Seven Days

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

In Other Ivory Towers

Wesleyan University

Wesleyan was shocked by the distribution of racist posters on campus by four or five unknown individuals on the night of October 21-22. A demonstration of some 300 members of the community, many carrying signs, gathered before South College the following Monday to protest the racist harassment and to express support for the demands presented to President Collin Campbell by Ujamaa, Ajau Campos, the university's black organization.

The statement presented by Ujamaa, Ajau Campos cited among its grievances harassment of male and female minority students by "individuals outside and inside the Wesleyan community," adding "we have also been mistreated by our own security force." The statement also called for increased security for the Malcolm X House (which is dominated by minority students), a van service for all students between dusk and 2 a.m., and two professional counselors to "help students cope with their fear and anxiety."

While President Campbell promised to respond to these demands on October 29, he issued an interim statement in which he implored, "One sure victory for the racists— whoever and wherever they may be—would be a divided campus. We cannot let that happen."

Amherst College

The traditional Delta Upsilon Delta scavenger hunt on November 1 ended in the arrest of four frat members on charges of disorderly conduct and malicious destruction of property. The hunt was the first since 1979 for D.U., which had been on probation following the activities of Rush Day 1980.

The hunt ended with the D.U. hallway crammed with items such as a dumpster, several rugs, the painting from the Annex stairway, and two stuffed roosters from the biology building. House president John Giella '82 called the hunt "a failure to use common sense."

North Adams State College

After writing a letter to the editor about the poor quality of cafeteria food as an assignment for her Introduction to Journalism course, Margaret Corcoran '85 found that the college food service production manager Alan Tower had invalidated her meal ticket in response. The letter, entitled "Turned off by Rotten Lettuce," was published by the North Adams State Beacon on October 29. According to the Beacon, Tower, maintaining that he did not like hearing complaints second-hand, invalidated the meal ticket in order to get in touch with Corcoran, though a meal ticket had never been revoked because of food criticism before. Tower added that, according to a server, "There wasn't any brown lettuce that day." Corcoran, with help from the head of residence at Hoosac Hall, confronted Bob Volpi, the director of food service, and got the ticket revalidated.

ARTS-ARTS-ARTS

Poetry Reading

Hakl Madhubuti (Don L. Lee), former poet-in-residence at Howard University and director of the Institute of Positive Education in Chicago, will read from his own works on Wednesday, Nov. 11 at 8:30 p.m. in Jesup Auditorium.

Madhubuti will also conduct a seminar on "Independent Black Publishing Ventures" on Thursday, November 12 at 4 p.m. in the Dodd House living room.

Art Film Series

The last in a series of films on Romantic and Classic art will be shown on Friday, November 13. "Edgar Degas and Auguste Rodin" will be shown at 1 p.m. at the Clark Art Institute.

Octet Concert

The Williams Octet, Amherst Zumbies and Mount Holyoke V-8's will perform at Saturday, November 14 at 8 p.m. in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Tickets are available in advance at Baxter Hall, 11:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. or at the door for $1.50.

Alumni to Perform

Bill Payne '32 and his Boston Jazz Band will perform on Saturday, Nov. 14 (Homecoming) at 9 p.m. at the Log. Alumni are welcome.

THE HAIR

THE CLIP SHOP

THE SALON FOR HE & SHE

Many times men feel out of place to go to a salon just to get the traditional layered haircut. The stylists of the Clip Shop, however, have gone beyond the classic layered style. It, too, can be updated and changed by taking into consideration an individual's features and personality. As demonstrated by our model here, the lines of this cut have been tailored to fit this individual.

Make an appointment to have one of the stylists from the Clip Shop tailor a look for you, or if you prefer just walk in at one of their three locations.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

Model EL-506

Full-featured scientific calculator with 3-key independent memory system.
• 10-digit liquid crystal display. • 3-key independent memory. • One-touch percent and square root keys. • Automatic Power-Off (A.P.O.) prolongs battery life. • Performs hyperbolic, polar coordinates, time conversions. • Constant (K) and reciprocal. • 3 levels of parentheses/4 pending operations. • Includes wallet case and batteries.

$29.95

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

Letters

Continued from Page 2

sibly as Business Manager of the Student Activities Board. We suggest that discretion be exercised in passing moral judgments on issues which are not clear-cut.

Sincerely,
Richard Beifanti '82
Francesco Coppola '82

Print in gray

To the editor:

Last year, the College Council reduced or axed monies for some student programs and publications previously funded by the Student Activities Tax. Relatively untouched by the cutbacks, The Record emerged with the largest grant—$12,880. Approximately half of this money was not necessary for the publication of The Record.

The student body certainly appreciates The Record's efforts to make their product look good, but the use of heavy white paper as opposed to the more mundane newsprint of papers such as The New York Times more than doubles the cost of printing The Record. According to an estimate from the North Adams Transcript, the same eight page issue published for approximately $800 by The Record's current printer can be put out for about $400. The only difference in printing at The Transcript would be that The Record would have to use a lower grade paper and lay out their own pages.

The justification given by one Record editor for the added expense is that the heavier paper absorbs the ink and doesn't soil readers' hands. We think that for a $7000 savings (approximately one half of the proposed Record budget for this year), people could live with dirty thumbs. ($7000 could buy 20,000 bars of soap—enough to not just clean our fingers but engulf the entire campus in a mammoth soap bubble.)

The Finance Committee's budget for this year proposes $13,700 for publication of The Record. According to The Record's application, this money is to be used strictly for printing costs. We believe that the Finance Committee and the Council should reconsider this funding at tomorrow night's College Council meeting, without the aid of Steve Spears—Managing Editor of The Record and also Treasurer of College Council.

The Record budget should be cut in half. This would allow several worthwhile college groups to put these freed funds to better use.

Signed,
Lorraine Driscoll '82
Sonia L. Nazario '82

Editor's note: While Lamb Printing Co. doesn't have the facilities to print on newsprint, they provide us various other options including the ability to make changes in the paper as late as Tuesday morning.

Misconceptions

To the editor:

We would like to correct some misconceptions likely to result from Stuart Smith's article, "Jewish Activists Organize Groups," that appeared in last week's Record.

The Jewish Association is not primarily "religious in orientation," though that is certainly one of our concerns. Our role is to cater to the social and cultural, as well as the religious needs of the Jewish community here on campus by offering programs and maintaining facilities that meet these needs. In the past we have provided programs that pertain to the same issues that concern both the Israel Alliance and the Jewish Political Action Committee. These groups are an integral part of the Jewish Association. We are fortunate to have several committed students who have chosen to enhance our offerings on Israel and social/political issues and, hence, provide valuable educational and cultural opportunities for the college as a whole.

One final note: the Jewish Association does not have "membership" per se; all of our functions are open to the entire College community and we encourage participation and suggestions from everyone.

Jill Diamond '83
Rick Wentz '82

LIQUOR SPECIALS

Kahlua

Save $1 a bottle
on 750 ml. size

Ristoro Soave

$3.49/1.5 liter bottle

Labatt's

$12/case and
$3.05/six

Eppie defended

To the editor:

Why does it seem like there are people at Williams with grudges against given individuals? Perhaps because there are individuals that consciously offend others with one fell swoop of their pens. Perhaps, but I don't think such a person really exists here. In the case of Steve Epstein, don't we owe it to ourselves (and to Eppie) to look further into his nature and his purpose, before we make similar mincemeat out of him? I think we do.

Steve Epstein loves Williams; he loves the people, he loves the sports program, and he wants nothing better than for this to show in his writings in The Record and his broadcasts on WCFM. If Eppie gets carried away and winks at a girl, or notices a flimsy skirt, or playfully refers to a female sophomore as a "Teeny-Bopper from Mission Park", does this qualify him as a vicious sexist? Perhaps an overzealous, yet well-intentioned guy who needs occasionally to curb his cerebral ramblings, but definitely not deserving of the abuse that comes his way. If he is unable to curb the infrequent gaffs that we are all susceptible to, (especially when we are being watched closely by some who are just waiting for us to slip up; just looking for the opportunity to attack) then with a gentle, but firm hand, we should put him back on the right track.

To relegate this jovial, well-intentioned guy to the ranks of "the Bane at Williams"; this is too much. There is no one who can say that Epstein is not a credit to Williams; likewise, can't we excuse (not forget, but forgive) his occasional mistakes in light of all the good that he has done? Isn't there a saying that goes "Let he who is free from sin cast the first stone"? Those that throw stones at Epstein should first look at themselves and what they've done for Williams; then to Steve Epstein and what he means to Williams. If they still feel like throwing stones, let them throw them at me, because I'm for Epstein.

Jonathan Meer '83

Nobody thanks him

To the editor:

It has come to my attention, especially by last week's Record, that perhaps somebody should come to Steve Epstein's rescue—besides Steve. A more important point is that maybe we could better spend our time avoiding petty bickering.

No one thanks Steve for his good weeks, of which there have been quite a few. No one says, "Hey, Steve, thanks for writing three good articles in the Record again this week" or "Good sports telecast" or "Nice radio show." Not that Steve needs to hear it, because he doesn't sit home and mope when praise is withheld. He does what he does because he loves it. It just seems to me that when he slips up or oversteps his bounds people come down on him with intensity, but when all is well, not a sound is heard. This is not much gratitude for someone who does as much for Williams as he does.

Granted, an outsider should not come down on the football team as hard as he did. They were struggling and they knew it; they also knew they could solve the problems internally. Granted, the term "teenie boppers from Mission Park" is regrettable, but he was trying to set the scene at an Octet concert and the Octet does have a definite "groupie" following. But shall we dissect everything he writes? "Sweet young thing" is a cliché (and God knows Ep could avoid using clichés), but it was meant as a term of endearment and was not meant to have "Women are mindless" overthe mystery and ambiguity of the play, rather than mere period picturesqueness.

Continued on Page 8

Twelfth Night coming—

Continued from Page 4

In this comedy of excess and narcissistic self-love, the festive resolution is balanced by some bitterness. It is a wild party that turns sour, revealing a world in which control, order and "sanity" exact their cost. Viola's insistence "I'm not what I am" encompasses far more than her masculine disguise, and we are caught by Fabian's exclamation, "If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction."

Twelfth Night will be performed on Nov. 12, 13, 14 and 19, 20, 21 at 8 p.m. Tickets are available now at the box office of the A.M.T. 12-5 p.m. daily. Prices are $1.50 for general admission, 50¢ with Williams I.D. For more information, call 458-3023.

CLASSIC CHIC and HOMECOMING ARE A TRADITION AT

THE House of Walsh

FINE CLOTHING FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Spring St. Williamston Mass. 01267

Blacks and Jews face differences

by Katya Hokanson

Black and Jewish members of the Williams community met Wednesday in an effort to effect a Black-Jewish discussion on campus, a move called "long overdue" by co-organizer Rich Cohen '82.

After talks by Professors Dennis Dickerson and Nathan Katz, and by David Bowen '83 and Cohen, the meeting turned to an often emotional open discussion among the approximately 55 participants.

"This is really encouraging," said Cohen after the meeting. "It took a long time to resolve our differences, but there is real potential for ongoing communication and working together."

"It was constructive," agreed WBSU member and co-coordinator Bowen. "The way I see it now, we will be able to come together over issues we both have a stake in."

Dickerson began the meeting by discussing the history of Black-Jewish relations in America.

"The relationship between Afro-Americans and American Jews has been close, although it began in the abstract," he said. "Jews were among the few whites who were genuinely interested in the plight of the Afro-Americans." Dickerson cited Jewish support of the NAACP.

However, noted Dickerson, in the 1960s the Black Movement sought new directions and focused more on the militant black nationalist movements such as the Black Panthers. "In the late '60s, things started to fall apart," he said. "The blacks said to the whites, 'It's time to run our own movement.' Differences in opinion about such things as Affirmative Action and incidents like the dismissal of Andrew Young "have made bad matters worse" between blacks and Jews, according to Dickerson.

"The splintering process is the point where we are right now," Dickerson remarked. "We don't have the luxury of sitting back and taking the long view. We're in the midst of a battle."

Nathan Katz then gave his views, saying, "In the eyes of most blacks, Jews are simply whites. It's a simple observation. But my perception is that I'm not white—I'm Jewish... Racists see all of us as niggers."

Katz also noted the similarity in the voting patterns of blacks and Jews, showing a common-ity of political interests in spite of economic differences.

Katz noted that Jews are between the powerful and the powerless in American society. "They have reached middle class without security... Jews are marginal to the real power in the U.S." Katz said that assimilation to White society was not the answer for either blacks or Jews. "It's not our pie being sliced, but the white, male, Protestant pie."

Talk then centered on each group's perception of the other. "I wondered why we were having this meeting," said one black student who requested that she remain anonymous. "Jews can fade into the background—they're white."

"Whiteness is a new experience for Jews," retorted Cohen. "Jews didn't used to be considered of the same race as whites."

Discussion continued for two hours, with the tentative final consensus being that lines of communication should be set up between the two groups. But many participants stressed that this meant neither that Jews and Blacks had the same goals nor that the two groups face the same problems in America.

"Blacks are in bad shape, Jews are not in bad shape. There is no growing Jewish underclass, but there is a growing black underclass," stated Dickerson.

Some new jobs at Rowe were

Nuclear plant opens to students

by Lynn Vendinello

Sixteen students from the Energy Conservation Committee and the Environmental Studies 203 class toured the Yankee Rowe nuclear power plant last Wednesday. The plant is located in Rowe, Massachusetts, about 17 miles east of Williamstown.

Yankee Rowe was built in 1960, making it the oldest nuclear reactor in New England. The plant produces an average of 170,000 kilowatts of electricity each year, which it sells to the New England Power Company. Massachusetts Electric, the College's electricity supplier, buys from New England Power, so Williams ends up receiving about 11 percent of its electricity from nuclear power.

Rowe annually produces 45-50 tons of high-level wastes and over 500 55-gallon drums of low-level wastes mixed with cement. Because President Carter closed nuclear waste reprocessing plants during his administration, these wastes now sit at Rowe.

Bill McGee, Rowe's public relations coordinator, said the plant has enough storage room to last until 1997. However, Bill Billings, head of Rowe's chemistry department, foresees a possible decommission of Rowe within the next 5-10 years if reprocessing plants aren't reopened.

Some new jobs at Rowe were created by the scare at Three Mile Island, since current regulations require at least one monitor per eight-hour shift to be certified in nuclear engineering.

Yankee Rowe provides 130 jobs and over $330,000 in taxes to the town of Rowe. Many employees are concerned about job prospects if the plant should be forced to close.

Twenty-one years of operation have created some rust problems at the plant. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission foresees a potential cracking in the 8-inch metal shields around the reactor vessel. "Lacking cement walls around the core, Rowe couldn't survive a Three Mile Island type accident," said Billings.

The tour was subject to strict security precautions. Before the tour began, guards divided the students into four groups, snapped their pictures, checked them with metal and explosive detectors, and frisked each one.

When asked his reaction to anti-nuclear protests, McGee replied, "It's a free country; they have as much right to voice their opinion as anyone else." McGee added that he believes 44 percent of the public is moderately for nuclear power, 45 percent are moderately against it, and the rest are asking "what's nuclear power?"

Bill Lyon, a shift technical adviser, disagreed. "It seems to me that the elite educated class, like you kids, are the ones doing all the complaining. The general public just wants to switch on the light and get power no matter where it's coming from."

Another trip to Rowe is tentatively scheduled for this spring. Until then the Energy Conservation Committee is considering trips to other energy source sites.

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

- BERMUDA
- BAHAMAS
- FLORIDA
- SKI COLORADO

TRAVEL FREE & EARN EXTRA MONEY

Collegiate Travel is looking for interested students to promote winter and spring break trips.

CALL COLLECT FOR JOHN

9am-5pm 617-383-0960
after 5pm 212-307-5366

We have a fine selection of Fashion Skiwear:

- Parkas by Gerry Roffe CB Mt. Goat
- Ski sweaters by Gerry Demeter
- Bibs & stretch pants by Gerry Roffe CB Mt. Goat
- Turtle-necks by Roffe Skyr Duofold Obermeyer

—Handknitted Williams Wool Hats—

Plus a variety of printed Williams T-shirts & Sweatshirts

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Johnny's Rent-a-Lemon

$10 a day
10¢ a mile

Will deliver and pick up the cars in the Williamstown area.

Will rent to those 18 and older.

802-823-7272

Watch for our HOMECOMING SPECIAL!

Town & Country Flowers

458-5030

EPH'S ALLEY
on Spring St. Williamstown
behind First Agricultural Bank

Eppie—

Continued from Page 6
tones. It was not a chauvinistic jab.

And why does there have to be such chauvinistic-feminist banter all the time? So often individuals are lurking to pounce on every spoken—or written—word. This is such a constant waste of time and energy. I hate to say it, but the Feminist Alliance is standing as much in the way of the feminist cause as any group on campus. Maybe arguing could be rechanneled into other areas.

Jeff H. Morrison '82

Racist

To the editor:

In response to a previous issue of the Record, I would like to say that I am not a reverse racist. In the article "Cross Burning: Tensions Persist," I was used as an instrument of public attraction. Not only was I not informed that I was being interviewed by the Record, but to add insult to injury, my responses were taken out of context. My printed responses were manipulated in such a way as to exemplify the racist slant the reporter was searching for. As Secretary of the Williams Black Student Union, one of my responsibilities is to act as its spokesperson. Consequently, the portrayed opinions were projected onto the organization as well.

The pressures that are placed on black students in this institution are many—all centering around one obvious difference: the color of our skin. This obvious difference has led to many Williams students (both past and present) assuming that all black students intentionally dine, live, and socialize together. While some black students choose to live, socialize, and dine together it is no different than when athletes choose to do so. Moreover, the only difference between blacks in the Berkshire Quad and whites in Mission Park and Greylock is that blacks are more noticeable and therefore, their actions are (unnecessarily) emphasized. Why? Because of the "obvious difference."

In regards to the letters in the last issue of the Record, I would like those students who were insulted and offended to know that I share their feelings but for different reasons. I would also like to inform them that if they are genuinely interested in an accurate account of my statements they should feel free to contact me.

In conclusion, I feel it is necessary to emphasize that this letter is a reflection of my personal stance and is not a statement of the WBSU.

Kathy Dawn Fennell '84

Editor's note: The writer of the article identified herself to Fennell as a WILLIAMS RECORD reporter and asked to speak to the spokesperson of the WBSU. Fennell then identified herself as the WBSU's spokesperson.

Corrections

In last week's Record article "West to Join Spencer, Woodbridge", Sherry Blum '83 mistakenly was attributed quotations belonging to Mara Dale '83, a resident of West College.

In the same article, Perry House president Tim Caffrey '82 mistakenly was attributed quotations credited to George Baumgarten '82, Wood House representative to the Housing Committee.

Gays discuss indentity problems

by Benjamin S. Bahn

Confronting and overcoming the identity crisis gay people face in defining their own sexuality highlighted the Gay People's Union panel discussion last Wednesday in Weston Language Center.

The causes for this identity crisis vary. "Our standard social morality sees homosexuality as wrong, somehow perverse; a deviant existence," said Mary Beth Thompson '82, GPU chairperson. "Personal crises develop because it's hard to deal positively with what society only acknowledges negatively."

One panelist noted, "There is a lack of role models here and in society. We need role models to help people find identity." Another added, "What happens when you realize that you're not going to become like your parents?"

This lack of direction and role models stems in large part from an invisibility of the gay community, according to Debbie Gregg '82.

"Gay people are so invisible," she said. "Though most authorities would assert that 10 percent of every population will be gay, for two years I didn't know anybody here who was gay."

Many gays see the public acknowledgement of their homosexuality as burdensome. Said one person, "I spent three years here as something to be looked at... It got to be so public that I began to lose my identity."

She said she felt strongly that people saw here only as a homosexual and not at all as an individual.

"I like to have people relate to me as a person, rather than as a representative of something," added Gregg.

Panelists agreed that homosexuality at Williams meets with subtle oppression.

One person noted that social isolation and "subtle oppression... also known as tolerance," as typical reactions here. "There aren't too many harassing notes or phone calls in the middle of the night," remarked one panelist.

One panelist mentioned that "life at Williams has never been uncomfortable... Williams has been far easier than many other places." Said another panelist, "You can talk about sexuality with a lot more freedom here."

Thompson concluded with the hope that such informal meetings would "give people one of the few opportunities they may ever get to talk to someone about what it's like to be gay." She hoped that if "people treated it as a more discussable issue, it would seem more approachable."

Exam schedule piques C.C. —

Continued from Page 1
vantages than just going ahead with what we are starting in the spring," Clark said.

Extending the Monday-through-Friday exam period later, he explained, would tighten the squeeze on time for faculty completion of seniors' grades, and beginning it earlier would conflict with the weekend of the Eastern Colleges Athletic Conference post-season competitions.

Responding to College Council President Freddy Nathan's query as to why a majority of the student body should be penalized for the benefit of those few who might participate in the competitions, Robert Peck of the Physical Education department, also on the Calendar and Scheduling Committee, said that "athletes already take a lot from their professors. We don't want grief to come to those who didn't want it to happen in the first place."

The fact that the grounds used by the Dean's Office to authorize makeup exams for students with congested schedules will be more stringent under the new calendar caused some concern among Council members.

Under the five-day exam schedule, the total number of students needing makeups is likely to fall, said Clark, but the number of students with two exams on one day, which is not grounds for "hardship" exemption, will rise. Furthermore, the new calendar system will not excuse students from taking an exam one afternoon and two the following day, as did this fall's plan.

College Council Vice President John Segal '82 sharply criticized the new exam schedule, claiming the majority of students oppose it.

"If you go through with this, you will see ramifications in student/faculty relations, because the faculty will have voted for something the students are overwhelmingly against."

"This is a bad time politically to do things against the wishes of the students," Segal added. "There isn't a paranoia, exactly, but this is just one more thing."

In other business, the Finance Committee's recommendations for this year's College Council budget, up $13,000 in allocations from 1980-81, were discussed briefly, but will be dealt with at length next week.

Spears attributed the Committee's good financial situation to the College's funding of the Lecture Committee and to the numerous SAT-funded groups who kept their requests minimal.

Beat Amherst —

Continued from Page 5

are. The mentality seems a bit warped.

The frat system also contributed in part to the inability of the Amherst College community to fully integrate women ten years ago. The resistance to coed frats four years ago was phenomenal, and I can see that the day of frat elimination, which seems inevitably soon, will be met with even more resistance.

The point to all this is that it seems a bit ironic that Amherst College was formed by a dissatisfied minority of Williams students and faculty, and that dissatisfied minority has evolved into a stubborn and somewhat archaic majority. Today, that majority is resisting the changes necessary to fully incorporate women and "non-fraternal" students. Most certainly we can learn from what is happening at Amherst. And we can put into perspective the sporting weekend that is before us.

SPORTS

Despite heart attack

Chaffee rules senior circuit

by Ted Leon

On April 29th, 1981, 80-year-old Williamstown resident and former Williams coach Clarence Chaffee had a heart attack. After a successful operation and the installation of a pacemaker, he remembers "getting some screwy looks from the doctors" when he told them, "I'm going to play in the Nationals in August," referring to the super senior division of the United States Tennis Association National Championship.

When August rolled around, Chaffee not only kept his word, but went out and won the Grand Slam of super senior tennis—winning the National Hardcourt Indoor Championship held in San Francisco, the National Hardcourt Outdoor Championship at the Los Angeles Tennis Club, the National Soft Court Grass Championship at Agawam Hunt in Providence, R.I., and the National Soft Court Clay Championship at the Boarshead Sports Club in Charlottesville, Va. Adding doubles championships in three of those four tournaments, it gave him seven titles out of eight possible for the season.

Winning these championships is nothing new for Chaffee. Since 1971 he has collected 41 such titles. Still, recently, he has received considerable recognition. He was inducted into the Hall of Fame at Brown University, where he graduated Class of '24. He also appeared this summer in Sports Illustrated's "Faces in the Crowd" for which he will be presented with a commemorative bowl.

Coming off of heart surgery and winning the Grand Slam somehow seems to make '81 a bit more dramatic.

Arriving at Williams College in 1937, Chaffee began his 33 year career as varsity coach of the squash, tennis, and soccer teams.

Throughout those years, Chaffee developed a reputation as one of the finest coaches ever associated with the College. And while Chaffee has amassed an impressive array of coaching titles and championships, his true success has been in inspiring generation after generation of Williams athletes with his love for sport, and enthusiasm for life. His feelings then were as they are now: "You've got to learn to win, you've got to learn to lose." With athletics, "This is education."

Tennis led him to the Bitsy Grant Tennis Center in Atlanta last week, where he won the 80-year-old division.

Chaffee commented, "I'll have to struggle next year," in light of the fact that there is a whole crop of 79-year-olds who are about to graduate into the super senior (80+) division. Adds Chaffee, "But it'll be fun. They're delightful people. They don't cheat..."

'21 Defectors look tough—

Continued from Page 10
this season (12.8 per game), in comparison to the Eph defense, which has given up only 73 (10.5 per game).

Williams hopes to use its punishing ground game in the information led by Freshman Ted Thomas and Sophomore quarterback B. J. Connolly to penetrate the Amherst defensive line. The running game should then allow Connolly to pass with less pressure, and utilize the blinding speed of senior split end Micah Taylor and the sure hands of sophomore Marc Hummon.

On defense, the Ephs feel their front line is one of the best in New England. Nose guard Jack Kowalk, tackles Joe Ross and Steve Doherty and ends Gary Pfaff and Tom Bouchard are all home-grown New England products that have punished enemy ball carriers all season long.

The Ephs feel that if they can stop the Amherst ground game, they can force Amherst's Curran into mistakes when he goes to the air.

Despite Amherst's advantage going into the game, the great equalizer is emotion and pride. Therefore, look for a close game. Prediction: Williams 17, Amherst 14. See ya at Weston.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30.
The Mole Hole.

LORD JEFF WAS A MURDERER!
BEAT AMHERST!

SURPLUS JEEPS, cars and trucks available. Many sell under $200. Call 312-742-1143, Ext. 5924, for information on how to purchase.

Women ruggers toast, men slip in snow up North

A champagne toast to Captains Barb "Bubs" Good and Kirsten Tolman marked the end of another successful season this Saturday up in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. The Women's Rugby Club now boasts an undefeated record for the past two seasons. All who witnessed it agree that Saturday's display of awesome rugby technique was a fitting end to the 1981 campaign.

In the first of two games, Williams battled Vassar College to a frustrating 0-0 tie. Line Captain Good and freshman prodigy Ginger Greene inspired the team to work as a cohesive rugby machine, but the Vassar team would not yield.

Against Manhattanville, the Williams ruggers had their day in the sun (snow). It was a true exhibition of offensive and aggressive rugby. Tries were made by Martha Paper '82, Dory Dewar '85, Susie Akln '84, and Jane Parker (2) '83. Adding two expertly kicked conversions Katie Scott '82 completed the 24-0 final score.

After the field competition the three teams engaged in the traditional rowdy exchange of songs. Once again the Williams ruggers demonstrated their vocal prowess, amusing and amazing their fellow ruggers. At the party, the Vassar women shared these words with us, and until you hear from us next spring...

"Line out, bind on, ruck over and maul.

Get it out to the winger, hang on to the ball,

And when it's all over we drink with our chums,

'Cause we are the ruggers that play for Williams."

Upon arrival at the University of Vermont, the Williams ruggers were much surprised to find the pitch covered with snow, and a blizzard in progress.

In the "A" game, the Williams ruggers put the first points on the board as Dave Lipscomb '83 slashed in for a try following an excellent play by the purple line. After this initial effort, both teams became fairly immobile in the mud and snow and little ground was gained by either team. The Williams scrum generally prevailed against the Vermonters, but precise passing and ballhandling were impossible for both teams. Vermont eventually prevailed on a pair of field goals.

In the "B" side game, play was marked by much the same characteristics, with clean play being generally impossible. As usual, however, the WRFC played with admirable intensity, dominating for much of the game. The deciding score came when Larry Hebb '83 kicked the ball into the endzone and John Olvany '82 outtraced the defenders for the try. Williams emerged victorious.

TONIGHT

Miller Lite Bottomless Mug Night
Buy a mug and get free refills

WEDNESDAY

Open Mike Night
See the Manager for a time slot.

The Log will be open before, during, and after the Amherst game.

THE LOG

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Freshman phenom Ted Thomas of the football team is this week's recipient. Thomas had 139 yards on 33 carries against Wesleyan to keep the Ephs in the game. Ted, this Bud's for you.

this Bud's for you!

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday
Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday
Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday, Nov. 11

Tuborg Night
Assorted Tuborg advertising
to be given away. 9-12

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

penny's place

JEAN LOVERS!

25% off
3 DAYS ONLY
SASSON, JORDACHE,
SERGIO VALENTE
AND
30% off
COTTON TUNIC TOPS
(A good selection—they're great with jeans)

450-5303
70 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN

Freshman Ted Thomas dives for two of his 139 yards against Wesleyan.

Booters drop seesaw battle

by Dave Woodworth

Despite displaying the hustle which has characterized the soccer team recently, the booters fell to Wesleyan in overtime 4-3, last Saturday.

The Cardinals opened the scoring at 23:11 of the first half as Seth Sholes, fouled in the penalty area, drilled the ensuing penalty kick past Eph goalkeeper Vince Brandstein '84, who had replaced injured starter Ken Rhodes '85 only moments before. The count stayed at 1-0, Wesleyan, for the remainder of the first half and well into the second.

Finally, at 77:17, Jeff Sutton scored the equalizer for the Ephs with a fine solo effort. Then, at 83:08, Tad Chase '82 scored to put Williams ahead, 2-1.

At this point, it appeared that Chase's goal might be decisive, as Williams was dominating the game in terms of ball control and field position. However, Wesleyan came right back to knot the score at 2-2 as Sholes, assisted by Darrin Harris, got his second goal of the day just a minute and a half later.

The game went into overtime with the score still at 2-2, but it did not stay that way for very long, as Doug McKenney '85, assisted by Jim Peck '82, tallied with only 1:49 gone in the first overtime to give the Ephs a 3-2 lead.

Wesleyan refused to die, however, and evened the score 21 seconds later on a goal by Rob Ginsberg, again assisted by Harris. Finally, Sholes finished off a brilliant performance with yet another goal at 3:28 of the first overtime, giving Wesleyan what proved to be an insurmountable 4-3 advantage.

The second overtime was scoreless, although Chase was robbed of a goal on a shot that was on net and beyond the reach of Cardinal goalkeeper Andy Newall; the ball made it to the line but not over, as it was cleared away by a Wesleyan defender.

The loss was a heartbreaker

Head Football Coach Bob Odell could walk away from the Amherst game with no claim to the Little Three title for the first time in his eleven-year Williams career.

(Farley)

Ephs take Little Three

Capturing the Little Three title, the women's varsity tennis team has wrapped another successful season under second year coach Sean Sloane by posting a 5-5 record. The Ephwomen extended their unbroken string of victories over rivals Wesleyan and Amherst with wins of 6-3 and 5-4 late in the season.

Sloane described the season as "successful" even though Williams suffered five losses. The squad came out on top in every one of its close matches, beating Amherst, Springfield and Middlebury, 5-4, as the young, inexperienced players developed poise on the courts. The Ephs, led by Captain Jami Harris '82, struggled to mature after early losses to strong teams from Tufts and Skidmore and consistent loss of outdoor practice time on clay due to steady seasonal rains.

Highlights of the season included tenacious team victories over traditional rivals and strong play by a variety of individuals. Junior Renee George remained undefeated at the number four position during the regular season. Harris, playing at number one, was tough throughout the season, posting a 3-7 record against the best singles players in New England. Every close contest produced a player or players who won clutch matches.

When asked to comment specifically on his team, which will lose three starters to graduation, and its performance as a team, Sloane would only grin: "It was a good season, and we definitely have the best looking tennis team in New England. You can quote me on that."

One point game

Cardinals nip Ephmen in Little Three thriller

by Steve Epstein

Three fumbles inside their own 30 yard line and a missed two-point conversion with 3:59 left in the game spelled the Ephs first Little Three defeat in three years, as Wesleyan triumphed, 21-20, in the cold and wind of Middletown, Conn.

The Ephs outplayed Wesleyan throughout the game, but gave the Cardinals three gift-wrapped touchdowns on turnovers deep in their own end. Still, the Ephs showed an explosive offensive attack for the second consecutive week which put them into position to win the game despite their chronic fumblyitis.

With under seven minutes to go, the Ephs trailed, 21-14, and things began to look bleak. The offense stalled and was forced to punt. But captain Jeff Klesel jarred the ball loose from Wesleyan's Gene Cote and junior Tim Clark recovered to allow Williams to get into the Lazarus act. They rose from the dead with the help of freshman full-back sensation Ted Thomas (139 yards, 33 carries) who moved the Ephs inside the Cardinal 10 yard line with his strong running. From there, senior Jay Wheatley went in for the touchdown which brought the Ephs to within one.

Next, confusion ensued. The team called time out to decide whether to go for the one-point conversion kick that would tie the game, or the two-point run or pass that would give the Ephs the lead. Kicker Rich Coomber trotted onto the field, but Coach Robert Odell elected to replace Coomber with his offensive unit, and go for the win.

The two-point try was an option run around left end to Thomas, who was met by a host of Wesleyan defenders who stopped the play cold. "If I had to do it again," said a frustrated Coach Odell, "I'd go for two. In the Little Three, you've got to go for all or nothing." The team seemed to agree with Odell, not second guessing their coach as many Williams fans did.

The Ephs got on the scoreboard first when sophomore quarterback B. J. Connolly led the offense toward paydirt on a 10-play, 57-yard drive led by the punishing rushing of Thomas. Connolly went in for the score from three yards out, and the extra-point made it 7-0, Williams.

In their first possession of the second quarter, the Ephs handed Wesleyan a perfect scoring opportunity. With a first down on the Wesleyan 29, Tom Casey lost possession of the ball and the Cardinals took over. Two plays later, Wesleyan came back on an 11-yard TD pass from freshman quarterback John Forte to tight end Scott Mulrhead. The kick was blocked to make the score 7-6.

On the ensuing kick-off, the Ephs took the ball to their own 19, where disaster struck again. On the first offensive play, Wheatley lost control of the ball, and Wesleyan was again in business after recovering the fumble. Forte went in to give Wesleyan a 13-7 halftime lead.

The defense got the only points for Williams in the third quarter. The first Wesleyan possession of the half went nowhere, thanks to the stellar defense of linebackers Mike Hawkins and Dan Wilen and linemen Jack Kowalk and Steve Doherty. The ensuing Wesleyan punt was blocked by the Ephs' Mike Hawkins, and Tomas Alejandro picked up the ball and scampered for six.

A mishandled pitch on Williams own ten set up Wesleyan's final score, and a Pat Costello run for a two-point conversion made the score 21-14, to set up the final dramatic moments.

The Ephs return home this week to play arch rival Amherst for Homecoming.

Homecoming classic

Gridders brace for Lord Jeffs

by Steve Epstein

The hundredth anniversary of Williams football will reach its zenith this weekend at Weston Field as one of the country's oldest football rivalries continues. Amherst comes to town as it does in every odd year, but this year things could be odder than most.

Due to last week's 21-20 loss at Wesleyan and an earlier 6-3 Amherst victory at home against the Cardinals, the Jeffs are in the position to win their first Little Three title since 1968—three years before the emergence of Robert Odell.

Since Odell's arrival in the Purple Valley, the Ephs have had at least a share of the coveted Little Three every season. Amherst hasn't beaten Williams since 1976, but this year there is real reason to worry.

First, Amherst beat Trinity last weekend, 14-3. Now granted, in this league past victories mean little. But Trinity walloped the Ephs, 27-14, earlier in the season. Secondly, Amherst has a better record than the Ephs, coming into "The Game" with a 4-3 tally, opposed to the 3-4 record maintained by the Ephs.

Admittedly, it's been a very disappointing season for the Ephs. Twelve points separate them from being 6-1. They have played superb football at times, but costly inconsistency and turnovers... and injuries have hurt them in key moments. Lawler, Finneran, Robison, Hawkins... they all went down at times. The brain becomes permeated with 'what ifs'. But Bob Odell, part-coach, part-legend, doesn't accept 'what ifs'. He coaches each game in reality, but takes it hard when his ballclub loses.

All that seems left for the 1981 Ephmen is a shot at a .500 record, a win for the seniors, a tie for the Little Three... and their pride. This club definitely has pride. They showed it against Bowdoin and Union. They're hoping it has a date for Homecoming.

Amherst Coach Jim Ostendarp has a well conditioned and healthy ballclub coming into "The Game". It's most likely the most competitive Amherst team the Ephs have faced in recent years. They revolve around junior quarterback Brian Curran, who is the brother of Eph defensive back Tim Curran. Curran is only a 42 percent passer, but he is an excellent team leader who makes things happen in key situations.

Curran's potentially potent offensive attack is multifaceted. His big running backs are senior Dave Grenier and juniors Mike Vendetti (one of three brothers on the squad) and Jeff Hughes. Hughes is a quick halfback who has scored a good number of the Jeffs' touchdowns this season.

The receiving corps is also dangerous. Soph Dave Sillman is among the leading receivers in New England, and junior Dana Kling is also a deep threat. Halfback Bob Miniclus, a freshman, can also be called upon as a receiver.

On Defense, linemen Dave Doctor, Jeff Jordan and Eric Taylor have all played well. Linebackers Mark Everts, Kit Middleton and Tim Nalman are the regulars, and junior Bob Emery anchors the defensive secondary. While the Jeffs defense has played well of late, they have been less consistent than the offense. The Amherst defense has given up 89 points

Continued on Page 9

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 9

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

NOVEMBER 17, 1981

House members protest

Spencer-Brooks members believe that they were ignored in the recent Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) decision to affiliate West College with Spencer and Woodbridge Houses, according to a petition sent to President John Chandler.

In a letter sent to Chandler, the Deans' Office and the Housing Committee, 36 Spencer-Brooks residents complained that they were misled as to the purpose of the open Housing Committee meeting which led to the realignment.

"The flyer we received on the meeting concerning the possible inclusion of West as a complete part of the Spencer-Brooks system mentioned absolutely nothing about removing Brooks House from the system," the letter stated.

Jean Hoff '83 explained, "They ended up doing something very different from what they said they were going to do. We don't think we were really consulted at all."

She said that house members propose grouping West with Spencer and Brooks, leaving Perry, Bascom, Woodbridge and Chadbourne together. "There would only be a 4-bed difference, and the living areas would be more comparable," she said.

Perry and Spencer have similar common rooms while "Bascom has two living rooms and two fireplaces and Brooks has two living rooms and one fireplace, plus the basement area," said Hoff.

Spencer-Brooks members assert that such affiliation decisions should be "discussed and voted on in the house itself, not merely decided on in a meeting which was operating under the pretense of making a minor new inclusion, rather than a major extraction!"

A Woodbridge resident who asked to remain anonymous, remarked, "It doesn't seem like quite a just trade."

John Stockwell, former CIA agent and author of IN SEARCH OF ENEMIES, attacked the role of the Agency in American society.

(Farley)

Ex-agent blasts CIA

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

"The American Public is currently unloading its freedoms as fast as it legally can" and "current court rulings and laws in favor of the CIA represent a 180-degree turnabout from the ideals of our founding fathers," claimed former Central Intelligence Agency case officer John Stockwell last Wednesday in Driscoll Lounge.

Stockwell wrote the best-selling book In Search of Enemies after resigning from the agency.

Speaking on the role of the CIA in a free society, Stockwell described his career in the agency and concluded that the CIA has far overstepped its 1947 charter, has discredited the U.S. in the eyes of the world and is dangerously close to securing passage of a new law that would drastically curtail freedom of speech.

The law, called the Names of Agents Act, would make it a felony for journalists or private citizens to reveal publicly any agent's name.

"This law is a flagrant denial of the Constitution," Stockwell claimed. "Nowhere is there an amendment which says the CIA's rights take precedence over freedom of speech."

Stockwell said that the CIA's desire for secrecy is intended to keep the American public, not its enemies, from discovering its activities, such as the MK Ultra program, in which the CIA experimented with LSD on unwitting American subjects. He also pointed to the CIA's involvement in Vietnam, claiming that 98 percent of agency reports were fabricated in order to maintain the image of a weak North Vietnamese army and Kissinger's claim that Vietnamization was working. Stockwell mentioned the CIA's "hot-secret" operations in China and Cuba, where saboteurs blew up buildings and killed civilians weekly; and its cooperation with South Africa in the Angolan War.

Stockwell said that operations like these have occurred in Third World countries around the world, and that the CIA is directly responsible for 500,000 deaths. Of these, he estimated that from one to six were KGB officers, 250,000 were Communist Party cadres and the rest were "non-political."

He described CIA overseas operating procedure in response to an audience member's objection that the law is necessary in order to protect the lives of undercover agents.

"Every embassy has a directory available to the public with two lists of embassy personnel—regular foreign service service and CIA," Stockwell remarked. "Agents advertise openly to the community that they are CIA because they want people with information to have no difficulty contacting them."

He said that even the identities of deepcover agents are discovered within about six months, but that the agents are in much less danger than foreign service officers, such as ambassadors, who make better targets for publicity-seeking terrorists.

Stockwell added that the CIA considers agents outdated and unreliable:

"In my mid-career course in 1972 I was told that spy-running is antiquated, that it produces only four percent of all the CIA's information. The rest comes from spy satellites, photographs and electronic listening posts. The CIA will not rely on an agent's report without confirmation from other sources. So you have to ask, is the price of agents worth it?"

"The CIA's function is not to seek peaceful solutions to anything," Stockwell concluded. "It is trained to take action. In response to those who say 'every nation has its intelligence service, we must have one too,' I say we would not have sunk to this level if we had eschewed this kind of conduct in the first place. The KGB is the biggest liability to Soviet foreign policy, and we've copied it exactly."

Affirmative action meets goals

by Julia Geniesse

Recruitment of women and minority faculty has gone well this year, according to Judith Allen, Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action and Government Relations. Of a total of 22 offers for teaching positions extended, 19 were accepted, adding nine women and two members of minority groups to the Williams faculty.

The College's divisional goals for new appointments of women were exceeded this year, according to Allen's Affirmative Action Report. Williams sought to appoint women to 45-50 percent of new Division I positions and ended up with 86 percent.

The goal of 25 percent for Division II was also exceeded, as 29 percent of new appointments went to women, while the goal of 15 percent for Division III was far surpassed, with a total of 40 percent of new appointments in the division going to women.

College-wide goals for appointments from minority groups, on the other hand, are for two or three appointments each year, according to Allen. "These are definitely not quotas," she stressed. This year, two regular and two visiting minority appointments were made.

However, according to Allen's report, four minority faculty members (three men and one woman), and one other woman faculty member resigned last year. The average number of minority appointments per annum has been three.

Asked why minority faculty leave, Dennis Dickerson, Chairman of Afro-American Studies, replied, "My impression is that black faculty leave because they've been offered a better opportunity elsewhere, although the sociological factor probably often factors in."

"We really need more people just to be with," said Dean Mary Kenyatta. "It can be a stifling kind of situation . . . because of the number of black faculty, they end up being overworked. There are only a few of us to go around—it's easy to get burned out."

Allen explains that the Affirmative Action Program was established in 1972. Its objectives are outlined in an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity statement: to "increase the proportion of women and members of minority groups in the Faculty to a level more consistent with the pool of qualified women and minorities in the fields taught at

Williams."

Allen contacted 504 resource people and prospective candidates this year. The large number of candidates recruited were a result of her work and the network of contacts that her work engendered. Explains Allen, "I was able to determine that 38 prospective and 14 actual candidates were identified as a direct result of my recruiting effort."

"We need enough black faculty here so that there's a large enough community to interact," said Kenyatta. "It's just a matter of getting the word out. The College is not well known in the black community."

The goal for recruitment of

Continued on Page 9

Council discusses CC budget funds

The College Council approved a proposal to subject their budget to closer Council scrutiny at last Wednesday's meeting. The Council also accepted a compromise plan from Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor on the spring 1982 final exam schedule and tentatively passed a number of 1981-82 budget items. Council President Freddy Nathan '83 defined discretionary funds as the Council's $2,000 Student Activities Tax budget "that can be spent by Council officers without formal approval of the entire Council."

He supported this spending freedom by pointing to emergencies and time constraints that require the officers to act quickly. "It's impractical to convene the Council every time we have Xeroxing to do," he said.

Nathan said the funds should be spent on "those things which the officers deem to be in the best interest of the student

Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes blew away a capacity crowd in the Towne Field House last Thursday night.

(Farley)

Inside the Record

Spy vs. spy:
CIA recruiting	p. 8
Water polo 2nd in
New England	p. 9
Baha'i faith examined	p. 5
Photo essay—
Homecoming	p. 7

Clarion Call

The Winter Study Program is seriously threatened by faculty ready to ignore overwhelming student approval of the program. The power to change or eliminate Winter Study lies almost entirely in Faculty hands. Although students, Admissions, Athletics, and members of the Administration all strongly support the program, these interests can only lobby professors for support in the April Faculty meeting showdown.

President Chandler's mandate to the Winter Study Review Committee created the widespread impression that the program could not be eliminated. Yet such alternatives as a Great Books program or extended regular semesters would be acceptable. The lengthened semester proposal, in which fall exams would be held after Christmas, enjoys strong faculty support. Chandler's mandate excludes only an "empty" January, with no courses offered—and faculty advocates of this proposal are now banding together to change the mandate.

Students who value the program must act now to create and sell a plan for a revised Winter Study that will win the support of a majority of the Faculty. Winter Study can be saved—but only at the expense of some meaningful changes. Even faculty advocates of the program desire modifications; any successful package must have the support not only of these members but of current opponents.

College Council should spearhead and coordinate the battle to save Winter Study. Long-disparaged because of its lack of direct power, the Council is perfectly suited for an effort which requires imagination, energy, and strong vocal chords instead of political muscle. Council should propose to the Review Committee modifications and alternatives that carefully consider the principles of Winter Study. It should also coordinate a concerted effort by Winter Study's many allies to apply positive pressure in favor of the month-long term.

Individually, students have an equally important role—to lobby their professors, seriously discussing the issues to find some sort of middle ground. Faculty deluged by students adamant in their support for Winter Study may feel pressured or convinced to support the program's continuation.

Lack of discretion

College Council has issued public policy statements in the past and undoubtedly will forge new plans in the future. A letter signed last week by Council Vice-president John Segal and Secretary Gibson Rymar supporting a Council discretionary fund was distributed to students' mailboxes. Although funded with Council monies, the letter reflected neither a Council edict nor a charge from its officers. Rather, it mirrored the personal sentiments of two officers.

That Segal claims the letter was "an official officers' statement" ignores the fact that Council President Freddy Nathan refused to sign the letter and Treasurer Steve Spears was never asked to sign the statement.

Council should keep students informed on important campus issues. Funding and authorizing the personal statements of individual officers, however, is not the purpose of Council funds, whether they are discretionary or not.

Quote of the Week

"There's a big goodie there . . ."

Dean Daniel O'Connor pointing out the new calendar and scheduling change at last Wednesday's College Council meeting.

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS

Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

ASSISTANT NEWS

Philip Busch
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson
Jon Tigar

ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Dan Keating

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Paul Sabbah

BUSINESS MANAGER

Chris Toub

NEWS

Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT

Lori Miller

FEATURES

Chris McDermott

GRAPHICS

Mike Sutton

LAYOUT

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Priscilla Cohen
Alyson Hagy

SPORTS

Rich Coomber

PHOTOGRAPHY

Sue Doherty
Steve Farley

AD MANAGER

Katie Miller

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Assumptions

To the editor,

We are disturbed by the Philosophy 221 questionnaire received in our mailboxes on Friday, November 6. There is an underlying assumption that everyone reading the survey has had sexual experience. This assumption implicitly approves of pre-marital sex and adds to its acceptance as a social norm. To take a private issue and make it a public standard encourages people to accept that standard as correct, without questioning their personal values. We ask that in the future, more discretion be exercised in composing questionnaires.

Becky Bangs '82
Bea Avant '82

Blind Sexism

To the editor,

I am writing in response to the letters of Jeff Morrison and Jonathan Meer concerning the criticisms of Steve Epstein's articles. I agree that Steve loves Williams and that he really tries hard to share his enthusiasm in his Record articles and radio work. However, this does not excuse the sexist comments to which he is prone, and which he seems to make no effort to avoid. Despite repeated "gaffes," Steve has made no attempt to understand the feminist point of view and seems to take pleasure in provoking feminists in conversation and even on his radio show. The first song of his show after the letters from Liz Jex and Marcia Voorhis were printed in the Record, and specifically in response to these letters was "Hit Me With Your Best Shot."

While his remarks about "sweet young things" and "teenie-boppers" were meant as jokes, Steve must realize that these "terms of endearment" are no joke for women who have been oppressed and continue to be oppressed by such roles in our society. I do not criticize Steve so much for making these sexist jokes and remarks per se—sexism works in very subtle and frequently unconscious ways in all of us and it is often hard to realize when it is affecting our behavior. What I do criticize is that despite people pointing out the blatant sexism in his articles and broadcasts for 2½ years, Steve continues to go blindly along, refusing to seriously examine himself and his sexism. I think Steve owes it to women, and also to himself and other men, to do a little soul searching. Sexism is forcing roles and expectations on people according to sex rather than individual personality and potential, and this oppresses men as well as women. Give it some real thought, Steve, and you will do more for Williams and yourself than any Record article or sportscast could.

John Day '83

Advisors

To the editor,

I was disturbed to read an article in the Sept. 29 issue of the Record entitled "Students Attack Non-faculty Advisors." Although my faculty advisor (Peggy Sloane, then head of OCC) was a non-teacher in the formal sense, she contributed to some of the most valuable learning experiences of my Williams career. The wonderful talks and dinners we had at her house taught me more than has many a lecture. Peggy spent more time with her seven advisees than did most faculty advisors, and not only during our freshman year, but also in the years to come. I know very few faculty members as well.

So this is a plea (not too late, I hope) on behalf of non-teaching faculty members. Better to have an enthusiastic advisor who wants to help than a "recruited" professor who becomes a freshman advisor only because he feels it's expected of him.

Susan Hobbs '81
Suva, Fiji

Reaffiliation

As co-chairpersons of the Housing Committee we would like to clarify our committee's recent decision to affiliate West College with Spencer House and Brooks house with Perry-Bascom.

Many people presently consider West College "overflow housing" and, indeed, the present system of housing people in West from both Spencer and Perry reinforces this idea of "getting stuck" there. Despite the fact that some of the rooms in West are large and spacious, it is often viewed as one of the most undesirable places to live. In an attempt to remove the stigma which this type of attitude created, the Housing Committee held an open meeting to consider the status of West College.

At the open meeting we came to the conclusion (based upon the opinions of past and present residents of West) that there was little interaction between the people of West and the other houses in its cluster, or among the residents of the house itself. In an attempt to improve

Continued on Page 6

Correction

In last week's Record, Kathy Finnell's letter was incorrectly labeled "Racial." The title, which was to have read "Not Racial", was set improperly at the printer's. Record staff, who proofread all copy after typesetting, failed to notice the mistake. The Record deeply regrets the misunderstandings caused by our error.

OUTLOOK

Actions must go deeper than donations

by Ann Ingerson

The annual OXFAM fast is an occasion to remember the plight of those less fortunate than the affluent United States, particularly appropriate for the week before we give thanks for our own plenty. But we should be aware that the problems of world hunger cannot be solved with annual or even monthly charitable donations to meet emergency food needs.

Philosophy of OXFAM

OXFAM's program includes a large dose of self-help efforts to reduce long term dependence on charity from wealthy nations. This philosophy sounds similar to President Reagan's approach: that Lesser Developed Countries (LDCs) should not depend upon continued donations from their wealthier northern neighbors.

But there is an important difference. President Reagan's doctrine follows the "blaming the victim" line; while a good portion of the blame may rest with us, even without our knowledge. Today's wealthy nations were yesterday's colonial powers; and much of the tragic food scarcity in former colonies is the consequence of patterns of land ownership, cash-crop export agriculture, class systems, and rural urban divisions which developed largely in response to colonial relations. For most countries, direct colonial control has been replaced with the private influence of large corporations; but the consequences for local food production are the same. When peasant economies meet head-on with modern capital-intensive politically powerful countries via "free trade," the distribution of the mutual benefits which the theory of comparative advantage tells us should accrue are far from equitable.

Theory in practice

An example in our own backyard is the meeting of the "city economy" (with a norm of very high salaries and living standards) with the "country economy" based on farm and forest production and other local industry. In "free competition" for land and other resources, the higher purchasing power will win out, regardless of whether production of milk, meat, eggs, and vegetables meets more "basic needs" than production of second homes and country estates. As in a developing country, resources go to the most profitable use. With unequal income distribution, the most profitable use is not necessarily the most socially useful one.

"Roots of world hunger go far deeper than occasional drought or local wars."

Thinking about world hunger on fast day, it is important to keep in mind that the roots of world hunger go far deeper than occasional drought or local wars. And maybe our actions should go deeper than pity and charitable donations for the unfortunate.

Ann Ingerson, a part-time lecturer at the Center for Environmental Studies at Williams College, is an agricultural economist.

Why fast?

by Kevin Rocap

Thursday November 19, 1981 the Williams Hunger Action Project (WHAP) is sponsoring the annual Oxford-American Famine Relief Fund (OXFAM) "Fast for a World Harvest." Members of the college community who fast are taking part in a nationwide consciousness-raising event. For each student, on any Williams board plan, who abstains from eating in campus dining halls, Food Services will send $3.10 in board proceeds to OXFAM for use in self-help programs in Nicaragua, combining consciousness-raising with a form of direct action. These are the salient, unintrusive facts about the upcoming fast.

The event, however, should raise more intrusive questions. Even among WHAP members in the past few years there has seldom been a consensus opinion about which facet of the fast deserves more emphasis. Is it more important to raise money by any available means (since money may translate into immediate progress in a positive direction)? Or is it the act of fasting, of becoming consciously (physically) aware of hunger, that ought to be stressed? Asked simply: why fast?

Purpose of fast

The fast is traditionally appraised as "an effort to show our solidarity with the hungry people of the world." Though it is accurate, this statement is reductive by its omission of any specific reference to actual Food/Hunger issues. In order to bring these issues into sharper focus, to make them more immediate, it is helpful to observe Food/Hunger issues that affect us directly.

On the Williams campus, Food/Hunger issues generally consist of "Napkin Board" criticism of Food Service recipes. Few, if any, of us know how much food is consumed annually on campus or how much is wasted, let alone how much money is spent to feed a thriving intellectual community of just over 2000 members. How Why then should we understand the scope of hunger on an international, or even a national, level? The answer is that we do not in general attempt to bridge that gap in our understanding. We are meant to accrue the benefits of being provided with a "finished product." That is, we are meant to be "free" to study (e.g. Political Science and Economics) without being bothered by details about where the food we consume is raised, what market it is sold on, who initiated the purchase, how it was prepared and what becomes of food waste. It is, perhaps, enough to have to stand in lines waiting for plates of food which we finally lay our hands on only after they have been fully prepared for us, filled with generous portions of the "finished product."

The food itself often becomes a peripheral element in an activity which is for the most part social and recreational. The "controversy" of Row House dining, for example, is based upon the feared loss of social cohesiveness in the Row Houses. Eating is also a favorite form of procrastination since "everyone has to eat." Everyone does have to eat; everyone does not eat. The fast is an opportunity to remind ourselves of more compelling Food/Hunger issues.

I would but . . .

Typical responses to the fast are: "I tried last year and around dinner time I just couldn't think anymore . . . No, I think I have a test that day, but I can give you more than three dollars anyway." It is clear that hunger just doesn't fit into most of our schedules. All of these arguments may certainly be legitimate, but how many of us take time to glean an education from the assumptions and "If we can't think clearly after one day, can we imagine the difficulties in organizing Third World populations to pull themselves up by their bootstraps?"

Implications of these responses? We have the luxury of choosing to eat or not to eat. If we can't think clearly after one day, can we imagine the difficulties in organizing Third World populations to "pull themselves up by their bootstraps," particularly when the only "bootstraps" they may have known have disappeared with withdrawing colonial powers. It is good and useful to donate additional money, but three, five or one hundred dollars is not an answer. Consciousness-raising at Williams is particularly necessary since many graduates will end up in positions where the decisions they make will represent a flow of money, power, services or resources much more significant than the $3.10 sent by Food Services one day a year. It is good to consider just how deep these issues run.

No security

To talk about food and hunger is to talk about soil, water, fertilizer, pesticides, small farmers, agribusiness, multinational corporations, supermarkets, food stamps, cooperatives, sugar-coated breakfast cereals, roast beef, calorie intake, protein deficiencies and a host of other things that come quickly (?) to mind. Hunger can no longer be seen as the distant plight of children and adults with blank stares and bloated stomachs whom we see in magazines and on televi-

Steak and potatoes

The American Ideal of "steak and potatoes" is an example of pervasive societal values. A study in the late 1960s revealed that beef eating in America is clearly associated with status. In fact, beef ranked behind only cars and TV as the most desired item. Frances Moore Lappe in her book Diet for a Small Planet points out that even rich European countries are struck by America's "Great Steak Religion." The danger of placing so much importance upon a meat-centered diet is that the production of meat for a relatively elite group of people presently entails feeding cattle enormous quantities of protein-rich grain that could be distributed more equitably. Fasting encourages reevaluation of personal lifestyle and food consumption patterns.

More than vaguely approximating what it might feel like to be hungry, fasting reminds us of the easy accessibility of food. Fasting remains for us merely a question of willpower. What would we do if resources for breaking the fast were unavailable to us? The goals of the fast would be met if we could understand the causes of hunger then envision a world free from hunger. The actualization of this vision is a call for direct personal action.

Kevin Rocap '82, is coordinator of the Williams Hunger Action Project.

Concert Listing

Thurs., Nov. 19 Johnny Copeland, JB Scott's, Hall & Oates, Orpheum, Boston
 Bruce Cockburn, Paradise, Boston
 Nov. 19-22 Bill Staines, Passim's, Boston
 Fri., Nov. 20 Earth, Wind and Fire, Hartford Civic Center
 Sat., Nov. 21 Joan Jett & the Blackhearts, JB Scott's, Albany
 Iron City Houserockers, Hullabaloo, Rensselaer County Basil & Tony Bennett, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
 Sun., Nov. 22 Albert King, Hullabaloo, Rensselaer County Basil & Tony Bennett, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
 Nov. 24 thru 28 Teddy Wilson, Van Dyck, Schenectady
 Nov. 25 Black Sabbath & Alvin Lee Band with Mick Taylor, Civic Ctr., Glens Falls

prepared by
Toonerville Trolley

Twelfth Night wows audience

by Caroline Kettlwell

If you want to sit back and enjoy two and a half hours of sheer entertainment, make sure you get to the Adams Memorial Theatre to see the Williams Theatre's fall production of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. The performance is refreshingly unconventional and delightfully funny.

Twelfth Night, which revolves around a complicated love tangle between Viola (Sheila Walsh), the Duke Orsino (Mitchell Anderson), and Olivia (Karin Miller), is a fast-paced comedy about mistaken identity and confusion. That the Williams production goes to unusual lengths to play up this comedy is obvious from the very first scene. Viola and her companion (played by Richard Dodds) appear on top of the large box that makes up the scenery, wearing parachuting outfits. What follows is an hysterical romp, with characters wearing costumes of old movie stars, energetically springing about the stage and using the entrances and exits to the box and the trapdoors in the stage to the fullest degree.

Sheila Walsh's performance as Viola, the girl who disguises herself as a boy in order to become servant to the Duke Orsino and win his heart, is excellent. Her frustrations and despair as she is forced to woo Olivia for Orsino, and her annoyance at Olivia's vanity are real and convincing. Mitchell Anderson as Orsino, dressed as that classic screen lover Rudolph Valentino, sighs for Olivia and droops across his couch in the manner of any lovesick adolescent. Karin Miller as the haughty Olivia is on the whole quite good, although she has a tendency to stand in such a way that her arms look as though they are glued to her body.

In a nice bit of humorous theater, we meet Olivia dressed in basic black from head to foot—in mourning for her dead brother—so that she wanders about the stage like a shapeless black blob. When she finally removes her black garb, she is revealed wearing a belly dancer's outfit, complete with glittering jewel in the navel. We are inclined to ask ourselves at this point if we are really in a Shakespearean play.

The answer is a definite yes, and the clowning characters of Sir Toby Belch (Charlie Singer), Sir Andrew Aguecheek (Gordon Compton) and Feste the clown (Victoria Price)—looking respectively like Oliver Hardy, Stan Laurel, and Humphrey Bogart—rush the play forward with hilarity. These characters, springing like Jack-in-the-boxes across the set, make the most use of the many entrances and exits on the stage. Singer and Price—once more brightening the Williams stage—are ceaselessly funny, with Sir Toby's raucous gaiety and Feste's clever wit. And yet when the moment comes for Feste to reveal a depth of painful human emotion, Price does so convincingly. Gordon Compton's first step onto the Williams stage is a success, as he droops and skitters about the stage. Perdita Finn as the confidante to Olivia, was vampishly

Continued on Page 9

Sam & Dave: soul music has snazz

by Stephanie Brown

Of all the soul singers performing in the '60s, few had such an electrifying effect upon their listeners as Sam & Dave. Though their peak was brief—1965-1969—the hits "Soul Man" and "Hold On I'm Comin'" included on their Best of Sam & Dave album represent the landmarks of Sixties pop music.

For any Rhythm & Blues fan, The Best of Sam & Dave is a record that must be included in any comprehensive collection. It contains fourteen hits—each one special, pulsating, and dynamic. Time magazine glowingly described Sam & Dave as having "galvanic energy and commanding musicianship..."

The key to the duo's success in this energy and a wonderful compatibility between the two singers and a big brass section. Their voices, Sam's higher and more cutting, Dave's huskier and darker-toned, blend robustly in mournful harmonized walls or fervent Gospel-styled shouts. In the background the band punches out blues riffs over a pile-driving beat.

The brass and saxophone players highlight each song with sustained notes, crescendos, and harmonized accents, and the guitars play in unison with the melody.

The simplicity of the back-up instruments only adds to the energy, allowing the driving beat to stand alone and not compete with the vocalists. In "You Got Me Hummin'," for instance, an organ accents only the off-beats, while the drums keep a steady rhythm and a tambourine also highlights each beat.

The Gospel-like shouts that Sam & Dave scream to one another makes some songs seem like revival meetings. "Sing it Sam!" they yell, or "I hear you, Dave! Good God, I hear you!" The listener can't help but get fired up, jump up

ARTS·ARTS·ARTS

Dance Lecture

Remy Charlip, internationally known dancer, choreographer and author, will show his nationally-distributed video program, "Remy Charlip Dancers," made for WGBH-Boston and lecture on the process of making a T.V. show on Tuesday, November 18 at 8 p.m. in the Stetson media Classroom. Admission is free.

Art Lecture

Gregory Edwards will lecture on "The Black Artist in the White World" on Wednesday, Nov. 18 at 8 p.m. in Room 3 Griffin Hall.

Chamber Choir to Perform

The Chamber Choir of the Williams Choral Society will give a free public recital in the auditorium of the Clark Art Institute on Wednesday, November 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Under the direction of Kenneth Roberts, Jr., the 32-voice group will sing works of J. S. Bach, Edward Elgar, Gyorgy Ligeti and Wilhelm Stenhammar. The major work to be presented is Bach's Jesu Meine Freude, a work for five voices based on a traditional Lutheran chorale and text and sung in German.

Scripture Viewing

A viewing of eight sculptures by H. Lee Hirsche, assisted by Georgia Gluck, will be held on Thursday, Nov. 19 in the Miller Sculpture Court between Bernhard Music Center and Chapin Hall, from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. Refreshments will be served and the Williams Brass Ensemble will play.

Janson to Lecture

Horst W. Janson, Visiting Clark Professor will speak on "Form Follows Function—Or Does It?" Functional Design Theory and the History of Art on Thursday, Nov. 19 at 8:00 p.m. in the Clark Auditorium. Admission is free.

Springstreeters Concert

The Springstreeters, a nine-man singing group, will perform in concert on Saturday, November 21 at 8 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Special guests are "The Notables" of Smith College. The program will include barbershop harmony, Fifties songs, spirituals, show tunes and general a cappella melodies. Admission is free.

FEATURES

Baha'is seek spiritual truth

by Cathy James

Would you have believed in Moses, Mohammed, Jesus or Buddha if they had lived in the recent—not distant—past? This question is a compelling one to the followers of Baha'u'llah, a recent (by Scriptural standards) prophet who appeared in Persia in the 19th Century and claimed to be the next messenger from God. His writings and teachings form the basis of the Baha'i Faith, a religion that has recently come to the Williams campus, but is practiced in nearly every country of the world.

The Baha'i Club is a new campus group, headed by two Baha'is, Peter Farwell and Gordon Coates '82. In Fireside discussions (as some Baha'i public meetings are called), the Club introduces people to the tenets of the Baha'i faith and discusses these and related issues.

"We are trying to make the campus aware," says Farwell, "of the right and duty of each individual to investigate truth for himself."

Coates, who became a Baha'i last summer, explained some of his reasons for embracing the Baha'i faith: "Baha'u'llah claimed to be a messenger of God for this age in man's development... the teachings made a lot of sense to me."

Janeth Keally '85, who though not a Baha'i has attended some of the Club's meetings, said the Faith interested her because "it encourages you to investigate whether there is a God or not."

Baha'is believe that the rituals of many religions are emphasized more than the original essence of the Prophet-Founder's teachings. There is no clergy; rather, Baha'is organize by electing representatives from their communities to serve on nine-member assemblies on the local stage, and national world levels. The elected body for the world is the Universal House of Justice, located in Haifa, Israel. The decision-making process of these nine people is considered to be divinely guided, and is "invested with the authority to legislate on all matters not covered in the Baha'i Writings."

The principal tenets of the Baha'i Faith, as revealed by Baha'u'llah, are the beliefs in one God, the essential unity of all divinely revealed religions in the equality of all races, the equality of men and women, and universal peace, upheld by a world government. Baha'is believe that science and religion should thrive in harmony: "science without religion leads to materialism and destruction; religion without science breeds fanaticism and superstition."

Heaven and hell exist in the Baha'i Faith only as symbols for perfection and imperfection, Heaven being harmony with God's will and fellow mankind and Hell being the want of such harmony. Baha'is believe in life after death as a transference from one state to the next, each successive state bringing one closer to God. Baha'is believe that one important difference between their faith and other religions is that the Baha'i Faith sets forth a structure for the entire world.

Farwell explained further: "The Baha'i Faith believes everything you do should exemplify what you believe, that religion is a way to live, not a separate activity."

The Baha'i Message in the Prophet's Words

Baha'u'llah wrote on a great many subjects during his 75-year life. The following excerpts from His writings on topics of current interest are taken from Baha'u'llah and the New Era by J. E. Esslemont:

On racial prejudice: "In the sight of God there is no difference between the various races... The lovers of mankind, these are the superior men, of whatever nation, creed or color they may be."

On nationalism: "It is not his to boast who loveth his country, but it is his who loveth the world."

On economic inequality: "It is important to limit riches, as it is also of importance to limit poverty; either extreme is not good."

On women: "Force is losing its dominance, and mental alertness, intuition, and the spiritual qualities of love and service, in which woman is strong, are gaining ascendancy."

On religion: Religion is the greatest instrument for the order of the world. The essence of faith is fewness of words and abundance of deeds."

In Other Ivory Towers

College of the Holy Cross

Former Charge d'Affaires at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, L. Bruce Laingen, addressed a crowd at Holy Cross on the eve of the second anniversary of the hostage crisis, November 3.

Laingen, who was held as a hostage after the taking of that Embassy by Iranian militants in 1979, stressed the importance of Iran in the Middle East, and called the Embassy seizure an example of the Iranian "scapegoat syndrome"—the tendency of Iranians to look outward toward external foes rather than inward toward Iran's own internal problems. Yet Laingen also emphasized what the United States could learn from the Iranian crisis. "We must recognize how much influence we can achieve," he asserted, "and also, that in the long run, a country will make its own decision no matter how we would like to see things develop."

Argus, the two men were met in a residential house, where they told one student that they did not like the anti-gun pin he wore on his jacket. The two men—one of whom announced his membership in the KKK and remarked, "Join the Klan and protect the land"—became embroiled in a loud discussion with several other students, until a security officer arrived and ushered the men out.

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute

Alcohol abuse is growing in severity at RPI according to a report in the school's paper, the Polytechnic. The Interfraternity Council, the Dean of Students' office and RPI Medical director Dr. Joseph Pahl have joined forces to tackle it. According to Pahl, students with serious alcohol-related illnesses—such as alcohol detoxification with convulsions, and severe blood loss due to vomiting—check into the infirmary and hospital every week-end. The majority of these cases involve freshmen, and women account for an increasing number of the cases.

The reform program RPI is instituting consists of a "campus awareness program," (including publicity, presentations, and a list of guidelines for parties), and a new by-law to be voted on by the Interfraternity Council which would threaten a frat with social probation if it serves so much alcohol that it endangers life or property.

Hamilton College

Prohibition ended at Hamilton this October, when the Student Assembly passed a resolution to allow the consumption of alcoholic beverages anywhere at the college—in dorms, dining halls and on campus grounds—a continued ban on liquor at athletic contests being the only exception. Previously, the Guide to Policies and Procedures of Hamilton College forbade alcoholic beverages anywhere except in the Hub (the college pub) and in student rooms. Greg Doyle, Student Assembly president, explained that the resolution reflected a realistic view that drinking occurs on campus anyway, and that the ban in the case of sporting events was a result of the Assembly's concern that non-college people could be adversely affected by alcohol-induced behavior at emotional contests.

NOTICE NOTICE
Al. Anon. Support Group meeting—7:30 Tuesday nights
St. John's Church, Park St.

The Mole Hole

UNIQUE GIFTS

for all

family members

Gifts can be sent home for Christmas.

Open 9-6 Seven Days

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

SANTA'S HELPER!
115 WATER ST.
458-8485

UPSTAIRS

GREAT CHOICES
$5.00 & UNDER

For his lifestyle FROM

THE CLIP SHOP

The 1980's man is looking for neat shorter cuts just right for his active lifestyle. The stylists of The Clip Shop have a variety of fashionable looks to offer. They know the importance, too, in treating each client as a different individual taking into consideration the hair, the bone structure, features and lifestyle of a person. Then, from their library of styles and techniques, via video, they select what would be most suitable.

The Clip Shop would also like to remind everyone that gift certificates are available for all services, and are great as gifts for his lifestyle.

There are three convenient locations:

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 458-9167
PITTSFIELD, MA. 447-9576
BENNINGTON, VT. (802) 442-9823

TONIGHT

Beat the Clock Night
Pitchers start at $2, but prices increase every half hour!

WEDNESDAY

Jim Bayliss will perform guitar and vocals, rock and folk.

THE LOO

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

Williams Co-ops

IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS

something special is a gift from the Co-op

Luttwak defends Reagan policy

by Philip Busch

Consultant to the Reagan administration Edward Luttwak described and defended the Administration's foreign and military policy last Monday in Brooks-Rogers Hall.

A large crowd heard Luttwak, a research professor at Georgetown University, predict a tense world situation in the 1980s in a speech entitled "Rumors of War: the Emerging Foreign Policy of the Reagan Administration."

Luttwak, who is a consultant to both the Defense Department and National Security Council, described the current military buildup as an attempt to redress imbalances caused by U.S. defense cuts in the 1970s and the expense of our effort to become "the world's largest Southeast Asian power," while the U.S.S.R. steadily increased its military power.

The Carter administration understated American military weakness during the 1980 election campaign, according to Luttwak, who was "literally speechless" when he finally learned the truth from outgoing Defense Secretary Harold Brown. The result was a projected military buildup much greater than anticipated. A $50 billion increase between 1980 and 1982 is "not chickenfeed," admitted Luttwak, "but looking at the forces arrayed against us, it's not much at all."

"Caspar Weinberger deserves credit," said Luttwak, for rejecting the "$40 billion monstrosity" of the land-based MX missile system, opting instead for a cheaper, faster deployment plan. Luttwak also praised the decision to produce 100 B-1 bombers, saying "the Stealth bomber is eight or more years away, and the years of military poverty are now."

On the issue of the draft, Luttwak described three ways to build and maintain a good army: paying huge salaries, iron discipline, or conscription. He defended the latter as the logical choice militarily, but noted objections. "This idea doesn't meet with enthusiastic response, since President Reagan and his advisers really believe in freedom of choice. They have profound ideological resistance to conscription."

Luttwak emphasized repeatedly that while the spending program will reduce American military inferiority in the long run, the short-term situation is precarious: "The Soviets will be subjected to great temptation . . . to exploit their temporary military advantage for permanent gain. Our problem is to navigate the next ten years while preventing Soviet adventures . . . Afghanistan is one example of a great continental empire expanding its frontiers toward coming bad times."

Luttwak pointed to China's sparsely populated northwest as a likely site for a Soviet "blitzkrieg" that would "change the shape of China from an orange to a banana."

The U.S. could not stand by and see this happen," said Luttwak. "Once we resolve to be a great power, everything we do depends on the world balance of power . . . this would upset it . . . we need not interfere in the border dispute between Rwanda and Burundi, but in most other conflicts we must interfere."

Luttwak said that the relevance of American military power to crises varies widely. "In Poland the relevance is about zero . . . If the Soviets invade, it will be because they believe the regime is in danger, regardless of us."

By contrast, noted Luttwak, "the relevance in the Persian Gulf is about complete . . . the U.S. would not allow Gulf oil production to be disrupted . . .

Reagan must be ready to put troops around the oil fields, and any other forces necessary . . . It's no use protecting our allies against other threats if not against a cutoff of oil."

Luttwak predicted progress on arms control. "The Russians would rather deal with a tough, businesslike guy like Reagan than a fundamentally unreliable softie. They hated Carter."

However, Luttwak expects continuing difficulties with Europe. He described northern European politicians as "technocrats . . . without global vision." They are in "paralysis," since they have no common ground with their younger generation, which is idealistic, no longer willing to accept material prosperity as something worth fighting for, he noted.

Panel advocates nuclear disarmament

by Peter Nicholas

"All panelists agree that something must happen to stop the tide of nuclear weapons increase," remarked Peter Kramer, physics professor and moderator of last Wednesday night's panel debate on the nuclear arms buildup. "What they disagree on is how to achieve this reduction in weapons."

The debate, sponsored by the student group "If the Bomb Drops, What Else Matters?" was held in conjunction with the Union For Concerned Scientists' nationwide National Con-

Joseph Lehman of the State Department listens as Stephen Daggett of the Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy criticizes the Reagan administration defense spending increases at last Wednesday's nuclear arms debate. (Farley) vocation on Nuclear War.

Stephen Daggett, the first panelist and the director of Budget Priorities for the Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy, warned that the Reagan administration's defense spending hike and doctrine for the use of nuclear arms is enhancing the likelihood of war.

"The administration is forgetting the lessons we learned from the Cuban missile crisis; namely, that political conflicts get a momentum of their own and can snowball out of control. Reagan's detailed plans for using nuclear weapons at different levels of escalation—to deter the Soviets from actions in the Third World and the Persian Gulf, for example—have the danger of escalating to the highest levels of destruction," said Daggett.

The Kennedy administration changed its military doctrine after the Cuban missile crisis from one which envisaged nuclear war as "winable" to a policy where nuclear weapons are seen as a deterrent threat, to be used at only the highest levels of escalation, said Daggett. This doctrine, he asserted, reduced tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States and paved the way to detente.

"I know I might be the heavy here," commented Joseph Lehman, a representative of the U.S. State Department. "I am in the position of having to support the Reagan administration's defense spending increases . . . For the U.S. to allow the Soviets to gain predominance in Europe, for instance, where Soviet conventional forces out-deploy NATO two or three to one, is inviting aggression. The only way to coerce the Soviets to the negotiating table to talk about arms reduction is to counter their threat with a coordinated nuclear weapons strategy that will show them the U.S. is not intimidated."

"The logic of nuclear weapons is a strange one," admitted Lehman. "The United States' possession of them has been one of the most important factors in the preservation of peace and the protection of the territorial integrity of Europe since World War II. Given this, we must approach disarmament in a cold-blooded fashion: we must show the Soviets we are eager for disarmament, but must do everything we can to defend our interests if they are not intimidated."

Spencer-Brooks

Continued from Page 2

this situation the Housing Committee recommended changing the physical plant of West to create a commons room. While this change in the physical plant would help improve the image of West, we felt that it alone would not be enough to remove the stigma of "overflow" housing. Consequently, the Committee decided that West should, in the future, be affiliated exclusively with Spencer.

We felt that it would be best for the housing community as well as the individual houses and their governments if social units were of approximately equal size.

House presidents would share similar perspectives on difficulties regarding governance, unity and the allocation of SAT funds and would, in turn, find the Housing Committee a more effective forum for the resolution of common concerns. With the inclusion of West College, the Spencer unit would well exceed 100 people while Perry would have approximately 60 members. Rather than settle for this discrepancy, we decided, by unanimous decision, to affiliate Brooks with Perry. Both houses would then have a number of affiliates fairly consistent with the other houses on campus. The housing categories would now be: Spencer-Woodbridge; West and Perry - Bascom - Chadbourne - Brooks.

We apologize not for our decision regarding Brooks House, but for the process by which we carried it out. While we gave the College community advance notice of our discussion regarding West College, we failed to advertise the ensuing discussion regarding Brooks House. While we are not ready to reconsider the future of West College, we have requested that the CUL allow us to continue our discussion on Brooks House. This Thursday, at 7 p.m. in Spencer Living Room, the Housing Committee will hold an open meeting concerning the affiliation of Brooks House with Perry-Bascom. We welcome this opportunity to meet with you.

John O'Rourke '82
Kathleen Merrigan '82

Homecoming 1981: a panoply of emotion

Pictures clockwise from top right: a variety of Ephpeople intent upon the football game; the Marching Moo-cow Band parades down Spring Street; Ephman Ted Thomas provides some cheering fodder for the fans; Southside Johnny knocks 'em dead at the SAB homecoming concert; and Eph and Jeff civilians fight it out over possession of the kidnapped Amherst admissions office sign right before the big game. (photos by Stephen Farley)

3 KING'S LIQUOR STORE

Take a bottle of wine home for Thanksgiving.

1979 Beaujolais Villages $6.49/bottle

on Spring Street 413-458-5948

The Workshop has not been in operation long enough for faculty to notice any effect on student writing, according to some professors. "I've seen one paper, and that's really too little to go on," said English Professor Arthur Carr.

Graver emphasized that the program is "designed not to deal with acute difficulties . . . we really are trying to address

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole.

WITCHIE WOMAN: Be sure to watch part 1: "In which I marry Henry Plantagenet." Yours, Glenda

MILLS—I have received your speech and I approve. —Fandrick

ELIEZER RAFAELI, visiting professor of Middle East politics and former president of Haifa University, will speak on Zionism: conflicts & resolutions. Tonight in Griffin 3 at 7:30pm.

A plea for student power

by Brett McDonnell
Students of Williams, unite!
We face a great challenge. Upperclassmen complain about a decline in living quality: the loss of Row House dining, the ban on dogs on campus, etc. We seem powerless in the face of changes which affect our lives greatly.
What to do?
Seize power.
Students at Williams have little institutional power. Of course, there are a few student positions on the Committee on Education Policy (CEP) and the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL), and there is always the College Council. However, the College Council has little real power over administrative and faculty decisions as far as I can see. Further, students have little say about the most important part of College government—the College administration budget. The administration is free to listen to student opinions—or ignore them.
I recently experienced a personal example of this feeling of importance. I was supposed to write an article for The Record on a faculty discussion on evaluating student performance. The organizers were afraid my presence would inhibit discussion and did not let me in.
Now, the professors involved had perfectly good reasons for their action. They are not ogres. However, their secrecy does reveal a certain contempt for students. Dialogue between teachers and students on student performance and teaching methods would have been interesting and informative for both sides—if they were considered to be on equal ground. Clearly, the professors involved do not view students as partners in the educational process. The bit about Mark Hopkins on a log is just so much dead wood.
This general attitude is not peculiar to Williams. It is probably less extreme here than at most colleges. The American teacher-student relationship is essentially and absolutely unequal. Administrators everywhere are basically oblivious to the demands of all but their superiors. So much for democracy.
We cannot rely on the benevolence of individual teachers and administrators, good as they might be. We need institutional power. Student seats on important committees must be enlarged. The College Council must obtain real power. All major measures affecting students must be reviewed by students who have the power to change or defeat those measures. It is a travesty of justice and the democratic ideal for decisions like Row House dining to be made without students having a real, institutional voice in the matter.

How do we bring this about?
We do have weapons available. These include talking to those in power, increased activity on the part of student leaders, petitioning, demonstrating and even, as a last resort, striking. It has been done. Of course, events are unlikely to come to such an extreme impasse.
The choice is between action or inaction, power or helplessness, continued ineffectual grumbling or effective intervention.
We have nothing to lose but our chains.

Should the CIA propose to Williams?

by Greg Hcires
Sam Schuchat
Geoff Machat
Last year the Central Intelligence Agency came to Williams to recruit undergraduates without eliciting any significant student or faculty outcry. On Wednesday, November 18, a CIA recruiter will be at the Office of Career Counseling.
The CIA is an institution which violates the principles and values that this college seeks to inculcate in its students. Allowing the CIA to recruit here amounts to an implicit acceptance of its policies and histories, and is not in the best interest of Williams students.
As dictated by its original charter, the National Security Act of 1947, the CIA was established solely to gather intelligence data through foreign surveillance. It was not long, however, before the CIA went beyond the scope of its charter. The Agency played an important role in ensuring European acceptance of the Marshall Plan, by defending the political opposition to the Plan. Methods used included infiltrating labor unions and political parties of Western European countries.
Considerations of space prevent us from listing the full extent of CIA covert operations abroad; in 1961, for instance, the CIA made repeated attempts to assassinate Patrice

Lumumba, President of the Republic of the Congo. Perhaps the most well known instance of sustained subversive activity on the part of the CIA was its effort to "destabilize" and ultimately overthrow the democratically elected government of Salvador Allende in Chile in 1973. The CIA's campaign against Allende from 1970 to 1973 included working against communists in the labor unions, manipulating the Chilean news media, and maintaining close ties with the military.

Students should hear both sides

by Steve Willard
On November 18, a CIA recruiter will come to Williams to speak with students about careers in the CIA. Several students and faculty at Williams are currently working to organize a movement to deny the CIA the opportunity to recruit here. I feel that the success of this movement would be a disservice both to the Williams community and to opponents of the CIA.
The students and faculty opposed to CIA recruitment argue that allowing the CIA to

Yes, our new poster selection has been installed—We've also replenished our Monarch Notes.

Johnny's Rent-a-Lemon
$10 a day
10¢ a mile
Will deliver and pick up the cars in the Williamstown area.
Will rent to those 18 and older.
802-823-7272

The CIA's charter also prohibits domestic surveillance. Yet, in 1975, the Rockefeller Commission (of which Ronald Reagan was a member) concluded that domestic spying and spying on U.S. citizens abroad constitute a clear violation of the CIA's charter. The Rockefeller Commission discovered that "over a 20-year period the CIA had opened more than 200,000 pieces of mail, and photographed more than 2.7 million envelopes in the U.S." In addition, the CIA "compiled files on 7,200 American citizens" and "wiretapped or physically surveilled American newsmen between 1959 and 1972 to learn their sources of classified information."
Many Williams students would probably argue that one could work for the CIA and not be involved in dirty tricks by sticking to some "inoffensive" job. However, as John Stockwell, former CIA station chief in Angola, has pointed out in his book, In Search of Enemies, the Agency is not entirely honest about what it does, or what its employees do.

My CIA recruiters lied to me about the clandestine services as they swore me in. They insisted the CIA functioned to gather intelligence. It did not kill, use drugs, or damage people's lives, they assured me. These lies were perpetuated, in the following year of training courses.
Stockwell goes on to point out that there is actually a "revolving door" for staff people between the overt and covert wings of the CIA, so that the Williams graduate who was hired for economic analysis could find him or herself faced with the choice of supporting a coup d'etat in a sovereign nation or resigning.
We think that the College should not permit an organization that lies to its employees, disrupts the democratic elections of sovereign nations, attempts to assassinate heads of state, and violates the Constitutional rights of U.S. citizens to interview here.

seniors involved in the harrowing process of looking for a job.
The second argument of the opponents to CIA recruitment is far more insidious. They argue that listening to a representative of the CIA is "not in the best interests of Williams students." Such an argument not only insults the intelligence of those Williams students willing to listen to both sides of an issue; it also reveals an intolerance of freedom of expression which discredits legitimate arguments against CIA actions. No one point of view has either a monopoly on truth or the wisdom to decide what views should or should not be heard. We should disagree with what other people say, not with their right to say it.
The student/faculty movement may be successful in driving away the CIA and other employers which the group feels are immoral. No employer wants to endure the protests and abuse of even a small group of demonstrators. Yet the demonstrators' success will be Williams' loss. We will be seen as intellectual cowards who have learned nothing but to fear those with whom we disagree.

Students nominated for Watson

Four Williams seniors were nominated by the College to compete for the Watson Traveling Fellowship, which provides a $10,000 grant for a student to pursue a project outside the United States. Susan Edwards, Jackson Galloway, Eban Goodstein and Rikka-Liisa Melartin will compete out of a field of 200 students for the Fellowship.
Susan Edwards hopes to spend a year in Wales exploring the Welsh poetic tradition and the resurgence of Welsh nationalism; Jackson Galloway would minorities is too low, Kenya believes. The goal should be five or six rather than two or three, she said. "You have a group starting together. If they stayed around, it would be more likely to have one or two get tenured."

Affirmative Action —

Continued from Page 1
Dickerson says the fact that the College community, and Berkshire County as a whole, has such a small number of blacks living here makes an urban location more attractive; "The sociological advantages sweeten the offer (to work in an urban location)."
But he points out that often the reasons a black faculty member leaves have little to do with his or her being black per se. He

College Council reviews budget, calendar —

Continued from Page 1
favor of the (discretionary) fund, I thought it would be hypocritical to pay for copying the letter myself."
A Council vote at Wednesday's meeting approved the officers' use of funds to pay for the letter.
Said Segal after the meeting, "It was an official officers' statement—not from all the Council... It was a question of timing... The letter was good for generating discussion—both sides needed to be represented."
Asked whether Steve Spears '83, Council Treasurer, had been asked to sign the letter, Segal said, "I generally don't see him—he's over in Greylock. So no, I didn't ask him."
Nathan was asked to sign the letter, but said at the Council meeting that he "felt strongly that the Council should be consulted before a formal statement (was made)."

The Williams Record
needs writers to cover:
Men's & Women's • Basketball • Skiing
• Ice Hockey • Squash
• Swimming
Men's
• Winter track
• Wrestling
Return to Dan Keating, Sports Editor, SU 1256
Name _____ SU _____

Water Polo finishes 2nd in N.E.

Winning the Little Three Championship, the water polo team concluded its most successful campaign in its eight year history, this past weekend at Muir Pool.
With an overall record of 17-7, 15-3 against collegiate opposition, the Ephs set records for Twelfth Night —
Continued from Page 4
delightful, decked out like any number of old movie starlets, showing considerable thigh and considerable talent. And the ever-gloomy Malvolio (Peter Massey), dressed in a black tuxedo when everyone else was dressed in off-white shades, was excellently portrayed.
With rare exceptions, director Jean-Bernard Bucky has orchestrated a flawless production. The clever costumes by Bruce Goodrich did much to add to the unconventionality and humor of the play. The interesting stage with its box and its trap doors and the lighting well designed by William Groener. The play is a delight to watch, an excellent combination of acting, directing and design.
There will be three more performances of Twelfth Night on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, Nov. 19, 20 and 21 at 8 p.m. in the AMT. Tickets are available now at the AMT box office from 12-5 p.m. daily. Prices are $1.50 general admission and 50¢ with a Williams I.D.

number of victories, winning percentage, and goals scored. The polcers missed their major objective, however—a New England Championship.
The New Englands were held at Harvard's Blodgett Pool the weekend of November 6-7. Seeded first, based on a 9-0 Conference record, the Ephs met a bigger and stronger Coast Guard team in the first round. Williams started quickly, as senior co-captains Jerry Treiman and Bill Hymes scored twice each for a 4-0 first period lead. Williams increased its lead to 8-1 at the half, with junior Jeff Mook pumping in three goals. Coast Guard fought back in the second half, but could never get closer than two goals as Williams prevailed, 10-8.
Williams then faced the Trinity Bantams, New England Champions two years ago, in a game that would decide the tournament championship. The game contrasted the ball control, deliberate play of Trinity against the pressure defense and fast break offense of Williams.
On the Ephs' first possession, Treiman took a pass from Hymes and fired it past Trinity's All New England Goalie for a 1-0 lead. But the Bantams came back, taking a 3-1 lead before Williams scored again to cut the margin to 3-2 at the quarter. Trinity scored twice more to lead 5-2 at the half, before Treiman got his third goal of the game to make it 5-3 after three quarters. Despite a fourth quarter goal by sophomore John Gould, Williams could not catch up, losing to the eventual tournament champions, 6-4, and finishing second in New England.

Against Rhode Island the next day, a disappointed Williams team dominated play, with Mook spearheading the offense with three goals and junior goalie Brendan Kiernan, the most improved Eph from a year ago, stopping 14 shots in the 6-4 victory.
This past weekend the Ephs returned home for Little Three action against arch rival Amherst. Williams, undefeated against the Jeffs in Muir Pool, was forced to play a very physical game, and never got the chance to develop its fast break offense. Senior Jay Thoman tallied a power play goal, his first of two, to give Williams a 1-0 edge. Amherst fought gamely back to lead 4-2. Co-captains Hymes and Treiman each then scored from the outside to tie the game 4-4 at the half.
The second half was all Williams. With Treiman adding two more and Hymes another, Williams opened a 7-5 third period lead and held on for a 9-6 victory.
Next year Williams will miss the services of Hymes, Treiman, and Thoman, as well as Dennis O'Shea Award winner Steve Ierardi (most enthusiastic). But with Mook and Kiernan leading a strong contingent of underclassmen, the Ephs should have a solid shot at a first New England Championship.

Model EL-506
Full-featured scientific calculator with 3-key independent memory system.
• 10-digit liquid crystal display. • 3-key independent memory. • One-touch percent and square root keys. • Automatic Power-Off (A.P.O.) prolongs battery life. • Performs hyperbolic, polar coordinates, time conversions. • Constant (K) and reciprocal. • 3 levels of parentheses/4 pending operations. • Includes wallet case and batteries.
$29.95
McClelland's
36 Spring Street - - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

The Purple Pub
Bank Street
Monday
Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight
Tuesday
Prime Time
(reduced prices)
Wednesday
Tuborg Night
Assorted Tuborg advertising
to be given away. 9-12
Thursday
Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00
Friday
Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00
NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
This week's recipient is senior Brian Daniell. As co-captain of the soccer team, Brian has led the Williams defense all year. With a long reach and quick reflexes, he has thwarted opposing attackers repeatedly, keeping the Ephmen in the game. Brian, this Bud's for you!
the Bud's for you!

Ephs fall to Jeffs, 21-17

by Steve Epstein

In a game emblematic of its season as a whole, the football team lost despite winning in almost every statistical category. The Ephs fell, 21-17, to the Lord Jeffs of Amherst, who won their first Little Three title since 1968.

The game, which dropped the Ephs to 3-5 for the season, started dramatically as senior quarterback John Lawler returned from an injury to catapult the Ephs to a 17-14 halftime lead. But a Jeff Hughes 3-yard touchdown scamper in the third quarter gave Amherst the contest.

Ted Thomas, the freshman fullback, again was the bright spot for the Ephs. For the second consecutive week Thomas ran for over 100 yards (130 yds, 26 carries, 1 TD) punishing the Jeffs defense and gaining much of his yardage in key situations.

The Ephs fell behind 7-0 just 3 minutes into the game when Jan Ostendarp (the Amherst coach's son) befuddled the Eph special teams and jaunted 92 yards down the visitors' side line with a punt return for a score.

An amazing 42-yard pass from Lawler to senior speedster Micah Taylor set up the Ephs first score of the day. The play kept alive a 15-play 82-yard drive that culminated in a Thomas plunge from one yard out. The score made it 7-7.

The Jeffs gave Williams its second scoring opportunity, catching the fumble that had plagued Williams the week before. On their first play from scrimmage, the Jeffs coughed up the football and senior lineman Steve Doherty recovered. The fumble gave the Ephs a first down on the Jeffs' 28 yard line. It took just two plays for the gridgers to score from there. A 22-yard pass from Lawler to senior tight end Craig Overlander brought Williams inside the ten yard line, and then senior Jay Wheatley went in for six. Wheatley finished the day with 75 yards on 12 carries.

A seven-play 69-yard drive for the Jeffs followed to tie the score. The major damage was done by quarterback Brian Curran, who threw 23 yards to end Dave Silliman for the tying score. Before the half ended, a 34 yard field goal by senior Rich Coomber made it 17-14.

The second half was a defensive struggle, with the Ephs entire defensive line, linebacking corps, and secondary playing well against a potent Amherst offense. But 8:04 remained when the Jeffs finally hit paydirt. An 82-yard drive took 14 plays and culminated in a Jeff Hughes TD. This tally gave the Jeffs their four point margin of victory.

Amherst edges kickers

by Dave Woodworth

Controlling the entire game, Amherst nipped the Ephs, 1-0, in varsity soccer on Saturday. The Jeffs' snagged the winner on a perfect shot by John Steele with only seven seconds left in the first half. The score was the only blemish in an outstanding game played by frosh goalie Ted Murphy.

Steele's goal was the culmination of an Amherst attack that started with the opening kickoff and did not end until the final whistle. The Lord Jeffs dominated the first half in terms of ball control and field position, but could not seem to put the ball in the net.

Several scoring opportunities were stymied by goalkeeper Murphy, who played brilliantly in his first start of the season, and at least two shots deflected off the crossbar. It appeared that, with Murphy's play and a little luck, the Ephs could get out of the half without being scored upon.

However, with about 20 seconds left, Steele took a kick from Amherst keeper Fred Jordan, dribbled up the alley on the left sideline, crossed inside and turned loose a shot from about 20 yards out. Murphy did not have a chance to save it, as the ball was placed perfectly, hooking just inside the far post.

Williams' play intensified in the second half, but Amherst's high-powered front line kept the pressure on the Eph defenders. Brian Daniell '82, Reg Jones '82, David Barry '82, Aytac Apaydin '83, and Willy Stern '83 prevented the Lord Jeffs from scoring again, but the Ephs' own attack was unable to mount a serious threat on the Amherst goal.

Jordan's real test came with about 10 minutes left in the match as he was forced to come out on Tad Chase '82. Chase got off a shot, but Jordan somehow managed to get a piece of it and deflected it wide of the net.

Amherst fired 21 shots at the besieged Murphy, who made saves on 13 of them. By contrast, Williams was only able to muster 12 shots on goal, and Jordan saved 8 in recording the shutout for the Jeffs.

Coach Mike Russo expressed disappointment with the team's performance against Amherst. The loss, as he put it, "was just one of those things. We lost on a great shot, but he should never have gotten it off. I guess that was the story of our season." Russo also noted, "We had the better of the play in the midfield, but lacked explosiveness in the penalty box, which is where games are won and lost. We played well, but just not well enough to win. Amherst is a good side, but they really did not outplay us, except on the scoreboard."

Williams finished the year with an overall record of 3-7-2. Commenting on the team's poor showing this season, Russo said, "We made a lot of progress during the season, after an 0-4 start. Our guys played up to their potential, and kept a good attitude. With a few breaks, our season would have been very different."

Ephman Eric Stein '84 harasses an Amherst kicker as Rob Kusel '83 gives pursuit. (Doherty)

Senior defensive tackle Joe Ross corrals Amherst quarterback Brian Curran in the Lord Jeffs' 21-17 victory. (Farley)

Three Ephwomen run to nationals

by Patricia Hellman

Facing Amherst and thirteen other teams, the women's cross-country team competed at the women's Division III NCAA New Englands, held at Franklin Park, in Boston this week. The team had been gearing up all year for the race, because in order to qualify for the nationals, it was necessary to be among the top 12 finishers.

Competition was intense for the 12 spots. Williams' senior Liz Martineau raced out in second place for the first 1½ miles, but started falling back in the pack until, with a half mile to go, coach Bud Flsher, yelled "you're in 12th place!" This galvanized Martineau into action, and she sped past two of the girls ahead of her, finishing in 10th place, and gaining herself a spot on the New England division team.

Seniors Tricia Hellman and Sue Marchant ran strong and steady races, ending up in sixth and ninth, respectively, also winning themselves a trip out to Wisconsin for the NCAA nationals. These three were all within six seconds of each other, and 20 seconds from 13th place.

Also putting in excellent performances for Williams were Kerry Malone '84, Chinyere Uwah '85, and Susan Bragdon '83 who finished 23rd, 24th, and 26th respectively. This put all the Williams runners in the top one-third of the field.

Williams ended up second in the team competition, narrowing the margin between themselves and Middlebury over that of previous meets this year. Team scores were Middlebury 46, Williams 72, Southeastern Mass. 87, Bowdoin 121, and Bates 144. Seven other schools competed, including Amherst and Wesleyan, who failed to host full teams.

Two weeks ago, Amherst won the women's Little Three cross-country meet. Not content with mere victory, they felt it necessary to steal Williams' team mascot, the Little Bear. Leaving Williamstown with their precious cargo, they yelled a gleeful "bear left" from the window of their van.

Stealing the Little Bear didn't seem to work to Amherst's advantage. Wherever the Bear is, we know it's on our side.

Harriers fly to season's final wire

by Lyman Casey

The last two weeks of the cross country season are always tough, with the New England Championships and the Division III qualifying meet facing the Ephs at Franklin Park.

The Division III qualifying meet last weekend was a day marked by good races by many of the harriers. Sophomore John Nelson was frustrated in his attempt to qualify for nationals as a sophomore (a trick turned by very few) but finished 33rd in a strong 25:06. Junior Lyman Casey came up with perhaps his best effort yet for Williams finishing two seconds in back of Nelson in 36th place. Brian Angle '84 also had a major personal breakthrough, running 25:20.

Keeping the pack tight were Dan Riley '83 at 25:33 and Chris O'Neill '84 at 25:56. The team effort was good for seventh place.

On November 7, the Ephs fell victim to a crowded start at New Englands when a runner in front of them tripped, causing a pile-up which included Chuck Stewart '82, Angle, and Riley. In addition, the team was without the services of soph star Nelson, who was resting up in anticipation of a dogfight for nationals qualifying. Nevertheless, the Ephs came through with some solid performances in placing 17th in the field of 28 Division I, II and III teams. Casey was in first for the team in 25:30. Following him by twenty seconds were O'Neill and Stewart, who came up with a great race in spite of the starting-line mishap.

The results of the 1981 campaign bode well for the 1982 squad, which returns all of the varsity except Captains Stewart and Gordon Coates, and which will have Bo Parker '84 returning from a year's absence. The team also expects the team mascot, "Bear", to be along for the full season.

Reds to play in Purple Valley

Tuning up for its 1981-1982 campaign, the men's varsity basketball team will take on a touring Yugoslavian squad in Lasell Gymnasium this Friday. Yugoslavia, which won the 1980 Olympic Gold medal in basketball, has a strong claim to having the best amateur players in the world.

The Ephs will scrimmage one of three Yugoslavian teams currently touring the U.S. The top team, which won the gold medal, will be playing teams from the Atlantic Coast Conference. The second team, which has four Olympians, will play Easter Eight squads. The last team, which is the third best from the country, will face a variety of schools including four Division I teams, a Division II team and Williams.

Head Coach Bob Peck is enthusiastic about the scrimmage. Although he knows very little about the Yugoslavian squad, Peck feels they will provide a good challenge for the Ephs. Led by senior co-captains Jeff Fasulo and Al Lewis, the Purple and Gold will take on what will probably be a very physical Yugoslav team.

Yugoslavs, like most other European teams, tend toward being very big and stressing a physical style of play. Williams, lacking big horses under the boards, will be well tested. The scrimmage will be played under American rather than International rules.

The squad that will play here, called Cibinic, is from Zagreb, Yugoslavia. They play Marist College before Williams and Assumption after. The rest of its tour consists of Monmouth College, UMass, and Fordham.

National touring teams are not uncommon at this time of year when many schools are seeking scrimmages. Peck also looked into scrimmaging the Irish national team and a Canadian team.

The scrimmage will be at 7:30 p.m. this Friday night in Lasell gym. Admission is free.

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 20

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

NOVEMBER 24, 1981

Ali Pahlavi, younger brother of the current Shah Reza Pahlavi, is living in the family house off the Taconic Golf Course. Chain-link fences and guard dogs were added since the Pahlavi's bought the house two years ago. Four security men who chased a RECORD photographer away from the property can be seen at the front door of the house.

Shah's brother attends Mt. Greylock

by Brett McDonnell

Ali Pahlavi, following in his elder brother Reza's footsteps, recently took up residence in the Pahlavi house near the Taconic golf course. The son of the late Shah of Iran began attending Williamstown's Mt. Greylock High School as a sophomore last Tuesday.

Pahlavi has declined to talk to reporters, so his reasons for coming to the Berkshires are not known. His sister, Farahnaz, recently graduated from the Ethel Walker School in Simsbury, Connecticut, has expressed an interest in auditing courses at Bennington College in Bennington, Vermont.

When a RECORD photographer went to the fence of the Pahlavi home last week to take some pictures, four bellicose men stormed out of the front door and warned him to move back onto the golf course.

Joan Manners, secretary to the superintendent at Mt. Greylock, says the school provides no extra security. "(Ali Pahlavi) does have a security person who brings him to school, sits in a car in the parking lot, and takes him home. The school itself is taking no precautions."

Reza Pahlavi had personal security guards while at Williams. Ransom Jenks, director of security for Williams, discussed the elder Pahlavi's year here, saying, "We were able to handle things," and that "fortunately, nothing happened."

Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zolito avoided all such questions, saying, "We don't discuss security with anybody."

Reza Pahlavi, who spent the 1979-80 school year at Williams, is now on a "personal withdrawal." Since leaving, he has declared himself Shah of Iran.

Campus alarmed by attacks on women

Reached early this morning, Williamstown police told RECORD reporters that the alleged suspect had been "thoroughly questioned" and was no longer considered a prime suspect in the incident. According to an officer involved in the case, "at this time, we don't feel that there is a relationship between the suspect and the attack." Police are continuing their investigation.

by Sara Ferris

A female student was attacked early Sunday morning by an unidentified man in the second reported assault against women in the past month. The Deans' Office informed students last week that disciplinary action had been taken against a male student who raped a woman about four weeks ago.

At 3:05 a.m. Sunday, a student returning from a party at Mission Park was accosted by a college-age white male. She described her assailant as "about six feet tall, thin build, dark brown hair, wearing a plain blue sweatshirt with hood," according to a notice from the Deans' Office.

The man wrestled her to the ground and put his hand over her mouth. She bit his hand and kicked him in the groin, driving him off and suffering minor injuries herself, according to Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor. She then returned to her room to report the attack to Security and the Williamstown Police Department.

Late Monday morning Williamstown police questioned a 20-year-old Williamstown man in connection with the assault.

Dean Cris Roosenraad said that when asked to review a police lineup, the female student involved was "quite positive" of the man's identity.

Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zolito said no charges have been filed pending further investigation.

Director of Security Ransom Jenks said several students called his office Sunday to report seeing a man at a Currier House party Saturday night who fit the description released in a bulletin Sunday afternoon.

From there it was a matter of "cooperation between Williams Security and the Williamstown police," Jenks said.

The other attack that occurred three and a half weeks ago involved an actual rape and was reported to the Deans' Office by the two students concerned, according to Dean Nancy McIntire, who discussed the case at a Feminist Alliance meeting last Tuesday.

The student body was not informed of the first incident earlier because "in the judgment of the Deans, it did not pose a threat to other students," said McIntire. "When the situation suggests danger to other people, the Deans' Office has an agreement to let students know."

"After considering the statements of the parties and the details of the event, we decided to take disciplinary action," McIntire said. Neither O'Connor nor McIntire would reveal the exact action, admitting only that the student was still on campus.

To members of the Feminist Alliance who suggested that the seriousness of rape warranted expulsion or suspension, McIntire replied, "You're assuming that the action the Deans' Office took condoned the rape. After looking at the incident, . . . we acted. Disciplinary action may range. It might be a warning. The Dean also has the power to put the student on probation. It's a judgment call."

She added, "It might also depend on what the victim wanted." O'Connor noted, "The

Continued on Page 8

Faculty question WSP

by Philip Busch

As the Winter Study Review Committee explores the educational value of Winter Study, faculty, student, and administration views of the program vary nearly as much as proposed solutions to its perceived problems.

The committee, under the co-chairmanship of Professors Larry Graver and Fred Greene, is currently assessing faculty opinion through a number of meetings with groups of faculty, and tabulating student opinion from recently distributed questionnaires. The committee will issue its report sometime this spring, according to committee members.

The faculty appears divided on the question of Winter Study's value. Associate Professor of Political Science Raymond Baker expressed one common view, saying, "I don't think it's a good use of research . . . it requires a load on faculty disproportionate to the effort students put into it."

"Students get a great deal out of it, especially the chance to talk to each other," continued Baker, "but to teach a WSP 'is not my job as a professional.'"

"I'd prefer Amherst's (optional) 4-0-4, which would offer students something if they wanted it. I'm disturbed by President Chandler's 'no 4-0-4' mandate," Baker said. "... I'm delighted with the prospect of a change, the more complete the better."

Prof. Michael Katz, chairman of the Russian and German department, said he is "not very enthusiastic about Winter Study as presently organized. My major criticism is the disparity of commitment required of faculty and students to Winter Study as an intellectual experience . . . the faculty have to take it seriously . . . students are almost encouraged to be less than totally committed."

Katz pointed out the special problems involved in motivating students in language sustaining programs. He also commented that "I'm moved by the argument for more research time," noting recent cuts in American funding of research in the humanities and the acute pressures on younger faculty to publish.

Katz pointed to the annual January trip to Russia, however, as a "great boon" to the Russian program and to students who could not travel there otherwise.

"All in all," concluded Katz, "I would move toward eliminating it rather than tightening it, but I'm not sure as yet about possible alternatives."

Longer semesters

Meredith Hopkin of the Classics department saw value in Winter Study, but noted problems with faculty morale and student motivation. She suggested new emphasis on educational aspects of the period. However, she said that "grading is not the answer." Hopkin

Continued on Page 8

Faculty morale is waning, according to the report of the Committee on the Eighties. Low attendance at faculty meetings like the one above seem to support this conclusion. (see story p. 6)

Inside the Record

Jewish at Williams	p. 3
Costello goes country	p. 5
Report sinks swim coach	p. 9
Women's X-C sweep	p. 10

End the harassment

Two reported physical assaults on women in the past three weeks have shocked the campus and tarnished our Ivory Towers.

The spectrum of verbal and physical intimidation of women ranges from sexual innuendo to physical violence. While all are intolerable forms of harassment, it takes the violent crime of rape or assault and battery to jolt people out of their complacency and into action.

That women must endure this abuse to the point where it threatens their personal safety is deplorable, especially in an atmosphere dedicated toward developing leadership. Women at Williams need not and should not tolerate even the subtlest degree of sexual intimidation. The Deans' Office stands ready to discipline offenders while maintaining the victim's confidentiality.

Caution and common sense play an essential role in guaranteeing a woman student's safety on a late night stroll. Men should offer to walk their female friends home; women who live near each other should make an effort to accompany each other home.

Heightened awareness of potentially dangerous situations should go hand in hand with a beefed-up crew of security monitors and campus escorts. More lights in the darker areas of campus would serve to discourage would-be assailants.

The College has realized the need for greater awareness and protection. As it did last year, the Deans' Office will sponsor a self-defense course for women this January.

Only through the explicit support of women can the gnawing fear of intimidation be eliminated.

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Unresponsive

To the editor:

The Ad-Hoc Committee Opposing the C.I.A. would like to clarify and explain what happened in our protest last week. Members of our group were of two general persuasions. Some wanted to protest and educate the campus about C.I.A. activities and others wanted to ban the C.I.A. from recruiting on campus.

The night before the C.I.A. visited the campus, O.C.C., to their credit, sponsored a forum to discuss the protest. Virtually no one indicated they approved of C.I.A. activities. However, some spoke for the C.I.A.'s visit, citing its right to freedom of speech. Others spoke against the visit. Some cited the heinous activities of the C.I.A. (including domestic activities) as a reason for not allowing the group to come. Others felt that, while the C.I.A. has the freedom to speak in Williamstown, offering them space at O.C.C. implies an institutional acceptance of the agency. The Ad-Hoc Committee agreed at the forum to protest C.I.A. activities without interfering with their recruitment process and to offer only constructive questions to the recruiter.

The members of the Ad-Hoc Committee held fast to our agreements, but the C.I.A. and O.C.C. did not. Like other groups that recruit at the O.C.C., the C.I.A. is bound to the office policy that recruiters must answer student queries. At the information session, Mr. David Overton, the recruiter, did not satisfactorily answer many of our questions, including such basic recruitment questions as those concerning the percentage of minorities working for the C.I.A. and whether the agency asks applicants about their sexual preferences. After the meeting, Mr. Overton ceased pretending to answer our questions at all, and his responses to us included: "This is not a useful question," and "The C.I.A. is not here to answer your questions."

Despite an assurance from O.C.C. to one of our members that no private appointments would be permitted within the building, Mr. Overton disappeared upstairs after the information session to hold private meetings. Our group left the O.C.C. building and forty of us marched silently through the Faculty Club, Baxter and Hopkins Hall. A few of us returned to

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:

"We don't discuss security with anybody."

—Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zoito when asked about town security for Ali Pahlavi, son of the late Shah of Iran and new town resident.

O.C.C. to try to speak with Mr. Overton after his appointments, hoping he would be more receptive. "I just can't speak with you people," he said.

The O.C.C. policy, as explained by Director Barbara-Jan Wilson at the O.C.C. advisory committee meeting, stipulates that they will not host recruiters who refuse to answer student questions. Like any other organization interviewing at O.C.C., Mr. Overton should not have rudely dismissed polite questions about recruitment and his organization. We suggest that the Williams College community consider Mr. Overton's responses to our group, and invite him back only on the condition that he conform to O.C.C. Policy.

Lorraine Driscoll '82 for
The Ad-Hoc Committee to Oppose the C.I.A.

Shrill Call

To the editor:

The clarion is a shrill-sounding trumpet with a narrow tube. Its sounds are evidently considered to be warlike in their effect. In both shape and sound it serves as an accurate headline for your recent editorial concerning WSP evaluation. Although the editorial does exhort the Student Council to attempt some positive actions, its predominantly strident and paranoid tone may well tend to encourage the development of a situation in which faculty are, or appear to be, pitted against students over the WSP question. This will not benefit students, and will certainly serve to be undermine the cause of all those who would preserve WSP in its present form.

In your rush to catalog the various levers the politically-aroused student body can and ought to pull, you overlook what I regard to be the single most important set of student attitudes and behavior affecting faculty opinion on WSP. If students truly want to preserve WSP they can most effectively pursue that goal by individually demonstrating through their attitude and behavior during January 1982 that WSP projects are indeed a valuable educational experience. What is required is not student encomiums, whether delivered individually or through overwhelmingly positive questionnaire results. Rather students must have genuinely positive attitudes toward WSP projects, be willing to engage fully in the intellectual challenges presented, and be willing to produce well-formed intellectual products of high quality.

As the proportion of the student body meeting these criteria approaches 100 percent, the probability of maintaining WSP in its present form increases dramatically.

David A. Booth

Disunity

To the editor:

In an attempt to strengthen Row Houses, the Student Housing Committee has proposed that West College be given a common room, an interior paint job and an affiliation with Spencer to help West residents feel more like a part of a Row House. The committee further proposes that either Brooks or Woodbridge be given to Perry to balance the number of beds in each house. Why is there so much concern with numbers? I feel there are other more important factors to consider when trying to unify a house than a mere balance of numbers.

If West were given to Spencer, Spencer House would have 99 beds while Perry House would have 59. The Housing Committee warns that a sixty person house might contradict the House's basic purpose of reflecting "the diversity of backgrounds, interests and personalities of students within the College as a whole..." as stated in the Student Handbook. Sixty is not such a small number. It would be hard to find sixty like-minded students on this campus. Perry would not be inherently more homogeneous than other randomly assigned houses. The creation of a smaller and geographically close Row House would supply yet another living option for students.

Finally, the quality of housing is an all-important factor in enticing students of all types to join and be active in Row Houses.

West College, a building where over half of Spencer members would have to live, is quite simply nowhere near as highly valued as Brooks or Woodbridge and such a trade is extremely inequitable. Both Brooks and Woodbridge are essential components of Spencer because of the contrasting room options they offer. Some students prefer the homey environment of Woodbridge while others favor the contemporary atmosphere of Brooks. Ironically, balancing house size to encourage diversity could effectively promote disunity.

There is no clear-cut way of eliminating West as disunited overflow housing without affecting the cozy fireplace and wood-paneled Row House atmosphere. Instead let's simply add West College to Spencer House and redirect our attention to the more pressing problem of Row House disunity.

Todd Morgan '84

OUTLOOK

One of the few: being a Jew at Williams

by Joel Hellman

It was at the Williams Club, that posh bastion of Eph society comfortably nestled on Manhattan's dignified

East Side, that I had my first conversation with a Protestant, ever. We were strolling down Madison Ave. after a reserved gathering of Williams prospectives, when upon sighting a delicatessen my Protestant exclaimed, "I don't know much about your Jewish food." Astonished, I proceeded to name some Jewish delicacies until one struck his curiosity. "What's a bagel?" he queried.

This may not be shocking to you, but to a kid whose first words out of the womb were, "Pass the bagels and cream cheese," this was a traumatic question. At first I thought my Protestant was from another country. I was right, he was from Connecticut.

A different world

Jest you may, but to me, Connecticut was another country. Williamstown was another world. Anywhere that didn't have a synagogue on every corner and chicken soup on tap in every home was not the Promised Land. On my first trip to Williamstown, I discovered that not only were there more churches on campus than muggers in Brooklyn (my hometown), but even the buildings that weren't churches were constructed to look like churches, i.e. the gym. There was a synagogue... in North Adams.

The question obviously stands, "Why did this nice Jewish boy venture into gentile-land instead of going to Brandeis, where each freshman entry has a resident Jewish mother in place of a J.A.? Well, in addition to adoring Williams College and all its educational advantages, I felt the need to live in the real world, where people weren't named Harvey, Ishmael, Mordechai and Izzy, but simply Bill, Bob, Ted, Skip and Skooter. I had to face the grim reality that not everyone knows what gefilte fish is and few people were bar mitzvahed.

I didn't come to Williams to lose my Jewish identity, in fact my "Jewishness" has intensified here. At Williams, I discovered that what I took for granted at home in my Brooklyn shtetl could get big laughs up here. Before any party, I would call up my grandmother for some new comic material; she kept the gentiles rolling in the aisles. I've found that Jewish stories and poor urban ghetto stories knock'em dead at Williams. I wonder why?

Grandmother stories

I love telling these stories because they are situations peculiar to my heritage that happen to be very funny. As a Jew, I'm different than the mainstream Williams student (a stereotype easily comes to mind). My stories often make me realize how different I actually am.

Why do I feel different? Well I'm one of the few people on campus who doesn't not just trying to be another in a long line of funny Jews. As I tell each story or experience one of these "amusing" incidents, I feel more alienated from the mainstream of Williams society. A Jew at Williams encounters a wall of pervasive "Christian tradition" which can be very threatening, not so much religiously as socially.

"I don't believe the Williams Community is diverse or pluralistic enough to allow Jews to feel comfortable here."

know the words to all the Christmas carols. I'm still waiting patiently for the messiah to come. And I get very nervous when I walk into a church (as a child, I always thought the minister would interrupt the service to quiz me on some tricky New Testament question).

I remember feeling extremely different when a student in my English 101 class said, "That's what this world needs, some more God-fearing Christians!"

Alienation

At this point you must be wondering why I'm telling you all these stories. I'm Joel Hellman '84 is a native Brooklynite.

by Neil Grabois

I kept for weddings and funerals. I have not found myself in a synagogue since I was a young boy—13, to be exact. I don't regard myself as a religious person, or even a believer for that matter, but I certainly think of myself as Jewish.

Although my religious concerns ranged between negligible and nonexistent, I had grown up appreciating Jewish cultural traditions and moral concerns. I must admit to having been somewhat surprised to find that there was a "neighborhood" for me at Williams. And whatever may have been true of this College and like institutions in the past, I have never been treated in a special way because I am a Jew, while I have been respected as a Jew. Of course, and I'm sorry to have to use those words, I have occasionally heard unthinking remarks about Jews which have hurt me.

From time to time, however, it has been asserted that something was peculiar at Williams because the percentage of Jewish students is less than at some comparable schools. Implicit in these concerns is the claim that there would be a greater number of Jewish students if it weren't for certain College policies, which remain unspoken or for which no evidence is adduced. I do not myself accept such claims.

College policies

Shortly after arriving at Williams, I was struck by the relative absence of students here from urban high schools. I asked the Admissions Office if I might join a member of the staff on an admissions trip and they enthusiastically accepted my offer. Mr. Wick, now Director of Financial Aid but then on the Admissions staff, and I visited several high schools, primarily in Manhattan and Brooklyn. Our reception in the City was not particularly warm. Indeed, at my old school the college adviser couldn't have cared less about Williams, although he was interested in telling us about his great graduates of the past.

Reception

Our reception in most of the other schools we visited was very positive from the advisers yet tepid from the students. Most questions raised at our meetings concerned whether or not certain super-specialized courses were offered at Williams. Since even my relatives think I'm a little odd for being here—but they think I'm peculiar, in any case, because of my choice of profession—perhaps Williams was thought by these big city students in the mid-sixties to be inhospitable to them, which my very presence was intended to dispel.

Need for good PR

Despite these College efforts, however, those faculty and students who feel that Williams is misperceived by some people ought actively to convey a sense of what Williams truly is. The excellence of the students and the faculty, the absence of fraternities and the record of the College in meeting its obligation to educate women as well as men are the true measures of Williams.

It's certainly comfortable to be in the company of those who resemble us and it's important not to feel isolated from our cultural traditions. Recent trends worldwide toward increasing numbers of anti-Semitic acts reinforce the importance of that sense of ease and stability in numbers. I share those feelings as I'm sure Jewish and black students do. Education also requires coming to grips with other ideas, traditions and groups. It's hard to do that if you're feeling alone. I haven't felt alone here.

Neil Grabois is a professor of mathematics at Williams.

"A Jew at Williams encounters a wall of pervasive 'Christian tradition' which can be very threatening, not so much religiously as socially."

by Richard Cohen

When a number of students called for more Jewish programs and courses a few years ago, a common criticism was that "Williams is not a Jewish school." Likewise, black students face considerable hostility when they choose to eat or party among themselves.

Jewish activities

Within an atmosphere mixed with support and hostility, the Jewish community at Williams has come to life. The Jewish Association has sponsored an impressive variety of cultural, religious and political activities in the Jews' own Kuskin Center and around campus. The Bronfman Fund has provided for a number of lectures on Jewish topics and is working toward the establishment of a chair in Judaic Studies. The Chaplain's office has also taken a leadership role in strengthening pluralism at Williams.

Williams seems to present "non-traditional" students with only two extreme alternatives. The centripetal option draws students toward the center and many students choose to jump with both feet into the mainstream, drowning much of their identity. The centrifugal option, on the other hand, repels students into marginal countercultures, outside the mainstream, often "off campus."

"Jew" vs. "Jewish"

Some will argue that the split in the Jewish community is not between the centripetal and centrifugal directions. A professor recently suggested a separate dichotomy—the "Jew" versus the "Jewish person," whose Jewishness is only one of many distinguishing characteristics, and certainly not the most important one.

But Jews express their Jewishness in many conscious and unconscious ways. Centripetal Jews, for example, are more likely to become a student council or WCFM officer than a rugby player. One is a Jew whether or not one consciously feels very Jewish at any particular moment. What is it about pseudo-pluralistic, unipolar societies that makes an individual feel that he must give up being a Jew in order to identify with any cause or lifestyle?

As I see it, the main problem with Jewish identity at Williams is that centripetal and centrifugal Jews alike must often give up their rich ethnicity in order to be accepted into mainstream or radical culture. Other "non-traditional" students have the same difficulty being accepted while maintaining their full identity.

For Williams to be a truly vibrant, pluralistic community, parallel traditions must be allowed to organically take root. In this way, students can more naturally orient themselves among multiple norms.

Richard Cohen '82 spent his sophomore year at Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS
Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT
Lori Miller

FEATURES
Chris McDermott

LAYOUT
Bob Buckner

AD MANAGER
Katie Miller

ASSISTANT NEWS
Phillip Busch
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson
Jon Tigar

ASSOCIATE EDITOR
Dan Keating

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
Paul Sabbah

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Toub

OUTLOOK
Priscilla Cohen
Alyson Hagy

SPORTS
Rich Coomber

GRAPHICS
Mike Sutton

PHOTOGRAPHY
Sue Doherty
Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

Continued on Page 9

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Spencer-Brooks House residents objected to the Housing Committee's proposal to change Brooks' affiliation from Spencer to Perry at a Thursday meeting in Spencer House.

Several residents said that gaining two floors in West was not worth losing Brooks to Perry.

The plan calls for West College to be associated exclusively with Spencer. Currently, West houses "spillover" residents from both Spencer-Brooks and Perry.

"Perry has two of the best houses on campus—Chadbourne and Bascom," said one S-B resident. "It's inequitable for us to have to give up our number two house while Perry would only give up West, its least desirable housing."

Others claimed that many seniors found Brooks more desirable than either Spencer or Woodbridge.

"If we lose Brooks and seniors don't get housing in Spencer, they'll probably move off campus rather than live in West," said another resident. "That will damage our house unity."

Kathleen Merrigan '82, co-chairman of the Housing Committee, explained that if Spencer gained all of West and also kept Brooks, the house would have 102 residents while Perry would have only 59.

Spencer-Brooks assails housing plan

"We thought that Dodd wasn't working too well with 108 residents, so we're trying to make the numbers more equivalent around the campus," said Merrigan.

After the meeting, she elaborated: "After deliberation, the Housing Committee members overwhelmingly agreed that a house size of 80 was optimum. Tom Casey, president of Dodd, had said that there were some problems with 108 people; he didn't say it wasn't working."

"Letting Spencer have 100 members is a smaller problem than giving Brooks to Perry to equalize numbers," objected a S-B resident.

"A 15-person difference among housing units in Greylock is not unheard of," said another. "Why is exact equivalence so crucial?"

Merrigan said that the purpose of the residential housing system is to promote educational experiences through diversity within the houses.

"The smaller the house gets, the easier it is for one clique to concentrate within the house," she said.

Dean Mary Kenyatta pointed out that Perry would receive less house maintenance tax with only 59 members. Merrigan noted that "it's easier to organize social activities if everyone is working with the same kind of budget."

One S-B resident said that the proposed new housing groups will not have equivalent common spaces.

"Bascom and Brooks each have two large living spaces, but West and Woodbridge have virtually no common space."

Merrigan said that a plan exists to make three bedrooms in West into a common living space.

She also said that the decision to associate Brooks rather than Woodbridge with Perry was made because of a desire to provide at least one small-sized housing option in either group, and Woodbridge and Chadbourne were thought to be equivalent.

Several S-B residents also complained about social disadvantages which the new set-up may pose.

"I don't see many faces from West and Woodbridge as it is," said one. "I see a few from Brooks; it's an important connection having Brooks right next door. If we lose Brooks, people from West and Woodbridge won't congregate at Spencer."

"The same problem we have in Spencer-Brooks of not seeing enough of Brooks people will be repeated for Perry," said another, "except that it will be worse, because Brooks is farther from Perry than from Spencer."

The Housing Committee will soon resubmit a proposal regarding Brooks to the Committee on Undergraduate Life. Spencer-Brooks residents may voice further opinions, but the Housing Committee will make the final recommendation.

"Our decision will reflect what is best for housing units as a whole," said Merrigan.

AMHERST COLLEGE

An Immigration and Naturalization Service judge in Chicago has denied a visiting professor at Amherst permission to remain in the U.S.

Professor Dennis Brutus, an exiled black South African poet-activist, may have to leave the country before the year's end. The INS court granted a 20 to 30 day continuance to the professor after which the court will reconvene and Brutus must either leave the country, or apply for political asylum.

Brutus has led a controversial existence here in the United States as well as in South Africa. The U.S. Government has charged that Brutus, after ten years in this country, is here illegally because his Temporary Worker's visa has expired and a renewal request has been denied.

Since his request was denied, many people have quickly come to Brutus's defense. A U.S. Congressman said that because of Brutus's activism in the South African civil rights movement, he might find his life threatened by agents of the South African secret police if deported.

Affidavits and petitions from Amherst College and Northwestern University have been compiled, but were not allowed to be used as evidence at the trial. Brutus is also supported by the Western Mass. Dennis Brutus Defense Committee.

Brutus said his initial reaction "was incredulity that the United States government should spend so much money and energy trying to throw someone out of the country. I am amazed . . . I am not a criminal."

BATES COLLEGE

A forum co-sponsored by the New World Coalition and the Women's Awareness group on November 3 called Bates's Sadie Hawkins Dance tradition "sexist." One anthropology professor analogized the festival to a "little black Sambo day." History professor Elizabeth Tobin urged students not to attend this year's Sadie Hawkins Dance, in which women call men up to ask them for dates, because the ritual is "really sexist at the core."

Anthropology professor Loring Danforth described Sadie Hawkins as a "rite of reversal" in which women are given the power to initiate the dating process, a power usually reserved for men. As a result, Danforth continued, the men tend to get obscene, informal and drunk when women call them up, and though the women phone-callers may try to become obscene as well the men usually "win."

Tobin looked at the dance as a way of assuring that women never ask men out, by confining such an experiment to one occasion during the year, and asserted that the heavy drinking on the part of the men "indicates their fear of the female's initiative."

"We have to recognize that no matter how you dress up Sadie," Tobin concluded, "it is still a sexist occasion . . ."

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE

A symposium on women in society sponsored by Delta Upsilon Fraternity was held at Lafayette College November 13th. The program, entitled "How Enlightened are the Eighties?: Time to Put Things in Focus," was a response by the D.U. to a charge by the Appeals Committee of the Student Conduct Committee.

After Delta Upsilon held a "Back to the Womb" party on February 20, the College's Student Conduct Committee imposed a $1,000 fine on the group. D.U. appealed the decision, and the punishment was changed to a requirement that the fraternity publish a letter of apology in the school newspaper and sponsor a symposium over three years on relationships of men and women in society.

ATTENTION:

Sophomores, Juniors, Seniors and Recent Alumni

The College Council will be sponsoring an exhibit during January of past Winter Study projects.

If you have a project that was particularly meaningful to you which you would be willing to share with other students and faculty, then we encourage you to drop a note to S.U. Box 1856 with your name and phone number. This should be done before Friday, December 11.

We are specifically interested in projects which exemplify the educational value of Winter Study and its importance to the curriculum.

Paid for by the College Council

ENTERTAINMENT

Costello turns country

by Duffy Graham

Everyone's favorite frustrated lover, Elvis Costello, has released an album of country covers, Almost Blue. With the help of Nashville producer Billy Sherrill, he recorded twelve songs, written by the likes of Hank Williams, George Jones, and Charlie Rich. Country music is not a new toy for Costello—"Stranger in the House" and "Radio Sweetheart" (both on the previous Taking Liberties) stand as evidence of his knack for the country style. Costello is a fan of the art, and calls George Jones "the greatest singer alive today."

Costello's own lyrics have always been spitefully bittersweet, full of word plays and double-entendres, and usually sung with a drunken emotionality. He chose songs for this album which are highly conducive to his style. It might seem that Costello himself wrote lines such as "You changed your name from Brown to Jones and mine from Brown to Blue," "Success has made a failure of our home," or "Once upon a time you let me feel you deep inside," which he sings on the album.

Some critics have already reprimanded Costello for "stepping out of line." Stick to rock, they urge. In reply, Costello need only let the quality of this album's music speak for itself. Costello is an effective crooner—one can picture the tears running down his cheeks on "I'm Your Toy," and the Attractions once again display talent and versatility. Standout cuts on Almost Blue include "Tonight the Bottle Let Me Down" (by Merle Haggard), "Brown to Blue," and "Honey Hush," which sounds like a country-western "Roll Over Beethoven."

This album, and Costello's incorporation of a taste of country music on his last tour, indicate that Costello's dabbling in the country sound is likely more than a tangential episode in his musical career. Almost Blue is boozey and bluesy, and not only a key to his past influences, but a glimpse at his future work as well.

M.GOVAN

Williams Trio to appear on radio

The Williams Trio, with Paula Ennis-Dwyer (piano), Julius Hegyl (violin) and Douglas Moore (cello) will be featured on the "Live Artists Series" on the radio show Morning Pro Musica hosted by Robert Lurtsema.

Lurtsema's program originates in Boston and can be heard daily from 7 a.m. to noon on WAMC (.88 FM)

The three musicians, all members of the Williams music department, will play trios by Shostakovich and Piston on Tuesday, Dec. 15 at 11 a.m. In addition, Lurtsema will feature their recorded performance of "A Mad Empress Remembers," by Charles Wakefield Cadman, on his November 27 program.

The trio, which performs a number of concerts on campus every semester, is relatively well-known in the classical music world.

Model EL-506

Full-featured scientific calculator with 3-key independent memory system. • 10-digit liquid crystal display. • 3-key independent memory. • One-touch percent and square root keys. • Automatic Power-Off (A.P.O.) prolongs battery life. • Performs hyperbolic, polar coordinates, time conversions. • Constant (K) and reciprocal. • 3 levels of parentheses/4 pending operations. • Includes wallet case and batteries.

$29.95

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown

Telephone 458-4920

Concert Listing

Wed., Nov. 25 Black Sabbath & Alvin Lee Band with Mick Taylor, Civic Ctr., Glens Falls
Fri., Nov. 27 Blotto, JB Scott's, Albany Penetrators, British Malt
Nov. 27-29 David Mailett, Passum's, Boston
Sat., Nov. 28 Penetrators, British Malt
Bill Staines, 8th Step Coffeehouse, Albany

Dec. 4 Ornette Coleman, Berklee Performance Center, Boston
Dec. 5 Renaissance & David Sancious, Page Hall, SUNY at Albany.
Dec. 6 Greg Lake, Orpheum, Boston
Dec. 14 AC/DC, Boston Garden

Prepared by
Toonerville Trolley

Exhibit focuses on Cubist photography

by Ric Johnson

The current exhibition at the Clark, "Cubism and American Photography, 1910-1930," documents the progress of photography towards a more modernist style during the first decades of this century. Mounted by John Pultz and Catherine Scallen, recent graduates of the Williams Graduate Program in Art History, the show will run until December 6.

Around 1910, American photographers became dissatisfied with the character of nineteenth century photographic art. Aesthetic manipulation of settings and blurred, soft-focus atmospheric effects seemed old-fashioned to such American photographers as Paul Anderson, Alfred Stiglitz and Clarence White.

These artists turned to Cubism for inspiration in creating a new manner of expressing what they saw as the real artistic potential of photography.

Cubism attracted these artists because of its use of reduced images of forms and its emphasis on texture and surfaces. "The Gas Tank" of 1911 by Paul Anderson demonstrates this step towards Cubist structure, with its emphasis on the lines of the trees, paved surfaces and street lamps, and the structure of the gas tank itself. However, it still relates to nineteenth century photography in its use of soft-focus for atmospheric effect.

From 1913-1920, American photographers experimented more and more with Cubism and moved increasingly towards that style which one associates with 20th century modernism. Alfred Stiglitz, with his "Gallery 291," was influential in getting artists to see Cubism as a reduction to formal, constructed essentials with an abstract, expressive potential. Paul Strand's 1915 photograph, "Bowl and Pear" uses tonal shifts, sharp focus and the inherent geometry of the depicted objects to create an expressively spare still life. His print of "The Court," done in 1924 was a similar emphasis on the geometric.

In the 1920s, the Clarence White School stressed the formal rules of Cubist composition and design, thereby canonizing these formerly revolutionary views. Areas of new photographic exploration in these years included Cubist portraiture.

Man Ray's "Barbette" is an interesting use of mirrors to show different angles of a woman's face simultaneously. In one print, we see the blurred shape of the back of the woman's head and her face in two mirrors—one fuzzy and the other clear. Although abstraction did not prove to be a major avenue of exploration, Francis Bruguiere's "Light Abstraction," done in 1927, is a complex study of light and shadows which concentrates on their formation of repeated curvilinear forms.

The several works from 1930 prove that by this time, American photographers had arrived at the modernist style. Their works now reflected an approach to their subjects which paralleled that seen in modern painting and sculpture.

"Cubism and American Photography" covers fairly thoroughly the development of photography during this period. While two rooms of black and white photographs hung at exactly the same height makes for a less than visually exciting show, the point of the exhibit is well-conceived and the works displayed are worth seeing.

TOWN & COUNTRY FLOWERS

EPH'S ALLEY
on Spring St. Williamstown
behind First Agricultural Bank

458-5030

The Magic of Christmas is Almost Here!

Secret Santa is everywhere at Town & Country Flowers—Come See All Our Beautiful Ornaments, Wreaths, Boxwood Trees, Fresh Flowers, and Christmas Designs of All Kinds.

and
It isn't too early to begin sending FTD to all those on your Christmas list.

Beginning December 1st our store hours will be Monday-Saturday 9:00-5:30; Thursdays 'till 9:00 p.m.—beginning December 14 till December 22 our hours are 9:00-9:00; Christmas Eve till 5:30.

A representative from the CIA arrived on campus last Wednesday, sparking a two-day controversy. The Administration defended its decision as providing a forum for students, and it denied that the visit implicitly condoned CIA activities. Protesters garbed in trenchcoats greeted the CIA representative on Wednesday morning outside the Office of Career Counseling (above). Dean Daniel O'Connor spoke briefly with the assembled group (left).

During the question session the CIA representative fended off some questions and flatly refused to answer others. The questions were followed by private interviews, despite charges from some students that the Administration pledged not to allow the CIA to interview in campus facilities. The protesters responded by marching through the Faculty Club and Baxter Hall.

Faculty morale wavers

by Jon Tigar

Job market conditions, salaries and other conditions have adversely affected faculty morale, according to the Report of the Committee on the Eighties and some College faculty. Many of the problem areas are not endemic to Williams, but reflect nationwide concerns in the teaching profession.

Salary and tenure are the greatest burdens, especially for junior faculty. The report of the Committee on the Eighties noted that "part of the problem is clearly one of compensation... the decline in the academic profession as a whole has a profound impact on the attitude of individual teachers, most dramatic, of course, on those junior faculty."

The report went on to state that "salaries for new assistant professors in the current academic year are at least one-third below those of comparable faculty a decade ago, measured in constant purchasing power."

Ralph Bradburd, assistant professor of economics, commented, "I think we're disturbed by the fact that some of our graduating students start with salaries that are higher than what starting assistant faculty get... Now the school has made a commitment to raising our salaries in real terms, but that has to proceed very slowly because of budgetary constraints... We feel we are grossly underpaid."

The decline of faculty salaries relative to inflation reflects a tightening job market in higher education. Failure to receive tenure at Williams means looking for another job, and jobs are no longer easy to find.

One professor, who wished to remain anonymous, said, "The concern would be more of a concern for people in the humanities, areas like English, religion, philosophy and anthropology, and even the social sciences, like political science. 'Hard sciences and economics are not as affected for two reasons. First, undergraduate institutions find it difficult to attract natural scientists, and second, chances are if you can't make it here, you can get a job with government or in industry."

Competing demands on the time of the faculty have also undermined morale. Richard Krouse of the political science department noted "the kinds of strains I feel between trying to continue professionally and academically on one hand, and being a good teacher on the other hand, and yet again on the third hand being a factor and a responsible citizen in the College community."

Krouse noted the increase in dual-career and commuting marriages among the faculty. "That is yet again another source of strain on people's time and contributes to morale problems also."

Tenure decisions are based in part on research work and publishing, as well as teaching ability in the classroom. "Williams is a hybrid. They want people who are totally committed to teaching, but they also want excellent scholars. That's what leads to the inordinate burden," said a professor who wished to remain anonymous.

"I think it's impossible to see yourself as doing both excellently... especially if you want to have a family. There's also an area called the personal... I think one of the problems is that the private has to be sacrificed," he said.

Bradburd notes the same problem. "More often than not, especially in the case of large research institutions, prospective faculty are judged almost entirely on the basis of their research. Unfortunately, the greater the probability of not receiving tenure at Williams, and the tighter the job market, the more we as faculty feel obligated to devote our time to research."

"We feel resentful of the students who make demands on our time, and of the institution

Continued on Page 7

Faculty squeezes '83 exam period

by Greg Pliska

The faculty approved the 1982-83 proposed calendar nearly unanimously last Wednesday, after brief discussion.

As set forth by Calendar and Schedule Committee chairman Prof. Paul Clark, next year's schedule remains the same as this year's, with a 6-day exam period in the fall and 5 days in the spring. Clark assured the faculty that immediate adjustment of the schedule would be possible next fall if problems in the spring semester became evident this year.

A shorter spring exam period allows graduation to take place at the end of May, rather than in early June. An extra sixth day could conceivably be squeezed into the schedule, but, according to Clark, "given the present time none of the alternatives are better, at least not until after the evaluation of the described calendar."

Also presented at the faculty meeting Wednesday were the results of the fiscal year 1981 budget. According to Provost J. Hodge Markgraf, out of $27 million, $6 million went toward auxiliary costs, including housing and phones, and $21 million to general education. Of this last, 48 percent funded faculty, library and computer facilities, research, and departmental budgets, 12 percent went toward financial aid, 11 percent to Buildings and Grounds, 7 percent to student services and approximately 5 percent each to all others, including administration, athletics and alumni.

Input to the general education funds came largely from tuition and fees (55 percent), with the endowment and grants supplying 21 and 17 percent respectively. According to Markgraf, reliance on tuition is fortunately low, though rising at the rate of about one percent per year.

Treasurer William Reed reported an increase in the market value of the College endowment from $96 million to $119 million, a 21 percent return, as compared with the national average of 15 percent. The endowment per student at Williams, $51,900, while down in actual terms over 10 years, is still far above the national level of $13,450, reported Reed.

College Librarian Lawrence E. Wikander reported that over 50 percent of the books reported missing from College libraries turn up within a few days. One quarter of them are found within the year, and about 20 percent are lost permanently.

Wikander opposes any electronic monitoring system primarily on the grounds that it will "lead to feelings of antagonism between the students and the library." Further, he reports that a monitored reserve section at Princeton still has a two percent book loss rate, while the simple closed reserve room at Williams loses less than one percent per year.

The faculty also heard a report from Prof. Robert Kozelka, chairman of the Energy Conservation Committee, who stated that overall energy and fuel costs will double over the next 10 years, with a projected College energy cost of $3 million in 1990.

Record budget disputed

by Katya Hokanson

Contestment of the Williams Record budget monopolized Wednesday's College Council meeting after Sonia Nazario '82 claimed that "the Record can be published for half the cost."

FinCom had recommended at its Sunday meeting that $260 be cut from Record funds, said Treasurer Steve Spears '83, because Record staff members "pay no dues and since the Committee felt that printing funds help generate the ad revenue that has been used to pay for past Record banquets."

The cut, which had brought FinCom's recommendation for the Record to $13,440, reflected the $263.63 cost of last year's banquet for 26 members of the staff.

However, Nazario wished to contest the amount of the allocation, saying that, according to the North Adams Transcript, the Record could be published by the Transcript for half of what it presently costs, about $1,000 per 10-page issue. The Record's cost to a student per year is about $6.10 for 30 issues, according to Spears.

"The only problem is that layout will have to be done here (at the College)," said Nazario. "But for a savings of $7,000, the Record can get people to do layout."

Berkshire Quad representative and Record co-editor Steve Willard '82 responded that according to Transcript editor Claire Plaggi, copy for a Tuesday issue would have to be in "at least by Thursday and most of it by Wednesday of the previous week."

"News would thus be five days late," said Willard.

Nazario said that according to her information, "stories could come in fairly late. Anyway, I don't feel that many earth-shattering things occur on Sunday and Monday."

After more disagreement as to what the Transcript's actual deadline would be, Willard called for an impartial arbiter to settle the matter. Prospect House representative Matt Shapiro '83 suggested that Director of Public Information Ray Boyer be called in.

Willard then requested Council for enough money to cover the $7,000 printing bill owed this semester. The Council approved the amount and moved that Ray Boyer be requested to determine details of printing the Record at the Transcript and report to the December 2 Council meeting.

It was later decided that the Record would submit written printing estimates from area printers to Boyer.

The Council also reviewed FinCom's recommended budget allocations for other groups. The Council must approve final allocation of a total of $136,781.41 in SAT funds this year.

In reviewing allocations, the Council approved the FinCom's increase of the funds of the newly-formed Asian Link from $25 to $1,050. The Student Activities Board Coffeehouse entertainment fund received an additional $450 after Fitch Currier representative and SAB Business Manager Russell Platt '82 said the money would "make a big difference" in the number of additional concerts the Coffeehouse could offer.

Platt also called for and received Council approval of another $1,600 in Social/Cultural Board funds for the purpose of hiring more live bands for all-College parties.

In an effort to show student support of Winter Study, the Council decided to get permission to set up an exhibit in Stetson showing past WSP projects.

Additionally, $1,600 was approved as "one-time seed funds" to start up a social science journal to be edited by Adam Merims and Greg Heires, '83.

The Council approved budget requests for all but six groups. These six, to be considered at the next Council meeting, are the Record, Nexus, Backtalk, WUFO, and men's and women's rugby.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Morale is down

Continued from Page 6

which requires participation in governance. That is unfortunate, because we went into teaching precisely because we enjoyed interaction with students."

Some faculty disagree with the severity of salary and tenure issues and their effect on morale. Associate Professor of Political Science Gary Jacobsohn said, "I think people are aware of the discipline has become and are not taken by surprise any more by the demands of tenure... I think everyone is aware that tenure is equated with good teaching and good scholarship."

He admits that faculty salaries have declined: "both senior and junior people are depressed when they look at their salaries in comparison to fields which they don't see perhaps as being as important or as involving as much earlier training." However, he said, "that's another area where people go in with their eyes wide open."

Jacobsohn noted that 56 percent of the majors are concentrated in four departments—economics, history, English, and political science—and that these departments are much more likely to attract students who are interested in using their majors as a springboard to professional schools or good jobs. Bradburd finds the same problem. "It's frustrating because we are very excited about our intellectual disciplines and we have great difficulty eliciting from students a similar degree of excitement."

Jacobsohn does not see another problem with faculty morale. "Especially in political science and economics, the growth of interest in that is reflected in some healthy ways and some perverse ways," he said.

"One of the perverse expressions is that there are many more students who are marginally interested, whereas the students in those departments with fewer students are more concentrated and focused in interest, because the discipline is not readily perceived as being functionally useful in career terms. That's undermining morale—mine, anyway."

The most optimistic summation was offered by Reichert.

"I would say that, given the difficulties that people in this profession face, morale here is high," he said. "People come to Williams because they want a place where they can teach good students and where they are respected as researchers, scholars, poets, artists, whatever, and I think that given those problems we all face, people find it to be that kind of place."

The Williams Record

needs writers to cover:

- Concerts
- Plays
- Art exhibits

We also need people to write book and record reviews.

For more information, contact any RECORD editor

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.

458-5441

Hancock Tire & Machine

Snow Tires

WHITEWALL POLYESTER
600-12		$33.95
A78-13		33.95
C78-13		37.95
C78-14		38.95
E78-14		39.95
F78-14		41.95
G78-15		46.95
H78-15		49.95
L78-15		54.95
RADIAL - WHITEWALLS
Size	Glass	Steel
P155/80-12	—	$41.95*
P155/80-13	37.95*	41.95*
P165/80-13	40.95*	44.95
P185/75-13	—	49.95
P185/80-13	—	51.95
P175/80-14	—	54.95
P195/75-14	49.95	55.95
P205/75-14	52.95	57.95
P215/75-14	54.95	57.95
P225/75-14	57.95	62.95
P185/80-15	46.95	49.95
P215/75-15	59.95	63.95
P225/75-15	61.95	66.95
P235/75-15	64.95	—

* Discount

COMPUTER SPIN BALANCE *$7.95 on most wheels

OPEN: Monday thru Friday 10 am - 6 pm, Saturday 9 am - 12 pm

LOCATED ON ROUTE 43, HANCOCK, MASS., 4 MILES SOUTH OF ROUTE 7 AND 43 INTERSECTION

413-458-5533

CONSERVATION

Students leaving campus for the Thanksgiving vacation can help the College save on the cost of energy by doing a quick "energy check" before leaving, according to the Energy Conservation Committee.

The Committee and its chairman Robert Kozelka urge students to do the following:

- close storm windows properly
- close inner windows properly
- Pull shades and curtains
- Unplug large appliances
- Turn out lights

CEP discusses proposal for "critical area" studies

by Craig Venable

A proposal to add to Williams' curriculum a "Division IV" encompassing non-Western, "critical area" studies was considered at a joint Committee on Educational Policy/Jewish Political Action Committee meeting Wednesday.

Dean Francis Oakley submitted the proposal, which was called "the most important topic (the CEP) will consider this year" by Dan Sullivan '82. JPAC and other minority organizations met to discuss the proposal as a first step towards organizing campus-wide support for the measure, which was designed to encourage students to take courses that focus upon "critical areas" like women's and Jewish studies, foreign languages, and non-Western cultures.

The discussion quickly became a debate. While all present believed that there is a need to increase student knowledge and understanding of other civilizations, there was disagreement over the merits of the Oakley Proposal and on whether enrollment in "critical area" courses should be required.

The CEP's discussion on the proposal, according to member Rich Henderson '83, centered on a possible conflict with the theory behind the divisional structure.

"While the divisional system is based upon education in different ways of thinking, different approaches to learning, the Oakley Proposal introduces a division based mostly on subject matter," he explained.

Other proposals were discussed, among these were the inclusion of "critical area" courses among the courses required of majors in each department, and an obligation that the present Divisions I and II requirements be fulfilled with "critical" courses.

Some participants questioned whether the College should require students to enroll in courses concerning non-Western cultures.

"When students arrive here, we are essentially still high school seniors. We rely on the College to guide and direct us into the proper channels," responded Byron Walker '82.

Despite disagreements, most present agreed upon the merit of some change. Mark Raffman '82 concluded the discussion by urging those present to inform others of the importance of supporting any proposal that raises awareness in topics that go beyond the concerns of the Western world.

Raffman added, "If there are people who are interested, at some later date when decisions are being made in the CEP about this issue, it is important to get them together in the pinch to push this thing through."

Women assaulted

Continued from Page 1

victim agreed with the disposition of the case."

McIntire said the victim was unwilling to instigate legal action against the male student.

O'Connor and McIntire would not reveal further details about this incident as to maintain confidentiality. "It is the policy of the Deans' Office not to release the name of the victim," said McIntire.

O'Connor said the Deans' Office gets about three rumors of rape a year and that this was the only one "that turned out to be true."

However, "we do get about one or two cases a year of physical assault on women," he said. His office is "equally concerned about various kinds of harassment . . . the whole range of things you could call sexist behavior," he remarked.

"Women have to know that they don't have to put up with it," O'Connor emphasized. "We can't do anything until it's reported . . . In all cases, privacy is guaranteed."

He admitted that often students may be reluctant to approach the Deans' Office with complaints. "I guess we have an image problem," he said. "I believe, however, that we are the ones best placed to deal sensitively with these issues."

The Deans' Office and the Feminist Alliance both released letters to all students last week condemning sexual harassment and urging women to report such acts. According to O'Connor, the Deans' Office and the Alliance are "planning a panel in January on the broad range of harassment." Self-defense courses for women are also planned for January, he said.

PURPLE VALLEY

by SUTTON

Winter Study challenged

Continued from Page 1

concluded, "If there is no solution, I don't see 15-week semesters as bad . . . the pace would be a bit more relaxed than (the present) 12-week semesters."

Although History Professor Robert Dalzell has had "marvelous experiences" with his WSP's in Deerfield, Mass., he has "grave doubts" based on his colleagues' experiences.

"The feeling is that there is sufficient doubt about (Winter Study's) educational appropriateness that it is appropriate now to consider alternatives," he said.

Dalzell and Charles Karellis of the philosophy department have proposed a "General Studies" program to be taught in small discussion sections to all freshmen and juniors. Sophomores and seniors could remain on campus if they wished, but would be free from academic requirements.

Widespread Support
Many professors support Winter Study. Chairman of the Music Department Douglas Moore explained the value of the period to the performing arts. "Students can rehearse and perform as ensembles free of other pressures . . . this is true of all the performing arts, not just music," Moore did recommend tightening the program academically.

Chemistry Professor J. Hodge Markgraf was enthusiastic about the value of Winter Study to students doing research work in the sciences. "All students involved in experiments have derived enormous benefit," he said. "It's an introduction to research as it's practiced in grad schools. Nothing approaches this level of intensity."

"Winter Study can be improved, sure," said Markgraf, "but let's save what's good about it."

Sports, Interns
Athletic Director Robert Peck also supported Winter Study. "I'm very favorable," he said. "There's less pressure. We see a much more relaxed, fresher student. I don't know anyone in the department who doesn't think it's good."

Peck mentioned the high level of student participation in recreational, P.E., and intramural activities as well as inter-scholastic sports as benefits of the period. "I hope we maintain Winter Study as it is now," concluded Peck.

"I'm a very strong advocate of Winter Study," observed Barbara-Jan Wilson, Director of the Office of Career Counseling. "Students can try career choices through internships that many couldn't have at any other time." If Winter Study were abandoned, said Wilson, "the College would have to come up with other ways for students to have these experiences. This would be a real challenge for us." Director of Admissions Phil Smith cited Winter Study's appeal to students. "Students perceive it as a very attractive feature of the curriculum . . . I have some worries about what would happen if we didn't have it," he commented.

Unique Feature
President John Chandler defined Winter Study's value as Fasters help Nicaragua

by Katya Hokanson

Over one-quarter of the student body donated $3.10 each to Oxfam-America's self-help programs in Nicaragua by pledging not to eat in campus dining halls on Thursday.

Oxfam's "Fast for a World Harvest" has been held every year since 1974 on the Thursday before Thanksgiving. Williams students have had the opportunity to forego College meals on Fast day in return for money sent to Oxfam by the College for the past several years.

The total amount of money raised was about $1,650, which includes donations. The Williams Hunger Action Project has coordinated the campus-wide fast sign-up for the past five years. Some 523 students signed

"the distinctive feature of the Williams curriculum . . . It's a definite plus for an institution to have something unique or defining."

"There are cases where faculty have done a lot of work setting up a course which no one takes, or if they do, no one works in," Chandler admitted. "If the College wants the WSP preserved, that problem will really have to be solved somehow."

"There definitely has been a decline in what one would call academic courses," he noted. "Perhaps we have gone too far in the direction of the experiential."

"I think there can be a medium," Chandler concluded. "If Winter Study is to be educationally viable, there has to be a recommitment along the line—faculty as well as students."

Student opinion appears solidly behind Winter Study. "Students are very favorable to Winter Study," said Review Committee member Jane Lopes '82, "but there are a number who could see changes . . . there is interest in more challenging courses, and more input into what's offered." College Council President Freddy Nathan '83 commented that "the students I have talked with recognize the educational value of Winter Study, and its importance to the College's liberal arts curriculum. This is not to say that it . . . is not without some problems."

"In the case of Winter Study, to throw the baby out with the bath water would be a tragic mistake," said Nathan.

up this year.

"The money will go directly to Nicaragua," said WHAP spokesperson Lelia O'Connell '84. "It goes for literacy programs, land development, agrarian reform programs—all oriented toward long-term benefits, educational benefits."

According to Oxfam-America literature, over $1.5 million has been contributed by fasters to self-help projects over the past seven years. About 15-20 million people die every year from "chronic malnutrition," according to Oxfam information.

"Even if people didn't make it through the whole day fasting," said O'Connell, "the importance was in consciousness-raising."

Letters

Continued from Page 2

Not Offensive

To the editor:

In response to the letter (11/17/81) by the people who "are disturbed by the Philosophy 221 questionnaire" on sexuality, I must say that the letter left me perturbed and disturbed. If these people who claimed that the questionnaire assumed that everyone reading it had engaged in sexual activity and that this implicitly approved of pre-marital sex, "adding its acceptance to the social norm" I strongly suggest that they reread the questionnaire. The very first set of questions was: "Have you had some form of sex in your life? Are you a virgin? What are your feelings about virginity? (Is pre-marital sex moral?)"

I do not see an assumption that everyone has had sex here by any means, and the questions that followed were geared toward the sexually experienced (as that is what the questionnaire declared itself to be about—sexuality.) The final question asked for comments on the questionnaire itself. It was refreshing to see an open, healthy survey which could reveal important aspects of our lives to us in a social context. The false accusation made by last week's letter implies censorship (ridiculously enough) not of a statement but of questions left to be answered by the reader, showing the continuation of the repressive attitude here at Williams. There are those of us who ask that in the future, more discretion be exercised in reading and complaining about questionnaires.

Sincerely,
Lisa Louis '82

Popular coach to lose job in budget cutback

The Athletic Department plans to eliminate the coaching position now held by Marc Ellington at the end of this academic year, according to Athletic Director Robert Peck. The swim team has mounted a protest drive to save Ellington, who coaches JV soccer and lacrosse and is an assistant swim coach.

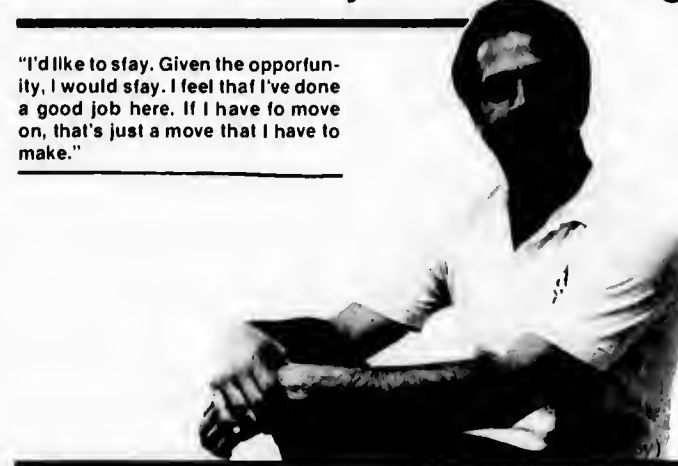

Peck explained that this cut was prompted by the Committee on the 80s report. "We had to take $60,000 worth of cuts . . . we're losing 2.2 jobs and have already eliminated four JV teams." The other personnel reductions will come through two anticipated retirements, said Peck. He estimated the College would save $10,000-$13,000 with the elimination of Ellington's position.

"It's a real injustice," said diver Jim Stockton '83. "The position Ellington holds is essential. Without an assistant, Coach (Carl) Samuelson will be responsible for both the men's and women's teams, about 60 people. The football team has a comparable number of people but has six assistant coaches. Peck isn't planning to cut one of them . . . I think he's giving the swim team an unfair turn."

Stockton also charged that "the decision was made with minimal student input. No one knew this was being considered."

Peck countered, "We made the decision pretty democratically and with a lot of participation from the department."

He said that the Athletic Department met with representatives of various sports and with the Committee on the 80s two years ago when the cuts were first being discussed. When the final figures were decided upon, the Athletic Department formed a six-person internal committee elected by department members. This committee decided where the cuts were to be made.

Peck said that the department would hire part-time diving and soccer coaches and fill the lacrosse spot from within the department. "We would prefer to have full-time people, but we have to adjust. There will be some loss of program. We tried to be as least disruptive as we could."

He added that Ellington would leave at the end of this year anyway. "There are two rotating jobs within the Athletic Department that are given to younger people with limited backgrounds and coaching experience. We offer them three one-year contracts . . . It's all very clear that at the end of the third year they go, no matter how good they are," Peck said.

Ellington is in the third year here. The other rotating slot is occupied by Carmen Palladino, who is an assistant football and track coach. Palladino is also in his third year, and will be do all the coaching myself."

Swimmer Liz Jex '83 added, "Marc is an extremely well-qualified coach. I doubt that we can easily replace him. He's worked extremely well with the program—it seems outrageous to cut him . . . When someone works that well, you give them more years."

Peck said it was possible for rotating coaches to move into permanent spots in the department if "there is a parallel job open. So far, one hasn't come up. I don't create jobs."

The rotating positions were instituted "about six years ago," according to Peck. "We were not getting much turnover in junior places. I was afraid we would become too top-heavy . . . this way, we get new blood into the department."

Peck saw no problem with lack of continuity in coaching spots. "When you're talking about assistant coaches, I think it's healthy. We've continually had good people."

Ellington is the third person to hold his position. The other two left after two years on the job because, "they found better jobs," according to Peck.

Stockton also claimed that "Peck has a very suspicious record with black coaches. They just don't offer them enough security. I don't want to scream racist . . . because something like that is very hard to prove."

Peck responded, "This department's record is super. It's the best in the college. We've had black staff for 11 years . . . all have gone on to good jobs." They leave because they've gotten better jobs. It's very understandable."

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

- We have a fine selection of long underwear for skiing or just staying warm—
- Duofold men's & ladies' 2-layer underwear tops / bottoms / union suits
 - Lifa 100% polypropylene underwear crewnecks & turtlenecks / bottoms / socks / wind briefs
 - Protogs 100% Superwash wool underwear crewnecks & turtlenecks / bottoms / hooded tops / lightweight wool gloves & headbands

Christmas layaways accepted.

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

My Fair Lady

WINNER OF 8 ACADEMY AWARDS
AUDREY HEPBURN - REX HARRISON
TECHNICOLOR PANAVISION
© 1954 Warner Bros. Kinney Company

Get Psyched!

Coming to Bronfman
Sunday, January 10
4:00 and 7:30
Brought to you by

SAGE D

The Record will run classifieds at 25¢ per line. Deadlines are 4:00 p.m. Fridays. Total amount due must accompany this form. Mail or bring in person to Classifieds, The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Mass. 01267.

NAME _____	PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____	TOTAL ENCLOSED _____
AD TO READ AS FOLLOWS:
1	2
3	4
5	6

Clever?
Witty?
Brilliant?

(We thought so)

How about putting all that talent to good use as a Record columnist"? We're looking for humor and opinion pieces on campus, national, and international issues for a new Op-Ed. page.

Interested?

Call us at x2400 or contact a RECORD editor.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Eph runners Sue Marchant and Liz Martineau braved slushy turf and biting cold this week in Wisconsin as they took All-American honors at the NCAA Division III nationals. Sue and Liz, this Bud's for you!

GENUINE

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Harriers take All-American honors in Wisconsin meet

by Patricia Hellman

In conditions better suited to cross-country skiing than running, Co-captains Sue Marchant and Liz Martineau became the first Ephs to gain All-American status in cross country at the NCAA Division III nationals in Kenosha, Wisconsin Saturday.

The course was encrusted in a layer of snow and ice; the temperature well below freezing. The Williams women were prepared for the cold and snow, having bought three pairs of "raspberry ice" tights for the occasion, and racing for the first time with spikes, which they had to tape to their feet, to make sure they didn't come off in the middle of the race.

Marchant set the pace for the Williams team, going out strong and holding her position for the entire 3.1 mile course. Undaunted by the icy, muddy slopes, she smoked to the finish in 14th place, in a time of 19:54.

Behind Marchant was Martineau, who ran a smart race, holding back somewhat until most of the major obstacles were overcome, and then picking up her pace to move from 28th to 18th position.

Both girls won themselves All-American status in the first women's NCAA nationals in history. Asked how they felt about their performances, Marchant said, "We were able to run relaxed and strong." Martineau felt that the experience which they gained at the Division I New England's and the Division III New England Regionals helped them to maintain this relaxed attitude.

The third representative of the Williams team seemed to suffer from being in the right place at the wrong time. Feeling a bit off-color, despite her purple tights, Tricia Hellman slipped and slid her way to a disappointing 36th spot. All three felt the experience a worthwhile addition to their education.

Williams was unable to enter a full team, due to NES-CAC rulings, but the strength of this year's team is evidenced by the fact that a team they had beaten consistently all year, Southeastern Mass., took fourth in the NCAA standings.

Swimmers compete in long-distance meet

Facing West Coast rivals, Pomona Pitzer College of California, the men's and women's swim teams opened their season Friday night in a dual meet. The expected capacity crowd was diverted by the touring Yugoslavian basketball team.

Adding to the Eph swimmers' disappointment was that the Pomona swimmers were also absent—this time due to the 86 percent sunshine in their home state.

The Eph swimmers, anxious to compete, were undeterred by the lack of spectators and opponents and elected to run the meet over the phone.

Some new challenges arose with the unusual format. Some egos were threatened by having the men and women swim right after one another, particularly with the strength of the Ephswomen. Senior Jerry Trieman was stranded without assistance in counting to twenty (laps), but finally got help when it counted. Wheaton College exchange Marcia Gutschtediscovered the advantages of a shaved head when her bathing cap fell off in her third lap.

Not a bit confused was freshman Kim Eckridge who managed to tie the school record in the 100 yard breaststroke after only three weeks of training. Similar performances were turned in by new Ephswimmers John Peloso in the 100 yard back and Celia Clepiela in the 100 yard fly.

The first half of the meet ended with senior Jay "Too Tall" Thoman stroking his way masterfully through the breaststroke and Liz Jex streaking for the ringing telephone. It was Pomona Pitzer calling with their results.

Veteran swimmer Jeff Mills '84 turned in a top performance in the 100 yard free as did freshman Jonna Kurucz and Rachel Stauffer. After the men's and women's 200 yard free relays, the eight-swimmer-mixed-medley-chugging relay put a crowning touch on the evening's competition.

A second call to Pomona and a rapid compilation of scores confirmed that the Eph swimmers were victorious. The final scores: 44-27.5 for the women and 62-19 for the men.

A more conventional meet will take place December 2 at Muir Pool when the men face UConn at 4 p.m. and the women take on Middlebury at 7 p.m. The meet will go on regardless of sleet, snow, term papers or downed phone lines.

by Steve Epstein

A few weeks ago, it was my pleasure to incur the wrath of Food Services, my matron, and sophomore footballer Sean Crotty in an article lampooning the new DIAL-A-MENU feature on campus. But, what the heck, I said. It's been a good month for annoying people. But take heart Ross Keller, your DIAL-A-MENU must be a success. For imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, and the swim team has now instituted DIAL-A-SWIM-MEET.

Stuck without plane fare to California, and not willing to swim there (Steve Jerardi says the Gulf Stream is no sweat, but "that Panama Canal is a drag to butterfly through") the team came up with the most innovative way possible to face rivals Cal Poly Pitzer—over the phone.

A line was set up between Williams and Pitzer (Pitzer??) and the two squads swam their hearts out . . . and then dialed

B-Ball beats Yugoslavs, 95-91

With four returning starters and a number of promising players, the men's basketball team is optimistic about the 1981-1982 season. Having finished last year on a successful streak, winning three of its last four games including an upset victory over Amherst in the Lord Jeff's home gym in the last game, the squad is looking to pick up where it left off.

In its first pre-season tune-up, Williams faced a touring Yugoslavian team in a scrimmage on Saturday. The Yugoslavians were considerably older and bigger than the Ephmen, but speed and aggressiveness were on the Williams side and led to a 95-91 victory for the Purple.

Senior co-captain Jeff Fasulo and sophomore guard Art Pidoriano led the scorers with 22 points apiece. Co-captain Al Lewis chipped in 16 in addition to his usual exciting ballhandling and rebounding.

The Yugoslavians, who brought a friendly and good-natured attitude to the game, played well in the first half. After halftime, they played their substitutes and lost their lead. A last minute comeback with the starters in the game fell short. Guard and team leader Srecko Jaric had 14 points while 6' 9", 232 lbs. Zelko Marclja and Zivko Ljubojevic had ten apiece. Under Head Coach Faruk Kolenovic, the team played a methodical style which featured brilliant shooting.

The remaining two starters for the Ephmen, Scott Olesen '83 and Steve O'Day '83, each had seven points. Also playing well for Williams were senior forward Joe Daignault with seven points and sophomore John McNicholas with five.

Head Coach Bob Peck was able to play a lot of players to get an idea of what to expect this year. Peck, who is also the Athletic Director, is coaching the varsity for the first time due to Coach Curt Tong's sabbatical this year. The only other chance for Peck to see the team in game conditions before the season starts will be this Sunday against Wesleyan University.

The season starts with two tough games against Hamilton and Tufts. The Hamilton game is at Lasell Gymnasium next Tuesday at 8:00 p.m.

Chaffee wins again

Williamstown's Clarence Chaffee has added another win to his string of tennis tournament victories. This one establishes him as the national champion in the USTA senior divisions.

Competing against 11 of the nation's top-ranked senior amateur players, Chaffee came out on top in the first World-Series of Super Senior Tennis held at the Betsy Grant Tennis Center in Atlanta, Ga. at the end of October. This win was the crowning touch for Chaffee, and followed hard on the heels of his clinching the "super senior" grand slam last summer—championships on all four court surfaces in the 80-and-above age group.

His recent wins have been particularly encouraging for Chaffee, who returned to competitive tennis during the summer with a pacemaker implanted in his heart, following a heart attack last April.

Chaffee expects to get even stronger as he gets back into shape after his heart attack. "I'm not back to where I was," he says, "but I should get there by next summer."

Senior Joe Daignault lofts a shot in the Ephs scrimmage with the veteran Yugoslavian touring team. (Farley)

It's the next best thing to swimming there direct to find out if they'd won or lost the race. Williams won both meets handily, proving their amazing combined abilities in the pool and on the phone. We beat them 44-27.5 for the women and 62-19 for the men. Showing equal dexterity on the phone, the combined swim teams flailed the unwitting Californians, talking about everything from the weather in Williamstown (spash!) to the supply side views of Gary Selinger

EPHUSIONS

(ouch!) and piled up another score, defeating Pitzer 243 message units to 94.

The meet worked beautifully, and the Ephs were thrilled to win. But think of all the potential problems that might occur with such a system.

First, world records might not be as likely with such a system. What if, while trying to call Pitzer, the Ephs encountered a wrong number or the line was busy. Poor Cathy Hartley or Ben Aronson might be in the pool an extra six or seven minutes before they finally got through. This could cause a team to be slower than normal, as well as more shriveled.

Another key problem is just how to place the call. Who would pay? Would Pitzer accept a collect call from a team that was beating their trunks off? Or should the call be placed person to person . . . or should it be team to team? And what about rates? If this continues, will meets be moved until after 11:00 p.m., when the rates go down?

Even the slogans of the phone company might change, like "Long Distance, the next best thing to swimming there," or "Take the freestyle for a dollar-five, take your sweet time when you dive, relax the first three relays will always cost you less."

The last threat is to the safety of the swimmers. An over-exuberant Coach Ellington might go to congratulate a wet swimmer while on the phone and inadvertently shorten his career. This would be seriously detrimental for our winningest teams on campus.

However, there are advantages. The swim teams have already won the New England titles uncontested. Now they can go to the national, and even the Olympics—without even leaving their own back yard. They can swim six or seven matches a week, all at home but away simultaneously. What a cost savings in both time and money.

Bravo to the swim team for an innovative as well as humorous pre-season stint. But let's hope all this stuff stops here and now. Rumors abound that the rugby team, not to be outdone, are going to mail themselves to Mardi Gras this spring. Somehow, I'm just not sure that plan will hold water. I called the swim team to find out what they thought about the idea, but the line was busy. They were practicing.

The Williams Record

VOL. 95, No. 18 [17]

USPA 684-680

WILLIAMS

COLLEGE

DECEMBER 8, 1981

Eight profs get nod

Eight out of eleven faculty members being considered for tenure this year received recommendations from the Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP) last Tuesday.

The Record obtained personal confirmations of positive CAP recommendations from Ralph Bradburd of the economics department, Dennis Dickerson of the history department, Meredith Hoppin of the classics department, Robert Kavanaugh and Paul Solomon of the psychology department, Richard Krouse of the political science department and Lawrence Raab of the English department. Gene Bell-Villada of the Spanish department also received a CAP recommendation, the Record learned.

Gillian Feeley-Harnik of the anthropology department, Sarah Roche-Gerstein of the German department and David Tharp of the history department were not recommended by the CAP.

The Spanish and Classics departments will now be completely tenured if the Trustees approve Bell-Villada and Hoppin.

Administration officials refused to comment on the CAP recommendations. Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said that no announcement will be made until the Trustees make final tenure decisions in January. President John Chandler and CAP chairman Peter Berek declined to comment on the recommendations also.

The Trustees "rely heavily on the CAP recommendations," according to Reichert. He said he did not know if the Trustees had ever rejected a CAP

In and out . . . the two poles of a Williams Career, the Freshman Quad and the Office of Career Counseling . . . settled in the first snowfall of the year. (Farley) recommendation.

Feeley-Harnik's failure to gain CAP approval may endanger the proposed anthropology major now before the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP). Williams has no formal anthropology major; the department is now included in the sociology department. Students interested in anthropology may either concentrate in the area or arrange a contract major.

Feeley-Harnik's departure would leave Michael Brown as the senior anthropology professor. He has been here since 1980. Lawrence Graver, English professor and CEP chairman, declined comment on the future of the major proposal until the December 14 CEP meeting.

Feeley-Harnik commented, "I'm assuming there'll be no anthropology major . . . it looked extremely positive up to this point."

The CAP decision to recommend only one out of three women for tenure has come

Continued on Page 8

Discipline Committee reinstates student

by Sara Ferris

Incidents of sexual harassment continued last week with reports of a flasher on campus and an unknown man entering a woman's bedroom, according to Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor.

A woman in a Row House on the outskirts of campus awoke at 2:55 a.m. Wednesday to find a man standing near her bed, said O'Connor. The woman asked to remain anonymous and that her house not be identified.

According to the woman, she first assumed that he must be someone she knew. When she moved, he left the room for a few seconds and then returned. Not recognizing the man, she asked, "Who are you?" He then walked out of the room and left the building immediately through an emergency exit. She "jumped out of bed" and called Security.

O'Connor explained that the Dean's Office did not notify students of this incident because "we're afraid of overkill. All we can say is lock your doors."

Jane Fischberg '82 of the Feminist Alliance said, "I wish they had told us about it, because it happens all the time. Otherwise, when rapes and harassment occur, people don't report them."

The victim herself wanted the campus notified of the incident. "There's a lot more going on than anyone reports . . . I personally would want to know. People do read notices."

Director of Security Ransom Jenks did not think women were endangered by this type of harassment. "That kind of person . . . gets more pleasure out of just watching a young lady. It's voyeurism, really."

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor announced Sunday that he had expelled the male student involved in the sexual assault incident in October for violation of probation.

However, the Discipline Committee, acting on appeal from the student, overturned the Dean's decision and set a new penalty for the violation.

In his statement, O'Connor said, "The person . . . has in my judgment violated the terms of his probation and has been dismissed from the College, effective immediately."

However, after a 4½ meeting Sunday, the Discipline Committee decided, "While agreeing with the Dean that the student had violated his probation, a new penalty was set. Namely, he may not represent the College in any extracurricular activities; his access to the campus is restricted after 11:00 p.m.," according to a statement released by committee chairman Charles Dew of the History department.

"The student, who lives off-campus, may remain on the campus until 11:00 p.m.," said O'Connor. "But after 11:00, he must leave."

O'Connor said the Dean's Office received a similar report in late October from a woman who said someone entered her room and woke her up by touching her hand.

O'Connor speculated that the intruders were probably students, noting that students often feel comfortable walking into other students' room at any time.

Tuesday night between 8 and 9 p.m., women encountered a flasher at three different locations on campus. They described him as a white man approximately 5'8", with curly brown hair, a moustache and a scruffy beard, according to a Dean's Office notice. He wore a red hat and a red and black wool shirt.

The first incident occurred at 8:25 p.m. on the east side of Mission Park and was reported immediately by the woman involved. The second took place on Park Street at 8:30 p.m.; the third occurred outside Spencer House at 8:50 p.m. The Park Street incident was reported 23 minutes after it happened and the third victim waited an hour before calling Security, according to O'Connor.

He said the flasher was "prob-

Continued on Page 8

Famous medievalist to teach next semester

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Geoffrey Barraclough, a world-renowned historian specializing in German medieval history, will teach two history courses at Williams during the spring semester. As a Bernhard Visiting Professor, Barraclough will teach History 204, "The Making of Europe, 300-1300," and History 200, "The World Since 1929." History 200 has no prerequisite and has traditionally been designed to expose large numbers of students to some topic of general interest. Barraclough will lecture twice a week but will hold some discussion sections as well.

"Most students don't have the opportunity to come in contact with a scholar of such stature," said Professor Dudley Bahlman, chairman of the history department.

"He is a very distinguished medievalist," Bahlman continued, "but he has also expanded his interests. In his 1955 book History in a Changing World, he recommended replacing the traditional study of national histories with a new form of world history.

"Any student will find that he has a remarkable intellect," Bahlman said. "The ideas in his writings are always well-developed and thought-provoking. If you are at all interested in the topics he will cover, you will get a very interesting approach."

Barraclough was born in York, England in 1908, and studied at Oriel College, Oxford, and in Munich and Rome. He has taught at Oxford and Cambridge, as well as Berkeley and Brandeis, where his courses were popular and well-attended.

He was Research Professor of International History at the University of London from 1956-62, and was president of the Historical Association from 1964-67.

Among his many books is The Times Atlas of World History (1978), generally considered the definitive historical atlas, which he edited with R. F. Wall. He is currently revising the atlas for its second edition, due to be completed this February.

Geoffrey Barraclough, prominent European historian, will be leaving Brandeis University to teach two courses for Williams students this upcoming semester.

He also edited the well known History of European Civilization Library series.

Barraclough will be the second Bernhard Visiting Professor to come to Williams since the Professorships were established last year. The positions were created through a gift from Mr. Arnold Bernhard, who also donated the Music Center. The first, Henry A. Bent, is currently teaching in the chemistry department.

Bahlman asks that students interested in either of the courses see the Registrar before the Christmas vacation.

Inside the Record

Gargoyles resurrected	p. 4
Bates "fired up"	p. 5
Record names '82 staff	p. 6
CC Treasurer resigns	p. 7
Cagers cop Classic	p. 12

Campus Report Card

Bookstores—D—. Late assignments, incomplete work; should be disciplined for fighting in class.

Buildings and Grounds Dept.—C. Lunch hour extends into class time; excessive and inefficient effort on group projects.

Calendar and Scheduling Committee—D+. Crams too much for the last week of classes.

College Council—B+. Enthusiastic but tends to daydream.

Deans' Office—B. Good work under pressure, but should volunteer more information in class.

Feminist Alliance—B+. Highly motivated but dominates class discussions.

Food Service—B—. Generally satisfactory. Often submits previous work for next day's credit.

Football C+. Good effort but chokes on final exams.

Gargoyle Society—Incomplete. No graded work turned in.

Junior Advisors—Perfunctory Pass. Class clowns.

Marching Band—A. Extra credit for Amherst sign.

Octet—A—. Cute.

President's Office—A—. Always quick with a joke.

Record—Fifth Course. No credit given for work done.

Security—B. Lost school supplies from Morgan over the summer, but has recovered since then.

WCFM—B. The "gentleman's C" after grade inflation.

Winter Study Review Committee—Incomplete. Thesis deadline extended.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:

"This is ludicrous. Why didn't I go to U.S.C.?"

—a student in the middle of last week's snowstorm

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Eric Schmitt, Steve Willard

MANAGING EDITORS
Steve Epstein, Steve Spears

NEWS
Rich Henderson

ENTERTAINMENT
Lori Miller

FEATURES
Chris McDermott

LAYOUT
Bob Buckner

STAFF REPORTERS
Ben Bahn
Jeff Bralnard
Julia Geniesse
Collin Harris
Susan Kandel
Brett McDonnell
Trish McHugh
Peter Nicholas
Kira Obolensky
Laura Seligsohn
Stuart Smith
Craig Venable
Lynn Vendinello

AD MANAGER
Katie Miller

ASSISTANT NEWS
Philip Busch
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson
Jon Tiger

GRAPHICS
Mike Sutton

ASSOCIATE EDITORS
Mike Govan
Dan Keating

LAYOUT STAFF
Lois Abel
Kathy Bell
Roland Gallbert
Mary Nealon
Adam Pass
Tracey Tenser
Wendy Webster

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Toub

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

TANGENTS

TERS • LETTERS • LET

Balance

To the editor:

As an active member of this community, I would like to express my feelings concerning the events of the past few weeks. The issue of rape and sexual harassment has been brought up in a few cases, concerning several students. The deans and Honor and Discipline Committee have met concerning the cases and have made decisions about the future of students.

The ethical and moral issues raised are some of the questions the administration has been faced with deciding, as well as personal considerations of the student. Too often we criticize the administration decisions without realizing their perspective. They are the framework of this community, attempting to maintain stability and harmony among the student body and faculty. Many groups are represented at Williams—social, political, religious, sexual, racial, age. To balance all these groups requires an incredible juggling act. The actions of the administration often offend one or another group due to the inability to appease everyone.

The deans' intention has been to create a positive environment for everyone, individually and cohesively. Occasionally, an individual is singled out, for academic or social reasons. At times, the Administration is faced with the controversy of acting for the personal benefit of the student versus appeasing the community. The personal attention each student receives at Williams often necessitates sacrificing agreement with a group.

We should appreciate the administration's concern for each of us as individuals and realize its decisions are made after long deliberation and interest in each student. The administration and students involved in such groups as the Honor and Discipline Committee are often placed on the judgment stand to decide ethical questions, personal problems and community issues. As uninvolved members, we do not know half of the factors nor can we make decisions based on the rumors that spread rampantly at Williams. We should appreciate the attempt of the Administration to appease different groups, and especially their concern for the individual, and their desire for a healthy environment.

Kathy Kraft '82

Snow job

To the editor,

There seems to be much discussion of the Winter Study problem in daily life and as seen in the letters to the Record. There should be, for it is the single most important issue facing the College in the current academic year. However, some of the comment you solicit is not balanced by comment from opposing sides, a kind of "snow job" appears in your pages.

Many, for vested reasons, remain committed to January WSP. Many others have reservations, from small "tinkering-possible" styles to a complete lack of faith in the entire program as it exists now, feeling that a good thing at the beginning has not worked out, for various reasons. In the time we have had WSP. And of course there are those who never liked it, and who continue to dislike it.

Your reporting would be more accurate if you were to capture these gradations of feelings. Too many times, we fall into what I term "the Williams Syndrome" . . . that is, never question what we have, for one must believe that whatever exists at Williams is beyond question. We are always best and right! This attitude is seen in many areas of our common existence . . . our publicity, our scouting for students, our smugness in not even considering major change (calendar, credit hours, curriculum, etc.). Needless to say I sadly inhibits all we do.

Kenneth Roberts
Professor of Music

WSP feedback

To the editor:

The debate over the future of Winter Study has led to impassioned arguments throughout the Williams community. While some seek its abolishment and others its preservation, the vast majority of us simply sit back and wonder what the final outcome will be. For those wishing to save Winter Study, I hope you took note of Professor Booth's letter in the last issue of the Record. He claimed that the most important factor in this debate will be the student attitudes and behaviors exhibited this Winter Study. I agree that if the students truly want to preserve Winter Study, then they should express that concern by assuming a positive attitude during January 1982. But to actually improve Winter Study, I think it will take more than just that. It will take a change of behaviors from the faculty as well.

Professor Booth asserted that this year the students must demonstrate their support for WSP by "engaging fully in the intellectual challenges presented." This statement, however, presumes that each and every WSP presents some sort of challenge (intellectual, artistic, or otherwise). Some projects offer no such challenge. In the absence of some sort of faculty or student screening process, courses are being offered which yield little or nothing to get excited about. I contend that this contributes to as much of the problem as does any other factor. I sympathize with the faculty, for it is difficult for them to know whether a given project will fly or flop. Understandably, this can lead to a sincere disenchantment with the program. So perhaps

Continued on Page 11

OUTLOOK

Argentina: Imprisoned in a State of Fear

by Sonia Nazario

A group of teen-agers walk to the curb where I wait for a green light. I look around to make sure no policemen see us. I fear everyone; police often dress in civilian clothes. I steer away from the rowdy group. In Argentina, at that time in 1976, it is a crime to be with more than two persons, except for relatives, in public. Walking on, a young man catches my eye. He is handsome, with a beard. He must be a foreigner. To the Argentine security forces, left-wing terrorists and "subversives" wear beards. If the man is from abroad, he will be advised to shave; if a native he may never be seen again.

After immigrating to the U.S. and living there for 14 years, my family returned to Argentina in 1974. For the next two years, we watched as violence coming from both the left and right consumed the nation. Chaos gave way to a military coup, and soldiers with machine guns seemed more common than street signs. My friends were hauled into police headquarters for sporting hair below the ears. The country's new rulers announced that Alice in Wonderland and Freud endangered the safety of the nation.

The fear of being picked up by the security forces meant that our every activity, every move, was measured. In our family we adopted a system of traveling in pairs. We had watched as the police and military, driving unmarked Fords, had suddenly pulled up to a curb to snare their next victim. An eyewitness meant it was harder for the police to give their standard response: "we know nothing of this matter." The witnessing of an arrest might force the police to acknowledge a prisoner's existence and could, therefore, ensure his or her survival. But if the security forces could deny an arrest, they then controlled a detainee's fate without scrutiny, and avoided adding to the embarrassingly long list of political prisoners.

Dragnet searches in cafes and buses were everyday occurrences. I came to know the humiliation of being frisked, and the anxiety of not knowing whether or not I would be stuffed into a police car or left free. More than once I returned home to find my neighborhood cordoned off by police combing through every home. Windows were closed as my family moved into a central room to discuss any topic remotely political. Repeatedly, we heard stories of concentration camps in the southern provinces. Constantly the grapevine brought word of often-mutilated bodies found floating in a river, stuffed down a well, or washed up on an ocean beach.

We fled from Argentina and returned to the United States in 1976. My sister, an Argentine citizen, then 18 and planning to finish her schooling in Buenos Aires, stayed behind. Although many of our friends had relatives or acquaintances who had been arrested or had simply disappeared, none of us had fallen into the hands of security forces. We assumed our family was in no unusual danger.

In Kansas, the phone rang at midnight. A relative in Argentina was calling in a panic. On April 29, 1976, my sister had disappeared. In her apartment there was no trace either of her or of any of the family belongings we had left behind. All that remained was a frightened poodle, my sister's pet, which had been beaten by a soldier during the raid. My sister was not involved in any violent activities; she was one of countless innocent victims swept up in the military government's purge. Although we had been warned that any pressure applied from within Argentina was hopeless and might even further endanger my sister's life, my mother and I flew to Buenos Aires.

We were fortunate. Through family connections we learned that my sister remained alive and where she was held. She had disappeared for eight days. We later found out my sister had been held incommunicado in Buenos Aires' central police station; the same station where Jacobo Timmerman and countless others went for initial interrogation and torture sessions. She was transferred to the Olmos women's penitentiary located two hours from the capital. There were no charges against her, no scheduled trial. For my mother and me there was only the ride to Olmos prison, where for hours we stood at gunpoint, harassed by guards, so that for minutes we could exchange a reassuring look with my sister. The little high school student from the Midwest was no more. In her place stood a gaunt figure whose hollow eyes registered the shock of torture and imprisonment.

Our attempts to find help for my sister within Argentina proved futile. As one lawyer explained, he and his firm would no longer represent political prisoners: colleagues who had done so had disappeared. Judges were equally afraid of confronting the military authorities. No journalist I turned to would write a story about my sister. Too many writers, after

Life is More Than a Numbers Game

by Jim Peck

Speaking this summer of the conditions in Argentina, Secretary of State Alexander Haig asserted on July 9 that there had been "dramatic reductions in incidents characterized as reported violations of human rights such as disappearances and incarcerations." At issue here is what constitutes "dramatic" improvements. Given the Reagan Administration's intent to press through new development loans to Argentina, the question of improvement becomes crucial.

Since the military's seizure of power in 1976, Argentines have been subjected to intense human rights violations. Estimates of the number of "disappeared" during this period run as high as 15,000. Since 1979, however, the extent of the abuses has declined. The State Department insists that there have been no disappearances this year. Furthermore, the Administration contends that the new regime of President Viola, in power since March 29, 1981, is much more disposed to human rights concerns than ex-President Videla.

Unfortunately, hopes for significant improvements have not been realized. The new Argentine government has still not published any list of the disappeared as it has promised. Furthermore, Viola, the former commander-in-chief of the army, has made it clear that he will not authorize investigations into the role of the security forces in Argentina's "dirty war" against left-wing "terrorism."

In an interview with Time magazine (July 20, 1981), Viola denied that well-documented excesses had occurred. When asked whether individuals had ever been detained secretly, Viola replied, "There is not a single case like that. You may be assured that there are no hidden detainees in the Argentine Republic."

Disappearances and other abuses indeed have declined. Nevertheless, they do persist. Amnesty International, the Washington Office on Latin America, and other human rights groups have received reports of a number of violations this year. These incidents continue because the laws which make such abuses possible remain on the books in Argentina.

Foremost among these laws is the National Executive Power (PEN) which permits the government to arrest and detain anyone for any length of time. While the number of political prisoners held under this law has declined from over 8,000 in 1977, approximately 900 prisoners remain under detention today.

In April, 40 PEN detainees were released on parole, but their new "freedom" was highly circumscribed. They were placed on "supervised liberty," a designation which forces them to check publishing similar cases, had vanished. Even corruption, the lubricant which had, it seemed, kept Argentina functioning for decades, no longer worked. Army officers my family knew, who a year earlier had accepted a few thousand dollars in return for "looking into" a relative's fate, had become afraid of the monster of which they were a part.

As a last recourse I turned, as the only U.S. citizen in my family, to the American Embassy in Buenos Aires. The then Second Secretary Consular, with whom I met twice, stated that it would be improper for the American Embassy to interfere with the internal policies of the Argentine government. Meanwhile, however, though our attempts to free my sister from within Argentina had been useless, our efforts in the United States were bearing fruit. Both the U.S. embassy and the Argentine Ministry of Interior received dozens of letters from our American friends and from many congressmen. A few weeks later, on September 22, 1976, she was set free.

My sister had been released from prison, but every day she remained in Argentina she risked disappearing again—perhaps this time for good. Again, we turned to the American embassy. But the needed visa renewal to leave Argentina and re-enter the U.S. was linked to my sister's willingness to report on classmates she had known to be left-wing sympathizers or even terrorists in her high school. She was told by the Second Secretary Consular that handing over knowledge of this type to the embassy—the same information the Argentine Army had tortured her to try to obtain—would speed the processing of her visa. Again, pressure was applied by American friends and by her church organization. Finally, then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, identifying himself as an "interested party," cabled the embassy inquiring into my sister's visa status. A few days later she departed, bound for the U.S.

My family's considerable economic and social resources in Argentina could not guarantee my sister her basic human rights. As a U.S. citizen, I was able to obtain the commitment of American friends and of a few U.S. officials, who managed to save her from further unjust torture, perhaps worse. Many Argentines, disappeared, tortured, or merely imprisoned, had no American sister to turn to. For them, help was nowhere to be found.

In once a week, and which requires that they each possess a card identifying them as political prisoners, a fact which makes it impossible for them to obtain employment. Their status is much the same as an individual who is "banned" in South Africa. Under such conditions, these releases are certainly not as encouraging as Secretary Haig insists they are. It is important to note that in addition, individuals released from PEN detention on parole have never been charged. Americans who are paroled have been tried and convicted as criminals.

Has Argentina undergone fundamental change lately? It seems not. What is important is not a comparison of 900 political prisoners versus 8,000, but whether the laws that permit abuses remain in effect in Argentina. The Administration is wrong to play a numbers game. In short, the institutional framework of repression remains intact. Thus, if international outcry has contributed to the decline in abuses, it is wrong to relax the pressure before significant structural change occurs.

By supporting organizations for human rights and contacting congressional representatives, the Administration's attempt to push through new loans to the Argentine government may be prohibited. "Quiet diplomacy" has not resulted in significant change in Argentina.

Gargoyle undergoes revitalization

by Ron Issen

The Gargoyle Society, an organization founded in 1895 "for the betterment of the college," is perhaps one of the least understood groups at Williams. Long a member of the Williams community, the Gargoyle has in recent years become an enigma. In the past few years, neither the student body nor the members themselves, seemed to have a clear idea of the Gargoyle's purposes. This year, however, the Gargoyle has undergone a reorganization and revitalization that heralds for the Society a more prominent part in campus life.

Once a vibrant and visible part of Williams, the public selection of juniors for membership in the Gargoyle was "a happening," according to Mike Dively '81, president of the Gargoyle alumni association. "Tap Day" occurred every spring and involved all members of the junior class. Students sat on the Gargoyle fence, located in the science quad, where selected members were then "tapped" and, at the conclusion, new members and old then met in the middle of the quad and marched in column array back into Jesup Hall where the office of the Gargoyle is located. The tapping ceremony, marked with solemnity and honor, was a public affirmation of the existence of a Gargoyle.

The Gargoyle Society, named after the two Gargoyles located on Morgan Hall, is a senior society whose members, in theory, comprise the outstanding student leaders in the current graduating class. As such, the Gargoyle represents a unique forum in which campus leaders, representing a variety of backgrounds, may discuss issues that they feel are of importance to the college in the long run.

This is not to say that the Gargoyle consists simply of Record editors, Student Council presidents, football captains and the like. Rather, as Hodge Markgraf, vice president of the Gargoyle alumni association, and Provost of the College, stated, members have not simply "earned a place by representing an important extracurricular group." The criterion is based upon having a membership made up of "wise heads."

The Gargoyle is not, and has never attempted to be, a legislative body. Its avowed intention, as stated in The History of the Gargoyle, is to "lead college opinion, having neither the power, nor purporting to have the power to make laws for the students of this campus." And, in its long history, the Gargoyle has been extremely successful at doing exactly that.

In the early years, the Gargoyle initially directed its attentions toward overcoming the internecine rivalries found on campus between various fraternities and between fraternity and nonaffiliated students. Gargoyle proposals were crucial in leading to the establishment and adoption of the Honor System at Williams, and in eliminating the widespread fraud found in class elections through the adoption, in 1904, of a Gargoyle proposal for a No-Deals Agreement regulating college elections.

In the late '90s the Gargoyle initiated the practice of offering trophies and prizes for various sports. The adoption of Freshman Week in 1936 was a regular part of the College calendar was the result of a Gargoyle proposal first made in 1927. The idea of having Junior Advisors originated in Gargoyle meetings in the spring of 1924, with the practice being adopted in 1926.

The Athletic Council, the first student government, and the concert committee also came about through the efforts of the Gargoyle. The 1934 Gargoyle study recommending a plan for the reorganization of the Non-Athletic Council led to the creation of the Student Activities Council, while the 1922 suggestion, first made by Gargoyle Maxwell concerning the status of "hat clubs" on campus led to their organization in 1925 into what is their present day successor, The Purple Key.

As a self-perpetuating organization, the Gargoyle represents an independent voice of student concern. Due to its independent and nonpartisan nature, it can make observations from a perspective that gives it merit notwithstanding the existence of such other organizations as a president's ad hoc committee, or the presence of students on various faculty committees. The Gargoyle's success, according to Dively, rests upon the respect that students and administrators alike place upon it.

Seldom do the proposals of the Gargoyle meet with immediate and positive action. It is often many years from the first Gargoyle proposal to the actual adoption of such a suggestion by the College at large. But as a continuing and ongoing society, its members are able to take the view of the "long run" that, for example, the student serving on the finance committee for one year or one semester may be unable to do.

Continued on Page 5

ARTS·ARTS·ARTS

Student Recital

This week, the music department is sponsoring two student studio recitals. On Wednesday, December 9 at 8:00 p.m. in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, Hilde Hoo-genboom '81, accompanied by Edwin Lawrence, piano will play works by Bach, Piston, Ibert, Varese and Pelenc. Admission is free.

Flute Recital

On Wednesday, December 9 at 8:00 p.m. in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, Hilde Hoo-genboom '81, accompanied by Edwin Lawrence, piano will play works by Bach, Piston, Ibert, Varese and Pelenc. Admission is free.

Christmas Concert

At 9:00 p.m. on Wednesday, the Williams Early Music Ensemble will perform Christmas music, past and present, at the Weston Language Center. The concert is free and open to the public.

Opening Reception

On Thursday, December 10 at 5:00 p.m. in the Dodd House Gallery, there will be an opening reception for the exhibition "Portraits and other Photographs," by graduate art history student Wanda A. Bubriski. The exhibition will run through Friday, Dec. 18.

African Music

Talking Drums: Music and Dance of West Africa will be presented by the faculty and students of Wesleyan University's World Music Program on Saturday, Dec. 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Jesup Hall. The program, which is sponsored by the S.A.B. and the Luce Committee, is free.

SECRET SANTAS!

Looking for a gift idea? Give a Secret Santa snack bar gift certificate.

A useful gift that is sure to be appreciated.

Absolute secrecy guaranteed.

Available from the snack bar cashier.

ONLY $2.00

Paid for by the College Council

ATTENTION:

Sophomores, Juniors, Seniors and Recent Alumni

The College Council will be sponsoring an exhibit during January of past Winter Study projects.

If you have a project that was particularly meaningful to you which you would be willing to share with other students and faculty, then we encourage you to drop a note to S.U. Box 1856 with your name and phone number. This should be done before Friday, December 11.

We are specifically interested in projects which exemplify the educational value of Winter Study and its importance to the curriculum.

Paid for by the College Council

In Other Ivory Towers

without paying the one-dollar admission charge. The first student allegedly "belated" a Bowdoin officer in the chest. He was arrested, but released in time for the second half.

"The gate was crashed with-out provocation," commented Dean of the College James W. Carlgan. "It was a bush kind of activity that was without class." At a meeting of gate-crashers called by Carlgan, over 60 students agreed to send a letter of apology to Bowdoin, and paid $54 in admission charges.

Mount Holyoke College

The Board of Trustees of Mount Holyoke College, on the South Hadley campus for its fall meeting November 6-8, was greeted by college-wide demonstrations in favor of divestiture by faculty and students, which included wearing t-shirts and buttons, hanging banners, and (on November 7) staging a four-hour sit-in demonstration.

The Board passed a resolution on November 6 which urged a reconsideration of the Board's investments in corporations doing business in South Africa.

The sit-in, which involved some 70 students and faculty and was coordinated by four student organizations, was staged in the building where the trustees met for lunch, greeting them as they filed in with the reading of a press statement denouncing as "hypocritical" that Mount Holyoke should profit in any way from corporate support of this apartheid regime.

The demonstration also included songs, readings, slide that it was not clear when it would be decided once and for all.

Wesleyan University

The Student Events Committee (SEC) rescinded an invitation to speak at Wesleyan it had extended to General William Westmoreland, the Commander of American forces in Vietnam during the 1960s, remembered for remarking, "Life is cheap in Southeast Asia."

The engagement, scheduled for November 18, would have brought Westmoreland a $2,000 fee—a fact that most angered the students opposed to Westmoreland's visit. Jessica Rosner, who circulated a petition against Westmoreland, allowed that Westmoreland has the right to speak at Wesleyan, but did not want her student tax money going to pay him. "But it's not a free speech issue," Rosner told the Wesleyan Argus, "it's a paid-speech issue."

Keith Pye of the SEC was disappointed with the opposition to

Continued on Page 7

Gargoyle to live again

Continued from Page 4

This sense of history helps reduce the chances of Gargoyle members being concerned with "headline grabbing" or worrying about "their share of the pie." As Hodge Markgraf stated, "If you have loyalty and love for this place, you don't need bragging rights; good things will just happen."

From the mid-sixties to the present, with the exception of a slight revival in the mid-seventies, the Gargoyle suffered from apathy and a lack of direction on the part of its members. There was a lack of continuity in the organization that led to, according to Dively, "a lot of reinventing of the wheel"; there was a lack of understanding of the role of the Gargoyle by the members themselves. Although instrumental in the elimination of fraternities here at Williams, the Gargoyle almost went with them, viewed by some as an elitist or "snob" organization.

By 1980, disorganization had reached a peak. Only two or three members would show up for meetings, and those meetings, when attended, were marked, according to Sarah Wilson, Gargoyle '81, by personal conflicts and confusion over the society's purposes. With no presidency or secretary, the society suffered from organizational confusion as well. No minutes were kept, and there was little, if any knowledge among the members of the history of the Gargoyle.

Karon Walker, member '81, charged that the society should be disbanded on the grounds that since the members represented a completely diverse range of campus interests, they had little in common. (Such an argument, Wilson agreed, indicates in itself a lack of information as to the original conception and purposes of the Gargoyle.)

Finally, a memo by Tom Black to the other Gargoyles calling for a meeting to select members for Gargoyle '82 resulted in one other member showing up, with the result that no selections were made and the society disbanded by default.

Primarily through the efforts of Gargoyle Bill Allen '84, interested students, and various members of the administration, the Gargoyle was revitalized and new members were selected from the current class of seniors at Williams. Steve Willard, Gargoyle '82, characterizes this year as a "rebuilding year."

In a quiet way, the current Gargoyle is involved in a number of issues, including the establishment of a student bookstore, the coordination of ideas on Winter Study, and the issue of student-faculty ratios here at Williams. In addition, the Gargoyle Alumni association continues to offer an annual scholarship of $2,000, awarded last year to Darrell McWhorter.

In elaborating the roles that a revitalized Gargoyle could play, Dively emphasized the importance of the function of the Gargoyle as a sounding board for the president and administrators, and how it might, as in the past, hold regular meetings with the president, instead of merely reacting to issues as they occur. Equally important, Dively feels that the Gargoyle can be effective in raising issues for students, as by its structure itself, it represents a pulling together of all of the significant elements of the Williams community.

Dively felt that more meetings with Gargoyle Alumni at Williams, and possibly, an earlier selection of Gargoyles in the spring of the year would help alleviate the Society's problem while maintaining year to year continuity. Most important, Willard feels, is getting people used to a Gargoyle, as well as getting members committed working with it, realizing that the Gargoyle is "not elitist, just fellow students."

My Fair Lady

Don't miss it!

Sunday, January 10th

Brought to you by SAGE D

4:00 and 7:30

The Mole Hole

UNIQUE GIFTS

for all family members

"SECRET SANTA GIFTS GALORE!"

Gifts can be sent home for Christmas.

Open 9-6 Seven Days

118 Water Street

For Those Special People on your Holiday List...

THE House of Walsh

Spring St. Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-5010

INFLATION-FIGHTER SPECIAL ON KODACOLOR DEVELOPING AND PRINTING!

12 Exposure Develop & Print @ $2.49
20 Exposure Develop & Print @ $3.69
24 Exposure Develop & Print @ $3.99
36 Exposure Develop & Print @ $5.99

SNAP UP THE SAVINGS!

OFFER EXPIRES DECEMBER 31

Harts' Pharmacists, Inc.

SPRING STREET

Happy Holidays!

Bring home a gift to the people who've sacrificed to keep you here all year long.

WING'S LIQUOR STORE

413-458-5040

on Spring Street

Trivia prepares to warp out

by Jon Tigar

Grab some beers, sit by the phone, and tune to WCFM. Because tonight marks the 30th semi-annual Trivia Contest.

Following the dictate of tradition, the contest will run from midnight to 8 a.m. Questions will fall into one of eight categories: Music, Movies, Advertising, Television, Comics, Sports, Williamsiana, and Miscellany. In addition to standard questions, for which contestants have the length of an oldie-but-goodie to answer, teams will face one-hour bonus questions and four-hour super bonus questions. "Action" questions require players to reenact a scene from one of the eight categories.

Last year's winning team, Phasers On Stun, will be coordinating this year's contest. Two of the groups organizers, Charlie Singer '82 (known as Captain Slope to WCFM listeners) and Sheila Walsh '83, are both excited about the possibilities.

"I think it's the funnest thing in the whole world. What makes it so fun is that you can't believe that you remember a particular scene from some stupid television show or movie," said Walsh.

Organizing eight hours of trivia is a huge responsibility. "It's kind of a pain," said Walsh. "You never realize how difficult it is to put this thing together. We've been thinking of questions all summer."

Although formal rules will be announced at the beginning of the contest, the game is simple. In Walsh's words, "Get a phone. Call in. Give a name. Get the answer."

She also expressed the hope that Trivia will not be dominated by a few large teams garnering all the points. When the points are spread out, the small teams "want to play longer," she said.

Towards that end, "I think we have a much easier contest this year," said Singer, precisely "so that the contest doesn't get dominated by big teams or specialists."

Continued on page 7

Record names editors for 1982

Juniors Rich Henderson and Steve Spears will be co-editors of the Record for calendar year 1982, according to current co-editors Eric Schmitt and Steve Willard. The two, supported by new managing editor Bob Buckner, will assume the editorship duties starting in January.

In addition, eight persons were elevated to department editor positions. Sophomores Sara Ferris and Katya Hokanson will run the news department, Jon Tigar '84 the Outlook page, and Philip Busch '84 the features department. Paul Sabbath '83 will become Op-ed editor, Dan Keating '84 sports editor, Mike Govan '85 layout editor, and Ron Isen '84 arts/entertainment editor.

Henderson, news editor this semester, returns to the co-editorship he held this spring. A talented news writer and editor, Henderson started on the Record as a reporter, and moved up to assistant news editor and news editor before his first co-editorship.

Spears, one of two managing editors this semester, will utilize his excellent administrative and editing abilities in his new capacity. Spears also began his Record career in the news department. He moved from assistant news editor to entertainment and news editor before assuming his managing editorship.

Buckner becomes managing editor after a productive two-year stint as layout editor, where he honed his editing skills to a "cutting" edge.

Busch, Ferris, Hokanson, and Tigar comprised a strong news editing corps this semester as assistant news editors. Sabbath takes charge of the new Op-ed section. He has served as sports co-editor and copy editor in past semesters.

Keating moves up from assistant sports editor. He has had experience with layout and will help Govan with the paper's format. Isen was a features writer in this past semester, his first on the Record.

Henderson and Spears will head a nine-person editorial board that forms the newspaper's policies.

Current managing editor Steve Epstein has decided not to return to the staff because of other campus commitments.

New RECORD editors Henderson and Spears survey their domain as former editors Willard and Schmitt look on. (Farley)

Students initiate Italian study

by Kira Obolensky

Italian will be taught at Williams as a student-initiated course next semester in response to strong student interest in Italian. Currently, eight students are commuting to North Adams State College to study Italian.

The College Bulletin describes a "student-initiated course" as "one proposed and organized by students . . . the students carry a heavy burden of the leadership in proposing requirements, selecting material to be covered, and conducting discussion, as well as in conceiving the basic outline of the course." Professor Nicholas Fersen of the Russian department will evaluate and grade students.

Priscilla Cohen '82 initiated Italian 102 when she became aware of the increasingly prominent interest in Italian among Williams students. Two years ago, when Italian was last offered as a Winter Study project, 184 students expressed interest, and 53 selected it as first choice.

Carol Ockman of the art department is teaching an Italian WSP again this year "to show that there is a continuing interest in Italian here at Williams," she said. This year 50 students opted for Italian as a first choice.

Italian 102 will be open to those students who participated in an Italian study program, have taken beginning Italian in Winter Study or have enrolled in Italian 101 at North Adams. The class is limited to 12.

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said that this student-initiated course is "exceptional"

Continued on page 7

Treasurer resigns, budget finally passes

by Katya Hokanson

In an unexpected move, College Council Treasurer Steve Spears '83 resigned from his Council post at the end of last Wednesday's meeting. Spears, who was to have served through the month of April until the next Council elections, said that he had been offered the post of co-editor-in-chief of the Williams Record and would not have enough time to properly fulfill both his Council and Record duties.

Beth O'Leary '82 was named the new treasurer after notification of the Finance Committee.

"She's very thorough," said Spears of O'Leary. "She'll be sure to look at the big picture as well as the small picture."

"I'm looking forward to it," said O'Leary. "Over Winter Study, we're looking forward to reforming the processes of the FinCom." O'Leary said she was also interested in providing more information about clubs when the Council decided on budgeting in the future.

For the most part of the meeting, however, discussion of the Williams Record budget once again prevailed. Record editors had been required by a vote at the previous week's Council meeting to present written estimates of area printers' costs to print the newspaper. Director of Public Information Ray Boyer, requested to examine the various options, said at the meeting that he felt that Lamb's Printing in North Adams, the Record's present printer, remained the best choice.

"An important point," said Boyer, "is that at Lamb's the Record is the dominant project when it's up for printing. At the North Adams Transcript, the Record will be second priority. That's the same as with the (Bennington) Pennysaver."

Boyer cited the pre-weekend deadlines of the Transcript and the Pennysaver as the main reasons they are not good choices for printing the Record.

"It's important to have weekend sports coverage," noted Boyer, "and it's good to have news from the day before. It's important to have flexibility if something happens the night before." The deadline at Lamb's is Monday.

After questioning about other methods of cost-cutting from Joel Hellman '84 and Sonia Nazarlo '82, the Council passed the remainder of the Record's budget, $6,440 with the contingent that $150 be cut per issue if additional staff can be coordinated to do some costly work which is currently done by the printer.

The Council also voted to have 3000 buttons saying "Support Winter Study" printed up at a cost of $405. The buttons will be put into students' S.U. boxes. The Council also plans to put a letter into mailboxes on the first day of Winter Study.

The letter will read in part, "... we hope that your attitude and behavior toward your Winter Study course . . . will reflect your recognition of the importance of Winter Study and its educational value to a liberal arts curriculum."

According to Council President Freddy Nathan '83, the letter will be sent to all students.

Italian—

Continued from page 6 and a one-time arrangement. There are no plans to offer it in the future."

Fersen explained that he is "teaching this course in addition to my regular full-course load. In order for a series of Italian courses to be offered, there must be an arrangement for faculty."

Both Fersen and Ockman believe that the possibility of further courses depends on student interest. Ockman noted that "language courses, in general, tend to be small and not thriving. It's hard to introduce yet another sequence of courses when the other language courses are not highly enrolled."

She thinks, however, that Italian is an important language that Williams should offer since it is connected with many aspects of Classical civilization.

In Other Ivory Towers

Continued from Page 5

Westmoreland, calling it "narrow-mindedness" and "oppression." Pye also held that Westmoreland's talk would have provided a counterpoint to a November 9 speech by the executive director of the Vietnam Veterans of America.

Middlebury College

The faculty, student, and community leaders spoke out against the arms race and warned of the increasing danger of nuclear conflict on November 11 in Middlebury's Convocation on the Threat of Nuclear War. The Convocation was sponsored by several campus groups as well as the Union of Concerned Scientists, a national organization.

Topics for lectures ranged from the economic trade-offs implicit in the continuing nuclear build-up, to the legacy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, to the expected effects if a one-megaton bomb was dropped on the U.S. Air Force Base in Plattsburg, N.Y. (the latter would cause 90 percent fatalities at Middlebury).

Olin Robison, president of Middlebury, stressed the immediacy of the moral question of nuclear war, confiding, "My one greatest fear is that the essential ingredient to arms control is slipping from our grasp."

Want a terrific Christmas present?

Why not ask your parents for a low cost winter vacation for your spring break! . . .

Acapulco from $449*
Montego Bay from $349*
Martinique from $399*
Santo Domingo from $299*
Florida from $239*
Peru from $469*
Guadeloupe from $399*
Nassau & Paradise Island from $399*

*These prices include round trip flights and accommodations, etc. Call us for details.

Happy Holidays!

THE TRAVEL STORE
105 Spring Street
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

CHRISTMAS AT GREYSTONE GARDENS

Fine antique clothing, jewelry and accessories for ladies and gentlemen. A full line of Victorian whites, vintage silks and cottons, gaberdine jackets, pleated pants, vests, animated wool sweaters, silk scarves and kimonos, laces, velvets, furs, hats, lingerie as well as antique wicker. Fashions may change but beautifully made clothes are never out of date.

TELEPHONE (413) 442-9291
436 NORTH STREET
PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

UPSTAIRS
115 WATER ST.
458-8485

SANTA'S HELPER!

GREAT CHOICES $5.00 & UNDER

THE CLIP SHOP
is all about hair

Now guys too can have volume in their hairstyle. But the cut has to have the right design for the individual. That is one of the main concerns of the stylists of the Clip Shop—giving their clients a hairstyle that will complement and be easy for them to take care of.

Stop in at any one of their three locations or if you prefer call for an appointment.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 458-9167
PITTSFIELD, MA. 447-9576
BENNINGTON, VT. (802) 442-9823

HAVE A COTTAGE CHRISTMAS

TRAVEL LIGHT This nylon luggage is colorful, strong and lightweight. Small round satchel great for gym clothes $12.99. Gormant bag $22.99. Lots of colors! Contrasting straps!	THE SNOWBALL THAT COMES IN FROM THE COLD To give your home a warm holiday glow all year long! Kato Bada snowball candleholder (4") regularly 15.00 NOW SPECIAL $9.95. Complete w/ candle.	RUNNER'S SOAP "Le Sportif" directly from Le Marathan de Paris — ultra pure & mild for sports minded people. Helps retain skin's natural moisture, complete with shampoos & sponge. $8.95.	FRAME HER Look at your loved ones! Put a favorite photo in an adorable frame like these! Assorted designs and price ranges.
TABLE SOPHISTICATION Chic anyx stem glasses are just the thing for an elegant touch to your holiday table. Gablet, wine, cordial. $13.95 set of six.	GIVE SPRING TIME Seed kits beautifully packaged make great gifts for garden and plant lovers. Two tubs of seeds to start early or grow under lights. $8.95.	CHARMING ORNAMENTS are a terrific grab bag gift! These wonderful felt ornaments are exquisitely made and irresistible! $3.95 ea. Santa, angels, rocking horses & more.	CHRISTMAS TREE MUSIC BOX Ceramic Christmas tree. Beautifully hand painted, turns around to Jingle Bells! A wonderful gift. $15.00
DAYS GO BY and mark them off on a beautiful or funny calendar. We have loads of designs. A gift everyone can use. Horses and New England $5.95 ea.	HOUSE TINS Fill them with homemade candy or cookies, a charming gift! The perfect size for a recipe box afterword! Assorted house designs. $6.00.	BOX A MUG Instant Christmas! The box has the design of the mug on the outside ready to label and give. $5.95	OPEN 7 DAYS OPEN SUNDAY the COTTAGE WATER STREET, WILLIAMSTOWN Pittsfield Halyoke Mall Sharon, CT

Foreign policy in disarray

by Peter Nicholas

"There is no coherent foreign policy direction in the Reagan administration," argued Nicholas Spiliotes '77, a former staff member on President Carter's National Security Council, in a Speech Thursday in Griffin Hall. "The President and the White House staff are uninterested in foreign affairs, and are content to focus on domestic policy," he said.

Spiliotes considered the tension between Secretary of State Alexander Haig and the White House, as well as the President's "institutional downgrading" of his own National Security Council, as responsible for the disarray in the foreign policy decision-making process.

"Haig has been neutralized by the domestic policy advisers in the White House. They were appalled by his behavior on live television the day the President was shot—a military man announcing he was in charge of a diplomatic situation—and so they decided to take him down a peg," said Spiliotes. "George Bush was put in charge of Crisis Management, and Haig went back to the State Department to sulk."

Nevertheless, the White House is reluctant to fire Secretary Haig, as the European allies believe he is the only one in the administration who "understands them." Moreover, Haig's vigorous, anti-Soviet internationalist ideology is shared by the President, Spiliotes noted.

The National Security Council staff under Adviser Richard Allen has also had its role in foreign policy-making diminished, said Spiliotes. "The powers that be in the White House aren't pleased with the National Security Adviser. Allen does not have direct access to the President. He is forced to send his memoranda to Reagan through Ed Meese, and he suffered the ultimate indignity when his daily early morning briefings with the President were cancelled."

Spiliotes said he feels the diminished influence of the National Security Adviser and the Secretary of State, and the uncoordinated way the administration makes foreign policy have had destabilizing effects.

"Haig and Secretary of Defense Weinberger are not consulting in private," Spiliotes said. "Instead, they are battling it out in the Washington Post, and no one knows who is speaking with authority in the administration."

"The result of this institutional disarray has been policy outcomes like the decision to go ahead with the B-1 bomber—which involves spending a lot of money with little defense value for the dollar—and the MX missile basing plan, which would put our best missile in hardened silos, which are still vulnerable to Soviet attack," Spiliotes commented.

"Because of their obvious vulnerability, Europe and the Soviet Union cannot help but feel the U.S. is thinking of using the MX in a first strike... The Reagan administration must get its act together in foreign policy."

The disarray in the administration is growing increasingly serious, according to Spiliotes. "In the event of a real crisis, the government might fall apart because of its inability to respond in a coordinated, coherent way... If the President is to coordinate foreign policy decision-making at the White House, he must upgrade the role of the national Security Council, and replace Richard Allen with someone competent, whom the President will be able to work with at the political level."

Nicholas Spiliotes '77, former National Security Council staffer, addressed a group of Williams students last Thursday on the Reagan Administration foreign policy. He warned of an "institutional disarray." (Farley)

Tenures decided

Continued from Page 1

under fire from some students and faculty members. "The statistics are horrible," said Elena Bertozzi '83. "There are only five tenured women now. Considering how many tenured positions are given and the quality of the professors in questions, I found the decisions extremely unfair."

Dickerson is the first black to be recommended for tenure here. "I think it's wonderful," commented Dean Mary Kenyatta. "He's the first black to go through the whole tenure process here... I'm not sure this will directly affect our ability to attract black faculty, but a tenured person will be able to provide a model for other black faculty already here."

Tenure decisions are usually made in the sixth year of an assistant professor's residence here. The CAP considers student evaluations, departmental surveys and scholarly works in deciding on recommendations.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

Mad River Glen VERMONT

Special Mid-Winter
Ski Vacation Rates for COLLEGE STUDENTS

5-day ticket (good Monday to Friday) for All Lifts $44
Available each Monday starting Jan. 4 until Feb. 1, 1982
Special lodging and meal packages are also available

For more information call or write Mad River Glen
Watfield, Vermont 05673
(802) 498-5551

Student expelled, reinstated

Continued from Page 1

ably a transient, somebody passing through... It's not what a student would do." He remarked that this sort of incident has happened "two or three times before. The last time must have been in the fall of 1979."

Director of Security Ransom Jenks said, "It's not a common-place event, but I think we can expect to see recurrences of it. Flashers frequent areas where there are young women."

Neither he nor O'Connor consider flashing particularly dangerous for the victim. "It's not in the nature of a flasher to do more than display himself," commented Jenks.

"It's certainly frightening," added O'Connor. "Flashing is about as low as you can get, but they're not typically after anything else."

O'Connor also said the suspect in the assault case of two weeks ago was released because "he had an alibi and the identification was not 100 percent positive... the victim did pick him out of the police lineup, but wasn't quite sure. She felt uncomfortable pressing charges because she wasn't dead sure."

However, O'Connor added, "We have a strong suspicion that this is the guy, but we can't prove it."

Jenks reported that use of Security's escort service had not increased appreciably since the student body was informed of the assault. He said the service averages two or three calls a night, but that nine students had used it the evening after the flashing incidents were publicized by the Dean's Office.

"It could be that our young ladies are not taking too seriously what's going on out there," Jenks commented. "Or they could also be doubling up, walking together with other people."

O'Connor added that Security had doubled the number of student monitors on duty at night from two to four immediately after the assault but had cut back again.

Jenks also advised women to report any incidents of harassment immediately. "I urge them to call us about strangers, phone calls that are unusual, automobiles that are suspicious... It's important to provide as much description as possible."

The College Council sponsored a walking tour of the campus Sunday night to pinpoint areas in need of more lighting. Peter Welanetz, director of the physical plant, said that "in general, for a small college in a relatively quiet town, the College has done a reasonably good job of providing illumination... we certainly would look (at the results of the tour), but I don't foresee a major re-lighting of the campus."

Welanetz suggested that "students should stay to well-illuminated paths as opposed to taking the most convenient one." He added that "the best lighting system... is not going to be very effective without people around. Lighting has got to be one of a lot of things."

He concluded, "I get the feeling that people believe the answer to a maiden's prayer is a lot of illumination."

Fischberg said a panel discussion on sexual harassment is scheduled for January 16 in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. She remarked that the Feminist Alliance is now taking names of people interested in participating on the panel.

She expects the discussion will increase student awareness of the extent of sexual harassment. "People don't see this campus as a part of the greater society which in general harasses women. A lot of people here see themselves as brothers and sisters and don't realize that (harassment) happens here."

O'Connor said that incidents of sexual harassment will be discussed at the faculty meeting Wednesday. He said he hopes to "alert the faculty to the range of problems and urge them to take part in this panel discussion."

CC

Continued from page 7

ter will be a reminder that "students are being watched and judged" during Winter Study.

Backtalk magazine's $1700 budget was passed, while Nexus received $2500, and Parallax $2645. Men's Rugby got $2945, Women's Rugby received $1105, and WUFO got $1025.50.

The Council also heard a short talk by Elena Bertozzi '83 about sexual harassment on campus; in response, the Council decided to hold a nighttime walking tour of the campus in order to pinpoint the very dark areas of campus.

Big siblings: joy of giving

by Ron Issen

Dear Williamstown Big Brother/Sister, you and your little brother/sister are invited to a Christmas party, Saturday, December 5, from 2 to 4 p.m. ...

So read the note in my box. Innocuous enough, I thought to myself, and I proceeded to call my little brother and make arrangements.

The party was held in the Greylock dining hall, with Big Brothers and Sisters arriving with tot in tow, and gift in arm for Santa to distribute later. After a pre-bash munch-out where cookies and punch were enjoyed, Jami Harris, coordinator of the program and infamous for being the only girl in the College who plays ping pong with a double-fisted backhand, organized a game of Musical Big Brother and Sister (a game somewhat akin to musical chairs, only, guess who got to be the furniture?).

Undaunted, I bravely took my place as "chair," as tots circled and music played. Now I know how Custer felt at Little Big Horn. Actually, it was very similar to musical chairs, the only difference being that in this version, the chairs got to root for various contestants.

"Sit over here?," screams a mahogany desk chair. "No, no, quick! This way!," yells the cherrywood rocker. Finally, one chair (Amy Elsbrec '84) was left, with two bitter contestants, The Girl With The Ribbon In Her Hair, and The Kid With The Big Leather Boots fighting it out for possession of the cherished iap. A look of absolute terror appears over Amy's face as the music stops and The Kid With The Big Leather Boots and The Girl With The Ribbon In Her Hair dive headfirst to victory. Final score: Big Boots—1, Amy—nothing.

Bobbing for apples was then followed by a guest appearance by Santa: Dave "The Big Guy" Weaver. Some of the older little brothers seemed a little wary of this guy in red, and it appeared at times that Santa was more interested in having some of the sisters sit on his lap than they were. Nonetheless, reluctant elves and all had a chance to tell Santa a "secret," with an especially loud "Ho, Ho, Ho" heard from Santa when Jami took her turn upon the jolly man's lap.

A game of "stomp the balloon" was preceded, of course, by blowing up the balloons. And Ephs, I don't care what your verbal SAT's were, sore lungs were the order of the day.

Continued on Page 10

Sub-frosh flood campus

More prospective students visited the campus Admissions Office during the month of October than during any other month in the College's history, said Philip Smith, Director of Admissions.

A total of 802 prospectives were interviewed, the first time more than 800 prospective applicants visited the office in a single month.

Not only was the pace in October faster than ever before, but the pace of interviews overall is running ahead of last year. Smith said 2,721 interviews were conducted from May through October, compared with 2,567 during the same period last year.

Smith noted that evidence of especially strong interest by secondary students in higher education this year is not limited to Williams.

"This is also a phenomenon that other colleges are noting," he commented. "It may be that students are putting things together earlier this year. Also, it may be that there is increased interest in the stronger and more challenging academic places."

It is too early to predict what the interview pace will mean in terms of applications, according to Smith.

Women vent anger over harassment

by Julia Genlesse

Sexual harassment was the subject of an animated discussion at last week's Women's Coffee Hour, in the wake of recent incidents of harassment on campus.

Last week's forum opened with talk about flashing. Participants offered various reasons why flashing is considered a serious form of sexual harassment.

The discussion continued with Linda Bundtzen's question, "What is the frequency of so-called friendly rape—when the rape involves two people who know each other?" Many students admitted to a lingering sense of obligation to a date who has paid for dinner and a movie, and talked about the fact that this feeling of debt sometimes leads to things that the woman doesn't want.

Some said that the "pinch" or "manhandling" is more common than "date rape." Many stressed that although they would like to speak up when they are being manhandled, it is often hard to know what to do because what so often happens is that "the girl ends up looking the fool."

"In the Log, you can't scream or make a scene, because you are the one who ends up taking the repercussions," said Kirsten Tolman '82.

Lola Bogvo added, "There's a sort of tacit consent in this community... because you don't want to seem 'oversensitive' or, God forbid, a 'feminist.' I think that what we can do to get over this is to all stand up to it, and in that way our community will change and evolve."

Most agreed that while the tendency is often to "let these things go, we owe it to each other to stand up to it."

Congratulations
Paul Solomon and Bob Kavanaugh
Best of Luck!
Ellen, Laura, Tricia,
Tom and Sharon

Hancock Tire & Machine

Snow Tires

WHITEWALL POLYESTER
600-12	$35.00
A78-13	$35.00
C78-13	37.00
C78-14	36.00
E78-14	36.00
F78-14	41.00
G78-15	46.00
H78-15	46.00
L78-15	64.00
RADIAL - WHITEWALLS
Size	Glass	Steel
P155/80-12	—	$41.95*
P155/80-13	37.95*	41.95*
P165/80-13	40.95*	44.95
P185/75-13	—	49.95
P185/80-13	—	51.95
P175/80-14	—	54.95
P195/75-14	49.95	55.95
P205/75-14	52.95	57.95
P215/75-14	54.95	57.95
P225/75-14	57.95	62.95
P185/80-15	46.95	49.95
P215/75-15	59.95	63.95
P225/75-15	61.95	66.95
P235/75-15	64.95	—

COMPUTER SPIN BALANCE $3.75 on most wheels

OPEN: Monday thru Friday 10 am - 6 pm,
Saturday 9 am - 12 pm

LOCATED ON ROUTE 43, HANCOCK, MASS., 4 MILES SOUTH OF ROUTE 7 AND 43 INTERSECTION

413-458-5533

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday, Dec. 9

Moosehead Night
Assorted Moosehead
advertising to be given away, 9-12

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

Students tour campus heating plant

by Trish McHugh

Campus energy systems were the subject of campus tours last month in an effort by the Student Energy Conservation Committee to encourage conservation and provide information.

Jim Holden, plant manager of Buildings and Grounds, led tours to the two main sites of the campus energy system: Bernhard Music Center, which has solar heating facilities, and the central heating plants next to the paddle tennis court.

During the summer, the Bernhard solar collectors meet demand for hot water within the music center. Throughout the winter, they boost steam from the main plant.

The system consists of seven collectors, measuring a total of 131 sq. feet, with double-pane glass over a black undercoat. The undercoat maximizes absorptency and minimizes the effect of cold temperatures. Each square foot of panel has a capacity to heat one and a half gallons of water, stored in a tank in the basement.

Since the solar heating facility is small in scope and not effective in the winter, it is not a tremendous money saver for the College. Its original installation cost $15,000 and with energy at six cents per kilowatt-hour, the payback period is about 30 years.

Following Bernhard was a visit to the central heating plant, the source of all campus heat. The facility consists of three oil-fueled boilers, the newest installed in 1970. Either of two boilers is sufficient to warm the entire campus, except in times of extreme cold. The third boiler is too small and has become obsolete. It will probably be replaced by a coal boiler if the College decides to return to coal heat.

The enormous increases in the price of oil over the past five years have made coal a more attractive option in recent times. Although the cost of coal favors conversion, there is still a big question in some people's minds regarding the long-term availability of low sulfur coal.

Holden elaborated, "The biggest drawback to conversion is whether we will be able to have a long supply of low sulfur coal. If not, there is a need to desulfurize the flue gas, and some of the desulfurization processes are very expensive."

If it becomes necessary to invest in a process of this type, the economic gains made by the use of coal would be greatly reduced.

Artistic? Creative?

Why not try your luck at doing paste-up for the Record?

The Record needs people interested in doing paste-up on Mondays and Tuesdays during the academic year.

For more info., contact: Mike Govan '85

LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS

Why not take the opportunity to study in London?

A wide range of subjects and courses is available in Central London for students of the social sciences.

Junior year Postgraduate Diplomas
One-year Master's degrees Research

Subjects include Accounting and Finance, Actuarial Science, Anthropology, Business Studies, Econometrics, Economics, Economic History, Geography, Government, Industrial Relations, International History, International Relations, Law, Management Science, Operational Research, Philosophy, Politics, Population Studies, Social Administration, Social Work, Sociology, Social Psychology and Statistical and Mathematical Sciences.

Application blanks from:
Admissions Directorate, L.S.E., Houghton Street
London WC2A 2AE, England
Please state whether junior year or postgraduate.

SOME GREAT NEW CUTOUT ALBUMS:

Dance Craze (live ska)	$2.99
"more" Specials	2.99
Sex Pistols "Great R & R Swindle"
CCR Royal Albert Hall Concert	3.49
Beatles "Greatest" (import)	3.99
Animals "House of the Rising Sun"	4.49
Kinks "Low Budget"	3.49
John Coltrane "Jupiter Variation"	3.49
Miles Davis (double prestige)	5.99

and too many more to list!

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street - 458-5229 Open 10-6

Editors Willard, Spears, Schmitt, and Henderson pose in the depths of the College heating system during a special energy tour conducted early Monday morning. (Farley)

ACSR reviews College investments

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) plans to evaluate the South African operations of twelve companies in which the College owns stock.

The committee will use the Sullivan principles as the main criterion for judging their performances. Formulated by a South African minister, these principles include such guarantees as freedom of association, equal pay and benefits, the right of non-whites to form unions and total desegregation of all facilities.

The College currently holds stock in seven companies that have refused to sign the Sullivan principles. They are Air Express International Corporation, American Home Products Corporation, Beckman Instruments, Dresser Industries, Dun and Bradstreet International LTD., Martin Marietta Corporation and Stauffer Chemical Corporation.

Five companies that have signed the principles received low scores on studies designed to rate companies' dedication to the Sullivan precepts. The committee will also investigate these companies.

Committee members debated the procedure they would use to judge these companies. Assistant Psychology professor Lola Boygo advocated a set policy for deciding which companies should be divested. "It's an efficient and pragmatic way of getting the success of this year's courses, as well as those of the future."

In my opinion, the Winter Study period plays an invaluable role at this institution. It's a time to think, a time to be creative, and a time to learn in an alternative fashion. We all get to know each other (faculty and students alike) in a way that does not, and cannot occur during the regular semesters. The abolishment of Winter Study might present the faculty with valuable research time, but it would be a tragic loss to the college community as a whole. Let's work on improving it instead. This will require a change of attitudes not only on the part of the students, but from faculty members as well. Both sides must be ready and willing to hear the arguments, then respond thoughtfully.

Christmas party-

Continued from Page 9

Finally, The Big Event was ready—the pie eating contest. As the ten and unders began their gastronomic feat, the announcement was made that Big Brothers and Sisters were also expected to compete in the vaunted event. Nonplussed, and already trapped by the "honest injun" pact I had made with my little brother to participate if he did, I accepted my bitter fate, and, throwing caution to the wind, laughed in the face of danger and fearlessly took my place at that illustrious table.

To my left, Marlene Sandish, heartbreaker, calmly placed her hands behind her back, and with a casual glance, eyed with confidence the piece in front of her. To my right, The Guy With The Curly Hair Who I've Never Seen Before growled in morbid anticipation. What? What's this? Banana Cream Pie?? They're making me eat Banana Cream Pie?? I HATE BANANA CREAM PIE. I lost. I got third place in a field of seven competitors, got banana cream pie all over my shirt, and I lost. I felt sick enough that I didn't want to eat again until convocation, and I lost. But as I walked home with my little brother, wet shirt in hand, I knew that I really hadn't lost anything at all, after all.

To the residents of Williams "A"—We the undersigned thank you for having the magnanimity to spare our lives. We must extend special thanks to Phillip Walsh for not decimating us with his karate. Phil, you have shown, through your actions, great fortitude and maturity. You're one of those who makes Williams great. Keep those hands in your pockets Big Guy. We're forever grateful!

Love,
Lehman Hall

Swimmers drown opponents

by Dave Woodworth

Katie Eckrich '85 won three events to pace the women's swim team to an overwhelming 98-43 win over Middlebury last week. Eckrich met the NCAA Division III qualifying time in the 50 breast, the 100 I.M., and the 100 breast, and set new college records in the 50 breast (31.4) and the 100 breast (1:09.2).

Eckrich, along with juniors Liz Jex, Katie Hudner, and Ann Tuttle, also helped gain a qualifying time for the 200 medley relay squad, which touched at 1:58.0. One other qualifying time was met by Cecilia Ciepiela '84 in the 200 I.M.

In all, Williams won 12 of 15 events in drowning the Panthers. Coach Carl Samuelson said that he was "extremely pleased" with the victory, and added, "We have more talent and overall depth on this team than on last year's team. We should do even better than last season." Considering the fact that last year's record was a mere 7-1 (?), that is saying a lot.

The men's swim team won 11 of 13 events in crushing the University of Connecticut, 81-30, in their first meet of the season last Wednesday. An outstanding performance was turned in by diver Jamie Stockton '83, who qualified for the NCAA Division III finals with scores of 240.05 and 163.10 for 11 dives. Mike Regan '82 also qualified for the finals in the 50 free, with a time of 21.9. Jeff Mook '83 aided the Ephs' cause with wins in the 200 (1:48.0) and 500 (4:59.2) freestyle.

Samuelson said that he was "ecstatic" over his team's showing and was "very optimistic" about the rest of the season.

LETTERS

Continued from Page 2
they would like more input on what to offer. During the 1982 Winter Study, we the students should engage in the challenges presented, but if we find ourselves in courses that fall short of our expectations, we should offer them constructive feedback on how they could be done better. Thereby we may improve the success of this year's courses, as well as those of the future.

In my opinion, the Winter Study period plays an invaluable role at this institution. It's a time to think, a time to be creative, and a time to learn in an alternative fashion. We all get to know each other (faculty and students alike) in a way that does not, and cannot occur during the regular semesters. The abolishment of Winter Study might present the faculty with valuable research time, but it would be a tragic loss to the college community as a whole. Let's work on improving it instead. This will require a change of attitudes not only on the part of the students, but from faculty members as well. Both sides must be ready and willing to hear the arguments, then respond thoughtfully.

Pete Didisheim, '82

Three compete in national field hockey tournament

by Ted Leon

"It was a great time and a perfect opportunity to play with and against some excellent competition... A nice way to end a good season."

Beth Connolly '82, Dorothy Briggs '84 and Williams Field Hockey Coach Chris Larson, just returned from Orlando, FL, where they played on the Northeast squads in the United States Field Hockey Association National Tournament held November 26-29.

Briggs and Connolly were named to the New England All-Star team after competing in a Northeast College Tournament. This all-star team went on and played several club teams in the Northeast Regional Tournament.

The three were then chosen to go to the Northeast Trials which were held at Brown University, November 21 and 22.

Their performance at the trials yielded excellent results. Briggs was placed on the third team, Connolly on the second. Larson, a member of the U.S. National Team, made first team. All three made the final cut and thus traveled to Orlando

CLASSIFIEDS
PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30.
The Mole Hole.
BEWARE: Only 26 days left before RWM returns to Williams! Rex—How's life in Woodbridge Castle?

Save energy

To the editor:

Energy conservation means more than saving Williams College a lot of money. It is also one of the greatest considerations we can give our fellow human beings. Saving energy doesn't need to imply discomfort or inconvenience. It means a strong awareness of using energy carefully, which could result in significant cutbacks in energy consumption. These cutbacks could lead to less dependence on foreign supplies of oil and other fuels, reducing international tensions; less use of nuclear fission or coal-fired plants which cause severe environmental damage; and cheaper prices for energy. Ideally, these benefits could mean better and safer international relations; a cleaner environment; less financial burdens for everyone, particularly the poor; and more available resources for future generations.

There are easy ways for us to save energy here at school. If we have storm windows, we should be sure they are down all winter. Also, we should line our windows with the school's weather stripping putty. If our room becomes too warm, and we have a radiator control, we can turn the radiator off or open the door rather than opening the window. We should really avoid electric heaters (a concerted effort of the above steps or a call to B&G should make them unnecessary). We can turn lights and stereos off when we no longer need them—especially when we leave the room. We could also share refrigerators more and cut down on our use of blow dryers. If we are careful in taking these and other energy conservation measures, we could save a great deal of money and energy for ourselves, for the school, and for our society. It is certainly worth the effort.

Lorraine Driscoll '82
Williams College Energy Intern

Fingerprinting

To the editor,

I am very distressed when I read in the Record about an alleged "college-age white male" accosting a female on this campus. Before I vent my rage on the Record, though, I would like to point out that I think it is disgraceful for the Administration to have a section in the Student Handbook about academic honesty and not an explicit one concerning "sexual harassment." But this is not what this letter is about. It is about the use of an identifying term, namely "college-age white male." I personally hate having fingers pointed in my direction, and "college-age" sounds too much like college student. Was she accosted by a college student, of this college or any other, or was she accosted by a male between 18 and 22 years of age? I don't think that the Record should open itself to the business of fingerprinting unless there's more to it, and if there is, the Record should report it. Fingerprinting only makes a tense situation worse.

Orrin Murray '84

SECRET SANTA IDEAS!

Candy Cane Pens
Santa Pens
Miniature Hallmark Candles
Cube Puzzle Key Chains
Christmas Pins
Decorative Ornaments

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown

Telephone 458-4920

Wrestlers start off strong

Winning two out of three matches, the Ephmen did well but failed to capture the four-way meet held at Williams Saturday. Plymouth State rolled over all three opponents to win the meet and boost its record to 5-1.

Williams beat the University of Hartford, 29-18, and the University of Maine Presque Isle, 38-12. Plymouth State beat those two schools and also topped the Ephmen, 31-14, to take the meet.

Head Coach Joe Dailey considered the team's 2-1 beginning the "best start we've been off to in a while." He is very pleased with the progress thus far and feels that Williams may be the best it has been in four or five years.

Williams was led by sophomore Ken Taylor who wrestled at the 142 lbs. level and won all three matches with two pins. Also showing well for the Ephmen was junior co-captain John Donovan, who was 2-0 on the day. Sophomore Lee Ordeman, who is wrestling for the first time, was 2-1 with wins over Hartford University and University of Maine Presque Isle.

Also registering pins for Williams were freshman Matt Glauinger, sophomore Bob Nutting and freshman Scott Pond.

The team will lose its heavy-weight, Bob Nutting, over Winter Study. Also, sophomore Chris Woodworth, who won his first match Saturday, injured his shoulder, but it is probably not serious.

On the positive side, the team plans to gain its 118 lbs. wrestler, senior Mike Rosenfelder, after the Christmas break. The team forfeited all its matches at that weight this Saturday. Rosenfelder is too heavy but will probably be down to 118 lbs. by January.

When the team returns from vacation, it must face the tough Albany and Union squads.

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY OF JERUSALEM

1982/83 PROGRAMS FOR AMERICAN STUDENTS

- ☐ ONE YEAR PROGRAM—for college sophomores and juniors.
- ☐ REGULAR STUDIES—for college transfer students toward B.A. and B.Sc. degrees.
- ☐ GRADUATE STUDIES—Master's, Doctoral and Visiting Graduate programs.
- ☐ SUMMER COURSES—given in English.

PLEASE CHECK DESIRED PROGRAM

For Application and Information, write:
Office of Academic Affairs
American Friends of the Hebrew University
1140 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10036 (212) 840-5820

Name _____
Address _____
City/State/Zip _____

Budweiser. KING OF BEERS. ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Junior Steve O'Day romped through the Berkshire Basketball Classic with 36 points and 26 rebounds in two games to lead the Ephmen to win the tournament for the second year in a row. Steve, this Bud's for you.

this Bud's for you!

Come celebrate the end of the semester with champagne at the Log! The Log will be open through December 18. Happy Holidays to all from The Log.

THE LOG

SKI PACKAGES
WE OFFER QUALITY PACKAGES FOR NORDIC AND ALPINE SKIERS AT ALL LEVELS

X-C:

XC WAXLESS
Trak Nowax Ski	$ 95.00
Trak Tour Leather Boot	$ 35.00
Trak Pismo 75MM Bindings	$ 9.00
Trak Bamboo Poles	$ 8.00
Mounting	$ 4.00
Total	$151.00
PACKAGE PRICE	$124⁹⁵

ALPINE:

BEGINNER ALPINE
Rosignol Challenger Ski	$160.00
Nordica Pulsar Boot	$ 95.00
Tyrolia 160 Binding	$ 84.95
Bancrafters Pole	$ 11.95
Mounting	$ 8.00
Total	$359.90
PACKAGE PRICE	$289⁰⁰

XC WAXABLE

Rosignol Caribou Skis	$ 95.00
Trak Tracker Boot	$ 65.00
Trak Pismo 50/12 Binding	$ 11.00
Exel Nova Poles	$ 12.95
Mounting	$ 4.00
Total	$187.95
PACKAGE PRICE	$155⁰⁰

INTERMEDIATE ALPINE

Rosignol S3 Ski	$225.00
Nordica Cosmos Boot	$145.00
Salomon 626 Binding	$ 99.95
Scott Classic Pole	$ 29.95
Mounting	$ 8.00
Total	$507.90
PACKAGE PRICE	$410⁰⁰

OR PUT TOGETHER YOUR OWN PACKAGE AT A SAVINGS OF 15%-20%
CHRISTMAS LAYAWAYS ACCEPTED
MASTER CHARGE—VISA

Goff's Sports, inc.
MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

SOME GREAT NEW CUTOUT ALBUMS:

Dance Craze (live ska)	$2.99
"more" Specials	2.99
Sex Pistols "Great R & R Swindle"
CCR Royal Albert Hall Concert	3.49
Beatles "Greatest" (import)	3.99
Animals "House of the Rising Sun"	4.49
Kinks "Low Budget"	3.49
John Coltrane "Jupiter Variation"	3.49
Miles Davis (double prestige)	5.99

and too many more to list!

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS
131 Water Street - 458-5229 Open 10-6

To the residents of Williams "A"—We the undersigned thank you for having the magnanimity to spare our lives. We must extend special thanks to Phillip Walsh for not decimating us with his karate. Phil, you have shown, through your actions, great fortitude and maturity. You're one of those who makes Williams great. Keep those hands in your pockets Big Guy. We're forever grateful!

Love,
Lehman Hall

SECRET SANTA IDEAS!

Candy Cane Pens
Santa Pens
Miniature Hallmark Candles
Cube Puzzle Key Chains
Christmas Pins
Decorative Ornaments

 McClelland's
36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

Budweiser. KING OF BEERS. ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Junior Steve O'Day romped through the Berkshire Basketball Classic with 36 points and 26 rebounds in two games to lead the Ephmen to win the tournament for the second year in a row. Steve, this Bud's for you.

this Bud's for you!

Co-captain Al Lewis, who was named MVP of the Berkshire Classic, skies for a lay-up. (Farley)

Squash tops nine teams

Beating all nine of its opponents, Williams ran away with the ten team, three day round robin tournament held at Williams this weekend. Williams, the only team in the tournament to play every other team, went undefeated to be the uncontested winner.

Navy and Cornell did not face each other and beat every team except Williams to post 4-1 and 6-1 records respectively. Hamilton was the next best team with a 6-2 mark for the tournament, which ran from Friday afternoon until Sunday evening.

The most impressive player in the tournament was Fordham's All-American Bill Ramsay, who played at number one and was undefeated all weekend. His only serious challenge came from Williams' Greg Zaff, whom he beat, 17-15, in the fifth game. That was Zaff's only loss. Other than that match, Ramsay didn't allow any opponent to score double figures against him in any game.

Williams senior captain Kenyon Miller was 7-0 playing at number three to remain undefeated this season. Also unbeaten for the Ephs was number four player, sophomore Bill Nau who was 8-0 and is also undefeated this season.

An interesting feature of the weekend was that Williams played two matches simultaneously on Saturday afternoon. Head Coach Sean Sloane split the varsity in half and filled in with junior varsity players. Altogether, Williams used 25 players during the weekend which pleased Sloane very much.

Sloane said that this was the Ephs' best performance ever in this round robin. The other participants were Babson, Bowdoin, Colby, Columbia, and Vassar.

The team dropped its opening match of the season losing 6-3 to Tufts. Despite three wins from the top four singles, the Ephs could not pull off needed victories from the other five matches.

Zaff, playing at number one, won the day's most exciting match-up, which pitted him against a formidable Saki Kahn. Kahn (who is the nephew of squash legend Sharif Kahn) fell to Zaff 3-2, 15-14 in the fifth game. Zaff called the game "the greatest victory of my life."

Miller managed to outlast Mike Kingsley, 3-2, 15-10, in the fifth. Miller, playing at number three, was joined in the win column by Nau, who, despite the fact that he began playing squash seriously only as a freshman, blanked Peter Lenard of Tufts, 3-0.

The match was decided in the number five and number six singles matches as Jeff Sultar '84, and Tad Chase '82 both lost 3-2. Sultar was narrowly defeated by Scott Packard in the fifth game, 15-11, while Chase, who had the best personal record in dual matches last year, lost to Bill Allen in the fifth, 15-7.

by John Leavitt

Falling to the fast-skating Salem State squad, 8-2, Friday, the men's hockey team dropped its record to 1-1.

Salem State's fleet-footed forwards proved too much for Williams to handle as they unloaded 48 shots at goalie Dan Finn.

Offensively, Williams fired 35 shots at the Salem net. Charlie Thompson caromed a goal in off the Salem goalie at 15:24 of the second period. Brian Rutledge and Jon Dayton assisted on the goal. The only other Williams goal came at the 18:00 mark of the second period with Bob Brownell connecting on a pass from David Calabro.

The team opened its season Wednesday with a 5-1 win over AIC. The game featured a strong Williams' showing offensively as well as some fine goaltending from Finn.

Doug Jeb put Williams on the scoreboard at 9:49 of the first period on a pass from Brownell from behind the net. AIC had some good opportunities during the opening period but Finn held them at bay.

Lewis MVP

Ephs take Berkshire Classic

by John Clayton

Winning their second straight Berkshire Classic, the men's basketball team upped its record to 2-1 this weekend. Beating Keene State Saturday night, 80-75, and Albany State, 65-57, on Sunday afternoon, the Ephs won the tournament, placed two players on the all-tourney team and had the MVP. Earlier in the week, the Ephs lost to Hamilton, 80-62.

"Tough man-to-man defense in the second half won it for us," said Coach Bob Peck of Sunday's Albany State game. "Steve O'Day had a great game Saturday night, but his defense was even better Sunday."

The highlight of the game came just before halftime, as the Ephs were down 30-16 with 2:30 remaining. In a team effort, they scored 13 straight points to end the half down only one. The scoring burst was capped by an Art Pidorlano steal with five seconds left and subsequent lay-up at the buzzer.

Pidorlano and O'Day were the scoring leaders with 17 and 12 points. Captains Al Lewis and Jeff "Fuzzy" Fasulo had 10 points apiece. For the losers, center John Dieckelman had 18 and munchkin guard Dan Croutier (listed at 5'7" but closer to 5'4") had 17.

Al Lewis was named tournament MVP, and Pidorlano was also named to the all-tourney team.

"The key to the Keene State game," said Coach Peck, "was that we controlled the tempo despite the fact that they were quicker. Our star of the game was Steve O'Day, who had the best game of his Williams career."

The junior center had 22 points on an assortment of lay-ups and short jump shots. Peck also complimented Captains Lewis and Fasulo ("consistent") and sophomore guard Ed Schmidt ("did the job when we needed him").

Keene State (1-4) was never able to play good defense against the Ephs' shuffle offense. Their press was erratic and they were never able to take advantage of their superior quickness.

Williams led through most of the game, but Keene State kept close enough to tie the game at 69 with 4:30 remaining. But Williams bounced right back, finally going up by four with a minute remaining. Keene State was forced to foul to get the ball, and, as usual, it didn't work.

A strong Hamilton press was the key to the Ephs' loss Tuesday night. "They controlled the tempo of the game," said Peck, "and forced us into errors."

Hamilton coach Tom Murphy agreed. "Our press hurt them," he said. "We got the lead early and they had a play catch-up." Hamilton jumped off to an early lead, relying on spurts of 12-3 (at the 15 minute mark) and 12-2 (with 4 minutes left) to propel them to a 41-24 halftime lead. The shooting of juniors Bob Kiely and Ron Evans was crucial, as was the Hamilton press, which kept the Williams guards off balance all night.

In the second half Williams came out with a livelier, more exciting tempo but Hamilton responded in kind. The awesome play of Hamilton's Charles Robison on the boards dwarfed the good shooting of the Ephs' Fasulo and Pidorlano (12 and 14 points respectively). The Ephs stayed even throughout the second half, but the big lead was too much to overcome.

Ephwomen bouncing

by Dave Woodworth

Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin faces a rebuilding season in 1981-82 as the women's basketball team lost three of last year's stars to graduation. Laurene von Klan (11.5 ppg), Cathy Gernert (10 ppg), and Joy Howard (5 ppg), last year's tri-captains, are gone, and the gaps must be filled by incoming freshmen. Hudson-Hamblin notes that at least seven players will be vying for the starting spots.

Leading the Lady Ephs will be senior Co-captain Terry Dancewitz, who led the team last season with a 14.5 ppg average. Dancewitz, a three-year starter at power forward, has a good shot at becoming the first woman in Williams history to score 1,000 points.

Another starting position will be filled by sister Anne Dancewitz '82, who is also a three-year starter at center and is the other co-captain. Anne led the team in rebounding and assists last year, to go along with her average of 10 ppg.

Another veteran is Cathy Evans '83, a good baseline player who is the team's defensive specialist. Evans had an 8 ppg average in 1980-81. Other returnees are center Kathleen Gilmore '83 and forward Tracy Burrows '84.

Hudson-Hamblin calls the 6'1" Gilmore "a defensive presence under the boards," getting key rebounds and blocked shots. Burrows "has a lot of potential," according to Hudson-Hamblin, who adds that "we're waiting for her to put it together."

Two freshmen who will see a lot of action are point guard Lynne Jaycobs and forward Kay Lackey. Jaycobs has great quickness and anticipation, and winds up on the end of a lot of fast breaks. Lackey possesses a good outside shot, combined with an inside game that features strong moves to the hoop.

Williams will face a tough 20-game schedule starting in January, with quality teams including Dartmouth and Clark on the horizon. In preparation, the Lady Ephs have scrimmaged Union and Canton, and have looked good in winning both.

But Hudson-Hamblin notes that her young, inexperienced team "will have to mesh quickly" in order to match last year's 17-4 record and NIAC championship.

Pucksters split in opening week

At 17:31 of the first period Williams scored again when Co-captain Tom Resor sent Calabro in alone on the AIC goalie. Calabro waited for the goalie to go down and then fired a shot into the upper corner.

Williams looked listless in the second period as AIC closed the gap to 2-1 at 6:49.

The third period belonged to the Williams power play unit. The Ephs scored all three of their third period goals while on power plays. Ed Finn opened the scoring at 1:25 of the period when he let go a tremendous slap shot from the left point while AIC had two men in the penalty box. Resor and Calabro picked up the assists on the goal. Rutledge scored at 14:03 on a pass from Brownell.

The final Williams goal came just ten seconds later when Greg Jacobson scored during a scramble in front of the net with assists going to Vallee and Flood.

Salem State goalie deflects shot wide as Ephs scramble in front of the net during Salem's 8-2 win. (Milloy)

Discipline Committee Acts: Suspended Student Stays

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Professor Charles Dew, chairman of the Discipline Committee, released the following statement concerning the Committee's decision in a second sexual harassment case:

"In two separate meetings lasting a total of ten hours the Discipline Committee heard a number of charges brought by several students alleging violations of College rules and regulations. The accused student was "sexual assault." The Committee found the defendant guilty and suspended him for one year, reported two witnesses.

The defendant appealed the decision at a hearing on Wednesday, January 6. Twelve of the Committee's 16 members were present. The charge was again sexual assault, and allegedly the committee upheld its guilty verdict. However, the punishment was changed from suspension to permanent probation.

One witness claimed that she and other witnesses had been harassed by friends of the defendant. Another witness said she had not been harassed.

The terms of the probation reportedly are that the defendant may take no action in the future which he deems aggressive and that he must tell his friends to stop harassing the witnesses.

Dew said that he could not comment on the specific terms of the probation because "it would be a violation of Committee procedures on confidentiality." He added, however, that "setting probation is a complex procedure. The Discipline Committee sets probation with the interests of the student and the college community in mind."

According to a witness, the hearing was conducted like a trial.

Dew responded that, "As a fundamental right of due process all accused students are entitled to hear the charges against them and ask the witnesses questions." Dew however continued that, "There are never any lawyers or counsel present, either for the prosecution or the defense at Committee hearings."

When it was pointed out that rumors were circulating around the campus because of the lack of information, O'Connor replied, "In this case, those rumors will just have to remain."

But a witness in the case alleged that the Deans were first planning to expel the defendant, but decided, as is their right, to refer the case to the Discipline Committee.

The Committee met the week before Christmas break. The charge at the hearing allegedly Recent expansion of the Slippery Banana on Spring Street increased floor space by almost 1000 square feet and allowed the introduction of a variety of specialty foods and a new full production kitchen which turns out everything from salad to chicken parmesan. (Farley)

Early admissions show potential

by Laura Seligsohn

Acceptance letters went out to 158 of the 437 Early Decision (ED) applicants last month, according to Director of Admissions Phil Smith. Two hundred fifty-four applications were deferred until the regular admissions process while 25 were rejected outright.

The total number of ED applicants was down 5 per cent from last year's 453. Smith expects the early acceptances to comprise about 30 per cent of the Class of 1986.

Six blacks applied for early admission, up from zero a year ago. Early decision acceptances included two Asian-Americans, two blacks, two Hispanics and one native American.

Although fewer foreign students applied ED, overall applications were "better in terms of geographical distribution than last year... there was a wide geographical spread," according to Assistant Director of Admissions Michael Reed.

Smith noted that the statistics show fewer students applied ED and more were accepted than in the past, indicating what he considers "a stronger group... I think we've got a terrific base."

Assistant Director of Admissions Karen Fisher added, "I was just awed at how powerful this year's group was—an infinite variety of very talented individuals."

According to Smith, the Admissions Office discouraged ED applications "even more aggressively than last year," when ED applications dropped 15 per cent from the previous year.

Smith explained that Admissions officers look for candidates "who are in the top range of their classes in terms of performance and program, exert a strong presence within school and community, and score well on the SATs—a sort of three-legged stool."

Continued on Page 6

Nicaragua Colloquium marks revolution

by Peter Nicholas

"What is the future of Nicaragua? Whether it is Communist, Socialist, or Marxist-Leninist, I want to tell you all we want to make a paradise, and our country has been denied a paradise," exclaimed Carlos Chamorro, Charge d'Affaire of the embassy of Nicaragua, in his keynote speech last Friday for the four-day colloquium, "Nicaragua—Understanding a Revolution."

The colloquium, held in honor of Marcel Pallais, Williams Class of '77, who was involved with the Sandinista movement until his assassination in Managua on October 4, 1979, included films, lectures, and panel discussions.

The Somoza dynasty "used and abused the whole country," according to Chamorro, "but the revolution is in the hearts of all Nicaraguans. To succeed we must enhance the communication between the sexes in Nicaragua, and between the people of Nicaragua and the people of other countries in the world... Communication is the most important thing."

Chamorro charged the American press with sensationalizing the events in Nicaragua, reporting, for example, that "four businessmen were put in jail by the Sandinistas, and not reporting that fifty Communists also went to jail."

The Reagan administration's charges that the Sandinista movement is atheist and totalitarian is also false, according to Chamorro: "The revolution has produced a strange marriage—Marxists and Christians—and they get along very well... It is a democratic process that is not drifting towards totalitarianism like Secretary of State Haig claims. We do have problems—there is unemployment—but now the poor people feel they have rights and dignity, and that they can aspire to anything now."

Continued on Page 6

Faculty questions discipline process

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

The faculty voted in their December 9 meeting to form an ad hoc committee to review the decision-making process, rules, and procedures of the Discipline Committee, partly in response to faculty and student concern over issues arising from recent sexual harassment cases.

Assistant Professor David Colby of the Political Science Department, who will chair the committee, discussed some of the issues brought up at the meeting, which were summarized in President Chandler's charge to the committee.

The review committee will look at the role of the Dean's Office in disciplinary matters.

Currently, Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor may take disciplinary action on his own or refer cases to the Disciplinary Committee.

"The Deans have many roles—counselors, prosecutors, grand jury, everything except appeal," Colby said. "There is concern whether these roles are in conflict. Students may be discouraged from coming in for help if they view the Dean as an adversary."

"It is difficult to combine these different roles," conceded O'Connor, "but I'm not sure there's a better solution."

The review committee will also examine the Discipline Office in disciplinary matters.

Continued on Page 9

INSIDE THE RECORD

- Sandinistas Declare New Op-Ed page p. 3
- Outlook examines Asian-Americans p. 4
- Cars Crash in Fourth Album Attempt p. 7
- Men's Hoopsters win 5th straight p. 12

The Williams Record Editorials Rumor Control

Secrecy is creating a crisis of misconceptions that is polarizing the College community. The failure of the Honor and Discipline Committee to release adequate information about their cases and proceedings causes destructive rumor-mongering.

Absolute secrecy is an ideal that would protect the privacy of the people involved. Our close-knit campus works against this ideal, generating a flood of unofficial sources: room mates, team mates, bystanders with open ears. The resulting rumors present conflicting accounts of the same incident. Students demand specific disciplinary measures against acts that did not even occur. As a recent example, a single incident of harassment was described as everything from rape to a casual hello on Spring Street. The cacophony of accusations and demands that followed served only to stifle discussion, foment hostility, and generate unwarranted suspicion. This is not consciousness raising; it is prejudice raising.

The vow to secrecy taken by the Administration and the Honor Committee leads to a vacuum of information. The tales that fill this vacuum are more damaging to the offender, victims, and authorities than the truth. Battle lines replace communication lines as accusers and defenders withdraw to entrenched positions. The "facts" they hurl at each other and at involved parties are sadly based only on hearsay.

The Honor Committee's rapid official statements are worse than useless; they explain little and only fuel imaginations. Specific charges against the accused should be defined. Revealing evidence that clarifies the issue, without leading to identification of people involved, dispels rumor and insures campus-wide confidence in the Committee's decisions.

Record 1982

The month of January will be a time of experimentation at the Record. New approaches, new layout and new paper are some of the elements that will change. We look forward to your comments and criticisms of the changes, and we hope you will suggest additional improvements for us to try.

Our new Op-Ed page will be a forum for opinion pieces on campus, local, national and international issues. Whether you are inspired to weekly writing or a single article, we encourage you to submit unsolicited material for the page. Satire, plain humor, and serious commentary are all welcome.

Display pages will be a new feature. News and Sports have traditionally held the front and back pages respectively, and with this issue, Outlook, Features, and Arts will have inside "display pages" with little or no advertisements, a bold logo at the top, and a layout that highlights the featured articles. This will make it easier to find the departments of the paper, and make the articles more readable.

Our Outlook section will expand in scope to direct its attention to more national and international topics. Outlook will continue to provide an in-depth presentation of one issue each week, concentrating in a way no other Record department can.

In the News department, we plan to give a perspective on Williams issues that goes beyond the Purple Valley. Many news stories will be accompanied by a "side bar" article explaining how other colleges deal with the same issue. The Williams community will be able to draw on the experience of others.

Letters to the editor will continue to be due by 2 p.m. each Sunday. The letters should be kept under 250 words in length. If you cannot adequately cover what you have to say in that space, consider writing it as a piece for our Op-Ed page.

Quotation of the Week

"I hope I'll be able to buy my Twinkies and Fritos now at that health food place."

—Student on Slippery Banana's recent expansion

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

NEWS
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

MANAGING EDITOR
Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK
Jon Tigar

FEATURES
Phil Busch

OP-ED
Paul Sabbah

ENTERTAINMENT
Ron Isen

LAYOUT
Michael Govan

SPORTS
Dan Keating

PHOTOGRAPHY
Steve Farley

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letters

Ellington

To the editor:

I am greatly disturbed by the school's recent decision not to offer Mark Ellington a full time teaching position. Mark has performed admirably in his roles as Head Diving Coach, Assistant Swim Team Coach, J.V. Soccer Coach, J.V. Lacrosse Coach, and instructor in numerous phys-ed classes. As a former co-captain of the Williams swim team, I have seen that Mark has unsurpassed expertise, an excellent rapport with students, and a unique and infectious enthusiasm which makes him invaluable on the Williams campus. And, Mark, through his work with the Williamstown Boys' Club, is a respected member of the Williamstown community.

The fact that Mark was originally hired in a temporary position is irrelevant to the question at hand. The quantity and quality of work that Mark performs clearly justifies a full time teaching position. Although hiring part time coaches to replace Mark would (according to the athletic department) result in a saving in department salaries, this saving would not compensate for losing a man of Mark's caliber.

Mark has indicated his willingness to accept a position if offered. I urge the Committee on the 80's and the administration to reconsider Mark's situation before passing final judgment.

D. Gordon Cliff '81

Editorial Bias

To the editor:

I have received your bill for the 1981-82 subscription for $12.00 and advise you that I would like to cancel same.

I am appalled at your editorial policy whereby substantial political bias is reflected. It is recalled that about six weeks ago you published an article reporting a Roundtable held at the College concerning Reagan's economic policies. In fact, you printed a picture of one of the more notable participants at that Roundtable; however, in the text of the article you reported the views of only one individual who, as I recall, was a Political Science Professor at Boston College. Her views were decidedly ultra liberal if not downright militant when she concluded that "the poor should get to the streets." While I believe these views can legitimately be reported, so should other views that were undoubtedly expressed during the Roundtable discussion. While I cite only one article, I have found that the whole tenor of the published material is so biased as to not represent a credible report of what actually is happening in Williamstown.

Let's keep in mind that the Bill of Rights allowed full freedom of the press and together with the philosophies of our Founding Fathers created a superb nation. Is the Williams Record fulfilling its proper responsibility to its readership by displaying such an obvious editorial bias in its reporting of local events?

Thomas F. Hodgman '80

Gargoyle

To the editor:

Ron Isen's December 8 characterization of my reasons for moving the abolition of Gargoyle in 1980 (not 1981) was inaccurate.

I and other members supporting the motion (all graduates with the Class of 1980) were distinctly aware of the historical concept and purposes of Gargoyle. The group studied them in the fall of 1979. We felt, however, that Gargoyle's traditional criteria for admission opposed its function. The group purported to select "leading campus figures": generally those identified with one or more extra-curricular organizations, whether as heads thereof or highly involved therein. As such, members felt it difficult to establish any influence or identity as a group. The College associated them primarily with their individual activities, while Gargoyle's collective membership remained unpublished to avoid charges of elitism.

Without an identity, Gargoyle could not voice an independent concern. Other organizations were much more effective at voicing opinions on the limited number of issues arising at Williams.

It proved virtually impossible to create influence where there was none without reasserting Gargoyle's inherent elitism. Members' loyalties were first to the activities which made them "campus leaders." Obviously, their time went first to them too.

We submitted, in 1980, the suggestion that Gargoyle either slightly alter its selection criteria to recognize outstanding but perhaps less visible students who could devote more time and effort to the group, or disband. We foresaw fewer personality and scheduling conflicts and a diminished elitism which, as Steve Willard observed, would further better relations campus-wide. Instead, Gargoyle voted to remain true to historical composition but consequentially, influentially sterile. The next year Gargoyle passively disbanded.

Without specific power or a well-defined purpose popularly known by the College at large, Gargoyle probably cannot contribute significantly to Williams life unless membership begins after freshman year, is based on different criteria, or the group consciously limits itself to a single issue year-in and year-

Continued on Page 11

Duffy Graham

Quashing the Sandinista Revolution

For the very first time ever, when they had a revolution in Nicaragua, there was no interference from America!

Early in this century, General Augusto Cesar Sandino objected to free elections in Nicaragua which would be supervised by the United States. "To hell with it," he said, "I'm going out into the bush and fight the damn U.S. Marines." Such is a comment of which heroes are made. Now late in this century, those who carry his name, the Sandinistas, are governing Nicaragua, and are the subject of scrutiny by countries and the media from around the world.

The United States, of course, is particularly concerned about the Nicaraguan situation, because for years this country has had political and economic interests in this underdeveloped Central American country. Without President Somoza in power, many feel these interests are threatened. Our present administration is obviously worried not only about Nicaragua but all of Central America. Officials are stating as facts that the Soviet Union and the Cubans are responsible for the instability of the region. Former President Somoza says (perhaps naturally), "Nicaragua is a Communist state."

The Reagan administration certainly subscribes to that theory, and our Secretary of State has not ruled out the possibility that the United States will use military force in the area.

All of this talk is rather frightening—frightening because it shows our present government is not afraid to impose its own "values" on another people, frightening because our government thinks it knows what is good for another country, and perhaps most frightening because our society apparently does not object to such talk.

Certainly there is precedent for American intervention in other countries: Vietnam, the Bay of Pigs Invasion, and the Dominican Republic in 1965, just to name a few. In some of these cases our military efforts failed, in some they succeeded. But on another level, all such efforts are failures. Americans have gotten the idea into their heads that we know what is best for everyone (and that is invariably our own social/economic system). Our government and our society refuse to admit that others do not see us as we see ourselves. "Living in a free country," "God is on our side," "... by the people, for the people" are all phrases which we historically link with our own country. So, since they ousted a pro-American President, and have found it expedient to cite America as an aggressor and enemy of the Revolution, the Sandinistas must in our eyes phrase different ideals differently. Yet the above phrases are precisely the phrases being uttered by Sandinistas throughout Nicaragua.

The Cool Out

America seems to give no moral considerations to the right or wrong of intervening in other countries—we have done it consistently throughout history, particularly in our part of the globe. Why do we act this way? Certainly some sort of political/economic analysis is valid. Our economy benefits from resources and trade available in these countries. In addition, by flexing our muscles against these smaller countries, administrations have been able to propitiate those factions in our society who favor such aggression. Such an analysis provides insights, yet does not tell us about ourselves.

I return to what I find most frightening about the pronouncements of the Reagan Administration—our society permits them to go on. The reasons are at least two-fold. The first problem is that Americans ignore their past, particularly past wrongs. How many people in this country can discuss knowledgeably the incarceration of Japanese-Americans during World War II? How many know what happened in the Dominican Republic in 1965? How is it that many large and boisterous groups are only ten years later proclaiming Vietnam to be a noble and just war? This ignorance of our history is reflected in our popular culture: only for a brief period did best-selling music in this country contain large quantities of quality political and social commentary (in West Germany and England popular music is far more political), our T.V. programs are even less educational than our music, and our films are just as bad.

But our ahistorical consciousness is only part of the problem. Another significant factor in our refusal to criticize our actions around the world is that there now exists a tremendous gap between our rhetoric and the reality of what we are doing. I have no qualms with most of the proclaimed ideals of this country. Unfortunately they have become more abused than a car in a demolition derby. We now justify every action we take, domestically or internationally, with the terms "justice," or "freedom," or "democracy," so that only keen observers can emerge from the foggy

Continued on Page 8

Steve Willard

Cutting the costs of free love

It was cold and very windy Monday morning as a line of about 20 people stood outside the Thompson Infirmary. Each looked somewhat embarrassed at being seen there, but they were all there for the same reason; Peer Health was finally opening their much heralded contraceptive clinic.

The clinic, which Peer Health has been trying to start for over a year now, is mandated to dispense low-cost contraceptives to college students after appropriate counseling from Peer Health officials. No one would have known that the clinic was finally in business except for the billboard on Route 2 proclaiming "Want to get more enjoyment out of sex? Sheath those seething anxieties at the Williams Contraceptive Boutique." This was the only publicly announcing the new service other than a tasteful neon sign in the Infirmary window which was plugged in only after dark.

While waiting for the doors to open, I spoke with some of the rather nervous patrons. Joe and Jane (not their real names) were quite excited by the new service. "We're thrilled that they're finally opening," said Joe, clutching Jane tightly. "We've been going out for more than a year now. I've always wanted to consummate our friendship, but Jane wouldn't do it until we could get proper protection. It was O.K. last March when we thought the clinic would open up in only a few weeks. By September we were really desperate. I don't know how we made it through finals week."

"It's really been difficult," agreed Jane. "I have this naturally wanton look, but I've had to keep it to myself until they open the clinic. Now I'll be free," she whispered breathlessly. Joe did not hear this last remark, however, because a light had gone on in an upstairs window of the Infirmary and the crowd let out a resounding cheer.

Shortly after 8 a.m., the humble band was rewarded for its patience as the doors of the Infirmary swung open to a recorded trumpet fanfare. The crowd surged forward under a huge "Grand Opening" banner and scurried down the hall to the newly constructed Williams Contraceptive Boutique. The view was breathtaking. There, in one large room, was everything a college-age couple could hope for. On the far right was a set of glass display cases with condoms in every color of the rainbow. In the center of the room was a gigantic compact case with little neon pills that blinked on and off the disco beat of "Let's get Physical" which was playing over loudspeakers in the corner of the room.

The View From Here

There at the boutique, salespeople from Econ. 101 class showed customers a number of different styles of contraceptives and discussed the various advantages of each. After making a selection, the customer then moved down to a very harried cashier who would ring it up.

Following the free gift wrapping, the customer would then move out of the main showroom and into a small back room in order to receive counseling. After standing in line for about five minutes, each student would step up to a waist high table where a student counselor would ask what the customer planned to do with his newly purchased freedom. Following the response, the counselor would either bid the customer "Go forth, but don't multiply," or would remand the unfortunate student to another round of training films in the newly built "Fool-Around" theater. From speaking with other students, I learned that professions of undying love are popular with the counselors and that casual sex is frowned upon. As I walked by the tables, one student was unflinchingly insisting to his counselor that the condoms would be used solely as party gifts. The counselor, although greatly amused, signaled to waiting football players who dragged the student back in the direction of the theater.

Several days later I ran into one of the

Continued on Page 8

Harassment should be punished

In light of the recent cases of sexual/rape which have been brought before the Honor/Discipline Committee, I would like to make the following points.

Such cases are admittedly difficult. First of all, while the Student Handbook states that all students "must be free of... sexual harassment," it does not say what constitutes sexual harassment. Second, since most rapes/harassments occur between people who know each other, there will inevitably be a question of "consent."

At Williams, it is primarily up to the Honor/Discipline Committee to define "consent" and apply that definition to the cases it considers. Yet the actions it has taken against two students this year suggest that while the Committee acknowledges that these men did something wrong, it did not consider the incidents serious enough to warrant suspension.

VIEWPOINT

This situation creates a number of problems. First, students are given the message that sexual harassment/rape is not taken seriously, and punishment is likely to be minimal. Second, the women involved in the cases, in addition to the emotional trauma caused by the actual incidents, had to go through the humiliating experience of defending themselves before the committee. They have been subjected to further harassment (e.g. phone calls). And now they must live with seeing their assailants walking around campus with little more than a slap on the wrist.

The effect of this is to discourage other women who have been harassed or assaulted from reporting these incidents, knowing what they must endure in pursuing such cases, to no avail. And this perpetuates the problem in private while keeping it from the public, so that people think that these incidents simply don't occur.

Rumors have rapidly spread across campus. It seems that everyone has heard different stories but very few know all the facts. Students then make judgments based on incomplete and/or incorrect information.

Faith in the Honor/Discipline Committee is low in the eyes of many students and faculty. At the very least, the Committee owes the community an explanation of its actions, stating the guidelines which they use to make their decisions (e.g. why they do not consider a student who has harassed/assaulted more than one other student as being a threat to the community, or how they think that by telling an offender that he is not allowed on campus after 11 P.M. will keep him from harassing others).

It seems, however, that there may be a concerted effort to "hush up" the details of this last case. While discretion should be an important consideration, the secrecy surrounding this case has undermined student confidence in the Administration, the Deans, and the Honor/Discipline Committee.

I think it might be helpful if some standards were established to help both men and women determine what is acceptable behavior and what is not—and how unacceptable behaviors will be dealt with. While this may restrict the discretionary powers of the Committee, it will also reduce the possibility of misuse of those powers.

Perhaps the function of the Committee itself should be reconsidered. Rape is on a totally different level than are infractions of the Honor Code or other regulations. Because it involves deeply rooted prejudices, misconceptions and stereotypes, some other form of disciplinary structure needs to be instituted

James Crist

Acts of vandalism against student cars have prompted the installation of a seven-foot fence around the Mission Park parking lot.

Security fences Mission lot

A seven-foot chain link fence will be erected around the Mission Park parking lot in January in hopes of reducing vandalism. Director of Security Ransom Jenks announced last week.

Jenks explained that the lot, located behind the tennis courts, is perennially unpopular among students. "They're rather adamant about not parking there," he remarked.

Jenks noted, "there was not any more vandalism in this year than in past years—it's an ongoing thing... the lot is in a relatively secluded area, a desirable place for thieves to operate in." He listed thefts of radios and gasoline as examples of complaints.

The fence will completely surround the lot, with a gate at the exit which may be locked over vacations. "It will be available for secure storage on breaks," emphasized Jenks.

The cost of the fence, estimated at over $8000, will come entirely from student parking fees and fines. "It was my suggestion," said Jenks, "to use those monies—to put them directly back into security."

Jenks hopes the added security will help make the lot more attractive to student drivers. The lot could hold 300 to 400 cars, estimated Jenks, but is currently used by roughly 100. "I have visions of the lot being a place where every student would want to park," he commented.

Council plots Winter Study strategy

The College Council voted to appropriate $1500 for a new public address/sound system to be shared by the Log and the Williams Coffeehouse and discussed Winter Study at a sparsely attended meeting last Wednesday.

Council President Freddy Nathan '83 reviewed Council plans to increase support for Winter Study among faculty members. "We're really in the stretch run," he explained. "We want this Winter Study to be really successful."

Nathan announced the distribution of "Support Winter Study" buttons to all students and urged Council representatives to "make sure you remind everyone to wear them."

Fisher recalled, "I think I had one question all year." From September through November, six admissions officers visited more than 300 secondary schools in at least 30 states. By directing attention to urban areas like Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Houston, Los Angeles, New York, San Francisco and Washington, D.C., the staff was able to reach more minority candidates.

Nathan outlined what other student organizations are doing. "WCFM and the Record are planning things... the Gargoyle Society is drafting a sort of legal brief expressing what we see as the goals of the program. JA's have volunteered to explain the issue as best they can to the freshmen."

The Council also reviewed a request for funds to purchase a joint sound system for the Log and the Coffeehouse.

Log Manager Tom Johnson explained that both current systems are inadequate and described their deficiencies. "The Log sound system has been kind of a running joke for years," he remarked. "The speakers, which the hockey rink discarded, are not made for music."

Jon Scott '82, manager of the Coffeehouse, noted, "We now have old equipment that sufficed in the past. A new system would be a reasonable solution to both our sets of problems."

Nathan supported the appropriation, noting, "The sustaining fund is large... this might be the year we could absorb (the cost)." Council Treasurer Beth O'Leary set the sustaining fund at over $9100, not including a $5000 carryover from next year.

The proposal included an amplifier and control panel, two speaker columns, 3 microphones and stands, and cables. The sixteen Council members present approved the appropriation, but could not technically pass it until the arrival of another member halfway through the meeting established a quorum.

The original $1200 appropriation was amended to $1500 in case of cost overruns, with Johnson and Scott agreeing to return all unspent funds.

Speakers support Nicaragua

Continued from Page 1

Similarly, Gwen Sullivan, Williams Class of '79, who has worked in Nicaragua since her graduation, argued in Saturday's panel discussion that the revolutionary process in Nicaragua "in no way resembles what we've been hearing in the press. It is a popular, active, dynamic process where everyone is involved on a day-to-day basis."

Jane Cary Peck, a resident of Williamstown and an Assistant Professor of Religion and Society at Andover Newton Theological School in Newton, Mass., described in her lecture on Saturday the role of the Christians in the insurrection as "total."

"The Sandinistas and the Christians overlap... the Church in Nicaragua is a church of the poor, and it sees the Sandinistas as undertaking the revolution for the poor. The people will make the government accountable to the poor. The Sandinista movement is a dynamic instance of progressive democracy and of religion," she asserted.

All panelists in Saturday's discussion, "American Policy Towards Nicaragua," agreed the Reagan administration was working to undermine the Sandinista movement. Furthermore, if the United States' economic blockade is successful, the Nicaraguans do not have a "Cuban alternative." Because of the Soviet Union's involvement in Cuba, Vietnam, and Afghanistan, the U.S.S.R. may not be able to afford to give Nicaragua the kind of aid it needs.

Carlos Risco Ferrat, co-director of United States' Studies Institute of the Center for Economics Teaching and Research, a Mexican government-supported research center, maintained that the relations between the U.S. government and Nicaragua have always been strained because of a history of U.S. intervention dating back to the early 1800s.

Nevertheless, Ferrat sees the Nicaraguans as having a "warm, engaging response to the American people, and a desire to be friends... The Reagan administration is weighing public opinion in order to determine policy in the region."

Sick of being scalped by Renzi and Dewey?

Buy and sell your used books through the

POOH PERPLEX

located in the basement of Jesup

Open for book drop-offs

9 - 12 daily

Student bookie tells all

Mr. X is not likely to put his business experience on his Williams resume, because he earned $115 last semester from a business that is illegal in every state but Nevada. Mr. X is a bookie.

Mr. X printed point spreads and took bets on National Football League games. Each Tuesday during the season he took spreads from the Boston Globe, typed and xeroxed them, and distributed them to his customers before Sunday's games.

Bettors picked the winners of any 4 of the 14 games played, and turned their cards in to Mr. X with a $1 to a $5 bet. If all of a gambler's picks were right, he earned 10 times his bet. Five picks earned 15:1 odds.

Picking four football winners doesn't sound very difficult. It is. "The spreads are designed to make the games equal, and there are so many variables," explained Mr. X. A bettor must "cover the spread" instead of merely picking the winner. For example, if Dallas is favored by six points over Philadelphia, Dallas must win by at least six for a bet on the Cowboys to win.

"I used to play the cards back home," Mr. X said. "I wanted to here, but I couldn't find any. I did some thinking... Instead of paying a dollar a week to someone, why couldn't I be the guy everybody gives a buck to?" He decided to try it.

"The business started slowly, but by the third week word had gotten around and I had a steady clientele," Mr. X continued. "I usually took in between 17 and 25 dollars a week, about 20 cards. There was a lot of interest." Mr. X did not expand too far. "I was frightened of letting the operating get too big," he said.

Despite his steady profits, Mr. X always ran the risk of losing a lot of money. He only had to pay out four $10 payoffs on earnings of between $150 and $160, but on one occasion almost lost it all. "One week I almost lost $90," he said. "I'd made that much by then, but I'd also spent most of it. The Seattle Seahawks saved my skin. I was alone in the TV room, while the Pittsburgh bettors were probably already counting their winnings. I heard Seattle covered the spread late in the game, and I was overjoyed to say the least." Mr. X had a brief moment of panic later, before a long Pittsburgh touchdown run was nullified by a penalty. Seattle won the game. "That was my big week for losses, though," Mr. X noted. "I paid out $30."

Most customers bet $1 each week, but a few placed some $5 bets. "The $5 bets are good for that week's profit, but the bettors tend to shy away for a while after losing that much," Mr. X commented.

Continued on Page 9

Pianist plays jazz history

by Will Laymen

lick Wellstood can play.

Armed with some flopping hair, an untucked shirt, a Steinway in front of him and nearly a century of rich jazz tradition upon which to draw, Wellstood flew through two hours of solo jazz piano Sunday night in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Wellstood, who works and records regularly in New York, was the first performer of a number to be featured in this month's series of jazz events.

The informal program began with Maple Leaf Rag and proceeded from there, showcasing Wellstood's strong and enjoyable stride piano technique in varied and original interpretations of tunes by such names as James P. Johnson, Fats Waller, Duke Ellington and Cole Porter. As evinced in his choice of material, Wellstood is a strongly orchestral player whose roots in ragtime and stride form the basis of his eclectic style. The evening almost took on the character of a lesson in jazz history as Wellstood combined and shifted between various jazz idioms within single compositions.

Despite being a jazz pianist whose playing is centered around a strong left hand stride rhythm, the concert also featured music from Art Tatum, Earl Hines, Count Basie and even the more modern George Shearing, traces of which would appear in the concert from time to time and then vanish just as suddenly. Wellstood's strength was in molding these contrasts and tempo shifts into lovely miniatures, both coherent and engaging.

Continued on Page 9

Baroque harpsichord to come to the Clark

According to Victor Hill, January 15th's Griffin Hall concert features "one of the really great musical monuments of the Baroque era," Bach's Goldberg Variations, which will be performed by Hill on the harpsichord beginning at 8 P.M. at the Clark Art Museum.

The Variations, which were first commissioned in 1742 by Count Hermann Carl von Keyserlingk, were composed by Bach specifically for the Count's harpsichordist, Johan Gottlieb Goldberg, from whom the piece derives its name.

"The Count asked Bach to compose some pieces of a 'soft and somewhat lively character' which Gottlieb could play on nights when the Count suffered from insomnia," states Hill. "Instead of producing a simple set of entertainment pieces however, Bach undertook a 'monumental program of variations on a sarabande that had first appeared in 1725."

The Variations consist of ten sets of three variations, each preceded and followed by an aria on which the variations are then based. Because the work represents a "large formal structure that was designed to be apprehended in one setting," Hill will perform the 90 minute piece without intermission.

The harpsichord, the instrument for which the piece was composed, was the principal keyboard instrument of the Baroque period, occupying a prominent position in European music from 1500 up to almost 1800. A favorite of such famous composers as Bach, Handel and Scarlatti, the harpsichord has also enjoyed a resurgence of popularity in the 20th century. Resembling the piano in structure, it is distinguished from its more modern successor by its strings, which instead of being struck by hammers, are plucked by quills, and are then amplified in a resonant case.

Hill's own interest in Baroque music goes far back, stating "I've always been a nut about Bach." Beginning his musical career as an organist, Hill later switched over to the harpsichord, studying under such noted musicians as Gustav Leonhardt and Alice Ehlers.

When not in the classroom, where Hill is a full time professor with the mathematics department, Hill spends a good deal of his time performing, having spent his last sabbatical leave in 1976 on a concert tour of Europe. In addition, for his next

Continued on Page 10

The Cars

Shake It Up is boring

by Duffy Graham

Shake It Up, the newest album by The Cars, recently crept into the Top 10. The album offers nothing in the way of a new sound from this band, thus evoking the oft-heard criticism that all of their songs sound the same. To such comments, Cars' leader Ric Ocasek replies: "People who say it all sounds the same aren't listening closely enough."

Some may argue in turn that one should not have to listen closely to rock music, but such a debate misses the point: Shake It Up and the other two most recent albums are sorely lacking in that quality which made their debut album so appealing—urgency. Immediacy and desire are essential elements to all good rock music. Shake It Up is basically boring.

How does one explain the popularity of The Cars, whose first three albums were all million-sellers? Ocasek said in a recent interview that he felt the group "... offers an alternative. Maybe these kids can only take so much of Journey and Styx and they need something like us for balance." But more likely, The Cars are popular for exactly the same reason as those "supergroups"; their lyrics do not challenge the listener with a heavy message. Even Ocasek admits, "I don't have a real serious statement to make in the lyrics. People shouldn't get too hung up looking for hidden meanings." This is the best aspect of Ocasek's attitude toward his music—he doesn't take it too seriously.

There are few bright moments to salvage this album. Ocasek writes repeatedly about girls and love, which is acceptable if not preferable in rock music, but his girls are nowhere near as interesting as those in the songs of contemporaries Mick Jagger or Tom Petty. Here is a sample, from "Victim of Love": "She can take you anywhere she wants to/she can show you things that make you weak/she can make you think you're the only one/she can steal your heart with just one wink." Oh.

Despite the shortcomings of the album, the title track, "Shake It Up," will surely make the dance tapes at preppy parties everywhere.

Early acceptances

Continued from Page 1

In regard to the low number of minority candidates, Smith remarked, "It's very hard to get minority applicants to apply ED." Last year's absence of black ED applicants was attributed to the cross burning that occurred in November, shortly before ED applications were due.

Admissions officers noted few residual effects of the cross-burning. "I haven't encountered any questions from the kids I've talked to here, though on the road some asked," said Reed.

Fisher recalled, "I think I had one question all year."

From September through November, six admissions officers visited more than 300 secondary schools in at least 30 states. By directing attention to urban areas like Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Houston, Los Angeles, New York, San Francisco and Washington, D.C., the staff was able to reach more minority candidates.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30.
The Mole Hole.

Maggie, don't you miss reading about the investment policies in British nationalised industries?

Don't scalp tickets to heaven. Or you'll be judged unclean. Hell may be an orchestra seat But God's in the mezzanine.

—M. Cook 1968

Hey, sex kitten! It's cold here in the windy city! Care to warm me up over Christmas break? I love you! Your P.H.

Johnny's Rent-a-Lemon

$10 a day

10¢ a mile

Will deliver and pick up the cars in the Williamstown area.

Will rent to those 18 and older.

802-823-7272

TONIGHT

JUNIOR NIGHT AT THE LOG

discounts for all card-carrying members of the Class of '83.

FRIDAY
HAPPY HOUR

featuring hot spiced wine and happy hour prices

Next Open Mike Night

Wednesday, January 20

GET YOUR ACTS TOGETHER!

THE LOG

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

OUR ANNUAL 30% TO 60% OFF CLEARANCE SALE

Levi's DENIM STRAIGHT LEG
AND BOOT JEANS
SALE 13⁶⁵ Reg. 19.50

Levi's CORDUROY STRAIGHT LEG
AND BOOT JEANS
SALE 13⁶⁵ Reg. 19.50

Levi's ALL LEVI SHIRTS
50% OFF

SPECIAL BUY! CORDUROY STRAIGHT LEG IRREGULARS
Levi's SALE $10⁰⁰

ALL WOMEN'S CLOTHES ALL 50% OFF
Blouses, shirts, jackets, pants, Levi's, J.G. Hooks, Nell Flowers, Macintosh, Bremor.

40% OFF WATERPROOF LEATHER BOOTS SALE PRICE
Reg. Price $59.95 to $79.95 35⁹⁷ to 47⁹⁷

WOMEN'S LADY LEVI'S CORDUROY AND DENIM SHIRTS
ALL BLOUSES, SHIRTS, JACKETS AND BENDOVER PANTS
ALL 50% OFF

ALL SPEEDO BATHING SUITS ALL 60% OFF
... Women and Children

50% OFF MEN'S AND WOMEN'S TENNIS SHORTS, SHIRTS AND SKIRTS SALE 7⁵⁰ to 12⁴⁷
Reg. Price $15.99 to $24.95

50% OFF DAQUST HOCKEY SKATES SALE PRICE
WITH TUCK BLADES 42⁵⁰ - 87⁵⁰
Reg. Price $85 to $175.00

MANY OTHER UNADVERTISED SALE ITEMS
NO RETURNS OR EXCHANGES—ALL SALES FINAL
CASH • MASTERCARD • VISA ONLY
WILLIAMS CO-OP
25 SPRING STREET, WILLIAMSTOWN

Willard: Contraceptives—

Continued from Page 3
founders of the new service talking to a friend I had seen in the boutique early Monday. It seems that Peer Health keeps a record of which students use the new service, and the counselor was going to write home to my friend's parents to tell them of his recent purchases. After my friend made the necessary payment to ensure silence, I asked the counselor how he managed to keep contraceptives priced so low. "We could have given them away free," he responded, "but we take a Biblical view. People should pay for their sins. Through our effort, however, students now pay only a nominal fee." College Chaplain Stephen Schmitt later refused to comment on the statement.

In the first few days of operation the new boutique is clearly a thriving success. Students are coming from all over the state to stock up on sexual supplies for next semester. At this point there are no plans for a franchising operation, but Peer Health co-ordinators won't rule out that possibility. Privately they confirm that members of the College Development Office think it could be a great new money-raiser for the College. Best of luck, guys.

Graham: Sandinista!

Continued from Page 3
quagmire of rhetoric and see where they are. We all use such terms flippantly. Many in our own country, and also around the world, do not see our society in the glowing terms we would use to describe it. We accept without hesitancy the notion that these terms explain a situation.

We can relate all of this to the present case of Nicaragua. Very few of us, myself included, can give the history of Nicaragua and American involvement there. I can say that it is not so simple as the administration would have us believe. We must make an effort to understand the people there, not from our perspective, but from theirs, and be willing to admit that what we want for them, or for any country, may not be what they want.

*Well the people fought the leader,
And up he flew ...
With no Washington bullet what else could he do?*

—Clash

BEER SPECIALS!

Michelob 12 pak 12 oz. NR 5.49 each
Weideman 12 oz. NR 5.99/case
Molsons 12 oz. NR 11.99/case
Tuborg 12 oz. NR 7.99/case
Labatts 12 oz. NR 11.49/case

Schmidts Carling Rheingold
16 oz. Returnable bottles 7.49/case plus 2.50 deposit

PARTY WINE SPECIAL!

Bella Vino California Chablis, Burgundy,
Rose 3 liter jug 3.99/each

Bring this ad in for 50¢ off
any case of beer. Good through January

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

WINTER STUDY BEER SPECIAL

Wurzburger
$3.15/6-pk
reg. $4.69

WINE SPECIAL Italian Soave

Italian Soave
1.5 liter bottle

$2.49

The Clip Shop. The hair salon of the 80's for He & She

Your hairstyle should match your individual looks and personality. The stylists of the Clip Shop know the importance of giving their clients something they can handle by themselves when they leave the salon. And also something that suits their individual bone structure. In essence, that's what's evident in the styles worn by the models pictured here.

Stop in for a free consultation and see what possibilities could be in store for you.

The Clip Shop has three convenient locations.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
458-9167

PITTSFIELD, MA.
447-9576

BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823

Mr. X beats the spread—

Continued from Page 7

Customers ranged from novices playing a card out of curiosity to compulsive gamblers. "There was one guy playing two or three cards a week," said Mr. X. "Once he had to dig way down for enough change to be able to pay. He was a bit hardcore."

Mr. X quit with one week left in the season. "I was scared," he said. "I was already over my goal of $100, and teams were becoming predictable. People were picking three out of four. I took the money and ran, for which I took a lot of flak from people who wanted to keep playing. . . I used most of my winnings for personal enjoyment—beer and a fall break trip."

"I wouldn't recommend this business to others," said Mr. X. "There's a real risk of getting burned." He admitted a fear of being caught. "I get the feeling that this school would be strict about things like this," he said.

"It's a victimless crime," Mr. X added. "In fact, I don't see it as a crime. I'm dealing with adults who know what they're doing, not 15-year-old kids." Mr. X has told his father of his business. "He plays at home, so it's all right," he commented, "but Mother wouldn't be pleased."

And Mr. X's pick for the Super Bowl? "It'll be Dallas, no question about it."

Jazz concert—

Continued from Page 7

Wellstood's clever transformations accounted for a bulk of the evening's magic. Under Wellstood's guidance, Jingle Bells became a bluesy, jumping number that grabbed hold of the notes and knew when to laugh at itself. John Coltrane's Giant Steps, a seminal work in modern jazz, traveled back to the turn of the century, emerging as an angular and provocative rag.

Wellstood's jazz lesson seemed well appreciated. The audience was delighted when it recognized such well known songs as The Pink Panther, hints of which were in Viper's Drag, and by Vince Guaraldi's Peanuts, traces of which were present in Miss Otis Regrets. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed Wellstood's humorous dialogue and sense of timing as well.

Yet while the pianist's frequent references to Honey-suckle Rose, constant use of clichéd upper register runs, patterns of sudden double-timings, and standard cocktail reharmonizations of familiar melodies seemed to bring the audience closer to the action on stage, they also seemed to get in the way of Wellstood's longer, more considered improvisations which Wellstood would often begin and was obviously capable of completing. In addition, the tunes (largely medleys) were often more embellishments than improvisations. However, Wellstood's historical approach in his concert suggests that this may have been a deliberate intention of his in order to insure that the audience listened closely to the concert.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.

Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students'
visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247

662-2020
663-5845

Train With Us... And Take a Great Career Home With You.

CHASE is now hiring foreign national candidates who are interested in furthering their career in their home country as entry-level officers.

We're seeking individuals with an exposure to business and finance to take advantage of this unique opportunity to join our global financial network. You'll apply quantitative and qualitative skills toward developing innovative solutions to challenging international financial problems and will play a key role in financial operations.

Openings now exist for foreign nationals of the following countries who are interested in applying their professional expertise in their home country:

• Barbados	• Ecuador	• Puerto Rico
• Brazil	• Mexico	• St. Thomas
• Chile	• Panama	• Venezuela
• Dominican Republic	• Paraguay

Upon completion of Chase's highly renowned training program, individuals will assume immediate responsibility as Credit and Marketing officers at a Chase Bank in their home country.

Interested individuals may contact your Placement Office, or contact Chase directly by calling Seth Edwards, Second Vice-President at (212) 552-4628, or Michael Kosakowski, Vice-President, at (212) 552-4627, or write either gentleman at 1 Chase Plaza, New York, NY 10081.

An Equal Opportunity Employer F.M.H.

Just arrived!

Cross-country Gortex
& Cordura Gaiters

Cross-country Gortex
& Cordura Mittens

Plus a variety of cross-country wax and
accessories—

- Cross-country rentals
- Snowshoe rentals
- Alpine demos

Goff's Sports, inc.

Mon. - Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9 - 9
MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Ephmen on five hoop streak

by John Clayton

Two exciting, last-minute victories increased the basketball team's winning streak to five games and set up a big showdown tonight with Dartmouth. Saturday night the Ephs edged out Babson 66-65, while last Tuesday they came from behind to beat Union 65-64.

The Babson game was won in the final seconds as captain Al Lewis stole the ball with ten seconds left and then hit one of two foul shots with four seconds left to break a 65-65 tie.

Babson made a vallant effort in the last four seconds, drawing a foul and sending their high scorer, Jack Sanluk, to the line. He missed the front end of a one-and-one and time ran out as the Ephmen grabbed the rebound.

Williams had controlled for most of the game, leading by as much as twelve in the second quarter. But Babson came back, sparked by good defense and clutch foul shooting, to tie the game with 2:50 left at 63 apiece.

Excellent defense prevailed for the remainder of the game, with the only points coming on a Babson basket off a delay and two big Art Pidorlano free throws with 20 seconds left that tied the game to set up Lewis' steal.

Coach Robert Peck was pleased with the win, although a little upset that it had to be so close. "Al (Lewis) had some very big plays," Peck said, "and Scott Oleson and Steve O'Day played well while they were in. The problem was that those two only played about 20 minutes each because of foul trouble."

The Union victory, another road game, was even more satisfying because the Ephs came from behind to get the win. "The key to that game," said Coach Peck, "was that we kept our composure even though we were down by eight with six minutes left."

This game was won with only seven seconds left, as Oleson, fouled on a lay-up, hit one of two free throws to make the score 64-63 Union. The Ephs then forced a jump ball, and, under the new college rules providing for alternate possessions, received the ball under the basket.

Williams set up an out-of-bounds play, and, said Peck, "it worked perfectly. Fuzzy (captain Jeff Fasulo) got just the shot we wanted him to." The cool senior canned a 15-foot jump shot to put Williams ahead, 65-64, with two seconds left.

The end of the game was marred by some dubious work in Union's favor on the part of the official timekeeper. He had been caught earlier in the game, when Union was ahead, running seconds off the clock during a time-out. The referees did nothing about it.

After a time-out, Union had the ball at halfcourt with two seconds left, needing a basket. Union twice threw the ball in bounds and Williams battled it out of bounds both times. Only one second elapsed during those two plays, so Union had another chance. They got the ball in for a jump-shot, but the ball rolled off the rim.

Williams had controlled early in that game too, running their offense well enough to get leads of 8-1 and 28-20. The Ephs' sloppy play, however, led to a 16-2 Union spurt in the last five minutes of the half to put the half time score at 36-30.

Union expanded a bit on that lead in the second half and then started a delay game. Williams, led by O'Day, Oleson, Lewis and a tenacious 1-3-1 zone defense, came back to set up Fasulo's big play.

After five road victories, Williams returns home for two tough games this week. "Dartmouth (Tuesday) and Springfield (Saturday) will be tough," said Peck, "but if we can work on our consistency—playing well without losing our composure—we can beat them."

Swimmers leave Hamilton drowning in their wake

by Jim Roche

Despite fatigue caused by a rigorous two week training period, the men's and women's swim teams had little trouble defeating an outmatched Hamilton squad last Saturday afternoon at Muir Pool.

The men improved their season record to a perfect 3-0 mark with their 65-48 triumph. Jumping out to a large lead after the first four races, the Ephs were able to maintain a comfortable margin for the rest of the afternoon. Exceptional performances were turned in by Senior co-captain Michael Regan, with a trim :48.4 in the 100 freestyle, and by Rob Sommer '84, who recorded a time of 2:03. in the 200 individual medley.

Coach Carl Samuelson was concerned about both the men's and women's squads, who had just completed a difficult week of double practices here, in addition to a week of workouts at the International Swimming Hall of Fame in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

"I think that the team was tired and broken today after going through two weeks of long double practice sessions. I was very pleased by the strong showing, and felt that we worked exceptionally well as a team today."

If the women swimmers were tired, their crushing 94-30 victory over Hamilton certainly didn't reflect it. In improving their season record to 3-0, they continued to shatter school records and add to the list of NCAA qualifiers. Jonna Kurucz '85 swam the 1000 freestyle 11:07.43, setting a new Williams women's record. Not to be outdone, Kim Eckrich '85 broke the record in the 200 breast with a time of 2:30.10.

The team also met four NCAA Division III qualifying times. Junior Liz Jex qualified in both the 100 individual medley and the 100 freestyle. Cecilia Ciepiela '84 achieved the qualifying time in the 200 butterfly, as did the 400 medley relay team of Eckrich, Kathy Hudner '83, Catherine Hartley '82, and Ann Tuttle '83.

Although the men's and women's teams have compiled three impressive wins, Coach Samuelson believes that the teams haven't yet reached the tough portion of the schedule. He noted that, "The first real test of our depth and ability will come this weekend when the men swim against an excellent Southern Connecticut squad, (Sat., Jan. 16, 1 p.m.), and the women take on Smith at their home pool."

Senior co-captain Michael Regan set a new school record form on her way to the water in the Ephmen's 65-48 win over Hamilton Saturday.

Ephs skated down by Holy Cross

by Rich Leavitt

Plagued by inconsistency, the puck team saw its record fall to four and four after losing 5-2 to a beatable Holy Cross squad. The Eph brothers continued to be a bright spot for Coach McCormick's skaters as Ed '83 netted a pair of goals while brother Dan '84 kicked aside 30 Crusader shots.

Coming out onto the ice for the opening period, Williams looked as if it were ready to blow Holy Cross out of their own rink. Aggressive play enabled the Ephs to dominate the better half of the first period. Unfortunately, all they had to show for it was one goal which Finn scored just 53 seconds into the game on a power play with Dave Calabro '82 setting him up.

The momentum swung to the Crusaders as their small, but quick forwards began to penetrate the Williams' defense. Finn scored again in the second period, but the Ephs trailed three to two early in the third period.

The Ephmen missed several good scoring opportunities and then squandered any chance of winning when they were hit with a couple of costly penalties. Holy Cross connected on one of its power plays to make the score four to two and then added a final insurance goal as John

Fish got the hat trick for the Crusaders.

Led by the line of junior Bob Brownell and seniors Doubl Jebb and Dave Calabro, the Ephs out-muscled and out-finessed a chippy Hamiltly squad, 4-2, last Wednesday. After the team played a rather lackluster first period, McCormick fired up his troops in the locker room between periods and they came out flying. Williams played well for the remainder of the game and a rout was saved only by the acrobatics of the Hamilton goalie.

Scoring in the first period were Greg Jacobson '82 and Brownell. Jacobson's goal game on a power play with Finn and Calabro picking up assists. Linemate Jebb set up Brownell's goal.

Hard working junior winger Mark Wysocki picked up the Ephs' third goal in an assist from Mike "Gretzky" Uretsky '85 in the second frame. Jebb closed out the scoring in the third period as the whole line got into the act with Calabro and Brownell assisting.

In pre-Christmas action Williams dropped a five to three decisions to a solid Norwich team but managed to upend the Lord Jeffs of Amherst by a convincing eight to one score. Finn picked up a pair of goals in that contest.

Puckers runner-up in tournament

by Rich Leavitt

Sparked by the performance of all-tournament selections Ed Finn '83 and Bob Brownell '83, the Eph hockey team captured the runnerup spot in its twelfth annual Invitational Hockey Tournament in which Plattsburgh State, Holy Cross, and North Adams State participated.

A physical, hard skating Plattsburgh team got the better of Williams in the finals by a 7-4 score. The Cardinals of Plattsburgh went to the finals of the Div. II NCAA playoffs in 1981 and have long been a Div. II powerhouse.

The Ephs started the game strongly by jumping out to a quick 3-0 lead in the first period. Finn opened the scoring with assists going to Mark Wysocki '83 and Rich Jackson '85. Senior Jon Dayton upped the count to 2-0 on a seeing-eye backhand from the point. The Production Line of seniors Doubl Jebb and David Calabro along with Brownell teamed up for the next goal as Jebb scored with Calabro and Brownell garnering the assists.

After the first period the game went downhill for the Ephs as the Cardinals connected for seven straight goals before Brian Rutledge '85 scored from senior Greg Jacobson for the 7-4 final.

The Eph skaters fared better in the opening round of the tournament as they upended their crosstown rivals, the Mohawks of North Adams in a thrilling 7-6 game. Calabro opened the scoring on a power play set up by junior Sam Flood and Brownell. Jackson closed out the period with an unassisted tally. Finn registered his first goal of the game from Mark Winters '85 and Wysocki. Freshman Jeff Potter rattled home the next one followed by a Jacobson goal from Tom Resor '82 and Calabro.

In a closely fought third period goals by Brownell and Finn saved the game for Williams. The Mohawks refused to die and fought back from a 7-4 deficit to make the third period a heart stopping one for the many fans in attendance.

Plattsburgh advanced to the finals by virtue of a 7-2 victory over the Crusaders from Holy Cross. The Crusaders downed the Mohawks in the consolation game 8-5.

MIT outruns Williams

In their home season opener, the Williams Winter Track team was dealt a disappointing loss at the hands of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The final score was 52-79, a strong showing by Williams against the Division III New England Indoor and Outdoor Champions.

Coach Dick Farley attributed the loss to Williams' lack of depth, especially in the middle distance running events. He said Williams "has one solid citizen in each event," but could not match M.I.T.'s well-rounded, strong returning squad. Farley called M.I.T. "the best in New England" that he had ever seen.

An outstanding performance for Williams was delivered by Micah Taylor, who won both the long jump and the 60-meter dash. The meet was ended on a happy note for the Williams fans when their team won both the mile and two-mile relays.

Williams' next meet is Saturday, January 16 at home.

Freshman Cam Burns goes belly-up to get over the bar in Williams' season-opening loss to MIT in winter track.

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor outlines the official channels available for student grievances at last Wednesday's panel.

Panel reviews harassment 800 examine sexual attitudes, expectations

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Three professors and three students examined sexual harassment and social expectations at Williams from different perspectives before 800 faculty and students in Chapin Hall last Wednesday.

Final panelist Tracy Dick '82 ended discussion on a bitter note. She compared Williams to a family which is reluctant to punish its children.

"If you have a chance to administer a subjective reprimand, you will," she said angrily. "We don't seem to want objective rules. But unlike a family we don't love each other. There's no responsibility."

"Judging seems to us some kind of abuse," accused Dick. "But damn it, you have done nothing and that is an offense." Dick's emotional speech capped an afternoon intended to, in the words of Moderator Richard Krouse of the political science department, enhance community understanding of sexual harassment.

"Until recently most faculty were unaware of the pervasiveness of sexual harassment," he said, "and while most students were aware of it, they have failed to realize that it's a serious problem."

Harassment continuum

Assistant professor of philosophy Rosemarie Tong then described a continuum in the severity of harassment ranging from unwanted remarks to touching to rape.

"Confusion arises because men and women have different views of harassment," she said. "Women tend to consider all unwanted behavior directed towards them as sexual; men seldom consider remarks or looks as aggressive."

Since harassment occurs without the victim's consent, it is an unwanted intrusion on that person's body and mind, said Tong.

"When one intrudes on another's domain, one comes very close to treading on the person's very identity," she noted. "Sexual harassment is one way to manifest such disrespect."

Erotic society

She blamed the cause of sexual harassment partly on what she called "the eroticization of society" and stressed that sex appeal should not be confused with beauty.

"Beautiful women will always be considered attractive, but they become sex objects when they are treated with disrespect in specific relationships," she emphasized.

Tong also blamed old-fashioned sex roles which glorify men who will not take "no" for an answer and women who submit.

She explained ways to respond to harassment, including... Continued on Page 8

Interim procedure

Chandler circumvents committee

President John Chandler authorized Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor to judge all cases of sexual harassment without further appeal to the Discipline Committee in a response to "concerns... raised on the subject" that was released to the College Community yesterday.

Chandler will automatically review all cases of suspension or expulsion. He noted that the Dean may only investigate harassment incidents "which occur after the publication of this letter." All other violations will still fall under the standard disciplinary procedures, which allow appeal to the Discipline Committee. The faculty will vote on February 10 whether to keep the interim arrangement or return to the old procedures.

"I support the President's statement," said Discipline Committee Chairman Charles Dew. "The Dean has always had authority to deal directly with cases."

Dew doesn't think lack of peer review will result in any miscarriage of justice. "It's possible," he speculated, "but I have complete faith in the Dean's judgment and the President's judgment."

Lee Buttz '82 of the Discipline Committee remarked that the decision was "appropriate in view of the circumstances (of the past weeks)."

He added, however, "Chances are it'll never be used. It's rare that the Deans get a case that they can't handle... most decisions now do come from the Deans."

Chandler also asked the Dean to "provide a definition of behavior which constitutes sexual harassment in the context of campus social life," to be presented to the faculty in February.

The president also expressed support for Dew and Buttz, whose appointments to the Disciplinary Review Committee stirred charges of conflict of interest.

"I have full confidence in the integrity and good judgment of the present members of the Discipline Committee," said Chandler. "It is imperative that the Review Committee have a thorough understanding of the complexity of (disciplinary) proceedings."

Chandler also asked O'Connor to review the College's counseling resources in the area of sexual offenses. He requested Deans Cris Roosenraad and Nancy McIntire to look at ways in which freshmen and incoming transfer students may be introduced to the College's standards of behavior.

Chandler suggested that Junior Advisers be trained to educate freshmen about harassment and that Freshman Days program provide time for discussion of sexual harassment.

Chandler emphasized that he was responding to the situation on campus, not to the specific demands of Williams Against Sexual Harassment.

He said his first response to WASH's decision to notify most of the news media in the Northeast of their rally without informing the College administration was anger. "I regard it as irresponsible behavior—not constructive," he said. "It's too bad, because their statement was responsible."

WASH members were generally pleased with the President's response. "I'm impressed," said Stephanie Voss '82. "I think it's a wonderful start."

She sees the next step for WASH as "giving the review committee as much input as possible." Voss added, "I hope neither Chandler nor the Dean's Office considers this over."

Trustees to convene Thursday; agenda covers tenure, budget

by Susan Kandel

This winter's three-day meeting of the members of the Board of Trustees promises to be "a relatively mild one," according to Vice President William Reed.

"There seems to be no hot issue for this particular meeting," said Reed, although consideration of next year's budget, as well as tenure recommendations made last fall by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, is expected to provoke discussion.

Tenure decisions

The Trustees will vote to approve or reject those recommendations made by the C.A.P. concerning eleven members of the Williams faculty. All decisions on matters pertaining to financial planning and campus life will be made this spring.

Nineteen of the twenty-two members of the Board expected to convene this week in Williamstown will participate in a series of events initiated by an Open House sponsored by College Council Thursday afternoon at the Log.

Winter Study

College Council President Freddy Nathan '83 anticipates the main items on the agenda to be discussion of the future status of Winter Study and the sexual harassment situation.

"Nothing big will probably come out of this," said Nathan, "but we want to give them our side... and to explain the strengths of Winter Study."

Final decisions on Winter Study are expected in a faculty vote this spring.

Elizabeth Jex '83 of the Feminist Alliance is expected to speak on the recent furor over sexual harassment on the Williams campus.

Students rally against the administration's response to sexual harassment issues (see story page 6).

Mystic offers different resources

by Julia Geniesse

The coastal setting of the Williams College-Mystic Seaport Program in American Maritime Studies is a departure from Williamstown's purple hills. Yet both settings are equally a part of Williams.

Eighteen colleges

Each semester, twenty-one students selected from eighteen Northeastern colleges, including Williams, live together in Mystic Seaport-owned cooperative housing. Students take advantage of the resources and staff of The Mystic Seaport Museum, and classes are held in the Museum's library.

Cary Gaunt, '83, who was enrolled in the Program last semester, remarked, "You're doing a lot, but maybe because there's less pressure around you, and because you're having such a good time, you don't notice how hard you're working."

Caribbean cruise

In the middle of the semester, students spend twelve days on the research vessel "Westward". Gaunt recalled her trip last semester; "Ours was the first actual voyage—we went up to Nova Scotia and back. We researched the feeding patterns of whales by doing plankton tows and other measurements at George's Bank, off the Massachusetts coast." During the fall semester, the ship travels in the North Atlantic. During the spring semester, the ship sails in the Southern Caribbean area as far as the Bahamas.

Susan Klm, a student at Wellesley College who was also at

Continued on Page 6

INSIDE THE RECORD

Campus needs
Communication	p. 3
Outlook:
harassment	p. 4
Covering
the rally	p. 6
Survey shows
blacks unhappy	p. 7
Features/
Entertainment/
Sports	Section B

The Williams Record

Attention at any cost

The so-called Williams Against Sexual Harassment group offered many positive suggestions to the Administration for dealing with discipline cases. On a sensitive issue like sexual harassment however, the presentation can be as important as the content of what is said. In their mad scramble for attention at all costs, the WASH group spoiled what could have been a constructive effort.

The WASH statement title "Williams Students Protest Rape" implies that WASH represents a large portion of the student body. Judging by the number of Thursday protestors though, WASH can only claim about 100 active supporters; less than six per cent of the student body.

WASH members made no effort to inform the Deans, the President, or the Williams News Office of their statement to the New England press. As a result, College officials were bombarded with callers asking about "the rape problem" on campus. The officials were understandably upset. WASH set a combative tone for discussion by dropping a fait accompli on the Administration. WASH established an atmosphere of suspicion.

The press statement concluded with an exhortation to people to "begin a constructive dialogue with the Administration" by attending their Thursday protest. WASH conveniently ignored the fact that the constructive dialogue began at Wednesday's panel discussion. A responsible statement would have made some mention of the Administration's efforts.

The WASH statement read in part, "In mid-December, the Discipline Committee convened to hear a second rape (case) . . ." although school officials specifically deny that rape was a charge. WASH must thus bear some responsibility for the misleading newspaper headlines that followed, like "Students charge college ignored rape."

The appalling bias of the WASH statement to the press indicates that the group's genuine goal was merely to cause alarm. Pandering to "shock-value" has no positive result. It is unlikely that the heavy TV coverage put pressure on the Administration because news cameras would not return to display the school's efforts to solve the perceived problem. Television viewers from Albany to Boston only saw the hostility displayed outside Hopkins Hall. Thus, only damage was done.

When Dean O'Connor asked WASH members, "Why did you find it necessary to call all the media in the Northeast?" they declined to comment. Perhaps they were ashamed to admit the sensationalist and underhanded nature of their actions.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

"We're not covering Williams specifically, but when you're doing a story on sexual harassment, this is the place to go."
—A Boston TV reporter visiting Williams

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

NEWS
Sara Ferris
Kalya Hokanson

FEATURES
Philip Busch

LAYOUT
Michael Govan

MANAGING EDITOR
Bob Buckner

OP-ED
Paul Sabbah

SPORTS
Dan Keating

OUTLOOK
Jon Tigar

ENTERTAINMENT
Ronald Issen

PHOTOGRAPHY
Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone number, (413) 597-2400) Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA., March 3, 1973 under the act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

January 12, 1982

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letters

Rony wrong

To the editor:

Last week, the Record's Outlook page ran an article entitled "Asians at Williams: Assimilation vs. Ethnicity" under the byline, Fatimah Rony. As Asian-Americans at Williams ourselves, we feel that the article has created confusion about the views of Williams' Asian community.

For last week's article, Ms. Rony interviewed less than ten people, and of these, only five were cited in the article. We feel that the narrowness of Ms. Rony's research does not allow for the authority to pronounce what "the College's Asian community feels." At the same time, we do not claim this authority either. We merely wish to make clear the following points.

We do not feel that the racial prejudice against Asians is as serious as Ms. Rony implies. Further, we feel that it is imperative not to mistake ignorance or simple curiosity for malicious prejudice. The question "Where are you from?" is more likely to have been prompted, not by racism, but by the natural interest of one human individual in another.

We do not feel, as the article implied, that assimilation into American society necessarily requires rejecting our Asian heritage. American society is made up of a multiplicity of races. It is possible for an Asian to join this heterogeneous society without denying his or her skin color or heritage. The term Asian-American is a statement of the duality of our heritage, both Asian and American. Learning to accept this duality is an act of individual maturity.

We therefore have ambivalent feelings towards the founding of racially-exclusive Asian "support groups" because we feel they can impede this process of maturation. Too often, such groups turn into inward-looking cliques that hinder their individual members' attempts to come to grips with the America in which—like it or not—they must live. We would, however, support a group directed towards bringing Asian culture to Williams.

We applaud Ms. Rony's acute observation that Williams does not offer sufficient courses in Asian studies and languages. Yet we see this as a curricular problem, and not as an indication of the College's "latent racism."

Further, we don't think this curricular deficiency is the most important reason for the low Asian matriculation rate at Williams. If people whose families have lived in the U.S. for generations still greet the words "Williams College" with "Oh, you mean Williams and Mary?", it is understandable that families who are more recent arrivals, as many Asian-American families are, tend to favor the more well-known schools.

Finally, we think it only fair to acknowledge that we understand, from Ms. Rony, that her article was heavily edited, its tone hyped up, and its argument re-arranged to emphasize racism rather than the lack of an adequate Asian curriculum and the low Asian matriculation rate, as she originally intended. If so, we are deeply troubled that the Record should take such liberties with an author's ideas, especially in a sensitive situation where accuracy should be paramount.

Lucy Y. Shen '82
Eleanor L. Coe '82
Nicole Lee '82
Harry P. Koo '82
Jong H. Yang '84
V-Nee Yeh '81

Rony responds

To the editor:

I would like to write in response to reactions that I have received from other Asian-Americans at Williams about my Outlook article. I want to stress the fact that the positions that were represented in the article did not in any way encompass a shared consensus on what it's like to be Asian at Williams. The Outlook section is meant to be an editorial, and thus biased, and my Outlook was no exception.

The main point of my article was that the number of Asian-Americans and students interested in Asian Studies will decline as long as the Williams curriculum remains Western-biased. In the long run, however, all students lose if the standards of Williams' Asian studies are not raised, because we can no longer ignore the need for an adequate understanding of such an important part of the world. The recent decision to hire a Chinese historian is a very encouraging, if long overdue, step in the right direction.

Fatimah Rony

Embarrassment

To the editor:

Steve Willard's distasteful and ridiculous article, "Cutting the costs of free love," struck me as neither "funny" nor as a fair representation of the ideals belonging to most members of the Williams community. If Mr. Willard is not embarrassed to have written the article, and if the Record is not embarrassed for printing it, then I am embarrassed enough for all of us. I would not desire to have anyone who knows that I am a Williams student read the last issue of the Record, my college newspaper, because it obviously does not uphold the same high standards typical of other organizations on this campus.

Tom Graves '82

The Williams Record

Op-ed

January 19, 1982

Williams wallows in superficiality

by Rich Henderson

When I attended the panel on harassment, I learned more about the nature of communication than I did about sexual harassment on this campus. After three and a half years at Williams, I realize that my relationships with my fellow students are split between the very superficial and the very deep. There is, I admit, nothing unusual about this. What is unusual, however, is that after all these years at Williams, I feel as if most of my relationships with people are very superficial. The conversations were limited to the workload, jobs after college, movies, parties and other social activities.

VIEWPOINT

When I look back on my conversations on the phone, at the dinner table, on the steps of Chapin or in the confines of my room, I realize that few of them had much intellectual content. In her speech, Tracy Dick expressed her disillusionment with students' abilities to relate their readings to real life. It amazes me how much knowledge we accumulate, how many facts we learn, and how seldom a student will share these with others. Is it because, just as work must be left behind in the office, intellectualizing must be left behind in the classroom?

Freshman year, I lived in Lehman, the smallest dorm. Sophomore and junior years, I chose to live in a row house in order to try and maintain the feeling of closeness of freshman year. The close contact with the same people in the dining room made it possible to develop some long lasting relationships. But overall, even in a small rowhouse, I found a lack of communication. We rarely discussed important issues. Seldom did someone digress on the importance of being earnest.

So this year I live off campus with three other people. I am happy to say that we are not only very close and open with each other, but we also share our views on a very wide range of topics due to the fact that we all have very different academic interests.

I do not suggest that students should all move off campus in order to create better communication lines. But we are in college to learn, to share ideas, to improve our perceptions of life. So few courses require that students must read each other's papers. This would be a good first step in establishing better communication lines among students. In an environment where the real world is examined through academic glasses and all our needs have been taken care of by our room and board payments, we should practically saturate our minds with knowledge. We should not be afraid to show our knowledge to our peers. And we should not resent a person's attempt at showing his or her knowledge.

We worry about grades and careers. We do not like to write that optional paper or go to a lecture because those are a waste of time. We do not like to show our knowledge because we are afraid of our peers' judgment, and knowledge is no fun to talk about anyway. Parties, beer, basketball games, grades, nerds, those are fun to talk about. But how are they going to improve our perceptions of the world outside? How are they going to teach us to care about each other as human beings? It seems obvious that they are not going to achieve that purpose.

Annabelle Cone

Keep the committees standing

Winter Study Review and Sexual Harassment—the two most visible issues of the school year—are both entwined in a behind-the-scenes battle that may have deeper consequences than either "front-page" struggle. The power to make decisions on such important issues is being slowly drained from the standing student-faculty committees in favor of ad-hoc groups, the President and the Deans. The result is an increasingly authoritarian decision-making system.

President Chandler yesterday fired a potentially devastating salvo in this battle when he temporarily took away the right of the student-faculty Honor and Discipline committee to hear appeals of sexual harassment cases. The President authorized Dean O'Connor alone to judge future cases; the Discipline committee will only hear a case if O'Connor wishes it to. The Committee's role as final arbiter over a crucial issue has thus been given to the Dean.

Placing this considerable burden on one man has several unfortunate consequences. It greatly diminishes the chances of a successful appeal. O'Connor would be subject to great pressure to not reverse his decisions, despite the appearance of new evidence, for the Dean must consider politics and the College's image more carefully than the relatively shielded and anonymous Honor and Discipline Committee.

This is only the latest example of a disturbing trend toward narrowing the scope of the once-powerful standing committees. Vital issues clearly within the jurisdiction of a standing committee are increasingly being discussed and acted upon by ad-hoc committees formed around that single issue. Last year's Gifford Committee on Residential Life deliberated on matters that should have been handled by the Committee on Undergraduate Life; this year's Winter Study Review Committee is discussing issues within the sphere of the Committee on Educational Policy.

These ad-hoc committees are formed to give more careful consideration to important matters than could the overburdened standing committees. Perhaps this is true, but ad-hoc committees are more subject to control from the Administration than standing ones.

The current W.S. Review Committee is a case in point. President Chandler appointed its members amid charges of "loading" the committee with pro-Winter Study faculty members. His mandate to the group was severely criticized for effectively eliminating consideration of the "empty January" alternative favored by many faculty members. If the CEP had been in charge of the Winter Study review, this crucial issue would have been considered by members elected by students and faculty, and would have been unencumbered by a restrictive mandate.

The current Honor and Discipline situation is more grave. H & D's power to decide certain disciplinary cases is temporarily at the mercy of the Dean. Another ad-hoc committee is now beginning to review H & D's decision-making process, amidst speculation that the Committee will in the future consist of a jury selected on a case-by-case basis.

This jury system would be a dangerous extension of the ad-hoc principle. A jury might eliminate the conflict of interest charges that plague the current Discipline Committee. But it would lack the knowledge of precedent so important in the current committee's deliberations and the commitment to secrecy vital for the protection of parties involved in a case.

The faculty should vote on February 10 to end President Chandler's interim suspension of the Honor Committee's power to hear sexual harassment cases. H & D must be allowed to exercise its usual powers until the Colby Committee makes its recommendations. Those recommendations ought to address specific problems of procedure or rules within the workings of the Discipline Committee, but not strip its powers in favor of the Dean's Office or a jury system. Honor and Discipline needs repair, not replacement.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Keep Bronfman wealthy

Drinking for the endowment

Not since the days of probation, when the word "dry" was the last thing one associated with Canada, has that country, or more specifically, its liquors, seem to have been so much on the minds of Williams students as today.

It's almost as if we feel we must personally replace the lost revenues incurred by old Edgar B. when he graced our campus with Bronfman Science Center. With this in mind, a moment if you please, to reexamine this crazy college life, or rather, its liquors that we love and hold so near.

Canada isn't just a heartbeat away, it's also a headcase away as we imbue our bodies with "prohibition poison," much to the shame of our parents and dismay of our roommates who must deal with our "marks of distinction" long after we remember where we last left them.

As we stumble past King's Liquors, we are exhorted to drink Molson, the beer with the "taste as big as Canada." The only question I implore of Madison Avenue is this: Is it really all ten provinces and two territories that Molson hopes to recreate, or merely some forgotten slice of the Yukon? And of course, with Williams, the numbers "seven and seven" have taken on new meanings, referring not only to what my culminative grade point total (not GPA, we're talking total points earned here Williams Bros.) will be at the end of four years here, but also of Seagram's Seven and Sevens, which is, after all, half the reason for the first pair of sevens anyways.

And yet, drinking is nothing unless one also has the creativity with which to describe it. "Booting" is terribly passe. "I worshipped the ode to the porcelain god

"Finding your way home after one of these escapades can be like trying to find that mythical hidden case of C.C. ..."

Last night, paying Father Williams my dearest respects as I did the "Bronfman Boot" in my most recent trip on the "Seagram Slide," shows, how should I say it?, a much more "Williamsesque" manner of approach to the, ah, problem. We must not only be sick, but live to tell it. Woe be the freshman male, who at the conclusion of his first year, doesn't have at least one sad tale of shame concerning that "special senior girl" discovered and lost all in the course of one memorable, but blissfully clouded alcoholic haze.

Finding your way home after one of these escapades can be like trying to find that mythical hidden case of C.C.—you just keep looking because damn!, you know it's got to be out there somewhere!

Yet, fellow children of bliss, all is not joy here in toytand. Quite frankly, I'm, a trifled worried about certain members of the current crop of Embryonic Ephs. An offer by me to a young lady to join some friends for a drink at the Log was not answered by, "I have too much homework." Nor by, "I'm doing something else" or, "I don't like your face," but by, "I'll come, but I don't drink."

Embarrassed, I apologized for offending any of my friend's religious beliefs of which I had been unaware, to which my fellow conversationist responded, "No, you don't understand. I won't drink because I'm only eighteen and I don't want to break the law. . . I want to get into law school, you know . . ."

Quite honestly, I think there's a bit of room here to be concerned.

Some would say that the old days are long past, days of rot gut and rum, Bevo Demo and beer. Yet I challenge to all who may say so, that "Come Fill Your Glasses Up" was not composed in vain. When my grandfather was young, Molson Beer had a picture of a horse on the cans, to which my grandfather would snort, "Only beer that had a picture of the manufacturer on the label!" Can such a past be allowed to wither so ungracefully away?

To quote a certain professor of economics in this school, "There are too many other things in life, like falling in love and drinking beer" to be merely a mass of pre-med, pre-law, pre-business and pre-wealth students here in this outpost of civilization in the Berkshires. Immerse and imbibe, let's all do the "Seagram Slide!"

Cars: once coveted, now commonplace

by Philip Busch

January at Williams—the sight of skiers schussing down a powdery slope, but also the sight of those students digging their cars out of that suddenly not-so-wonderful white stuff. The cheerful sounds of a party, but also the lugubrious tones of a dying engine.

Williams undergraduates possess 475 registered automobiles. This is about one for every four students, enough so that if the student body decided once again to remove to Amherst, there would be a seat for everyone in a student car for the drive down Route 2.

Despite this record number of cars, however, the automobile does not appear as essential to student life as in the "bad old days" before coeducation. Today's student is more likely to drive his (or her) car to Grand Union for bagels than to Smith for a weekend.

Prewar pedestrians

The traditional "roadtrip" was a product of the post-war automobile boom. Students brought cars to campus as early as the 1920s, but they were still a rare luxury when Ralph Renzi '43 was a student. "Those who had cars were kings," he said. Students on scholarships, about 25 percent of the student body according to Renzi, were denied cars, as were freshmen and sophomores.

Williamstown had regular train service, but the lack of cars still hampered social life. "A few students went to the women's schools," said Renzi, "but it wasn't customary. Most just didn't go. . . women didn't really figure in the social picture unless you had a car. It was not a happy situation from that point of view."

Wartime gas rationing ended any student driving. After the war, returning veterans began bringing cars back to campus, but in 1948 they were "still very much a luxury," according to Professor John Hyde, who arrived as a freshman that year.

Rise of the roadtrip

Hyde left Williams in 1950 to join the Navy, not to return for several years. By the mid-1950s "cars were much more common," he said. "The VW Beetle had a tremendous impact," he added, "it was cheap and easy to keep up."

"In the 1950s the car began to be perceived as a necessity," Hyde remembers. "The roadtrip was a phenomenon of the 1950s and 1960s." Besides many more cars, there were far fewer trains to Williamstown. The only way to escape an all-male

A Berkshire winter poses its special problems for Eph drivers. This Chrysler New Yorker isn't going to the Big Apple, or anywhere, in a hurry. (Gast) environment was to drive, since students at the women's colleges were not allowed cars as a rule, preventing them from coming to Williams very often. It was usually easy to get a ride. "Dinner was constantly interrupted by someone coming from our one phone and asking 'who wants to go to Skidmore tonight?'" said Hyde. Students shared driving costs of their "collective date."

The increasing popularity of

Continued on Page B5

Rembrandt's etchings scintillate at the Clark

by Tracy Dick

The exhibition of Rembrandt etchings presently at the Clark Art Institute is the outcome of a graduate seminar course given by Professor Julius S. Held at the Clark Art Institute in the fall of 1980. There are twenty etchings which span over twenty years of Rembrandt's career. The organizers of the show were not able to freely choose prints from Rembrandt's complete works but rather, were loaned prints from the Clark, Williams College, and Skidmore College Collections, as well as from an anonymous collector. Given this random selection, of prints, the show is surprisingly unified.

The twenty prints are organized with the intention to demonstrate what they can of the development of both Rembrandt's style and treatment of iconography (i.e. subject matter). Given this dual emphasis, the prints are not strictly arranged in chronological order.

Though Rembrandt was a highly prolific etcher, he continually returned to certain specific subjects. We know that the repetition of these subjects is a reflection of his personal interests, for these etchings as a rule were not commissioned. The unifying purpose behind the exhibition is to demonstrate how Rembrandt altered his technique to enhance and further refine the articulation of his subject matter.

The first two prints of the show span a nine-year period. The first, done in 1630, of a beggar man and woman, is placed in juxtaposition to a print of 1639 also of a beggar. The iconographical similarity is obvious yet the stylistic differences are more subtle. In the earlier print, Rembrandt's use of three separate forms, the tree, the man and the woman, shows the variety of etched lines and intensity.

In the later etching of 1639, the image of the single beggar is created by an integrated combination of these techniques. Rembrandt has modulated the definition of the figure by using loose heavy lines along wide closely cross hatched and representational lines which in turn are integrated in with loose impressionate lining. The variety of lines within one figure gives the entire composition greater depth for it increase the variety of spacial planes. This enhanced mastery of the etching styles enabled Rembrandt to imbue this beggar of 1639 with more subtle and effective emotion and expression.

Another instance where prints are organized because of their iconographical links is on the wall across from the entrance to the exhibition. Here there are four prints concerned with religious subjects from both the old and new testaments. These four prints represent three chronological periods of Rembrandt's career. The four etchings are "Abraham and Isaac" of 1643, a "Crucifixion" of 1633, the "Virgin and Child in the Clouds" of 1641 and "The Circumcision in the Stable" of 1654. In this last etching of the Circumcision we can see some of the characteristics of Rembrandt's most mature style of the 60's.

Continued on Page B3

Mime leaves audience silenced

by Francesca Mirabelli

To the same music that spurred the Lone Ranger on to further heroic deeds, mime Trent Arterberry became a fanatic jogger who quite literally loses his heart to his obsession. In this and other skits, Mr. Arterberry enthralled both children and adults on January 14 at the Clark Art Institute.

Mr. Arterberry's simple and straightforward explanation of what mime is (non-verbal communication) created a good audience-actor rapport, while his demonstration of various mime techniques both amused and impressed his watchers. Much to his credit, he neither condescended to the children, nor did he talk over their heads. For the most part, he let his skits speak for themselves, and this they did eloquently.

Continued on Page B4

Blakey will jazz up campus

Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers will perform at Chapel Hall at Williams College on Saturday, January 23 at 8:00 p.m.

Since he formed the original 17-member Jazz Messengers in 1948, Art Blakey has travelled the globe, solidifying his reputation as one of the most respected and loved players in jazz. As a drummer, Blakey long ago established himself as one of the great virtuosos, standing alongside Max Roach, Kenny Clarke, and Roy Haynes as a primary source of modern drum styles. Blakey is one of jazz music's most extroverted and volatile drummers and helped pave the way for such explosive players as Elvin Jones.

Over the past years, Blakey has perfected a high energy music dubbed "hard bop" by journalists and fans. To the original Jazz Messengers, hard bop represented a retreat from the complexity that had overtaken modern jazz and was a

Continued on Page B2

INSIDE SECTION B

Pipe Band
Wails p. B2

New Music
Cultists p.B3

THE THREE CUCKOLDS
previewed p. B4

Trackmen, skiers
swimmers win p. B7

Keating criticizes colleges p. B8

Pipeband hopes to snare drummers

by Jenny Bicks

What would you do with 500 dollars? Would you: A) buy a used '73 Chevy family wagon with rotting doors? B) go to Bermuda? C) invest in plastic phone parts? or D) buy a set of bagpipes? If you answered D, you might be one of the eight members of the Williams College Pipe Band, or at least a possible recruit.

Jackson Galloway, '82, Pipe Major of the band, considers his 500 dollars a "good investment" towards a life-long enjoyment of piping. The band has been growing in strength ever since its formation in 1974. It now consists of five men and three women pipers. Though piping is seen as a traditionally male activity, Galloway feels that gender does not affect piping ability. Many of these musicians did not pipe before arriving at Williams.

"Piping itself is physically taxing," Galloway asserts. Each piper practices at least one hour a day with more hours put in for practicing as a group. If you ever wandered down by the football field this fall, you undoubtedly heard the wailing pipers.

Sick of paying mega-bucks to hire a band for your party? The pipers usually play free of charge at many college functions. Their next endeavor is a celebration of (Poet Robert)

Burn's Day, January 25th in conjunction with the WSP on Scotland. This spring the band is planning the first Williams College Invitational Amateur Pìobaireachd Tournament. Pìobaireachd is the classical, and most difficult, form of piping. The tournament will take place April 2 with a pipers' gathering of invited bands scheduled for the next day.

Is the life of a piper for you? The pipers, Galloway states, "go whole hog into it." If you think you fit this mold, there may be a golden opportunity to join: the pipe band is avidly recruiting snare drummers. Know anyone applying to Williams this year? It probably would not hurt to have them mention their phenomenal snare drum talent. Of course there is one hidden hazard to piping: kilts. Asked how he felt about their unusual attire, Galloway commented, "Well, it can be a little chilly."

Williams bagpipers at a recent Convocation.

The

Management Information Systems Department
of

MORGAN STANLEY & CO.
Incorporated

invites all seniors, especially those pursuing honors degrees,
to a presentation on our Management Training Program

Wednesday, January 27, 1982

The Log
7:00-9:00 P.M.

Our program offers the following benefits:

- Interaction with innovative and exceptionally talented securities industry professionals.
- A chance to begin a career in Data Processing at one of Wall Street's leading investment banking firms.
- Guaranteed and rapid career progression in a challenging, fast paced environment.
- An outstanding compensation program for those who meet the challenge.

Contact the Career Services Office
for additional information.

Wine and Cheese

Art Blakey jazzes it up

Continued from Page B1
rediscovery of jazz roots. Blues and gospel music were the dominant colorings in hard bop compositions like "The Preacher" and "Doodlin'," both written by Horace Silver and recorded by the Jazz Messengers. But hard bop was more than a simplification of be-bop, the modern jazz of the 1940's. Blakey and the Jazz Messengers developed a manner of playing that brought the drums to the forefront of the music. Instead of politely supporting the band's improvising soloists, Blakey plays tricky cross-rhythms and sudden, thunderous crescendos that actively challenge them. Blakey is, nevertheless, inseparable from the group he has led for so long, the Jazz Messengers. The ability to create groups as polished, direct and expressive as the creations of the great soloists belongs to very, very few jazzmen, and to no one more than Blakey.

"The viewpoint may change, the form may change, but if it's jazz it still has to swing," is the Blakey credo. "It has to take you away. If it stops swinging, it'll all perish." Blakey told "Downbeat" magazine, "When people come into a club, they don't want to be bothered with the problems out there. All they want is to be happy and have a ball... It's the musician's job to take them away from all the world, to hypnotize them, lead them out and take them back to reality."

For over thirty years, Blakey has nurtured the brightest young talents in jazz like Horace Silver, Freddie Hubbard, Wayne Shorter, Chick Corea, Keith Jarrett, Chuck Mangione, and more. The list of alumni is lengthy and still growing.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole. Phone 458-8157, 10-2, Monday-Friday.
Folk guitar teacher needed. Call Julia Geniesse at 2844.
Gumby Won't be getting any pokey when Mr. Sluggo comes home.

WINTER STUDY
BEER SPECIAL

Wurzburger
$3.15/6-pk
reg. $4.69

WINE SPECIAL
Italian Soave

Italian Soave
1.5 liter bottle

$2.49

Elevator music on the straightaway

by Phillip Walsh

I had been a crack high-school journalist. I'm sure the fact that I had uncovered a food scandal that made "Soylent Green" seem like so many light-hearted bedtime stories your Uncle George told you, is largely responsible for my being at Williams today. You can imagine my disappointment when my editor assigned me to look into "new music" for The Record. I did not know what I was in for.

After the first few interviews, conducted at Salvatore's, Hopkins' Furniture, House of Walsh and Hart's Pharmacy, some vague patterns began to emerge. There did seem to be a "new music", but unlike Rock-n-Roll, Folk, or more recently Punk, this "new music" is supported by middle-aged people, not teenagers.

The first big break in the case occurred when I spoke to Mrs. Daisy Budz, loving wife and secretary of Dr. Chester Budz, D.D.S. I asked Mrs. Budz what station the office radio was tuned to.

"Oh, The-a-North Adams Station," she replied. This was not the first time I had gotten this response. When I quizzed her for details about the station, she was evasive. I did not force the issue—four years of high-school reporting had taught me how to handle this type.

On my way out I stopped by the door and asked her if she or the doctor had any favorite artists. "I would have to say probably... Neil Diamond." That was all I needed to hear; I thanked her and left.

On a hunch I headed toward the Williamstown National Bank. I had heard some music there while I was making a routine transaction a few days earlier. Upon arriving, I went straight for the back; if you ever want answers at a bank, don't daily with the people up front. I engaged a young woman in conversation. Eventually I asked her what station happened to be playing.

"The North Adams station, I think it's about 100 on the dial..." "It's 101," a voice interrupted. I turned to find that voice attached to one of the largest bald people I had ever observed. "101, FM, WMNB in North Adams."

"You might just be the guy I've been looking for," I commented.

"Yeah, well, I heard there was some kid goin' around askin' questions—but it's gonna cost you." I tucked a ten-spot into his fist. "Got a deposit slip?" I didn't. "Meet me at 11:30 tonight, at the wharf." I reminded him that the nearest wharf was either in New York or Boston. He grimaced. We agreed to meet in front of The Mole Hole at 11:00.

Eleven turned into 11:30 as I cooed my heels in front of The Mole Hole. I heard a noise behind me. I turned right into what was either the butt of a 12 gauge or a 2 by 4 inch slab of Baxter "green-bean supreme."

Either way it got the job done. I woke up in one of the well-appointed rooms that make up the Four Acres Motel out on Route 2.

"I Left My Heart in San Francisco"—maybe you'll find it here.

"Still want yer answers, kid?" asked the bald giant I had made ten dollars richer at the bank.

"Sure I do, but next time I'll send you the cash and we'll talk on the phone."

"Sorry kid, but if Budz caught me talkin' it could be over."

"Dr. Budz? The dentist? He seemed very nice—so did his wife."

"Oh, for sure they're good people 'til you say the wrong thing about Arthur Fiedler. Hey, I used to be his dental hygienist until he caught me listening to a Carpenter's bootleg—the whole cult thinks they're too experimental."

I asked him to explain the cult to me.

"Yeah, it's been years in the planning stages—I guess it's sort of a middle-aged response to Rock."

"What do they call this new form of music?"

"They call it beautiful music, claim it's gonna eventually provide a sort of soundtrack to life—they think it's inoffensive."

"Yeah, there's one more thing. The Living Strings' adaptation of Neil Diamond's 'Song Sung Blue' is sorta their anthem. They feel that one thousand strings say more than one nasal voice ever could."

I thanked him for his help and left. I woke up the next day at about 3 p.m., and surveyed the bump on my forehead. It was going to be all right. I ran into one of my suitmates on the stairs.

I told him that I was making one phone call, then leaving and that if my editor called to tell him he'd get his story. I returned to my room and called WMNB in North Adams. Luckily disc jockey Dave Fiero was willing to talk. He must want out. At first he tested me by telling me about their AM station that features "adult contemporary" music. I told him I wasn't interested in their AM bank, I wanted to know about FM.

"Oh, that's just 'beautiful music,'" he told me.

"Yeah?" I said. "Well why don't you tell me something I don't know? Like what gets the heaviest rotation on your FM shows?"

To my amazement he told me, "We don't use records, we subscribe to a tape service. I got a sample tape here. It features Peter Knight, The Living Strings, The Johnny Mann Singers, Percy Faith, Frank Purcell, David Row's Orchestra, Henry Mancini and Montovani." I pumped him for the name of the tape service. "The name is C.R.S. Radio Services, operates out of Providence." With that he hung up.

My investigation was over; after all, Providence is a long distance call. I don't know where I'll be by the time you read this, either in hiding or regretting the fact that I'd joined The Record, but this story had to be told, before we all have our lives soundtracked.

Etchings explicated

Continued from Page B1
The high point of the show is etching one of the finest in the "The Three Trees" (1643) at the history of art. center of the right wall. This show of "A Selection of print marks the culmination of Rembrandt's Etchings" will be the tightly representational at the Clark until January 24th. style, of Rembrandt's middle Given its size and given the period, yet it has much of the limited availability of prints, motion and expression of his this exhibition is excellently last period of the 1660's. The organized. I urge anyone inter-sharp diagonal lines at the right ested in the history of prints or of the print and the strictly anyone interested in art at all to horizontal progression of space come see this exhibition of Rem- are in a wonderful contrast to brandt etchings. In addition two the lightly cross-hatched forma- other exhibitions "Through tion of atmosphere and clouds. British Eyes: English manus-The cluster of trees is defined by cript Art" and "Mainly Off the an entirely different technique Battiefeld" are currently on of gestural lines and their display at the Clark Art until expression of nature makes this Jan. 24.

Save Time and Trouble by Dropping Off your list of 2nd Semester Courses for our Package Deal. FREE.

Renz's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

artspace

COMING SOON!

All curly perms are not the same.

THE CLIP SHOP

will make the difference!

Curly perms are easy to style and easy to manage. And they continue to be in style. Soft, uniform curls that are luxurious and shiny definitely make a difference.

The stylist of the Clip Shop believes in continued education. Weekly they learn from the leaders of the field via video. Thus they are able to keep up with the latest and best techniques for perming, styling and coloring for all types of hair.

And once more the stylist of the Clip Shop wants you to get the results you want. Stop in for a free consultation.

The Clip Shop at 49 Spring St.

or if you prefer, make an appointment by calling 458-9167.

The Clip Shop is also located in Pittsfield and Bennington.

Fountain "upside-down"

Williams Art Professor Lee Hirsche was commissioned by the College to design several fountains like the one above. The "upside-down" fountains are topped with funnels that collect rain water and send it cascading down the piece. The series of fountains is located in the pavilion between Chapin Hall and the Bernhard Music Center.

Audience hushed by mime

Continued from Page B1
His portrayal of a father baby-sitting for his diaper-wetting infant elicited sympathetic noises from parents, while his performance of an apple eater who develops a fondness for worms after accidentally eating one had children shrieking with gleeful horror.

While many audience participation devices create uncomfortable and self-conscious feelings, Mr. Arterberry managed successfully to enlist the aid of his viewers. First he took suggestions from the audience for skits—usually modifying them in humorous ways—and then he actually involved the audience in the fantasy. By the evening's end several elderly gentlemen had smoked an imaginary joint, and a Williams student had been pulled over for reckless driving.

Mr. Arterberry's final skit, "the flight of Icarus", showed that mime need not be restricted to comedy. With background narration and sound, Mr. Arterberry became young Icarus, whose joy in flight led to his demise. The audience too was carried aloft, to then come whirling down with anguished Icarus. After experiencing so much—from the comic to the dramatic—the audience left much richer than it came.

Arts in the area

The Berkshire Museum *39 South Street, Pittsfield. Exhibition: Childe Hassam as Printmaker. Lithographs and etchings of American impressionist, Childe Hassam, focusing on the rural and urban imagery of Long Island, New York and New England. January 8 through February 10, call 413-443-7171 for details.

Also at the Berkshire Museum "Camera Work: a selection of photographic work by such well known artists as Steiglitz, Steichen, and Alvin Langdon Coburn, among others. January 8 - February 10. Events in the area? Let The Record Arts Dept. know. S.U. Box 1237, Williams College.

Italian innovation Commedia comes to Williams

A group of circus acrobats have taken over the Adams Memorial Theatre, or so it would appear after sitting in on a recent rehearsal of The Three Cuckolds, Williams Theatre's winter production scheduled to open on February 11. The rehearsal in question takes place in the Studio Theatre where twenty students, (eight women and twelve men), are learning how to throw, punch, trip and flip each other across the room, walk ten steps without moving an inch, climb staircases, ladders, and mountains they create out of thin air, do somersaults without spilling a drop from a glass they hold in their hand, and in general learn the techniques and traditions of Commedia dell'arte, a theatrical medium over four hundred years old.

Commedia originated in Italy in the sixteenth century, and within two hundred years had spread to most of Europe and sparked the theatrical evolution of the post-Renaissance era. Productions consisted of improvisations based on stock characters (the impotent husband, clever wife, dashing lover, tricky servant) and situations. Particular productions would be adapted to include elements of the latest town gossip, and had a tradition of being extremely vulgar, bawdy, and funny. According to Jill Nassivera, director of the Williams Theatre production, the scenario they will present, although based on a script and without allusions to dirt near the snack-bar or Mission Park grapevines, will also be true to the tradition, being bawdy, vulgar and funny in its own right. Some of the final show will be based on improvisations currently being worked on during rehearsal process. "In fact," Nassivera commented, "there is so much improvisation going on now that I don't know what is going to happen in this one."

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.

Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247

662-2020
663-5845

Upcoming . . .

CANDIDA

This Tuesday, January 19, George Bernard Shaw returns to Williams College when students will present a staged reading of Shaw's Candida. Revisited, to be followed by a student and faculty panel on the issues raised in the play.

Written by Joan Simpson Burns and directed by Marc de la Bruyere, the play is meant to be a sequel to Shaw's original play, which concludes with the heroine choosing to remain with her husband, Burns. In her sequel, writes about actual public events of 1913's England, including such well known figures as Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, a well-known suffragette, and even Shaw himself in her play which highlights some of the humorous and ironic aspects of early feminism.

The performance, scheduled to take place in Driscoll Lounge at 7:30, will be followed by a panel discussion in which the audience is invited to take part.

AMERICAN BUFFALO

In addition, Cap and Bells presents its first production of the new year this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings in Jesup Hall Auditorium with the presentation of David Mamet's American Buffalo. The fourth of Mamet's major plays, American Buffalo won the 1976 Obie Award and 1977 Drama Critics Circle Award for best play.

Shawn D. Lovley '82 is the play's artistic director, and the cast includes Seth Rogovoy '82, John Stillwell '82, and Marc Wolf '84. The plot concerns three small time crooks in a junkshop plotting to rip off a valuable coin collection. In their wheeling and dealing, they explore the many facets of the contemporary American scene. They are junkstore philosophers moralizing about money, business and friendship while brutalizing each other through their eloquent inarticulateness.

Curtain time is 8 P.M. Tickets are 50 cents with Williams I.D. and $1.00 for the general public, and will be available one half hour before curtain at Jesup Hall.

BARTOK'S SONATA

Performing Bartok's Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion and Brahms' Piano Trio in C Major, members of the music faculty at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst will present a special concert on Friday, January 22, at 8:30 p.m. in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

Marion Gaffney and Nigel Coxie will be the pianists in the Bartok work, with Peter Tanner and Thomas Myron on percussion. Julian Olevisky is in the front rank of the world's violin virtuosi. He has performed widely in his native Europe, in South America and in the United States.

Leopold Teraspolsky started his musical career as a cellist with a New York debut followed by solo appearances throughout the world. A student of Alexander and Pablo Casals, he has played in recital and with orchestra in Paris, London, Berlin, Zurich, New York, Chicago. He was principal cellist of the Pittsburgh Symphony under Fritz Reiner and has recorded for Columbia, Coronet and Pro Musica labels.

Estela Olevisky, a native Argentinian, made her concert debut in Buenos Aires at the age of eight. She completed her piano studies at the National Conservatory where she also studied composition with the distinguished composer Alberto Ginastera.

Marion Gaffney, piano, holds degrees from the Juilliard School of Music. She is a specialist in chamber music, having appeared in New York's Carnegie Recital Hall and Lincoln Center's Alice Tully Hall.

Nigel Coxie, piano, was educated at Clifton College and the Royal Academy of Music, in London.

Peter Tanner is head of the percussion program, director of Percussion Ensemble and U. Mass. Marimbas. A graduate of Eastman, Tanner has composed works for all media, but his compositions for the marimba are particularly well-known.

Thomas Myron is a senior music major in theory/composition, formerly a music major at Boston Conservatory of Music.

The concert, sponsored by the Department of Music at Williams, is free and open to the public. For further information call 413-597-2127.

During the Semi-Annual Clearance at Salvatore's

Special Group of

Capezio

Leotards and Tights are now

1/2 PRICE

College cars

Continued from Page B1

cars led to relaxation of rules against sophomore cars about 1955. Prohibition of freshman driving, though, was enforced strictly, recalls Professor Emeritus Robert C. L. Scott, Dean of the College in the 1950s.

"There was a strong feeling that freshmen should not drive," he said, "that it was a good thing for them to stay here for their first year . . . It was pretty strict . . . I remember one freshman going before the Discipline Committee because he drove a car in which everyone else was asleep."

"The number of accidents then seemed very high," said Spear. Renzi, Public Information Director of the College in the 1950s, agreed: "I remember walking down on some beautiful spring days and hearing about people I knew getting killed or maimed . . . some were turned into vegetables. I'm so glad there's the Log now, despite some friction on Spring Street."

The 1970s brought women, new dorms, inflation, and yet more cars to Williams. "There's been a slow increase in the number of cars over the last decade," said Dean Cris Roosenraad, "in the number Exceptions had to be cleared with the Dean's Office. "It seems our phone was ringing all weekend from people who were stranded . . . It was a very painful business," said Scott. Freshmen are still denied cars their first semester.

"Students had to register their cars with the Dean's Office," Scott said. "We had no security force until the late '50s." Registration cost $5 or $10 then, he recalled.

"We didn't have all these parking lots then," noted Scott, "only the fraternities had them . . . People don't realize how primitive Williams was then," he joked, "we didn't have cars, sex, or even telephones."

Affluence and Accidents

Tom Spear '62 of the History Department also remembers the roadtripping era. "Cars were much more important then than now," he said. "Every Friday and Saturday there was a mad rush to get out of here. It seems like everybody had a car . . . you're talking to one of the few who didn't have one."

Often intoxicated driving over poor roads led to accidents.

per student as well as total numbers due to increase in the size of the College."

Registrations have remained about the same for the last three years, according to Security Director Ransom Jenks. Roosenraad commented, "We anticipate that the need for cars will remain at least at the present level."

Inflation hits registration

Ten years ago the registration fee was about $30 per year. It is now $55. "About five or six years ago we studied what the lots were actually costing us for plowing, maintenance, and a proportion of the initial construction costs," explained Roosenraad. "We came up with a figure of about $50. We decided that the actual costs should be passed on, so as not to ask 1400 other students to cover the costs of those with cars."

The fee was raised $5 three years ago. "We came up with a figure substantially higher than $55 because of inflation," said Roosenraad, "but we decided some subsidy was in order."

"We don't want to encourage cars," he continued, "but we don't want to actively discourage them either . . . we realize that many students need them."

"Costs this winter are going to be extraordinarily high," said Roosenraad. "It would be possible to justify an increase in the fee, but I don't know if one would be appropriate."

This year marked a return to a system of assigned parking lots after a short experiment with open parking. "That system just didn't work," said Jenks. No more parking tickets have been issued this year than last, he added.

Parking policy gets mixed reviews

Some students disagreed with the new system. "I have at least $100 worth of tickets," said Laura Vanderaa '83. "Who does it hurt if my car is in the wrong lot for an hour?" Todd Solomon '84 agreed: "When I see a non-student spot empty in the middle of the day, then something's wrong with the policy." Solomon would prefer last year's policy.

"It's a pretty good system," said Robert McLean '84. Phil Carroll '84 agreed, saying "They've done the best they can with the loss, although they're too strict about giving out tickets."

Most students cited trips to Grand Union, local ski slopes, the Pittsfield bus station, or even Spring Street as the most frequent uses of their cars. "I use it for beer and food runs," said McLean, "and for skiing. A car isn't essential here unless you're a ski bum."

"It's really nice to get away for Winter Study weekends," said Carroll. "Despite the cost, it's worth it." Some other students mentioned longer trips to other colleges or cities as well as local trips or vacation travel home, but the traditional "road-trip" is no longer the central feature of Williams social life, although it still exists.

Today's students seem to feel that having a car, while pleasant and useful, is not essential. "Having one isn't essential," said Solomon, "but access to one is." With this, at least, the students of the 1950s or 1960s would probably agree.

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Friday

Wednesday, Jan. 20

Schlitz Taste Test Night
Good chance for a free beer or Schlitz give-away!

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Wednesday Night at 7:30
RECORD Recruiting Meeting in the Baxter Lounge. Join The RECORD!

The Record WANTS YOU!

JOIN THE EXCITEMENT OF A NEWSPAPER

The Record is looking for talented students to be writers and reporters for news, sports, features, and entertainment and creative

- Photographers
- Artists
- Layout artists
- Paste-up people

GET INVOLVED GET PUBLISHED

Eye playoffs

Stickmen hang on for two victories

by Rich Leavitt

Paced by a strong offensive effort throughout the first half of the game, in which the Ephs built up a commanding 5-0 lead, Coach McCormick's skaters were able to outlast a scary comeback attempt by New England Saturday and hold on for a 6-5 victory. Williams threatened to skate the Pilgrims right out of the rink in the first period and in the beginning of the second period. New England, however, refused to die and took advantage of the Ephs' sloppy play. McCormick's squad has yet to play a solid 60 minutes of hockey.

Dave Calabro '82 began the scoring parade for the pucksters halfway through the first period when he rattled home a goal after Bob Brownell '83 had hit the post. The Ephs connected again less than three minutes later when ever-hustling Skip Vallee '82 forced a New England defensive error on which senior Greg Jacobson capitalized for a 2-0 lead.

Within the next minute the Ephs tallied their third goal on a beautiful pass from John Whelan '82, who returned to action after a three game absence, to freshman Brian Rutledge who fired the puck home. The first period belonged entirely to Williams and was marked by great hustle, especially by the rejuvenated Digger line.

The second period started out as the first had ended—with the Ephs in control. High-scoring Ed Finn '83 chalked up his eleventh goal of the year with junior Charlie Thompson and Jeff Potter '85 garnering assists.

Wild goal

Five minutes later freshman Pete Dembrowski and Rutledge combined for a spectacular goal. Rutledge flew down the left wing and, while being held by a defenseman, centered the puck to Dembrowski who literally held off a defenseman with one hand as he poked the puck past an astonished Pilgrim goalie.

After that the Ephs let down and New England picked up three quick goals. Brownell scored what proved to be the winner with just two minutes left in the period as Williams went into the locker room with a 6-3 lead.

The third period saw the Ephs nearly blow the game as the Pilgrims scored twice, with the second goal coming when they pulled their goalie for an extra man at the end of the game. Goalie Dan Finn '84 held on for the win.

Led by fine performances from the Finn brothers, the Ephs downed the Middlebury Panthers 2-1 in their best game of the year to date. Ed Finn scored in overtime to clinch the victory as Williams won at Middlebury for the first time in seven years. Brother Dan was near perfect in the nets as he turned away an amazing 46 Panther shots.

Middlebury opened up the scoring in the first period, but Brownell tied the game up for the Ephs with just 40 seconds left in that period. The two teams battled their way through two scoreless periods before Finn's overtime goal.

Seeking playoffs

At this point in the season the Ephs are 5-4 in Div. II play and are battling for one of the four playoff spots in the western division. Top point getters for the pucksters as of this writing are juniors Ed Finn and Bob Brownell with 16 points a piece followed closely by senior David Calabro with 14.

Coach McCormick's line shuffling appears to have been a success as the Ephs have captured their last two games for their first back to back wins of the season. The team travels to West Point tomorrow and then out to Chicago this weekend for the Lake Forest Tournament.

Ephwomen upend Middlebury

by Dave Woodworth

Senior co-captain Terry Dancewitz poured in 18 points and grabbed ten rebounds in leading the women's varsity hoop squad to a 66-52 win over Middlebury on Saturday night. Frosh forward Kay Lackey added 14 points and eight rebounds, while another freshman, point guard Lynne Jaycobs, chipped in twelve points and a team-high seven steals.

Williams won the game with a tough man-to-man defense which forced turnovers and led to numerous fast-break opportunities. The Ephwomen capitalized on enough of them to build up a 38-20 halftime lead, which proved to be insurmountable.

Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin was pleased with the overall effort of her team, and made special note of the freshmen's contributions. "The freshmen came through for us; that was a key factor in the game. We had practiced hard and it paid off. Also, we learned a lot from our mistakes against Clark and Dartmouth."

The games to which she referred were lopsided losses to Dartmouth and Clark University earlier in the week. On Thursday, Clark blew the Ephwomen out of the building, winning 78-37. Last year's top-ranked Division III team in the east used a full-court, man-to-man press and excellent shooting to overpower Williams.

The home opener against Dartmouth was only somewhat less of a disaster, as poor shooting by Williams (15% from the floor) allowed Dartmouth to run up a 34-12 lead at the half. The Big Green's 6'4" center, Gall Kozlars, scored 19 first half points, mostly on tip-ins, and dominated the defensive boards to give Dartmouth a lead it never relinquished. Terry Dancewitz had 18 points and Cathy Evans '83 had ten in the losing effort, while Kozlars finished with 23 for Dartmouth.

Coach Hudson-Hamblin admitted that "we were in a bit over our heads in the first two games, but I think that the experience gained will prove to be valuable, as it did against Middlebury."

Cagers drop pair of hard-fought contests

by John Clayton

Two losses in one week. But they weren't just numbers in the loss column. The Eph hoopsters faced superior ballclubs and almost beat both of them. Saturday night they lost to Springfield 76-67 while Tuesday they lost to Dartmouth 58-57.

Springfield is in the top 20 teams in Division II in the country (Williams is Division III in basketball) but the Ephs stayed with them for three quarters.

Their biggest problem was junior guard Buddy Clarke, who scored an amazing 37 points for Springfield. Clarke was virtually a one-man team, scoring on jumpers, lay-ups, and fast breaks.

Williams, with a balanced scoring attack led by Jeff Fasulo's 18 points, could not keep up with the Springfield offense. Fasulo, Art Pidoriano (15 points and six assists), and Al Lewis (14 points) had good games for the Ephmen.

"They were just a better team than us," said Coach Robert Peck. "They were the best team we've played this year. They were quick, they could jump, they could shoot, and they had a good offense."

"We stayed with them well," Peck continued, "but then they threw a 3-2 zone at us that we hadn't practiced against, and we got a bit impatient, throwing up shots when we shouldn't have."

Springfield jumped out to early leads of 11-6 and 21-14 before a seven-zip Williams run with about four minutes left in the half gave them a 29-27 lead. The halftime score was 33-31 Springfield.

Clarke came out firing in the second half, scoring 13 of Springfield's 15 points in the first ten minutes of the half.

Lewis, Fasulo, and center Steve O'Day '83 brought the Ephs back within two, but Clarke led Springfield ahead to victory in the last seven minutes.

Both teams used predominantly zone defenses, as both have explosive offenses against the man-to-man. Williams was forced to press late in the game to get back some points, but the quicker Springfield guards were able to break it.

Senior co-captain Al Lewis uses his extraordinary quickness to leave a Springfield defender in his tracks during the Ephs' disappointing loss Saturday.

The Dartmouth game on Tuesday was a frustrating loss. Williams had come off five straight road victories and was hoping to please the home fans.

The Ephs started out well, leading by about five for most of the first half, and expanding it to eleven early in the second half. Everyone was playing well, with Lewis, Pidoriano, and Fasulo hitting with machine-gun accuracy from outside and O'Day and Scott Olesen '83

Continued on Page B7

IM Basketball

(Through January 11)

Monday-Wednesday League

Team	W	L
Tyler	5	0
Spencer-Brooks	3	1
Hopkins	3	1
Garfield	2	2
Morgan/Thompson	2	2
Dennett	2	2
Mills	1	3
East/Fayerweather/Lehman	1	3
Dodd	1	3
Armstrong	0	3

Tuesday-Thursday League

Team	W	L
Perry	3	0
Sage	3	0
Gladdeen	2	0
Faculty	2	1
Williams	2	1
Fitch	1	2
Bryant	1	2
Carter	0	3
Prospect	0	3
Pratt	0	4

by Daniel T. Keating

College sports are losing even the pretext of being designed for the student-athlete at many big-time schools.

Federal Judge Miles Lord recently declared that University of Minnesota basketball player Mark Hall is eligible to play for the Gophers even though he has not been admitted to a degree-granting program by the University. The NCAA requires that all athletes be on a program leading to a degree. Hall has been at Minnesota for three years but is not eligible to major in any field.

The basis of the decision and the real death blow to college sports is Judge Miles' distinction between college students and college athletes. Hall claimed that he was recruited as an athlete and came to college only as a means of becoming ing a professional basketball player. As such, he feels unfairly set upon when asked to meet academic requirements.

The judge's agreement with this claim is considered by most to be foolish disregard for the rules. In fact, it is an honest appraisal of the current deplorable situation in college sports.

The NCAA itself recently declared, when questioned about how students were supposed to attend football bowl games which came during exams, that bowl games are played, not for the students, but for the communities in which they take place.

The NCAA is also being threatened by the powerhouse schools who no longer want to share lucrative TV revenues with less prestigious institutions. This issue could ruin the NCAA because they're talking big bucks.

These events and others make it very obvious what has happened to college athletics. We are now dealing with a group of professional teams who recruit semi-professional athletes. These teams are associated with colleges and universities as a matter of mutual convenience for both: the team has an automatic battery of fans and the school has its name splashed all over the country.

Unfortunately, the two organizations are not perfectly symbiotic. Good athletes are not always good students and good students are very rarely good athletes. So both groups get the people they need.

It's about time that we stopped ignoring the facts. Sure, some schools like Penn State with Football Coach Joe Paterno are known to hold high standards for their student-athletes. The problem is that these are the exception and a diminishing breed.

If colleges want to have sports, they should draw the teams from the pool of people brought into the school as students. This can be done, as Ivy League schools and schools like Williams demonstrate.

If professional teams want minor leagues to season their athletes, the demand and support obviously exist to maintain them.

So, why hamper a young person seeking an athletic career with all that academic stuff? Let's call our athletes, athletes and our students, students and stop perpetuating a hypocritical system which tries to put them in the same boat, because both groups are suffering for it.

Sexual Harassment: Differing Views

From confusion comes insight

I've been walking around in a bit of a confused stupor this past week. It has, however, been a very productive week with understanding. With the help of some friends and their very basic advice, I started sifting through the opinions of others in order to not-so subtle forms of racism, sexism and harassment to continue. It was also that passivity which allowed the administration

by Paul Sahbah

regard to what I've learned about myself, my friends, and the College community in general. Moral number one: from confusion comes insight.

The discussion generated by the "Harassment at Williams" panel served at first, to free my dormant awareness and curb the confusion that had been fostered by rumors. Hopefully, the administration now sees the pervasive effect of such rumors. The panel itself was immeasurably helpful in this respect. As I sat there taking in the messages of the various speakers, I realized, as I did last year during the aftermath of the cross-burning, that I had not come to terms with my views on find my own. The next step took a bit longer, but I eventually came to the conclusion that through understanding comes dissatisfaction. I am dissatisfied by the way a small group of students took it upon themselves to inform the media on their own without consulting the administration, resulting in terrible publicity for the College which serves absolutely no purpose. I am dissatisfied that we've become so complacent on this campus that sometimes it seems that only something on the six o'clock news will shake us up and make us take heed. Had the issue been handled on campus by one of those ever-present ad hoc committees, to take row house dining away from us, and which may allow the administration to take Winter Study away from us.

My dissatisfaction also stems from the fact that people really don't communicate here. Sure, we talk, but so much is superficial and insignificant, and so little contributes to growth and maturity. That is what close friends are for—helping you grow. We shouldn't need a major incident on campus to appreciate the role of those we talk to everyday.

One can only hope that from dissatisfaction comes change. This past week has helped me to realize that real communication is the only way to destroy the pre-conceptions that, to some extent, we all have. That kind of change is constructive, and is the kind that will contribute to the "healthy environment" that the College advocates. Though our culture may tell us that change will only bring on confusion, I would counter that from confusion comes insight, understanding, perhaps dissatisfaction, but constructive change as well!

"My dissatisfaction . . . stems from the fact that people really don't communicate here."

the issue. Communication seemed to be the main message of the panel, and I realized again that communication would help us all better understand the issue and therefore deal with it. So I tried communicating.

I found that from insight comes would any significant impact upon awareness have taken place? Perhaps not, but only time will tell whether the ends justify the means.

My dissatisfaction stems from the passivity that grips this campus and which allows subtle and

The harassment problem is overblown

I see in the Register this week that there is a training session for counselors to sexually harassed women on Monday and a counsel-ams is the Channel 10 Action News. However, from my experiences here, none of this is true. I can understand the concern over on the ground, our hands at our sides, and blank expressions on our faces?

As to the pro-women activism

by Steve Farley

ing session for the sexually harassed on Tuesday.

I see on the Channel 10 news that there are student demonstrations against administrative lethargy in responding to an atmosphere of sexual harassment at Williams College.

I hear Rosemarie Tong talking about the sexually harassing nature of looking, touching, and other forms of human contact.

I hear Tracy Dick state that we all have no concern for anyone else, take no responsibility for anyone or anything, and have destroyed four years of her life.

So, obviously, Williams College seems to be a battleground where rape is an everyday occurrence and all the women are continuously exploited as the administration turns its collective back and covers its collective ears. In all this chaos, the Williams Feminist Alliance is the only organization the battered Williams women can turn to for help.

This is the way it appears to disinterested people in Albany whose only connection to Willthe recent isolated cases of sexual assault, but if anything at Williams has ever been blown so far out of proportion that the original form is no longer apparent, this is it.

Williams has one of the least exploitative atmospheres of anywhere in the country. The problem here seems to be not one of

of the Williams Feminist Alliance, most of the women around campus that I've talked with feel that the W.F.A. is not representing their own viewpoints, but is rather advancing a set of viewpoints which the W.F.A. believes should be the viewpoints of all the women on campus. Those women do not sense any of the thick atmos-

" . . . if anything at Williams has ever been blown so far out of proportion that the original form is no longer apparent, this is it."

too much contact between the sexes, but one of not enough. This student body has immense respect for one another and there is already a certain coolness and aloofness in many interpersonal relationships. So shall we satisfy Ms. Dick and follow Ms. Tong's guidelines for avoiding sexual harassment, and become a totally frigid campus of robotic self-oriental automatons walking around the campus with our eyes phere of sexual harassment that the W.F.A. is saving them from. Some of them even feel that a major reason for the overemphasis on the harassment problem is an attempt by the W.F.A. to get publicity for itself.

So, let's put this whole scene back into perspective. We should remain concerned about sexual assault, but let's not cut off our noses to eliminate one unsightly blemish.

Shifting the power: women must say no

Editor's Note: The Record this week received several opinion pieces dealing with the sexual harassment issue. This double-sized Outlook attempts to draw these pieces together in one space. The articles not only show students' opinions on sexual harassment but their views of how Williams has addressed harassment and related topics.

by Jon Tigar

My uncle, a year and a half older than me, suggested that we go bar-hopping in his native Greenwich and, not knowing the territory, I agreed. The first two nights saw a disgusting amount of alcohol consumed, but I wasn't having a very good time. Singles scenes. Sedentary drinking. Boredom.

The third night we crossed the New York state line and stopped in a club/disco filled with locals, students and finally, some good, loud music. In between sets of blister-raising garage-band rock, I started dancing with a woman from Stamford who worked as a

I am too much of a pessimist to believe that the Women's Movement, faltering as I write in its attempt to pass the ERA, has nearly eradicated the inequality between the sexes on the issue of social interaction. Gone, however, are the days when anyone, man or woman, can allow harassment to occur without not only some self-examination, but self-recrimination as well. Each of us has an obligation to examine how we respond to pressure from our peers to behave in ways that perpetuate sexual harassment. For men, the pressure is very strong to conquer at any cost, adding notches to one's belt like a gunfighter. Friends most commonly ask only "how far did you get with her?" as though one's ability to convince women to sleep with him were the absolute indicator of male prowess. Women are told to submit. "Do what he asks," they are reminded, "or he won't go out with you again."

With Privilege Comes Paradox

We at Williams are in a special position. We are isolated from the pressures of home; we have escaped the formative years of prep or high school and we have yet to confront the confusing Real World. We can make our own rules, for a few years, and we can behave as we wish.

"Sexual harassment serves as a not-so-gentle reminder to womankind that men are in control not only of the collective libido, but of society as well."

secretary during the week and hung out in clubs on the weekend. We danced. We talked. When I asked her for a kiss, she let out a surprised laugh. "Why are you laughing?" I asked. "Because you're so . . . so kind," she replied. "Most men don't even ask."

I think I would have forgotten that story by now, though it occurred recently, if it hadn't been for the events of the past week. The oddest part of that incident wasn't her laugh, but her interpretation of what had happened. She thought my question was an act of chivalry—a temporary relinquishing of my power as a male in deference to her slight drunkenness, I suppose, or a formality—rather than a check on the parameters of what she thought was acceptable behavior.

Where exactly those parameters lie and who has the power of decision is the controversy of the day, at least on this campus. In an ongoing relationship, the power of decision should change hands frequently and the parameters should keep expanding as time goes by. As Sartre pointed out, the power to make decisions which affect our lives is the only real power we have, and to enter into a relationship of any kind is to willingly forego at least part of that power.

Sexual harassment involves the usurpation of all or most of the decision-making by one of the parties. In an isolated physical or verbal encounter, there is no time for power relationships to evolve. They are static incidents in which the question of who has control must be resolved quickly. Every form of sexual harassment—and Professor Rosemarie Tong clearly established at the Sexual Harassment Panel that harassment includes many forms of behavior often thought harmless—from the most casual remark to rape itself represents the consummation of authority over the unwilling victim.

In many ways, sexual harassment serves as a not-so-gentle reminder to womankind that men are in control not only of the collective libido, but of society as well. Since men have made Life's Important Decisions for quite some time now (try forever), it should come as little surprise that women are often treated like valuable resources to be depleted at will. Men have a hard enough time fighting with each other to worry about disagreement from women.

intent upon our educations and our social lives that we think it unworthy of our time to ponder the political problems of our campus, much less of the rest of the world. Perpetuation of past wrongs seems the easiest way out simply

We might take the view, held by many of our peers, that the Administration won't do anything constructive to solve the problem, because it can't or doesn't want to, and talk amongst ourselves, criticize each other and try to establish an

"This is not the senior prom and we are not newborn babes."

because it requires the least effort. Sometimes we close our eyes and hope the problem will go away; other times we become bored with an issue, tired of discussing it, worn out from too much intellectualizing, so we move on.

Perhaps that will be the solution many people pursue. Like the more trivial issues of whether dogs should be allowed on campus and the Gifford Committee report, and even the serious matter of the cross-burning last year, we can allow this to pass. I hope sexual harassment will be discussed until discussion turns into change, and I hope that process will continue not only into next month, or next year, but long after all of us have left school to pursue other goals. But I doubt that will happen without constant struggle. One year ago we cancelled classes and struggled over the problem of racism here and elsewhere, only to find that it has become a dead issue to those who are not its victims.

Everyone's telling jokes about it now, even without thinking. The other night, someone made an obscene comment about the way the food had been arranged on my plate. "Stop sexually harassing me," I said. Everyone laughed but the woman on my right. "I'm already bored with sexual harassment," she told me. "I'm sorry," I responded. "I guess trivializing the problem was a stupid thing to do and a quick way to make everyone forget." "Yup," she said. "You got it."

Another solution is to hope and pray that the Administration will eliminate sexual harassment alone, without any pressure from the student body. The Dean's Office, after all, recommended suspension for the violation of one defendant's probation, before that decision was overturned by the Discipline Committee. We might passively allow the President and the Deans to enforce the Student Handbook's prohibition of sexual harassment as they see fit. It is often the expectation of any community that its governing body will resolve all legal problems on its own and ensure the community's safety.

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

I agree with all of the demands that WASH has made on President Chandler (a copy of those demands is posted on the Feminist Alliance board in Baxter Hall). To those demands I would add that suggested minimum penalties be made mandatory for every level of sexual harassment. By the time this column appears in print, a training session for counselors on sexual harassment will already have taken place. I suggest that everyone try to learn what they can about how to help the victims of harassment.

As a male, the change I want most, and the most difficult to effect, is for women to say "no" whenever they feel they are being forced to do anything against their will. If women would alert men whenever table talk becomes too erotic, whenever touching is unwanted, then the imposing task of raising our own awareness would be much easier. Tracy Dick spoke eloquently on the danger of passivity last Wednesday; for anyone to allow someone else to do something he or she opposes is to encourage that conduct to continue. I don't know what it feels like to be a woman under the constant pressure to give in; I can admit to knowing what it is like to mistakenly apply that pressure. I got an idea of what harassment is the other night.

I picked up the phone and a woman using a nasal voice asked if I knew whom I was talking to. I didn't. Then she asked me if I was ticklish. As if coolness under fire would rid me of my caller, I answered that it depended on who was doing the tickling. Pause. She asked if I knew how to do an adagio dance. I didn't. She told me to look it up in the dictionary. She asked me where I was going that night. I put the phone down and walked away.

For a while we may see mass confusion here on campus; that would be a healthy sign that everyone is trying to come to grips with his or her own sexuality. Hopefully we will avoid a climate in which men and women become afraid of each other. In upcoming Outlook pages I hope to see more light shed on the topic of sexual harassment.

Burden of tradition

Not many members of the Williams community can possibly oppose the WASH demands for a clearer definition of sexual harassment, a proper and equitable review process for cases of sexual harassment, and adequate counseling and educational services for everyone involved. No one at Williams is in favor of rape or any other kind of sexual abuse.

by Charlie Pardo

Why, then, has WASH met with everything from jokes to quiet opposition to open hostility? It is accused of blowing the problem out of proportion, of responsibility for the media's portrayal of Williams as plagued by rapists, and of waging a vendetta against men. Perhaps. But at the root of the opposition, I think, is the basic fear that defining sexual harassment means redefining all standards for male and female behavior. This heavy burden seems to fall on our shoulders just when many of us are first becoming comfortable with our sexuality and with our perceptions of ourselves as individuals. Just as many of us do not have the strength to defend ourselves against sexual harassment, even more lack the strength to reevaluate our perceptions of ourselves within traditional roles. I perceive myself as a protector, provider and decision-maker, and I will resist anything that appears to threaten that role. Like many, I am intellectually allied with WASH but emotionally wary of what they want from me.

We are all, perhaps, the awkward heirs of the sexual revolution. Our intolerance of sexual harassment is the first step in dealing with that legacy. Compassion and the strength to overcome our fear of change is the next.

Don't abandon the issue until it's been resolved

I suppose I was wrong to assume that an "institute of higher learning" would hold students of higher intelligence and sensitivity. Passivity and the inability to make contact with others seem to be that which predominates instead.

by Beth Byron

It is time for us to leave behind the recent incident of alleged rape. We do not know what actually happened, and to dwell on this particular occurrence is to destroy the greater issue which it has brought forth. Day to day harassment is symptomatic of the prevailing attitude that men are allowed to say and do what they please to women and that women will encourage this. Men on campus have been heard to say that sexual harassment does not exist here, that it is not important, and that the issue would be best resolved by letting it die out. These people are wrong. A woman should not have to suffer a continual barrage of messages which invalidate her as a female and as a person, and this is what sexual harassment does.

(Two days after the panel on sexual harassment, a male student went up to a female acquaintance and asked her if she felt sexually harassed. When she responded that she did, he began to pinch her and ask her if she were serious. She certainly was serious, and so should we all be.) Not all of us are directly endangered by rape or undue pressure to surrender to sexual acts, but all of us are participants in the game of clever remarks, slight grabs and pats and pinches, and general acceptance of the female-as-object image. This is an ingrained part of our lives, and while it is not peculiar to this College, it still needs to be addressed at this College.

We are a small community; we should be an intimate, helpful group. If we cannot work out our problems in such a small, ideal body, how can we ever suppose to work out world problems? We sign petition after petition about far-away affairs, yet we refuse to realize that we have to improve our own community, here, and now.

Treat the matter of sex and sexual harassment seriously. Joking in good fun with good friends when the intention is understood is wonderful; however, senseless, non-productive, ridiculing articles such as Steve Willard's "Cutting the Cost of Free Love" and off-hand, thoughtless remarks to acquaintances and strangers is destructive and threatening. (I do not want females to be afraid of every male, and I would be horrified if journalism at Williams stopped the flow of satirical or critical pieces which offer help.) Yet, the insensitivity to the issue does result in continued remarks and actions, as if everything were okay, and as if we may go about unchanged because we really are not sure what else to do.

I suggest that we learn to assert ourselves. Learn to say that you do not want to be pressured, intimidated, and humiliated. Do not let friends' unthinking comments go unchallenged. Spend some time talking with others about this subject, and see how it affects all your lives. Make signs, write articles, read articles, express opinions, assert yourself, and do not abandon the issue without a bigger attempt to work it out.

If you do not understand why so many people are so upset about this, perhaps you need to learn more about it rather than assume it is not important. The social relations on this campus are important enough to warrant your thought. The fear we all hold must be looked at and moved through. The tension and defensiveness and apathy has to be examined and resolved. You cannot say interpersonal relationships do not affect you; they do. Do not forsake your own social consciousness.

Students protest College's actions

About 100 students gathered in front of Hopkins Hall last Thursday to protest the College's handling of sexual harassment cases.

Williams Against Sexual Harassment (WASH), an ad hoc committee of about 30 students and faculty, presented President John Chandler with a letter outlining five demands for administrative action and reasons for those demands.

The rally attracted reporters and cameramen from newspapers and radio stations as far away as Boston. On Tuesday WASH notified about 50 New England media of the planned rally, according to Geoff Mamlet '83.

The letter of demands, read by Eban Goodstein '82, pointed to problems the group perceives in regard to sexual assault and harassment. First, the Discipline Committee has no written rules and guidelines, has established no consistent policy concerning penalties and keeps its workings "obscure and mysterious," according to WASH. They also cited general campus attitudes toward harassment.

These concerns, according to the letter, led WASH to demand the following: that the College "clearly define rape, sexual assault and sexual harassment, and establish penalties which reflect the seriousness of these offenses."

—that a temporary procedure be instituted to deal with cases of sexual harassment during the Discipline Committee review, and that the Discipline Committee be made accountable to the student body for its actions.

—that current Discipline Committee members Professor Charles Dew and Lee Buttz '82 be removed from the Discipline Review Committee because "we insist that it is unlikely that these members will be able to fulfill their contradictory roles in simultaneously belonging to both committees."

—that the College "provide adequate counseling regarding sexual offense and appropriate social behavior."

—that President Chandler respond to the demands in writing and that he, Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor, Dean of the Faculty John Reichert and Wayne Wilkins, chairman of the trustee Committee on Campus Life, meet with representatives of WASH to discuss Chandler's response and to "begin a constructive dialogue regarding further action."

Most proposals met with cheers from the crowd. Nada Velimirovic '83 concluded the rally with a call for administrative action. "Education on purely an individual basis is not enough," she exhorted. "We need some procedure."

Dean O'Connor then invited interested parties to assemble in Brooks-Rogers Hall to discuss the demands amid shouts of "Words are not enough" from demonstrators.

O'Connor said he and the President would study the demands and report back to WASH. He noted that he had no disagreement with most of them. However, he saw no reason to remove current members of the Discipline Committee from the Review committee. "I do not share your assumption," he remarked, "that we distrust the present members of the discipline committee."

O'Connor also pointed to what he considered misperceptions among students about disciplinary procedures. "Rape and assault are not charges a college can bring; they are criminal offenses," he explained.

O'Connor asked WASH members to assist the administration by offering constructive solutions to questions they raised. "We need to know what's wrong with our (counseling procedures)," he remarked, pointing to the College's staff of two psychologists, eight nurses, four deans and chaplains. "If there's an imperative need, of course the College will respond."

O'Connor challenged WASH members in the audience. "This is a problem at Williams College. Why have you found it necessary to call all of the media in the Northeast?" A WASH representative dodged the question, saying, "We do not wish to respond at this time."

O'Connor said later that he had received at least 15 inquiries from bewildered parents. "We've been able to reassure them that we're acting responsibly, but this is very bad publicity for the College."

"I would like to know what their purpose was," he continued. "We are very sympathetic to many of their concerns . . . I like to think we would respond to students without five cameras in our faces."

As of Saturday WASH had no collective response to O'Connor's question. Mamlet, however, gave his view of the publicity. "I think that the problems that we saw in the College's handling of sexual assault are problems faced by other institutions. These events would therefore be of great interest and educational value to others."

Mystic students gain maritime experience-

Continued from Page 1

Mystic this past fall, explained, "We basically ran the ship." Because a twenty-four hour watch must be maintained, students alternate between watching, sleeping, studying, and cooking in four-hour shifts. Recalled Gaunt, "It takes about visiting lecturers. In addition to classes, students choose a maritime skill to develop from among several, including celestial navigation, boatbuilding, and small-boat handling.

Said Sue Marchant, '82, about her Mystic experience two three days to get used to the new schedule."

On Campus

The Mystic Program "is an integral part of the Williams curriculum," in the words of Benjamin Labaree, Director of the Program as well as adjunct Professor of History. He noted that the Program is "designed to provide . . . a background through courses that focus on man's relationship to the sea in its many aspects—historical, literary, artistic, political, economic, and scientific."

Students take courses in American Maritime History, American Maritime Literature, a seminar in Marine Policy, and either Oceanography or Marine Ecology. The courses are taught by Dr. Labaree and Dr. Wendy Wiltse, the Program's Marine Scientist, as well as by Marchant asserted, "Even if you don't get anything out of the academics (which is highly unlikely since everything is new), you learn a lot about just plain living."

Foreign students adjust well

by Brett McDonnell

Foreign students at Williams generally adjust well to college, though they sometimes have some initial language problems, according to Dorothy Hanson, the foreign student advisor.

"Speaking is usually not their problem. Where trouble comes, when it comes, is in paper writing," she said.

Tutoring available

Hanson has arranged private tutoring for students having difficulties. She remarked, "So far the problem has not been insurmountable for any of these students. A number of people have become interested in the problem . . . we could set up something a bit more organized."

Tim Napier, the admissions officer responsible for foreign students, noted that last year Williams admitted 31 foreign students, including eight permanent residents and three dual citizens. In the last two years, about five percent of the freshman class has consisted of foreign students.

High scores required

If English is not the native language of an applicant to Williams, he or she must take the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). Williams requires a 600 out of a possible 800 on the TOEFL, the highest score, according to Napier, required by any school. The TOEFL tests listening and writing comprehension.

Cultural bias

"The reason we require the TOEFL instead of the verbal SAT is because the verbal SAT is culturally biased," says Napier.

The problem for admissions comes with students who do not have to take the TOEFL, such as those from China, as well as permanent residents who have been in the U.S. for a while. Some of those in the latter category might speak English at school, but a foreign language at home and do well in school while doing poorly on the SAT. In cases like this, explained Napier, "We really go on personal interviews, their essay and the number of years they've studied English."

Napier asserted that many foreign students have excellent English skills. "The vast majority of foreign students come in here with skills far in excess of average American high school graduates," he added.

Several freshmen contacted agreed with Hanson and Napier. Aristotelis Papadopoulos from Greece remarked: "I did have trouble speaking and writing in the beginning," but now says he has improved.

Foreign students a novelty

Surprisingly, Victoria Chester from England also had language problems. "My language seemed more archaic sometimes," she remarks.

Chester thinks that as a foreign student she "had it easier in some ways. People are interested in you—you're a novelty." On the other hand, she says she gets tired of always having to be "on the guard."

Papadopoulos thinks the TOEFL has some limited worth. "A multiple choice test always has some limitations," he says. "It's not an absolute criterion, but it says something."

More support questioned

The three disagreed somewhat on the need for greater support services for foreign students. Papadopoulos says, "It would be nice if we had some more support. Not that we didn't have any, but the more the better."

Chester and Ursula Sauer, an American citizen from Germany, both say they personally needed no more help. Chester says, "It's really, really nice to have Dorothy Hanson there—she's a fantastic person . . . I don't want to get too involved in the Williams foreign student organization because I came here to be with Americans."

Snow removal costs pile up

Icy hazards mar Williams winters

by Laura Seligsohn

Caught in "a typical New England winter," the College is coping as well as it can with the winter perils of snow and ice, according to general foreman of Buildings and Grounds Ralph Iacussa.

Six groundsmen are responsible for plowing most of the roads and paths on campus, but, said Iacussa, "we can't handle it all, so some of it is contracted to plowing and construction businesses in town."

After a snowstorm, he estimated, "It usually takes eight hours to plow all of the streets and driveways once."

Shovels and sand

Custodians are responsible for shoveling the steps, porches and walkways in the immediate vicinity of the campus buildings to which they are assigned.

Plowing and shoveling are followed by sanding to counter the slickness of the ice that forms under the snow. "To date we've used 93 tons of sand," Iacussa reported early last week. "For environmental purposes, we don't use salt," he added. However, a small amount of salt is mixed into the sand to keep it from freezing.

Few injuries

Despite precautions, students slip and tumble on icy patches daily. Injuries, however, have been mild and minimal. According to Mary Gangemi, director of the Thompson Infirmary clinic, "Young kids are pretty sure-footed. I haven't seen one student we've had to suture because of falling on the ice."

Infirmary secretary Nancy Samuelson reported that the Infirmary has thus far seen "only bruises—no breaks or sprains."

Safety on the line

Even with caution, people slip and fall. In the winter of her freshman year, Laura Travaglini '82 broke both bones in one of her ankles after slipping. "My slipping on the ice was (attributable to) a combination of the lack of sand and my not wearing boots," she recalled.

After her experience, she was somewhat dismayed that, after Winter Break this year, "this place was like a skating rink." She is concerned that "everybody's safety is being put on

A College snowplow springs into action after one of the many storms that have deposited a total of nearly 40" of snow on campus this winter.

College responsible is if it failed to do something . . . if there were a hidden hazard." Since the presence of the ice is no secret and the College makes efforts to minimize risk, students must wear boots and move cautiously to avoid accidents, he said.

the line."

However, David Howe '85, a victim of one of the innumerable not-so-serious ice falls this winter, remarked, "There's not a heck of a lot anyone can do about it. I guess it is one of the inevitabilities of winter at Williams College."

Council wavers on WASH, supports lighting increase

by Laura Seligsohn

At last Wednesday's meeting, members of the College Council discussed the controversy over the College's handling of sexual harassment and the demands articulated by Williams Against Sexual Harassment (WASH) at its January 14 rally.

Liz Jex '83 argued in favor of the demands and answered representatives' questions about wording and implications. The Council finally elected, however, not to support the demands, but to support consideration by President Chandler of WASH's concerns.

Concern over lighting

Freddy Nathan '83 distributed copies of a letter to the administration concerning campus lighting. In view of the recent incidents of sexual harassment, the letter asks that additional lighting be installed in inadequately lighted regions around the campus. The letter is addressed to President Chandler, the deans and Peter P. Welanetz, Director of the Physical Plant.

In addition, the Council heard an appeal from Ken Talley '82 for a grant to finance a production that he and Ted Colburn '82 are organizing. The production, which will be the first totally student-run production in Adams Memorial Theater, seeks to "merge a gap between dance and theater that has existed at this school," explained Talley. It will combine dance and lighting to yield dramatic theatrical effects. The Council voted unanimously to appropriate $500 to help fund the production.

Freshmen dissatisfied

Finally, representative Jan Van Eck '85 reported that a number of freshmen to whom he had spoken had expressed dissatisfaction with the accommodations for socializing here. As many freshmen don't have living rooms in their dorms, they have few meeting places that are comfortable. Van Eck explained that this means students go to the library, contributing to the distracting noise there. It was suggested that part of the basement of Baxter might be refurbished to accommodate freshmen.

Professors Fred Greene and Larry Graver, Chairmen of the Winter Study Review Committee, will attend tomorrow's open College Council meeting at the Log at 7:00 p.m. Council President Nathan remarked, "They've been very good about soliciting student opinion and this is an extension of their commitment to gaining student input."

Survey shows blacks unhappy

by Susan Kandel

Three quarters of Williams' white student population would choose Williams again if given the opportunity, while less than half of the black students polled would do so, according to a survey taken last October for a political science course.

Thirty-six black students, 64 white students and 31 faculty members were interviewed as part of an omnibus survey taken in connection with Political Science 211, "Public Opinion and Political Behavior," taught last fall by Professor Philip Hastings.

"No one was particularly surprised by the results," said Hastings of the disparities exposed among the experiences of those black and white students interviewed. "The results just documented what everybody thought they knew anyway."

Though a significant percentage of both white and black students reported feelings of alienation at Williams, the impression of isolation appears stronger among black students, with only 25 percent claiming they are able to speak candidly with fellow students, as opposed to a figure of 63 percent among white students questioned.

White and black students were generally unsure as to whether or not they would encourage a child of theirs to attend Williams, though 22 percent of the black students polled responded with a definite no, in contrast to just 90 percent of the white students. Of those white students who would not encourage a child of theirs to come to Williams, 70 percent attributed this decision to the disadvantages of a small college over a large university, while 70 percent of the black students emphasized the poor social environment.

Neither white nor black students were particularly enthusiastic about the social life at Williams, with only one-fourth of black students and one-third of white students calling it "good." However, only four percent of the white students labelled the social life "poor," compared to 44 percent of the black students.

Hastings said the fact that white and black students drew strikingly different conclusions about life at Williams does not reveal anything particular about students or the College.

"You'll see the same results at Amherst or any similar type of small institution . . . if you repeated the survey three different times, you'd get essentially the same results."

The survey also contrasted the views of Williams students, faculty and non-faculty employees concerning strategic arms build-up and nuclear proliferation.

"We postulated that the faculty would be more liberal than the non-faculty employees, and that the students would fall somewhere in between, and the results bore this out," said Hastings.

Seventy-three percent of the non-faculty employees, 34 percent of the students and only 30 percent of the faculty identified themselves as conservative politically. Half of the non-faculty employees favored arms build-up, as did 28 percent of the students and 13 percent of the faculty.

The Financial Analyst Program
at
MORGAN STANLEY & CO.
Incorporated

You are invited to attend a Pre-Recruiting Information Session at
The Log
Thursday, January 21, 1982
7:00 P.M.

Williams College alumni from the Morgan Stanley Investment Banking Division will conduct an informal session to discuss the two-year financial analyst program at Morgan Stanley.

Traditional refreshments will be served

Johnny's Rent-a-Lemon

$10 a day
10¢ a mile

Will deliver and pick up the cars in the Williamstown area.

Will rent to those 18 and older.

802-823-7272

BEER SPECIALS!

Michelob 12 pak 12 oz. NR	5.49 each
Weideman 12 oz. NR	5.99/case
Molsons 12 oz. NR	11.99/case
Tuborg 12 oz. NR	7.99/case
Labatts 12 oz. NR	11.49/case

Schmidts Carling Rheingold
16 oz. Returnable bottles 7.49/case
plus 2.50 deposit

PARTY WINE SPECIAL!

Bella Vino California Chablis, Burgundy,
Rose 3 liter jug 3.99/each

Bring this ad in for 50¢ off
any case of beer. Good through January

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2

BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

Michael Bell

Bruce Kieffer

Peter Berek

Humanities Endowment names fellows

Three professors received fellowships from the National Endowment for the Humanities for the 1982-83 school year. Michael Bell of the English Department and the American Studies Program was awarded a Fellowship for Independent Study and Research. English department Chairman Peter Berek and Assistant German professor Bruce Kieffer received Fellowships for College Teachers.

Bell will research American realism for a book on post-Civil War American fiction from William Dean Howells to the present. He said his studies next year will focus on "... American naturalism and late 19th century American fiction. Bell received his BA from Yale and his MA and Ph.D. from Harvard. He taught at Princeton for seven years before coming to Williams in 1975.

Berek intends to study "Realism and Control in Elizabethan Drama: 1586-1597." He will concentrate on the works of John Lyly and Christopher Marlowe, and the early plays of William Shakespeare. He plans to travel to London and Stratford upon Avon in England; Stratford, Ontario; and the Folger Shakespeare Library in Wash., D.C.

Berek also received a National Endowment Younger Humanist Fellowship in 1971, and spent that year in London researching 17th century English poetic style. He graduated from Amherst in 1961 and earned his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard. He came to Williams in 1967, and served as Dean of the College from 1975 to 1978.

Kieffer specialized in German language and 18th and 19th century German literature and thought. He will spend next year in Tuebingen, West Germany, where he will examine the work of German writers of the pre-Romantic era from 1770 to 1785.

He received his B.A. from Columbia College in 1973 and his Ph.D. in 1979.

Harassment panel—

Continued from Page 1
ing criminal law, civil suits, discrimination law, the Dean's office, which she called "a quasi-legal system," counseling and consciousness-raising. "Theoretically it is the duty of every rape victim to press charges," she said, "but since trials are often very unpleasant, the other remedies are available."

Grievance procedures

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor spoke on the role of the Dean's Office and the Discipline Committee. He outlined the college's disciplinary and grievance procedures.

Since the College is not authorized to deal with crimes, they must be referred to the authorities, he said.

"But if the victim is not willing to take it to the authorities," he added, "the incident can be dealt with through the disciplinary process in so far as it is a violation of College laws."

Discipline Committee

O'Connor said the Disciplinary Committee is broadly representative of the community and that it has rendered "just verdicts and appropriate penalties" in the recent cases of sexual harassment.

He added that the Discipline Review Committee will discuss the issues outlined in last week's Record article and that the Committee will be receptive to suggestions on how to improve the disciplinary process.

Students might try responding to harassment on their own, O'Connor suggested, instead of going to the Dean right away with a complaint.

"It's worth considering doing a little talking," he said. "Was the behavior meant to harass and humiliate—why not find out first? We live in a society in which there is too little attempt to work out grievances directly. College life gives us a unique opportunity to try this."

Donna Wharton '83 said she believes the lack of intimacy at Williams contributes to sexual harassment.

"Intimacy is the missing element at the organizational and interpersonal level," she commented. "Sexual harassment doesn't get adequate discussion. People only discuss facts, not their opinions. If we could voice our opinions, hopefully we could end sexual harassment at Williams."

Thomas Costley '82 called for a "middle ground between over-emotionalization and over-intellectualization in dealing with sexual harassment."

"Men are often guilty of sexual harassment due to ingrained behaviour," he said. "We can either ignore the problem, like a friend of mine has, or try to educate ourselves. Good intentions do not resolve sexual harassment by themselves."

"We shouldn't necessarily condemn ourselves," Costley noted. "We must examine sexual harassment with calm confidence. The greatest danger is exaggerating the problem."

Social context

David Langston, professor of English, said sexual harassment at Williams must be understood in a broader social context "marked by white male domination and privilege."

"Sexual harassment reinforces men's power and implies that men have a license to dominate and humiliate women," he explained.

Langston said Williams needs a code of manners, "not to dictate behaviour but to mold and balance relationships." In the past, parietal rules, now abolished, served this purpose, Langston remarked.

"Cultural narcissism" is one way to explain sexual harassment, he observed.

"Those with a compulsion to stare at others get a sense of identity from a shared antagonistic gaze," he said. "They have a deeply felt need for acknowledgement that they exist."

"We must redefine men's roles," Langston concluded, "and examine our own complicity in promoting the social hierarchy that condones sexual harassment."

Dean Nancy McIntire broke up the audience into smaller discussion groups which met in Hopkins and Bronfman to discuss the panelists' comments.

NOW-WE'LL PAY YOU TO ATTEND MEDICAL SCHOOL

In fact, we'll even pay you $530 a month while you attend. That's in addition to paying for your full tuition.

It's all part of the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. How does it work?

If you're selected for a Physician Scholarship—from the Army, Navy, or Air Force—you're commissioned as an officer in the Reserve.

While you're in school, you'll have a chance to serve 45 days a year on active duty, gaining valuable medical experience. After graduation, you will serve three or more years, the length depending on the requirements of the Service selected and years of scholarship assistance received.

As an Armed Forces physician you'll receive officer's pay and benefits. You'll also see a diversity of patients and have opportunities to use sophisticated medical technology.

But most important, while you're in medical school we'll help pay the bills. For more information, send in the coupon. There's no obligation whatsoever.

Yes, I am interested in receiving more information about an Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship. I understand there is no obligation. (OM)
For more information mail this coupon to:
Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box C 1776, Huntington Station, NY 11746

Check up to three: Army ☐ Navy ☐ Air Force ☐

Name _____ Sex ☐ M ☐ F
(please print)

Address _____ Apt _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____ Phone() _____

Enrolled at _____ School _____

To graduate in _____ (Month, Year) Degree _____

1141

TONIGHT OPEN MIKE NIGHT

Anyone may take the stage. See or Call the manager for a time slot, x2006

WEDNESDAY BUD NIGHT AT THE LOG

Come sample the "King of Beers" at discount prices — tee shirts and other prizes also.

THURSDAY
The Williams Coffee House presents
MICHAEL COONEY
8:00 $1 at the door

FRIDAY
Happy Hour 4-6
Hot spiced wine, Happy Hour prices and entertainment by KOOL AID and F — "good old blues"

Don't forget the Log will be open at 3:00 for Superbowl Sunday

THE LOG

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 14

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

January 26, 1982

Hail of plans floods Winter Study review

by Sara Gross

Freshman and Senior seminars will replace standard Winter Study course work under tentative proposals from the Winter Study Review Committee. A calendar without Winter Study is also included in the preliminary report that will be released in February. Anticipating the report, many faculty members have issued their own Winter Study options.

Twenty hours a week

The Review Committee's freshman seminars would group four or five sections of twenty students each, concentrating on a single topic. Suggested topics include "The Idea of the Hero," "Racism and Third World Politics," and "Technology and Value." Team teaching is encouraged, and two or three short papers would be assigned in lieu of a single extended research project. To strengthen the academic component of the seminar, freshmen would spend six hours per week attending class and an additional fourteen hours of weekly preparation.

The senior seminars of the Review Committee's plan would be encouraged but not required, and would follow along the lines of existing senior major seminars. Sophomores and Juniors would continue to follow the current Winter Study course program.

Grade added

A grade of "Honors" would be added to the existing range of pass, perfunctory pass, and failure. Committee members suggested that the "Honors" grade be used rarely, to recognize unusual distinction.

Review Committee co-chairman Larry Graver explained that the seminar proposal defines Winter Study so that "faculty and students coming into the program will know what it's supposed to be."

"Gang of 21"

Chemistry professor William Moomaw charged that nothing came of a similar 1979 attempt to strengthen Winter Study academics, an effort he labeled, "the tinkering of three years ago." Moomaw is part of an informal faculty committee paralleling the work of the Winter Study Review Committee. The faculty group, convened by Religion professor Mark Taylor, has been popularly dubbed "the Gang of 21." Professor Fred Greene, co-chairman of the official committee, described the "Gang" as a "spinoff committee."

"Gang" members have offered three proposals to date: a faculty research month, an

Continued on Page 6

Critically acclaimed young trumpeter Wynton Marsalis struts his stuff at the Jazz Messengers concert last Saturday. Drummer Art Blakey is in the background. Review on page 7. (Farley)

Trustees eye bank policy, gym facilities

The Trustees authorized the College to consider building new sports facilities and reinstated Williams' 1978 policies towards banks that lend money to South Africa in their January meeting, President Chandler announced Sunday.

Responding to dissatisfaction with the current College policy prohibiting the use of banks which lend to the South African government, the Trustees voted to return to an earlier policy that assesses the purposes of a bank's loan.

No new loans

Williams will now refuse to use banks that extend new loans to the South African government unless the loans provide a significant improvement in conditions for the nonwhite majority, Chandler explained.

"As an example, in 1980 Citicorp made a loan for the express purpose of providing housing, schools, and hospitals for blacks," said Chandler. "Some people are bothered by a blanket policy that would put Citicorp on our blacklist for making this loan."

Support for the "blanket prohibition" policy was expressed by one member of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder. Continued on Page 5

Levin attacks feminist threat

by Julia Genlesse

Michael Levin, a conservative thinker from the City College of New York, last Tuesday presented his view that biological differences between the sexes are responsible for sex roles. Levin contended that differences in the conditioning of males and females play little or no part in forming or perpetuating those roles. In addition, he argued that feminism is anti-democratic because it calls for "equality" rather than liberty.

Feminists a threat

"Feminism is the greatest internal ideological threat of our age," said Levin. "Sameness and equality are synonymous" the feminist demand for equal pay for equal work is another example of deprivation of liberty."

Levin explained that while he is all for "equal opportunity," he believes that feminists ask instead for "equality." Levin said he thinks that equal opportunity for women exists now.

Levin argued that unequal pay for women in the job market is the natural result of women not being as "aggressive" as men. "Women in the highest ranks of business hang back before promotion. This is indicative of the less aggressive nature of females, since they are in a situation which is one of the most conducive to aggression."

Reproductive efficiency

Levin asserted that efficiency is another biological difference applying directly to performance in the job market. "The sexes differ in motivation and motive," said Levin. Since "females can only reproduce themselves a few times, whereas males can reproduce themselves thousands of times," in Levin's opinion this makes men more efficient performers on the job.

Speaking of early biological evolution, Levin contended that "we are what our past shaped us to be." Differences between the sexes such as differences in math aptitude should not be explained away as a result of conditioning, Levin argued.

Illegitimate studies

Women's studies, asserted Levin, are "dopey." In his view, they are not a legitimate academic pursuit not only because "there has been not one great work produced (of feminist literature)," but also because Women's studies courses attempt to "indoctrinate" students.

"The educator's job is not to grind axes, but to teach the student about the world he or she is about to enter," Levin emphasized.

Will send evidence

Levin responded to questions from the audience after his debate with Assistant Philosophy Prof. Rosemarie Tong on "The Future of Women's Studies" and after his talk on "Feminism versus Democracy."

During these periods he revealed that while he is for coeducation, he is against affirmative action. To several questions after both talks he responded, "If you don't believe me, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope, and I will send you all the evidence you want."

Security catches thief

Suspect linked to past burglaries

After a fifteen mile car chase Thursday afternoon, Williams security officers assisted in the arrest of a man found trespassing in a room in Currier Hall, according to Director of Security Ransom Jenks.

Frank Jackson of Springfield was charged on Friday with two counts of possession of stolen goods, two counts of larceny from a building and one count of trespassing, in Northern Berkshire District Court, after a necklace and a ring taken from Currier were found in his possession. Two men with Jackson were released because of lack of evidence.

Past thefts

Jenks said he is "reasonably certain" that these men are linked to the burglaries in Dodd this fall and ones in Bascom House and Morgan Hall last spring.

He explained that the descriptions of the men involved in each case were almost identical and that they used the same methods—entering a room and asking the occupant for a match. If the room was vacant, Jenks suggested, the men took small items such as jewelry, cameras and petty cash.

Jenks said Williams security first learned that Jackson and two companions were on campus after a phone call from Jonathan Light '83. Light reported to security that dormmate Nola Bertram '83 of Currier had discovered a man in her room. Although he said he wanted to visit a friend in neighboring Flitch House, the man headed behind the Williamstown Savings Bank where he joined two men waiting in a parked white Cadillac convertible, Light said.

Jenks added that shortly after that Security Office received a call from Judy Lewis '85 reporting a similar person in her room in Williams Hall.

Security chase

Alarm technician Roger Bouchet then noticed the Cadillac in the Garfield House parking lot. While Bouchet contacted the Security Office, the car left the lot and drove north on South Street, Jenks said. Jenks and Officer Bill Busi, in the Security station wagon, sighted them near the Williams Inn and chased them south on route 7 at speeds ranging from 65 to 70 miles per hour, according to Jenks.

Jenks contacted the Security Office to tell them to alert the Lanesborough Police and the Massachusetts State Police. The Lanesborough Police pulled the Cadillac over in Lanesborough and the Massachusetts State Police searched the occupants and investigated the case.

Continued on Page 5

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Outlook views labor organizing p. 4

• The sport
of dying

• Trackmen edge state schools p. 7

• Pucksters travel to Chicago p. 10

The Williams Record

Have a merry Christmas

Let us assume the worst.

Not only do they eliminate Winter Study, but they tell us we have to take exams after Christmas break—sort of a “stocking-stuffer.”

What sounds like a nightmare to most students—January exams—is a very real possibility if Winter Study is voted out. Most students hearing this plan talk seriously about transferring. On the other hand, many faculty members love the idea. The faculty are the ones who vote.

We can complain that our vacation would be miserable, that we would have difficulty getting motivated for exams after a long break. But these days the faculty is more likely to consider educational purpose than student opinions.

So we argue that January exams will produce very negative effects upon the educational experience of the fall semester and preparedness for the spring term.

The competitive nature of Williams would inevitably cause many students to use vacation as a study period, raising the grade curve for everyone. Students would soon be forced to Christmas studying just to keep abreast of the class.

A three-week study period will allow other students to put off their reading until the end of the semester, thus hampering class discussion and encouraging the “cram” method of learning.

For the spring term, January exams translate into an unprepared and poorly motivated faculty and student body. A one-week post-exam break would be harrowing for professors who must grade exams, compute final grades, and prepare for second semester courses. Tired students would have little energy or enthusiasm for their new classes.

A longer break would be less stressful but impossible because of calendar limits and the excessive cost of shuttling to and from home.

With January exams, there can be no doubt that we all stand to lose.

Letters

Commended

To the editor:

I wish to take this opportunity to commend Jonathan Light for his alertness and immediate response to the plight of a member of his house.

Had he not reacted the way he did and with such dispatch I am sure that the Security department would not have been able to bring about the apprehension and arrest of a person who (I have reason to believe) has plagued this community.

It is my hope that this kind of immediate response to an emergency situation will be commonplace among Williams students and therefore make this a much safer and secure community.

Ransom H. Jenks, Jr.
Director of Security

Community

To the editor:

As a woman of yellow color, I would like to respond to the letter that was written in reaction to Miss Rony's article on Asian Americans at Williams.

I only wish to stress the importance of maintaining an ethnic community's perspective when dealing with such issues as cultural identity. A community perspective requires support groups or solidarity among Asian Americans.

Only within our community will we find our history, our language, our literature, our art; if we reject our community, we deny ourselves all of this, and we negate our own cultural identity. Is the only alternative then, to assimilate? To me, a woman of yellow color, who maintains the community perspective, assimilation is undesirable. It is an idea that is racist because it requires conforming to the norm—eventual integration of the dominant white culture, and this, to say the least, is a big compromise in our identity as Asian Americans. But why should maturity be measured by the degree to which the individual has assimilated into American culture? The Japanese Americans once leaned heavily toward assimilation and look what happened—they allowed themselves to be carted off to concentration camps. They destroyed anything that was too “Japanese,” burning books and art, even refusing to speak their own language. They were shamed into silence, only because they condemned themselves for being what they are—yellow.

And the Japanese Americans still continue to feel the psychological impact of this experience even today. That is something the assimilationist view does not take into account.

The assimilationist attitude is: Keep pushing on and assimilate, because “like it or not,” you are here in America, and if you can't dig it, then get the hell out! The fact is if people of color make waves, we are going to get shot down and told to go back

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Jon Tigar

NEWS

Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

FEATURES

Philip Busch

OP-ED

Paul Sabbah

ENTERTAINMENT

Ronald Isen

LAYOUT

Michael Govan

SPORTS

Dan Keating

PHOTOGRAPHY

Steve Farley

THE RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-397-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and registered at Williams, MA., March 2, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA., 01267.

January 26, 1982

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

“The heavy workload and the administration's recent declaration of war on grade inflation are the two most common topics of conversation on the Williams campus.”

—Excerpt from the soon-to-be released

NEW YORK TIMES GUIDE TO HIGHER EDUCATION

where we came from, as if we had less right to be here than anyone else. Because of our skin color, we are seen as second class citizens.

The pressure to assimilate is real and intense. I was conscious of it from the time I was five. In kindergarten one day, I was made to stand on one side of the classroom all by myself as a form of punishment, because when the teacher asked us whether we had all eaten a healthy breakfast that morning, everyone shouted, “Bacon and eggs, toast and cereal,” while I alone said, “Miso soup and rice and skemon.” Even now at Williams, I am faced in my education with a deficiency of courses that are relevant to my ethnic background. There is not enough offered in Asian studies and nothing dealing with Asian Americans. Though respondents to Miss Rony's article believe it is only a curricular problem, they do admit there is a need in this area. To me, these experiences and conditions are a broader reflection of white cultural hegemony. Hiring one more Chinese scholar at Williams, though an encouraging sign, is still far from enough in terms of what remains to be done.

Anny Hiramline '82

WS explores

To the editor:

The mere mention of the phrase “Winter Study” sparks debate on campus and further elaboration often leads to heated discussions and ruffled tempers. Recently, I was asked by a Winter Study skeptic how my parents reacted to the misuse of college funds on a frivolous Winter Study course, specifically the Environmental Studies trip to Nantucket. Let me defend myself.

First, I do not consider travel and non-traditional learning as frivolous and of no educational value. Thanks to the tireless efforts of Nan Jenks-Jay our group explored all aspects of Nantucket life. We met with a whole spectrum of Nantucketers, from dilettante inventors to shellfish biologists to daredevil fishermen. We traveled to all parts of the island and learned its natural history, geology, and the effects of coastal processes on the land. Each of us pursued his own independent research using the three town libraries, several museums, and the knowledge of local experts.

My antagonist, who is a professor at Williams, told me I could go to Nantucket any time, and as the parent and benefactor of five college graduates he saw no use for what he considered an expensive vacation. In fact, my parents encouraged me to choose a “unique” Winter Study, outside of the range of my normal academic interests. My father teaches English at St. Lawrence University, and contributes hundreds of hours of time to his own “Interterms.”

I was very disappointed at the reaction of my professor and his failure to understand my opinion about the educational value of Winter Study. The success of Winter Study at Williams depends on the efforts of students and faculty. Instead of condemning Winter Study, let's work together to continue to improve the quality of our January semester. If we all donate extra quantities of enthusiasm, motivation, and initiative Winter Study can continue to benefit the present college community and future generations of Williams College students.

Sincerely,
Betsy Kepes '82

Cheap jokes

To the editors:

The Record's editorial of January 12, 1982 states that “satire, plain humor, and serious commentary are all welcome” on the new Op-Ed page. I wonder, then, why Steve Willard's “Cutting the Costs of Free Love” was printed on this page, for cheap jokes about contraception and its availability at Williams are neither satire, humor, nor serious commentary.

While it is possible to write satirical or humorous pieces about serious issues, Mr. Willard's offensive attempt only mocks the contraceptive clinic and its goals.

Susan Edelman '81

Rebuke

In last week's editorial, “Attention at Any Cost,” the Record took the easier, less responsible course by failing to consider WASH's point of view before rebuking the group. Had the editors tried to imagine having been closely involved with the sexual harassment issue for two months, as have most of the members of WASH, they might have seen things quite differently.

Continued on Page 9

The Williams Record Op-ed

January 26, 1982

Duffy Graham

“Pills are reductive”

Cooking fresh food for her husband's just a drag
So she buys an instant cake, and she burns a frozen steak
And goes running for the shelter of her mother's little helper
Pills make me ill.

Winter Study affords the possibility for T.V. consumption, and I have seen enough pills on shows and in ads lately that I am ready to puke. They have pills for backaches, headaches, toothaches, any-kind-of-ache; we have pills for losing weight, and for gaining weight in certain places; you have pills to pick you up, to bring you down, to plant your feet back firmly on the ground (as the Moody Blues would say); and of course there are vitamins, which alone are enough to make me sick, even though they are supposed to be good for me. Pills exist for things which my sense of good taste precludes writing about. We have stores whose whole business depends on selling pills. We have giant companies that produce only pills. America: Land of the Free, Home of the Brave... Haven of the Pill.

Whenever something goes wrong, Americans take a pill. Why? They are ugly little things. Sure, they come in different colors and shapes, but American manufacturers always do a wonderful job of packaging. You can only do so much with a pill, and no matter what you do, it is still about the size of a doodle bug. But a few other things “bug” me about pills.

Show me an average American who knows what pills have in them. You have to have a Ph.D. in chemistry to know what they contain, and what they do to you. Those of us who trust ads or labels need to be more hesitant, and those of us who do not always trust labels take the ugly little things anyway. Of course, most of us probably never read the label at all.

So, what do you do when you want a solution to a problem, besides take a pill? Keep the problem from occurring. The best way to avoid taking a pill is to eliminate that which necessitates its consumption. Vitamins are totally superfluous and unnecessary. A good diet will provide you with all you need. Another way to avoid taking pills by eradicating the causes is to not be stupid. Strain your back and you get back problems. Hence the lesson: do not strain your back.

The Cool Out

Now, granted, sometimes the creation of the problem is unavoidable. But a pill is still not necessarily the solution. Pills offer only ephemeral relief, not a permanent cure. With a headache, transitory relief may be all that is needed. But the secretary or college student on speed is only compounding the problems, not challenging the underlying causes. We have accepted the notion that pills, from the innocent ones in magazine ads, to the prescription ones at the drug store, to the secretive ones you cannot buy legally in public, are legitimate cures for all sorts of ailments.

A pill is an absurd yet significant symbol for our technocratic society. Instead of fifty stars, maybe we should have fifty pills on the flag. (That would of course require changing a few words here and there—“The Pill-Spangled Banner,” “Pills and Stripes Forever,” and so forth.)

For one thing, pills are reductive. “In this one small pill is the answer to all your troubles.” A goal of our society is to make things simple, and that usually means small. Small computers are better than big ones. Magazines claim to provide you with all the information you need on what is going on in the world around you. (I only wish our smaller-is-better creed applied to our car industry as well, yet the philosophy endures in a convoluted form: “In this car is everything you could want in luxury.”)

Pills are also made for consumption. The pill is thus one of the perfect products in our consumer society, because you literally consume it. You do not use them to decorate the house.

Science through the pill eliminates the possibility of other non-technological solutions to problems. Religion, vision, spiritualism—whatever you choose to call it—is, I suspect, an important part of physical health. We call societies “backwards” if they see some sort of spiritualism as vital in health. Maybe the medicine man knows a few things none of us do, but we laugh at the notion because it is not scientifically proven.

I recently saw a magazine ad which embodied all the aspects of a pill in our society which I am talking about. The pill was being held up by a hand as if on a pedestal, in a glorified light. The pill was not only an answer to the proposed problem, but would also enhance the life of the taker. No alternatives to taking a pill—this pill—were offered to the reader. Good advertising? Yes, maybe, in terms of selling the product. But the understatements and subtleties of the ad merit greater consideration than any casual American reader—or pill-taker—would ever give.

And to help her on her way, get her through her busy day
Doctor please, some more of these Outside the door, she took four more —Rolling Stones

Sara Abend

Moderation masks emotional discontent

The speeches by Tom Costley and Tracy Dick told us about more than just sexual harassment. Costley recommended, on the one hand, that we be “not too intellectual,” “not too emotional,” effecting communication and compromise through keeping cool heads, and eyes turned toward love and brotherhood. Tracy, on the other hand, seemed to repudiate by her very presence these ideals as they were stated. There is hate here, she said—undeniably, for she feels it—and one cannot resolve such a hate by denying its existence. In my opinion, both Tom and Tracy were right. Compromise is necessary, brotherhood desirable. Additionally, though, emotions of all sorts must be expressed in order for resolution and compromise to be attained.

I reached this conclusion through somewhat shocking circumstances. Sitting in the TV room of one of the dormitories on campus, I was enjoying the sunny tranquility while quietly reading a book. In the next room, I heard four men enter and begin playing pool. Though I tried unsuccessfully to continue reading, their remarks soon impinged upon my consciousness; their content was enough to make me put down my book and listen. Unobserved, as they thought, they talked freely about a road trip they were to take, interspersing with their remarks many sexual jokes, some harmless, others not so harmless. It was not so much the discussion which was shocking to me, as their polite, public stance I knew so well. Knowing full well what is right and expected to say, evidently they would never dream of voicing their real opinions. Rather, they will find friends who agree with them and huddle over their jokes in private.

Does this not say something about the liberal attitudes we all profess? It is easy to have an intellectual command of what is right and proper to say; another thing to feel it. Tom Costley's words were so simple to agree with and be inspired by; acting them out would be far more difficult. Mousing words one does not feel is not only easy, however; it is downright dangerous. For in doing so one denies the far different passions and hatreds which may be seething below the surface. Even illiberal opinions may be publicly disavowed. When Michael Levin came to speak, many listeners were shocked and amused that such an intellectual dinosaur still existed. Though probably few of us here are so extreme, might there not be many who feel similarly? Hearing these opinions expressed outright would be far preferable to turning our heads and shutting our ears. Empty ideals encourage complacency, and make the real intolerance which may exist underneath, impossible to fight. Subtle intolerance is, in this sense, more dangerous than outright prejudice.

Liberal Ideal

Furthermore, the liberal ideal of happiness and love denies emotional dissatisfaction. This denial is fostered by the attitude of the administration here toward psychological counseling—one is allowed to have problems only on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, or by appointment; preferably not at all—and by the students themselves, whose often facile optimism denies the existence of their own problems and those of their friends. The liberal ideal also suppresses intellectual disagreement and encourages the hypocrisy I have mentioned above. In light of these problems, should we not reassess our ideals?

Certainly I do not recommend either mass depression and hostility or an atmosphere of intellectual barbarism. Both compromise and enlightenment are goals for which we should strive.

Smoke gets in my eyes

Some evenings the paranoiac in me rises to the surface. It lets loose all the suspicions and speculations that I have regarding the real motivation and meaning behind events here—be they frivolous or ominous.

What is really at issue here at Williams College this January 1982? It is whether or not we will continue to have the phenomenon of Winter Study. In more lucid moments that thought comes through clearly.

Viewpoint

Yet this month has gone by without the spotlight really being focused on this issue. Winter Study has faded into the background, giving up the stage to the problem of sexual harassment.

Not only did lust seem rampant on campus—the authorities were spineless, powerless to discipline the perpetrators! Decent people of both sexes were the victims, right? It has to be true; it even reached the wire services.

I'll bet you thought all that was important. A crisis of our times in the truest sense. The constant harassment was wearing us thin. Unable to concentrate on anything else, the College leapt unhesitatingly into the breach—intellectually, emotionally, and with a notable degree of creativity. Panel discussions, workshops, special counseling services; we got the works.

In the beginning I saw this month as a test case. If you had always wanted to write a novel or get started on that Nobel prize research, do it this month. Prove the value of Winter Study by making some kind of intellectual quantum jump. Make some sort of extraordinary cerebral effort because there is a growing feeling among the faculty that we would be better served by having more of the total immersion that makes up the regular semesters. The strung out mode brought on by an onerous workload is seen as the most productive. Ergo, Winter Study should be scuttled, to our mutual benefit.

I do not think that it is some kind of academic sin that Winter Study has become a chance to come up for air, in addition to whatever else it may be. I can reacquire myself with the world's boundless variety, some of which I have forgotten as the focus slowly narrows from September to December.

Now I can step back from the whole nasty mess and see the diversion that has been spawned. I can even admire the timing and the choice of issues and techniques which guaranteed enough agitation and rhetoric needed to make us forget about Winter Study as an issue.

Under the din of voices raised in righteous anger against sexual affronts I thought I heard another sound. It was a faint, urgent, desperate cry, the whimper of a wounded animal. Perhaps it was the dying gasp of the Winter Study we knew?

Peggy Stevenson

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

Organizing the Berkshire poor

by James Foley

The Western Massachusetts Labor Action has probably talked to you on the street, in the dining halls, at campus events. After hearing their story, if you said you were interested and volunteered your name and phone number, they likely called you, as many as two, six, or a dozen times. They start off by telling horror stories about the suffering of the poor, and the unrecognized worker, and their immediate assertiveness and ambiguity leave many puzzled. Who are these guys anyway?

WMLA was formed in the early 1970's in Adams, Massachusetts in order to organize the poor, those workers who have been labeled "unskilled," those in communities, which only offer low-paying, unsafe, temporary jobs, those on fixed incomes, those with no rights or protection under existing labor legislation or the protection of unionization. These are the people the WMLA calls the "unrecognized worker," estimated by the National Labor Federation (the parent organization of the WMLA and several other local organizing efforts) to be "over fifty per cent of the U.S. work force."

To serve these workers, the WMLA has organized several programs to keep Berkshire residents alive during the cold winter months. They cut and distribute firewood in the Pittsfield and Adams area, distribute donated clothing and food, and help members, most of whom don't have phones, fight illegal heat shut-offs by Massachusetts Electric.

Heating is the biggest concern for Berkshire residents during the winter months. The WMLA estimates that as many as eighty per cent of heat cut-offs are either mistaken or blatantly illegal. While other organizations such as Community Action often help mediate and resolve billing disputes, WMLA often finds it necessary to act as a policing body, enforcing payment agreements and protecting the rights of the sick and elderly. Their efforts are complicated by Massachusetts Electric's understaffed and often inaccessible complaint office in Boston.

Little faith in the government

Although they badly need and gratefully accept donations, WMLA functions without aid from either the government or large, privately run charities. Recognizing the insolvency of most of its membership, they ask an optional sixty-two cents per month from everyone, and larger donations from those that can afford to give them. Most can't.

The donation they want most is time, time spent in the community organizing. Ironically, a large amount of their effort is expended trying to get volunteers to help, and only a few nights or days per week are spent actually giving help. Even the heating battles and clothing and food distribution are not ends in themselves—providing short-term assistance builds a dangerous dependence which can become damaging as soon as the benefits run dry. In the words of one organizer, "This is only a band-aid; we need to arrange for permanent change in their living conditions."

Despite the handicaps inherent in self-reliance, they persist in their efforts to bind the poorest workers together into a united front. It is important, they say, for workers to reach political self-sufficiency. The poor can no longer afford to depend on the kindness-at- whim of the government. Even in times of fiscal generosity, money allocated for social welfare often fails to trickle down to the people who need it most.

Organizing such an alienated and demoralized group brings a unique set of problems. Because they feel powerless, many local residents turn to alcoholism which, coupled with unhealthy working and living conditions, makes them physically incapable of full-time participation. As it is now, many of the full-time organizers are in poor health.

In addition, Americans are more mobile now than they used to be, which greatest amount of time to give, provide the surest solution to the problem of understaffing, hence the persistent phone calls.

But students and WMLA organizers

"Due to the failures of the government and past organizing efforts (including the efforts of the WMLA six years ago), poor workers are apt to place little faith in outside assistance."

hurts the sense of community vital to any long-term organizational effort. Due to the failures of the government and past organizing efforts (including the efforts of the WMLA six years ago), poor workers are apt to place little faith in outside assistance. The WMLA hopes to instill more trust, once it grows: for now, and perhaps for good, they need help from more able-bodied and better-spirited organizers.

Student involvement College students, who often have the sometimes have conflicting interests. Though WMLA gives a full education in the plight of the poor and unemployed, teaches members how to repair cars, and teaches how to organize, they point out that they are "not into consciousness-raising, we're into doing something."

Since a college student has chosen to live in an atmosphere where his main task is intellectual growth and experimentation, as opposed to full-time community participation, he is accustomed to "consciousness-raising" as a way of dealing with political and social issues. In the case of the lower class' plight, most of us here can only try to sympathize from positions of personal good fortune, without any personal reason for wanting to work for change.

Instead of becoming actively involved, student volunteers canvass in the surrounding area, help distribute wood, or make posters or phone calls, then begin to feel as though they don't know why they are helping. Many leave WMLA feeling somewhat confused. It is difficult to be working in the interests of people who have lived their entire lives without equal rights, an adequate amount of money, or equal opportunity, when we have never been in such a position and have little understanding of what their interests are. As a WMLA organizer commented, "Someone who's in it for altruism or satisfaction—they're not gonna last. We're doing this because it needs to be done." Conveying that urgency to an affluent student body such as ours is difficult.

Finally, the biggest problem faced by organizers of all kinds, but especially among students, is "radical burn-out," the feeling that change is impossible. With little support from co-workers, one often lacks faith that he has enough power to effect change.

In spite of those problems, the WMLA presses on. If they are successful, the unrecognized worker will be recognized, as a powerful political force able not only to make his voice heard, but to ensure that his interests are served.

Good luck, folks. It's not going to be easy.

Join Us in Our Struggle

SIGN UP NOW!

U. C. F.	214 4th St. N.W.	644-1000
John Q. Public	100 Main St., Winst.	555-3091	I can give time
Mary Doe	149 7th St.	555-4132	I can...

Trustees review actions-

Continued from Page 1

Responsibility who maintained that "loans to South Africa bolster its credit in the world for things like weapons... Also, even if the loans are for new and better housing or for hospitals, these facilities will be segregated."

Lasell study

The Trustees also appropriated $35,000 to study the need for a new pool and basketball court. Chandler speculated that a 40,000 square foot structure featuring a 25 meter pool with a separate diving tank and a basketball court seating 1800 would alleviate current Lasell gymnasium inadequacies.

"We are one of few institutions without modern facilities," Chandler explained. "Most students and prospective are interested in the quality of the facilities."

He added that Lasell gym was on the list of projects for the 1970's but "the plan got scrapped for costs and questions of needs."

The Trustees also approved the construction of an alumni center to be added to the Faculty House. Chandler said he expects construction to begin this spring. The Trustees did not authorize the Adams Memorial Theater addition construction project, but Chandler nonetheless said he hopes work will begin in spring also.

New Health Director

Chandler also announced personnel decisions. Dr. James Corkins replaced Dr. Robert Goodell as Director of Health. Goodell is stepping down after fifteen years as Director to assume the title of physician. Chandler said Goodell "will continue to do some administrative work and will be involved as ever with medical care. He felt he had been doing it (directing the Infirmary) long enough."

Corkins is an internal medicine specialist who graduated from Western Reserve Medical School and spent his residency at Johns Hopkins. He has been a member of the Williamstown Medical Associates for 10 years.

Psychiatric help

Two part time psychiatric social workers will also join the Infirmary staff. William Barnette of the Capital District Psychiatric Center in Albany and Florence Frazier, who has a private practice, will come to Williamstown on Tuesdays or Saturdays. According to Chandler, the two are "specially trained in group counseling."

Gerald Nagahashi of the biology department and Michael Wattelworth of the economics department submitted their resignations to the Trustees, effective this month.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole. Phone 458-8157, 10-2, Monday-Friday.

Saw you on the subway - you were wearing a red scarf - I asked you which was the uptown train - Contact SU/1847

Sophomore advising set

by Stuart Smith

A new policy of sophomore advising should go into effect next semester, following the approval of a motion at the December faculty meeting, according to Assistant Professor of Art Jill Nassivera, who chairs the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) subcommittee on advising and student-faculty relations.

Under the new policy each department will select one or more faculty members to serve as that department's sophomore advisor. A list of all advisors will then be published and distributed to sophomores, as well as being made available through the Registrar's office.

Easy access

According to Nassivera, the purpose is to "create a method so any student who wanted it would have easy access to advice." Though a given advisor may not be able to answer every question, she emphasized, they will be able to serve as a "starting point," thus directing students to whoever can answer their query. Students will be able to go to the advisors at any time, during the year, Nassivera added, with any questions they might have over "curriculum, registration or prospective majors."

Nassivera noted that the new policy is not in response to specific complaints and problems, but rather is a "response to what seemed to be a fairly obvious need." It will "pick up the slack between Freshman and departmental advisors," she added.

The new policy was only one of several originally considered by the subcommittee, Nassivera noted. At a joint meeting with the College Council in November, however, the "different options were talked over, and this proposal was the one everyone thought would work best."

Sophomore support

Many sophomores said they think this system is a good idea, although most were not sure whether they would use it. "I think Freshman Advisors don't know very much about what students are interested in because they are assigned randomly," remarked Laurie Pask '84.

"When you're a sophomore, you really haven't got anyone to help plan out a course of study. You may miss out on major requirements, so by the time you're a junior, you may be up a creek," she said.

Burglar nabbed

Continued from Page 1

Jackson is now in the Berkshire County House of Correction because he was unable to raise $1000 surety or $200 cash bail, according to a Williamstown Police spokesman.

Jenks praises students

"I am elated with the response we had from students," Jenks said. "I expect that if they hadn't made those immediate calls, the College community would have suffered considerably more than it did."

In October 1981, when over $1000 in cash and jewelry was stolen from Dodd and Sewall Houses, Jenks speculated a connection to the Morgan Hall Bascom House thefts dating from spring of the same year.

A deterrent

"We lost thousands of dollars worth of stuff then," Jenks said. "I don't think they'll be back... this arrest will be a deterrent."

The
Management Information Systems Department
of

MORGAN STANLEY & CO.
Incorporated

*invites all seniors, especially those pursuing honors degrees,
to a presentation on our Management Training Program*

Wednesday, January 27, 1982

The Log
7:00-9:00 P.M.

Our program offers the following benefits:

- Interaction with innovative and exceptionally talented securities industry professionals.
- A chance to begin a career in Data Processing at one of Wall Street's leading investment banking firms.
- Guaranteed and rapid career progression in a challenging, fast paced environment.
- An outstanding compensation program for those who meet the challenge.

Contact the Career Services Office
for additional information.

Wine and Cheese

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

WASH denies irresponsibility

by Jeffrey H. Brainard
Williams' Against Sexual Harassment (WASH) last week answered Administration officials' charges of irresponsibility regarding the press release it sent to about 50 media groups on Tuesday, January 12, announcing an anti-harassment rally.

"We felt the Williams community should know about the problem of sexual harassment," said Jeff Menzer '82. "The rally was a newsworthy event. The Administration should not and does not have a monopoly on the flow of information to the media."

Constructive coverage
"WASH feels it did something constructive, although many don't like the way the press release was handled," he concluded. "But we thought it was the only way we could get changes."

"I don't think they gave much thought to the statement's potential impact," said Director of Public Information Ray Boyer.

He said the local newspapers "represented the issue very fairly," but explained that the AP and UPI wire services ran the story of sexual harassment at Williams in a very condensed version which, he suggested, did not adequately reflect the facts.

"Imagine trying to take this issue, which engendered five hours of panel discussion here on campus, and boiling it down to a 15-second radio news spot or a three paragraph news story," Boyer said.

Distortion fault of press
Debbie Gregg '82 said the press did not distort the story at Williams any more than other stories.

"You can choose either to never inform the press on anything or, when you do, to realize that it's the press, and not the people involved in the story, that distort the truth," she said.

Boyer said he thought the press release could have discussed sexual harassment as a wide-ranging problem in society and at Williams in particular and that it could have emphasized the attempt to find solutions on campus, such as the panel discussion. WASH's press release announced only its rally on Thursday, January 14, and made no mention of the panel.

"Where WASH could have taken credit for consciousness-raising, we wound up with a dirty little 'cover-up' story which was of no value to anyone," Boyer said.

Menzer claims the media sensationalized the issue and that WASH members emphasized WASH's goals and the larger issues of sexual harassment in society to the reporters.

"It was the Administration's job to publicize the panel," he said. "We didn't want to hurt or co-opt the panel by associating it with WASH. In the press release."

Goals reevaluated

WASH also reviewed its goals in light of Chandler's response to harassment questions. Menzer said WASH plans to "work with the Colby review committee, to help the Dean's Office to better define sexual harassment and to make suggestions to help change the climate on campus which fosters sexual harassment."

Menzer added that WASH will soon send a letter to students asking them to encourage the faculty to approve the interim discipline arrangement at their February 10 meeting, which would allow O'Connor to handle all sexual harassment cases until the Colby committee releases its recommendations for changing the disciplinary process at the end of the spring semester.

Open Lines

Gregg and Susan Smith '82 have formed a group called "Open Lines," which, according to Gregg, will offer emotional support and counseling for individuals who want to discuss personal problems or "hot issues" on campus, such as sexual harassment or campus alcoholism.

Although Gregg is a member of WASH and the Feminist Alliance, she stressed that Open Lines is not associated with either group.

"We felt that as a counseling group, Open Lines should not be politically oriented," she said.

WSP proposals

Continued from Page 1
"extended course" spanning 16 weeks, and two 14-week semesters with no Winter Study.

Faculty research month

Taylor outlined the faculty month as a time for research and writing to develop "effective teachers." Taylor's plan is based upon his belief that "the most important resource a college has is its faculty." He did not specify what students should do during the month.

Moomaw's alternative is to offer an "extended course" that would include the Winter Study period as part of the regular semester's work. The student could choose between an extended course and a regular Winter Study course.

Both the "Gang" and the Review Committee are considering 14-week semesters with January final exams. Both calendar proposals are similar.

"One great speaker"

Professors Robert Dalzell and Charles Karells joined to present a "general studies" curriculum for January. Students in their freshman and junior years would be required to take a seminar on a single topic drawing from all three divisions. Sample topics include "The Seas" and "The 12th Century." Students would remain in the same seminar group for their freshman and junior years, "to get some sense of the difference that specialized study makes," according to the written proposal.

Sophomores and seniors would be exempt from any academic requirement in January. Karells added that College money might be pooled to bring in "one great speaker" for the seminars.

Co-chairman Greene emphasized that the proposals are "merely drafts" of a final plan. The Review Committee will evaluate all proposals from the College community, and subsequently present two complete programs for a faculty vote. If neither program wins a 60 per cent majority of the voting faculty, Winter Study would retain its present form.

COMING SOON!

During the Semi-Annual Clearance at Salvatore's

Special Group of Capezio

Leotards and Tights are now 1/2 PRICE

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday Draft Beer Night Pabst Beer 64 oz. pitchers $1.50 7 pm - 12 midnight Tuesday Prime Time (reduced prices) Wednesday, Feb. 3 Michelob Light Night Assorted Michelob Advertising to be given away, 9-12 NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m. Best Deli in town!	Thursday Vodka Night Any Vodka drink $1.00 Friday Lunch special Beer and Deli Sandwich with I.D. $2.00
-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

WINTER CLOTHING CLEARANCE!

20 - 50 % OFF
all winter clothing.

96 Water St.
Open Sundays, Too!

Kaos killer stalks campus

by Jenny Bicks

Joe Williams, 5' 10". Brown hair. Brown eyes. Normal height. Normal weight. But there is something in his eyes, a black, evil gleam. And in his coat pocket he carries a small blue plastic gun. Joe has not slept in his room for three weeks. Joe is a professional K.A.O.S. player.

The aim of this "game" (Killing As Organized Sport) is sickeningly clear: "To be the last remaining assassin in the field of enlisted killers—simply, to kill and not be killed." They couldn't fool me by calling it a "sport." I knew it for what it really was; an obsession which had turned Joe Williams—smart, alert, good-natured—into a sick, roaming psychopath. With this in mind I set out to find the elusive Mr. Williams.

Undercover killer

Joe's friends don't know him anymore. When questioned, his roommate stated, "Joe Williams? Nope, doesn't ring a bell." His bed was made. Dust was gathering. That was O.K., I had other leads. Administration was little help. Yes, there was a Joe Williams registered, but he had yet to arrive at his Winter Study class.

I searched undaunted, studying every nook and cranny the campus had to offer. Library carrels, locker rooms, milk machines, all proved fruitless. I had given up for the day when a strange sensation came over me. Walking outside Baxter, I knew I was being watched. Turning quickly, I caught a glimpse of a small periscope sticking out of a nearby snowbank. I ran toward it, but it was too late. I had been shot.

"I'm sorry," Joe apologized to me later. "You just can't ever be sure, you know?" I nodded in understanding. Joe had made me conduct the interview in a closet so I doubted he could see me nodding, but I did it anyway. You have to humor these types.

Rules for murder

Briefly, Joe explained the rules of the game. You are given the Biosheet of another player with information on physical looks as well as hang-outs. You stalk, you kill. There must be no more than two witnesses to the killing. Once killed, your victim hands over his victim's sheet and you must now stalk this player. This continues until only two people remain. Simple, yet deadly.

Joe was in a tense mood; the night before he had shot the wrong guy in the bathroom of the Log. "It was a basic mistake," he explained. "A lot of people look the same from the back." He still chooses this location for the best kills. "It's the best place to catch guys with their guard down."

Girls, he concedes, are harder to kill. Last week he had to seduce his victim's roommate to get to the top of her bunk bed. He waited there until 3:42

Continued on Page 8

REVIEWS

Messengers send a garbled note

Waves of both confusion and triumph hit me on Saturday night as I watched Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers sweep

by Will Layman

out ninety minutes of undeniable driving rhythms on the stage of Chapin Hall.

Largely, the music was a triumph, or at least should have been had it been amplified correctly. Blakey, the leader and drummer, has been taking young musicians under his wing for a quarter century and molding them into units that crackle with fire. This group, a sextet, was as tight and explosive as any Blakey has led. Art's drumming looked effortless. He hardly took a solo, but was clearly at the center of each performance, setting its mood and guiding the soloists.

The evening's catalyst though was Blakey's young, remarkable trumpet player, Wynton Marsalis. Only twenty years old, Marsalis joined the Messengers a year ago, has since become the musical director, having just released his first album on Columbia. The trumpeter took the first solo of the night, and the audience was his. His solos used leaps and slides not expected from the trumpet, sounding like Eric Dolphy in their appropriate angularity.

Marsalis' feature, a ballad, was the high point of the show. Wynton's sound and style negotiated a near perfect compromise between the sounds of Clifford Brown and Miles Davis that have dominated jazz trumpet playing for years but have rarely been molded together. On the ballad, Marsalis held back at the right moments, playing like a much more experienced musician, and allowed his tone to speak as loudly as his choice of notes. We were very lucky to see Wynton Marsalis. His promise for the future is unlimited.

So much for the triumph. My frustration is more complicated. Essentially, I couldn't hear the music. The tight ensemble passages that are the trademark of the Messenger were muddled and lost, the solos by both the sax players were only partially audible, and the rhythm section sounding popping but rarely streamlined.

Nearly all use of individual dynamics were wiped out—if the horns played softly we just couldn't hear them. I'm not sure who or what is guilty—the hall, the sound system... but it was a terrible shame. It sounded as if things were turned up too loud, and with a music as complex and emotive (emotive means happy and sad) as jazz, what needs to be maximized is subtlety and NOT VOLUME.

Under the difficult conditions of sound quality, it is partially understandable that the audience reacted more to the bravura and drum rolls of jazz than to its central pulse of interplay and ambivalent emotions. But jazz, Blakey's jazz, deserves a better hearing. Until that time, jazz, a music that naturally combines the musical seriousness and dedication associated with "Classical" music and the emotional immediacy and power of popular sounds, seems doomed to carry, unfairly, the small audiences of classical music and a lack of serious attention on its shoulders. With young players like Wynton Marsalis on the horizon, the time to start listening is now.

American Buffalo: Worth the nickel

Secondhand Rose relocated at Jesup Hall? Americana commercialized? Early arrivals to the Cap and Bells' production of

by Rosanne Hario

David Mame's American Buffalo could only speculate as to what was in store. Sarah Horowitz's set design, a colorful assemblage of discarded junk on the shelves of a used-articles shop, could not fail to pique the interest of the audience.

American Buffalo unfolds on several levels. Three male characters, on the bottom rung of the social ladder, plan a heist of a supposedly valuable coin collection, the tip-off coming from a man who had paid $90 for a Buffalo-head nickel. A simple premise such as this by itself could have become tedious in its reliance on character development. Yet because it wrestles with some universal questions, the premise instead makes for sustaining drama. Friendship and loyalty are pitted against the greed of cut-throat business, and one wonders which will eventually take priority. In the last moments of the second act, in a rather brilliant and subtle reworking of the new Testament scene in which Christ heals the Roman soldier after Peter rashly slices his ear, we realize that betrayal is overcome by forgiveness, and loyalty triumphs.

John Stillwell was convincing in the role of Don Dubrow, proprietor of the resale shop.

Seth Rogovoy as Teach, Don's friend and colleague, put in a remarkable performance. His character propelled the play as he systematically undermined loyalties for business' sake.

The role of Bob, Don's pathetic gopher, was well-handled by Marc Wolf. Throughout the play Bob cries out for mothering as a nervous kid who aims to please.

Artistic director Shawn Lovley orchestrated an often gripping and generally satisfying production, bringing to life a slice of America, a slice of human nature.

Recycling program barrels on

by Derede Arthur

Large barrels in a corner of every dorm are evidence that recycling at Williams is alive and well—in fact more so this year than ever before.

Nan Jenks-Jay of the Center for Environmental Studies believes the recycling program has the efficiency and breadth of organization this year that it lacked before. The program's goal is to develop a consistent recycling service on campus, generate enthusiasm among students for the effort, and keep it going from year to year. The effort has met with notable but varying degrees of success, said Jenks-Jay.

Collection sites set up

The Student Recycling Committee was allocated $1200 this year: $600 from the College Council and $600 from the Provost's Office. The group bought three barrels for each dorm (one for each color of bottle glass), costly weather-proof rubber containers to take materials to collection points on campus, and printed signs for each site. The program also employs two work-study students who spend a few hours each week with a truck and driver from Buildings and Grounds taking the materials to the central recycling bins.

Two organizations from North Adams, the Northern Berkshire Retarded Citizens and the Northern Berkshire Counseling Center, (NBCC) periodically take the glass, aluminum and newspapers collected to recycling centers in Connecticut and New York. Williams receives no payment for the materials, Jenks-Jay explained, but it is nearly impossible to eliminate middlemen such as the NBCC because of prohibitive transportation costs and the time, expense, and injury risk of cleaning glass and aluminum.

Energy savings

Why the concern with recycling?

Continued on Page 8

Seth Rogovoy teaches John Stillwell about cheating and betrayal in Cap and Bells' production of "American Buffalo."

Continued on Page 8

REVIEWS

Continued from Page 7

Candida Revisited:
A worthwhile trip?

Last Tuesday, the Readers Theatre of Cap and Bells premiered Joan Simpson Burns' Candida Revisited in a staged

by Merritt Mayher and Carolyn Scott

reading directed by Marc de La Bruyere. The play attempts to realize the characters of George Bernard Shaw's Candida in 1913, a period fifteen years later. Feminist issues raised by Candida's reevaluation of the wife/mother role assigned to her by Shaw, were discussed by a panel following the reading.

The question of what happens after the curtain falls poses an interesting premise. The curiosity produced by this theatrical seed, coupled with the strong performances of the actress generated the strength of Candida Revisited. However, this strength was quietly gnawed upon by weaknesses in both the reading and the play.

These difficulties inherent in the staged reading of any play were not completely overcome in the presentation of Candida Revisited. Coordination between narrator and characters was not always smooth and the performers frequently spoke too quickly as if in an effort to maintain the audience's attention due to the lack of action. In directing, a clear enough distinction between a reading and a full production was not made. The readers, neither consistently read to the audience nor interacted solely amongst themselves, oblivious to the watchers.

The play itself, though carried well by the flow of dialogue, suffered from lack of action. Many of the opportunities for focused conflict, such as the actual meeting of Candida and Marchbanks after 15 years or the definition of a specific incident upon which Candida's dissatisfaction could be centered, never materialized, leaving the dialogue to tend toward clichés and platitudes.

The ensuing discussion attempted to evaluate and Candida Revisited as a feminist or anti-feminist play, the question of Candida's development as progressive or regressive, and the extent to which society influenced and restricted Candida's goals.

An elegant balance:
Bartok & Brahms

Last Friday's concert in Brooks-Rogers was essentially an out-of-town opening for a series of performances soon to be

by Jeffrey Perry

held by the University of Massachusetts music faculty in Boston's Jordan Hall. The program consisted of two solid works, Bartok's Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion and Brahms' Trio in C. Op. 87, for piano and strings. Both Bartok and Brahms were composers whose music requires performers to find a delicate balance between classical precision and clarity on one hand, and sensitivity to nuance and color on the other. Friday's performance did justice to both pieces, failing to maintain this balance only in a few minor instances.

Prof. Peter Tanner and his student, Thomas Myron, made short work of the percussion parts to the Bartok work, and two other U. Mass. professors, Nigel Cox and Marlon Gaffney, succeeded in communicating the dual role of the piano in Bartok's music—as an 88-keyed orchestra somewhat in the tradition of Liszt, and as a sort of ultimate percussion instrument.

Brahms' piano trios hold much the same place in his output as string quartets do in Beethoven's; they are summation state-of-the-art master-works intended for a small audience of connoisseurs. Unlike the late Beethoven quartets, however, the Brahms trios are extroverted enough to appeal to everyone, while retaining all sorts of surprises for the trained listener as well. The U. Mass. performers succeeded in great measure at managing to bring out many subtleties which make the work live and breathe.

K.A.O.S. killer—

Continued from Page 7

a.m. when he made a successful kill. It seems that Joe has an idiosyncratic habit of taking down the exact time of his killings. Later, he checks them out with his biorhythms. "Every little lead helps," he concedes.

Out of eighty starting players only about ten remain. Joe is one of them. "Now with the amateurs put away we can really start playing," he explains. "Going after beginners is like taking candy from a baby."

Cautiously I broached the subject: did he think this game is safe psychologically? "Admittedly, I'm paranoid," he answered. "There are little things. I don't sleep at night. I check under the beds. I booby trap the doors with tin cans. I carry three guns at all times in case one breaks. Yeah, I guess it affects me a little."

It seems this "game" has addictive qualities. Asked if we would play again Joe cryptically answered, "I don't want to play again, but I will."

On January 23, 1982, at 10:43 a.m. Joe Williams was savagely gunned down in the shower. His murderer, clad in ski mask and trench coat, is still loose.

Recycling program—

Continued from Page 7

ciling? Allen Doyle '83, a member of the Recycling Committee, cited the energy saved by recycling as the primary reason. Aluminum, he noted, "is one of the most energy-intensive industries." It takes nearly ten times as much energy to make a new can as to recycle one.

A recent Williamstown ordinance prohibiting the dumping of newspapers into the nearby full town landfill will force the College to dispose of papers in another way, said Jenks-Jay. Recycling is the logical alternative, said Doyle.

Another Committee member, Susan Williams '82, feels the recycling program is effective "for the first time since I've been here." She noted, however, that student response to recycling varies greatly. Some recycling bins are consistently full, while others are empty week after week or filled with garbage, she said.

Students questioned generally felt that while most of the College knows about the recycling program, many students do not bother to contribute to the collecting bins.

"Students use wastebaskets," said Leigh Repko '84. "It's the way we were brought up. I don't think most students are willing to put forth the extra effort." Repko, a resident of Mission park, has seen garbage and even an armchair dumped in the recycling bins.

Several students also felt that recycling could be promoted more than it has been. In most houses, announcements were made at the beginning of the year, but little has been said since, they said.

"I was really impressed with the response we got," Jenks-Jay commented. She believes use of the recycling bins will become habitual if they stay in convenient locations and the program continues to be well-organized.

Beyond the College, the future of recycling in Massachusetts looks bright. The Massachusetts bottle bill, which provides for a five-cent deposit on all beer and soda bottles and cans, was passed recently over Governor King's veto. It will go into effect in January 1983. Doyle, noting the success of bottle bills in Vermont, Maine, and Connecticut, anticipates "tremendous savings on municipal dump sites," including a 10-20 per cent decrease in the volume of glass deposited in landfill sites.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

They might have realized that it was not the members of WASH who created "an atmosphere of suspicion." Rather, these students were responding to an atmosphere set for them by an administration guilty of inconsistent responses to a serious issue, maintaining an unreasonable level of secrecy, and making contradictory statements to concerned students, parents and media.

If the editors believed with good reason, as do many members of WASH, that they had been repeatedly lied to by the deans, they might not have hesitated to compile their facts from reliable sources which happen to contradict the Dean's Office. Indeed, I hope journalistic integrity would have forced them to do so.

Seen from WASH's perspective, calling the media does not seem a rash act. Attendance by WASH at an endless series of individual and group meetings with deans seemingly intent upon ignoring the significant moral and procedural issues raised by the two incidents bred frustration. It became obvious that more pressure than a few hundred individuals could exert was needed to generate an adequate response to these issues.

Although the Record believes that WASH should give the Administration more credit for creating the January 13th forum, an investigation of how that forum came into being might have helped explain why WASH members might not agree. The deans did not create the panel by themselves. In fact, many of the same individuals who form WASH were responsible for lobbying for and organizing the forum the Record lauds so. They know that it was their own hard work, not only the benevolence of the Dean's Office, which initiated discussion of the issue on a college-wide level.

Had the editors of the Record chosen to look beyond their limited perspectives, they might have understood that the goal of WASH's action was not "merely to cause alarm," but rather to press action on important procedural issues upon a sometimes intransigent Administration.

Christopher D. Lamb, '82

Imposed upon

To the editor:

The past few weeks, I admit, I have passively listened to the main voices on campus talking about sexual harassment. I say passively because I could not be active without being sure of the facts. The problem is, I did not know the facts, nor do I pretend to know them now. That is not why I am writing.

I feel I must speak up because I am tired. I am tired of having things said for me. I am tired of being imposed upon by the wishes of a small minority. I am concerned about the problems of rape and sexual harassment. But my concern should not be confused with the crusade that it has come to be on this campus. This image has been promoted by a small minority who are resorting to sensationalism and the pseudo-terrorist tactics of making "demands." Sensationalism and these "demands" are causing you to lose the support of those you seek to represent, those you seem to need most: the majority of students here.

The majority of men and women at Williams are, I believe, concerned about the issue. However, by allowing Williams to become a sideshow attraction, you have only served to alienate your potential supporters.

The statement quoted in last week's Record proves my point: "...but when you're doing a story on sexual harassment, this is the place to go." How can we allow Williams to become a freakshow for the sake of a cause?

Just as the rights of the victims have been infringed upon, so too, have the rights of the other students involved, and so too, have the rights of the Williams students. You have infringed upon my rights. I have had television cameras follow me as I walk from Spring Street to Baxter Hall. You have forced me to play bystander and participant to your crusade. You have forced unnecessary concern from my family and friends who have read stories unproportional to the problem.

Although I am concerned about sexual harassment, I now feel compelled to explain my concern. Sexual harassment is a potentially serious problem. But the overdone nature of the publicity surrounding harassment at Williams has confused the issue. Williams is still relatively safe—if conscious precautions are taken, such as locking doors, and walking in groups. These are not unreasonable things; they set a pattern that we will all have to follow once we leave these Ivory Towers. Harassment is not special to Williams—it has become part of our society due to changing social values. Hopefully, as society adjusts to the newly-formed attitudes and roles, harassment will be eliminated. But to expect it to disappear because this is Williams, or because there was a publicized incident here, is an unreasonable expectation. The elimination of sexual harassment is a goal to be worked toward; changing society's attitudes takes time.

Susan Rosenzweig '85

Farley faulty

I'd like to take issue with Steve Farley's Outlook in the January 19 issue of the Record. I'll go through some of my objections point by point.

Farley mentions that counseling, demonstrations and Tracy Dick's comments about responsibility "obviously" makes the college seem a "battleground where rape is an everyday occurrence." I don't see that this is an "obvious" conclusion at all or that anyone has suggested it is. As for Tong supposedly talking about the harassing nature of "looking, touching, and other forms of human contact," Far-

Riikka Melartin '82

Track squad pulls out meet

by Steven J. Serenska

In an exciting conclusion to Friday night's meet, the Williams Winter Track team took seven firsts in the last eleven events to edge out Springfield, Westfield, and Albany State in a closely matched four-way contest.

In the meet's last event, the two mile relay, the Williams team was boosted by an exceptionally strong performance by senior co-captain Charlie Von Arentschildt, who eliminated the distance between him and the leaders of the race and put Williams out in front by a considerable margin. The Ephens went on to win the race and the meet with a final score of Williams 64, Springfield 61, Westfield 26, and Albany 23.

High-jumps soon

The Williams high-jumpers scored another impressive sweep of their event to put Williams in position to take the lead halfway through the meet. Seth Toney '85 won the event with a leap of 6'0", with Paul Toland '85 following in second, and Cameron Burns '85 tied for third.

Co-captain Jeff Poggi '82 won the 60 meter hurdles and then returned to take an important third in the 600 dash, enabling the Ephs to tie Springfield for the lead. Von Arentschildt followed Poggi's performance with a victory in the 440 yd. dash with a time of 50.8, bringing Williams closer to the thrilling finish.

Williams and Springfield exchanged the lead several times during the final minutes of the contest, but several outstanding efforts allowed Williams to ultimately triumph.

Runners break away

Micah Taylor '82 blazed to a first place finish in the 60 meter dash with a time of 6.3 seconds. In the next event, the half mile, Bennett Yort '84 broke free from a tight pack and held on to win a close race with a time of 2:04.5.

In the 2 mile run, John Nelson '84 easily defeated the field for the second week in a row to give Williams the lead going into the final two events. Nelson's time of 9:40.4 was over ten seconds better than his nearest competitor's performance.

The team, whose record now stands at five wins and one loss, does not compete this weekend, but plays host the following week end to Fitchburg, Worcester, and Assumption.

Leave your name for our 2nd semester package deal and be in on our drawing. You may get all your books free!

RENCZI'S COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS 01267

WHILE THEY LAST!!

SKI SALE!

Goff's Sports, inc.

Mon. - Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9 - 9

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

BEER SPECIALS!

Michelob 12 pak 12 oz. NR	$ 5.49 each
Weideman 12 oz. NR	5.99/case
Molson 12 oz. NR	11.99/case
Tuborg 12 oz. NR	7.99/case
Labatts 12 oz. NR	11.49/case

Schmidts Carling Rheingold
16 oz. Returnable bottles 7.49/case
plus 2.50 deposit

1/2 PRICE IMPORTED BEER SPECIAL
John Corage English Beer
6 pack - 3.50 Case - 13.99

WEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is sophomore Drev Klein whose competitiveness and sportsmanship in everything from snow football to broomball to beer chugging led Pratt House to the championship of the Mission Park Olympics held this past weekend. Drev, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

Williams Co-ops
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
something special is a gift from Co-op

TONIGHT
Let It Be Lowenbrau
discounts, prizes and giveaways
WEDNESDAY
Back by popular demand
JIM BAYLISS/guitar and vocals
THURSDAY
Happy Hour At The Log
(Note change from Friday)
The Log will be open Friday and Saturday night
(no happy hour Friday) - closed Sunday night
THE LOG

1982-83 Financial Aid Forms must be picked up by Friday, Feb. 5. Applicants who missed last week's meeting must attend a required meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 3, at 7 p.m. in 11 Hopkins. ALL FORMS ARE DUE MONDAY, MARCH 1.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.

Dr. Thomas R. Maselli

OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247

662-2020
663-5845

The Versatility Cut by

Women today want versatility. They're career women, mothers, hostesses, wives, homemakers and students, all rolled into one. This is why a versatile cut is so important. No longer does a woman have to be locked into one look. The shoulder length allows for both romantic long looks and many updo alternatives. A perm base can give the styles extra body. Pictured here are just a few versions of this look for today's versatile woman.

OR Pittsfield 447-9576, 443-9819; Bennington, Vt. (802) 442-9823

THE CLIP SHOP

Call for an appointment or just walk in on Spring Street Williamstown 458-9167

Raquetmen beat Yale, West Point, Rochester

With their coach in Japan and their sixth rank player out sick, the men's squash team came through with a great week, winning three matches including a tremendous win over Yale. The three victories moved the team's record to 12-1 and sets them as one of the top teams in the country.

The Ephmen rolled over Rochester Saturday by an 8-1 tally. The match was a surprise because the team thought that Rochester was not coming as most athletics Saturday were cancelled due to the weather. The team had practice and was leaving the court as Rochester arrived, but the players managed to muster enough strength to drop the visitors.

Depth sinks Yale

The highlight of the week, and maybe of the season, was the win over Yale, the third ranked team in the country last year. Yale won three out of the top four matches, but depth was in the Ephmen's favor. Wins came from seniors Phil Adams, Sam Natarajan and Kennon Miller, and sophomores Bill Nau, and Jamie King, giving Williams a 5-4 margin. King's match was the deciding factor as his 3-1 win broke a 4-4 deadlock in matches.

The win was especially satisfying because senior Tad Chase was out sick. His absence all week hurt the team because he is a very consistent winner at the number six position.

The first win of the week was over Army last Tuesday. Williams topped the Cadets 6-3 with the top six Ephmen all taking their matches. The strong win in what was expected to be a tough match got the week off to a good start for the Ephs.

Coach in Japan

Coach Sean Sloane is away in Japan giving squash clinics so the team has been entirely self-governed all week. Captain Kennon Miller has run the practices and kept everything under control.

The team faces a tough match Wednesday against Dartmouth on the Big Green's home courts.

Senior captain Kennon Miller winds up during three victory week for squash team. (Farley)

Hockey nipped in Chicago

by Rich Leavitt

A come-from-behind, overtime win by Augsburg over the Ephmen in the championship game of the Lake Forest Tournament ended the weekend on a disappointing note for the Williams hockey team. Williams was the defending champion of the tourney.

With just under thirty seconds to play, Augsburg beat goalie Dan Finn '84 to tie the game at three and send it into overtime. Augsburg scored late in the first overtime period to clinch the game and to take the title from the defending champs.

As has been their style for much of the year, the Ephs built up a lead only to see it fade. Dan Finn was nothing short of fantastic in the goal and held Augsburg who possesses an 18-1 record to only four goals. Freshman Mark Winters opened the scoring as he fired home a slapshot to give the Ephs a 1-0 lead. Scoring leader Ed Finn '83 added to the lead by netting his twelfth goal of the season.

Augsburg fought back from the early deficit and the game was tied at two midway through the third period. Things looked good for Williams when the ever present Doug Jebb '82 scored with just seven minutes remaining, but the Ephs' hopes were dashed when Augsburg scored with less than half a minute left to play.

Scoring just 44 seconds into overtime, senior standout Dave Calabro boosted the Ephs to a three to two triumph over the Bowdoin Polar Bears in the opening round of the tournament. Calabro, who has been playing exceptional hockey for the last few games, broke in on the Bowdoin goalie after a great lead pass from senior linemate Doug Jebb and fired the puck upstairs for the winning goal.

Vallee got Williams on the scoreboard early in the first period as he scored following a face-off in the Bowdoin end. The Polar Bears, however, swarmed all over the Ephs in their own zone and only fine goaltending by Finn kept them from scoring during a hard skating, physical first period of play. Senior Greg Jacobson netted a goal in the second period to provide Williams with a 2-0 lead.

Bowdoin scored early in the third period on a picture perfect passing play to shorten the Ephs' lead to one goal. Williams appeared to have wrapped up the game with just over two minutes to play in the third period when junior Bob Brownell lit up the red light. The referee, however, called the goal back ruling that the puck had already been blown dead.

With only 47 seconds remaining, Bowdoin scored after a scramble in front of Dan Finn. The score was knotted at two to send the game into overtime paving the way for Calabro's heroics.

Hoopsters hold on to take two

by John Clayton

The basketball team pulled out two wins last week to raise their record to 7-3. The Ephmen beat Connecticut College 67-57 on Sunday afternoon and Trinity 60-56 Wednesday night. Both games were decided in the final minutes.

Although Williams led for most of the second half at Connecticut, the home team cut the lead to two with less than three minutes left. However, effective stalling and rebounding—especially a Scott Olesen tip of a missed Art Pidorianno foul shot—kept the Ephmen in control.

Point guard Al Lewis led all scorers with 19 points. Jeff Fasulo, Steve O'Day and Pidorianno had 12 each.

The first half contained a lot of streaky play. Williams jumped out quickly, leading 7-0 and 22-11. But Connecticut came back, scoring ten straight and eventually taking a 27-26 lead.

The Ephmen then went on a 14 point run, scoring the last eight points of the first half and the first six of the second half. Fasulo and O'Day had six points apiece in that streak.

Connecticut chipped away at the 40-27 lead during the rest of the second half, coming within two at 49-47 and 55-53 before Williams pulled away.

Williams led for much of the Trinity game but had to come from behind in the last four minutes to get the win.

Down 52-50 with four minutes left, the Ephmen got layups from center O'Day and forward John McNicholas (on a feed from Lewis). Trinity tied it up, but McNicholas drew an offensive foul and O'Day put up a shot that crept in over the rim to give Williams a 56-54 lead with 1:42 left.

Trinity missed their next shot, and the Ephs stalled with the ball long enough so that Trinity was forced to foul to try to get the ball back. A few foul shots later, the Ephs had the 60-56 victory.

"Going to the man-to-man defense was a big factor in the comeback," Coach Peck said. "It took them out of their offense." Williams went to the man-to-man about halfway through the second half.

"We also had better help from the bench," Peck continued. "Ed Schmidt and Johnny Mac (McNicholas) played well." We went into the freeze well—when we wanted to hold the ball and not shoot at the end."

Lewis had an outstanding shooting night, going six for seven in the game, six for six in the first half. O'Day was the rebounding and scoring leader with 16 points and eight bounds. He scored most of his points on lay-ups and jumpers inside the key.

The Ephmen play at Middlebury tonight and go to Maine for Bowdoin and Bates this weekend.

SPORT SHORTS

Wrestlers vanquished

The varsity wrestling team traveled to Norwich, VT Saturday and dominated a quad-meet, winning the majority of individual head to head matches and drawing this comment from Coach Joe Dalley, "That was the best they've wrestled this year, they wrestled real well. I was very pleased."

Despite their success, the team lost to each of the three other teams because of forfeits suffered in three of the ten weight classes. Norwich and MIT each took their 18 forfeit points and edged out the Williams seven man squad 25-24 and 24-17, respectively. Keene St. also used forfeit points to slip by the Ephmen 17-15.

There were several standout performers for the young Williams team. In the 128 pound division, John Donovan '83 went three for three to up his season record to 9-0-1, while sophomore Chris Woodworth stretched his unbeaten streak to 9-0 with a pin and two other tough wins in the 177 lb. class. Also remaining undefeated was Jeff May '85, who won this third match with a five-point throw in the final seconds to extend his streak into double digits (10-0).

Two other wrestlers made large contributions. John Leahy '84 got a pin en route to a 2-1 afternoon. Lee Ordeman won his first two matches in the 167 pound division but injured his shoulder and was unable to wrestle against MIT.

After the meet, it was decided that another five hour drive in the blizzard would be unfeasible, so the team stayed overnight in Norwich, a place one team member called "probably one of the most boring places in the world." They returned Sunday.

The team faces MIT again Saturday, this time in a one-on-one meet in Lasell Gymnasium.

Squash rolls

Led by junior captain Barb Riefler, the women's squash team romped over "Hamilton," Thursday, winning every match for a 7-0 score. The win evened the team's record at 2-2.

With only two seniors in the top seven, Head Coach Renzi Lamb considers this a rebuilding year. He commented that the team is improving every match, but that Ivy League schools are still superior because of more experienced players.

The team will take on one of the Ivy League's toughest teams this afternoon when Yale comes to town.

Number seven player Mary Pyn-chon has left for the second semester and will be replaced by junior Liz Cole.

Skiers quick

In the first full carnival (alpine and cross country) of the year, both the men's and women's ski teams finished fifth in 30 degree conditions this weekend at the University of New Hampshire. The carnival included the top ten Division I teams in the East with a total of 240 cross country and alpine racers.

Women's captain Tricia Heilman '84 took sixth place in the giant slalom for the best Williams finish.

Injuries hurt the team as number two alpine racer for the men, sophomore Crawford Lyons '84, tore a ligament in his knee during practice last week. The extent of the injury is not known. He may return to action in a few weeks.

Women's captain Brenda Maliman '82 suffered from hypothermia during the competition. She will be fine for next week, but her performance Saturday was hurt.

Dartmouth College won the men's Carnival, breaking the University of Vermont's 24 carnival winning streak. Middlebury took the women's overall title.

Ephwomen win last-second thriller

by Dave Woodworth

Tracy Burrows '84 hit a layup on a feed from Terry Dancowitz '82 with less than a minute to play to break a 46-all tie and Cathy Evans '83 hit the front end of a one-and-one with thirteen seconds left to give Williams a 49-46 win over Hamilton on Thursday.

Co-captain Dancowitz had a game-high 22 points and pulled down 10 rebounds in leading the Ephwomen to their second straight victory. Evans and Kay Lackey '85 contributed eight points apiece, while Lackey added nine rebounds. Kim Swank scored 18 and played a strong floor game for the losers.

Defense hangs Hamilton

Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin gave the credit to Williams' tough man-to-man defense. "It put pressure on the ball, and kept Hamilton from setting up for good shots. We started out in a zone, but were quickly forced out of it by their outside shooting. On offense, Hamilton's man defense gave us a lot of options, and we hit the shots given to us (45 per cent from the floor)."

Again, Hudson-Hamblin stressed the play of the freshmen as an element essential to the win. "They learned to handle the pressure, and it showed in the closing moments. The team never lost confidence and kept its cool."

The win evened Williams' record at 2-2 on the year.

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 15

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

February 9, 1982

House transfers may be curbed

Room shuffling threatens house unity

House transfer procedures would be considerably tightened in an attempt to improve house unity under proposals from a Housing Committee subcommittee on transfers to be presented to the full committee tonight.

The Dean's Office would decide all house changes on the basis of student grievances. Transfers would also designate a housing category preference, not the house-by-house ranking that is used now. This is designed to insure that students transfer because they have reason to leave their current house, not because they prefer to move into a specific house.

Transfers sap houses

"The present transfer system," states the report, "has been designed to accommodate all students who wish to change rooms with or without a change in affiliation. This encourages students to seek their own interests . . . rather than diverting energy into the Residential House system." Transfers also lead to class imbalances and create divisions among house groups, continued the report.

The subcommittee suggests a request form which requires reasons for any house change. This form would be submitted to the Dean's Office, which would evaluate the case in consultation with the House president in order to find an internal solution, namely a room change within the house.

Internal unity

If no internal solution is agreed upon, the Dean would consult with the student and then decide whether a change of affiliation is warranted. If the Dean does not find merit in the request, the student should again seek a compromise solution through the house president, the report suggests.

"It is stressed that the Dean should consider a case meritorious if it is clearly demonstrated that a student's current situation is impairing their ability to function as a member of the College community," the report emphasized.

"Any such move should reflect a genuine inability to live in one's current environment. It should not reflect a desire to be with friends or to improve one's physical surroundings," it continued.

Perry House President Tim Caffrey '82 explained the reasons for this suggested change in policy at a Housing Committee meeting last week. "If we are to remain committed to the residential house system, then the transfer should have no place at this college. It should be an extreme exception, not the rule that it is." (See page 5).

In each of the past two years, more than 200 students used the current transfer policy, which was instituted six years ago.

Under that procedure, transfers list their fifteen housing preferences in order and are assigned available rooms after each house has set aside 25 per cent of empty rooms for freshman inclusion.

Dodd, Fitch-Currier and all of the Greylock houses drew the most transfer requests last year. Prospect and the Mission Park houses provided the most transfer students, according to then Dean of Housing Kathy McNally.

This transfer pattern gave Dodd House 68 senior members this year, while leaving 15 seniors in all of Mission Park.

Housing Committee co-chairman Kathleen Merrigan emphasized that this report is only a first step in the review of the transfer system. The Housing Committee will discuss the report at its meeting tonight and may have an open meeting in the future to examine transfer alternatives.

Despite the tentative nature of the report, stu-

Continued on Page 5

Williams attracts wealthy

by Peter Nicholas

Nearly two-thirds of Williams' freshman class estimated their parental income to be more than $40,000 a year, according to a Cooperative Institutional Research Poll conducted jointly by the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles.

The survey, administered during registration, questioned freshmen about dozens of issues, including their personal objectives, political orientation and family background.

One-fifth of the class of 1985 placed their family income at $100,000 or more. These estimates show an increase compared to 1979 freshmen, half of whom thought their parents earned $40,000 or more, while 10 per cent believed their parents fell into the $100,000 range.

Income disparity

The disparity between the incomes of the parents of the freshman class and the other families in the United States is substantial. Only three per cent of all American families earn $50,000 a year or more, while half of the parents of the class of '85 fall into this income bracket.

Despite this affluence, 31 per cent of the class receives some

Continued on Page 6

Construction continues on the $4.5 million addition to the Williams Art Museum in Lawrence Hall despite hazards caused by winter weather. A January thaw accompanied by heavy rains prompted makeshift protection against mudslides. The concrete foundation is almost complete, and an 80-foot crane began installing steel girders last week. Some parts of the building may be ready for occupancy by fall. (Farley)

James Hodgkins

(Farley)

Keller resigns

by Sara Ferris

Director of food services Ross Keller will leave Williams at the end of May to become innkeeper at the Asticou Inn in Northeast Harbor, Maine. James Hodgkins, current assistant director, will replace Keller.

Keller attributed his decision to leave to "just an interest in living in Maine. We've been interested in moving to Maine for some years—when this opportunity came along, we took it."

The 75-room Asticou Inn is located near Acadia National Park on Mount Desert Island off the coast of Maine.

No major changes

Hodgkins said he plans no major changes in the food service operations. "Things at this point are going well, and I'd like to keep it that way," remarked Hodgkins. "It's really going to be a smooth, uneventful transition."

He predicted that "problems will depend on what the economic pressures are." Hodgkins will be responsible for a budget of over $3 million and more than 100 full-time employees.

Keller presided over considerable food service change during his six years here. In response to a charge from President John Chandler to streamline dining facilities, Keller orchestrated the closing of Row House dining facilities last year.

Vegetarian victory

He listed as his most important accomplishments "the broadening of the menu and the introduction of vegetarian items." Keller also instituted a system of unit managers for the dining halls.

Chandler praised Keller's performance. "He has responded with exceptional imagination to the diverse palates and preferences of students in a period when Americans have become keenly interested in food."

Food service experience

Keller is a 1948 graduate of the University of Missouri where he majored in business administration. After stints with the Stouffer Corporation and the Sheraton Hotel, he joined the food service staff of St. Lawrence University where he remained until coming here in 1976. Keller's wife Carolyn is secretary to the Chaplains' Office.

Hodgkins has been the assistant food service director since 1970. He graduated from the University of New Hampshire in 1965, majoring in hotel and restaurant administration. Before coming to Williams he worked for Saga Administrative Corporation, a large college food service.

Chandler announced the formation of a search committee of students and staff members to evaluate candidates to replace Hodgkins as assistant director.

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Outlook examines campus politics p. 4

• SALT negotiator
warns of NATO disaster p. 5

• Williams' culinary delights p. 7

• Hockey triumphs in fifth straight p. 12

The Williams Record

Freedom from Choice?

The student Housing Committee has recently addressed the problem of diminishing house unity. A dramatic increase in house transfers over the last few years has brought this topic to the forefront of housing issues.

A high rate of house transfers is only a symptom, not a cause, of house disunity. By focusing discussion on methods to block transfer requests, the Housing Committee presumes that adding red tape to the transfer process will make students happier with their housing lot. Certainly this is an easy way to discourage transfers, but such a solution ignores the source of transfer requests.

At the roots of the house transfer issue are the very goals of the Residential House System. Students are encouraged to form bonds within the house. The Housing Committee proposal, on the other hand, would discourage people from transferring to join friends in other houses.

Administrative efforts to keep students within a house and yet keep them from becoming cliquish are self-defeating. Students must be allowed to decide for themselves what degree of unity they seek within a house. Unity must be facilitated, not forced.

If students are presented with avenues for social occasions, they will choose to stay with a house. An attempt to obstruct house transfers will only be seen as another lost freedom—the distress call of “encroachment on student privileges” that is so frequently heard. The Housing Committee must address the causes of the problem, not merely patch over the results.

A Thankless Job

Six years ago, Ross Keller came to the College Food Service with a difficult task—improve the quality and variety of meals, and also cut costs. Despite the inherent contradiction in the task, Mr. Keller performed his job well, leaving Williams students with a food service that we frequently take for granted.

Before Keller arrived, students had virtually no choice of what to eat. Diners had to enjoy the one entree or go hungry. Keller added a second entree, vegetarian selections, and “theme” dinners, while expanding the menu to avoid repeat meals.

The Committee on the 80s order to close Row House dining was not a popular move, and Keller fielded a lot of complaints about it. By working with the student Food Service Committee, though, he made great progress in easing the transition to the streamlined dining system.

At every college it is fashionable to make jokes about the cafeteria food, and Williams is no exception. It is no small feat to cook three meals a day, seven days a week for nearly 2000 people. Ross Keller has done fine work in a rather thankless job, and his leadership will be missed.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

“Why don’t they serve you GOOD food here?”

—a Little Brother in Baxter

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Jon Tigar

NEWS

Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

FEATURES

Philip Busch

ENTERTAINMENT

Ronald Isen

LAYOUT

Michael Govan

OP-ED

Paul Sabbah

SPORTS

Dan Keating

PHOTOGRAPHY

Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 438-397-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1941 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williams town, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

February 9, 1982

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letter

Review revisited

To the editor:

I was grateful to the Record for printing a review of the recent staged reading of my play, Candida Revisited. Unfortunately, your reviewer missed the point. The play was poking gentle fun at clichés and platitudes and George Bernard Shaw, marriage, feminism, etc.

Far more important was the significance of the evening for Williams theatre. Cap and Bells was inaugurating staged readings followed by panel discussions as a means of helping playwrights form their work before fully mounted productions were attempted as a way of benefiting the audience intellectually. All of those concerned with the play deserved, and received that evening, the thanks of the audience.

Your reviewer had little to say about the panel, which was perhaps the most important part of the evening. The panelists provided the discriminating review that the reading needed. Delightfully, interpretations varied so widely that they produced, in effect, new texts which depended for their construction on the personalities and educational backgrounds of the panelists. This of course was also true of the review you published.

I should mention one other important aspect of that evening. It produced an interesting dilemma for the Feminist Alliance, for they had to decide whether to support the production of a work with which they did not entirely agree. Clearly, they made the right decision. An enormously fruitful discussion ensued on the night of the reading when Elizabeth Jex from the Feminist Alliance stated quite rightly that some of their premises were being attacked. She might also rightly have noted that anti-feminists were being attacked even more strongly.

All of these aspects added to the occasion's value and I am hoping that by bringing them to the attention of the students at Williams further evenings of this sort, equally controversial, will occur.

Mrs. James M. Burns

Letters policy

The Williams Record welcomes letters in response to issues raised in the newspaper. To meet space limitations, we request that all letters be kept under 250 words, and that they be typed 57 characters wide. The deadline for letters is 2:00 P.M. Sundays.

The viewpoint column on the Op-ed page is a space reserved for commentary on new issues previously addressed in other Record articles or letters. We would like to avoid using the Viewpoint space as a column for rebuttal of Record articles. Viewpoints should also be typed 57 characters wide, not exceeding 400 words in length. The Viewpoint deadline is 12:00 noon each Sunday. While we will try to print all letters we receive, we cannot guarantee publication of every Viewpoint submitted.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

The Williams Record

Op-ed

February 9, 1982

Eds. Note: This eulogy is delivered one week after the third anniversary of Sid Vicious' death.

by Duffy Graham

Friends, fellow Williams students, Americans, world citizens: I come to bury Sid Vicious, not to praise him.

The good that men do lives after them, the bad we bury with their bones. But since there was little good about Sid, and since we could hardly classify him as a real “man,” we have only the bad to remember him by, and by that bad I—we—must judge him accordingly.

The establishment, and the established press had no respect for him. They had no respect for him, so why should I, considering all the respect we have for such respectable institutions as the establishment and the established press, who have a vested interest in the established social order.

Duffy Graham

In Memory of Sid Vicious

Onstage as a bass player for the Sex Pistols, or off-stage as a human-player in any of his various habitats, Sid was the same—pasty-skinned and anemic, scrawny and scowling, loutish and lubberly. And, Sid was confused.

Sid confused being resourceful with being ridiculous. Onstage, if he wanted to bleed, he would lean over a conveniently pogging girl in front of the stage so that her head would bash and smash his nose; then he would let the blood flow freely over himself. Offstage, he could be equally ridiculous. One time he came

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

Paul Sabbah

The Cold War

by Paul Sabbah

Well, it's winter cold season, and I must have been the first to find out. I've had two sinus stuffers already, and those cold remedies you hear about on T.V. aren't helping matters much.

The first time through, I caught my annual, never-falls, gets-in-the-way-of-fun-Winter-Study-three-week-head-cold relief and I was willing to pay the price. What I got in return was quite a bit of medicine but little relief. First, there were decongestant tablets to be taken every four hours, not exceeding twelve in twenty four hours; cough syrup to be taken every three to four hours, not exceeding seven ounces in eight hours; specially designed, new improved, laboratory tested, award winning, softer-than-ever tissues, designed to, of all things, wipe my nose; a bottle of new, easier to swallow, 5000 mgs. Vitamin C tablets, which were the size, taste, and texture of golf balls; and finally, last but not least, good ol', tried and true, mother's little helper, aspirin. I paid for everything, asked for a shopping bag, and trudged home in anticipation of genuine relief. The next thing I remember waking up in the infirmary. Apparently, I'd choked on a Vitamin C tablet, and my roomies, after finding that shaking me upside down was useless, decided to take me to the Thompson.

After a brief recovery period, I returned home and started going to classes. Soon, however, my roommates had barred me from the lecture halls because my various, cold-induced, bodily eruptions had made hearing the lecture impossible. Those rooms are truly acoustically designed.

I sit now in my tiny room, wondering how far off spring is, occasionally coughing, getting ahead in my reading while occasionally sneezing on a page or two, and keeping the tissues close at hand. I guess all I can do now is wait, hope, and breathe through my mouth.

home to find a favorite pair of blue jeans ripped and shredded, so he meticulously patched them up with dozens of safety pins he found lying about the place.

Sid confused being honest with being self-deprecating. When accused of being a terrible bass player, he replied, “I think I’m the worst bass player in the world.”

The Cool Out

Sid confused being self-expressive through personal appearance with being unfit for presentation as a human in the modern world. This was true from his spiked hair to his 90 pound torso, from the chain and padlock he wore around his neck to the black leather straps he wore on his wrists, from the button he gleefully sported which read, “I’m a Mess,” to the telling track marks on his arms.

Yes, they had no respect for Sid, and we know how respectable they are. They do not spit in your face (like Sid); they say, “I’m sorry, we just don’t have a job for you at the moment . . . come back some other time.” They do not boast their trackmarks; they drink at socially acceptable occasions. They do not mend their pants with safety pins; they take them to the tailor.

Some mistaken observers mistook Sid’s personality. One said, “Sid is somehow alluring.” Another said he was sweet. Said another, “Under that tough exterior was a real nice guy.”

No nice guy is convicted for assault. No sweet guy says of a fellow band member, with a sly grin on his face, “I’d sell his soul for anything.” No alluring guy greets his audience at the Longhorn Ballroom, in Dallas, Texas, “Ya cowboy faggots.”

Yet, believe it or not, Sid had fans. Sid’s fans saw Sid as smart, insightful, perceptive; saw critics as scurrilous, scandalous, slanderous. Sid’s fans felt Sid had feelings, too, and that he was making constructive comments about the world which swirled about him.

But is it possible for a member of a generation that came out of school with no future, no jobs, and no chance to buy decent clothes because he has no money to be insightful? Is it possible that one known for violent outbursts and drug addiction could make constructive criticisms of his society?

Sid wanted every person and every nation to know, whether they wished him well or ill, that he would pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the destruction and failure of liberty as we know it.

Sid knew all this would not be accomplished after his group’s single, “Anarchy in the U.K.” became number 1. He knew it would not be completed even perhaps in his life-time on this planet. But he wanted to begin.

Through the songs of his band and his own life, Sid was saying, “In your hands, fellow humans, more than mine, will rest the final success or failure of our course.”

“The next time the trumpet sounds, do not be a fool, a tool be not. ‘Give the wrong time, stop a traffic line, your future dreaming is a shopping scheme.’ Ask not what your country can do for you, ask not what you can do for your country. Ask what you can do for yourself.”

Sid did what he could for himself. As a personal anthem, he adopted the Innocent song, “My Way.” Yet when he finished recording it, Innocent the song no longer was. His version—a total bastardization of the original, complete with sniffling, raw guitar lines, and sexually abusive language—is a good example of Sid at his best.

Yes, Sid did it his way, in the way he lived and the way he died. And Sid was a family man. He lovingly asked his mother—good ol’ mom—for enough drugs to kill himself, and she lovingly complied and provided him with a lethal dose of heroin.

He lived in confusion, and died in it. Now, we will never know if he stabbed his girlfriend to death or not, but then again, considering his usual condition, Sid probably did not know himself.

The IN thing

by Ronald Isen

Well, Williams is IN for the upcoming year, as are over 200 other schools, persons, places, foods, beauty techniques, clothes, forms of entertainment, manners and a potpourri of everything else listed in the most recent edition of Women’s Wear Daily as being IN or OUT for the new year.

Perusing through the lists was enough to send chills up any would-be passe prep spine. OUT, is “The Alligator,” overly layered dressing (careful you Exeter Exiles), raccoon coats, all “preppy products,” boat shoes (except on boats), and of course, “anything monogrammed.” In addition, if in, contact lenses are OUT; so are status jeans (goodbye Long Island, hello Nantucket), while if “The Alligator” is OUT, his skin is IN, being the apropos haute couture for any top drawer fashion setter and reptile skin purse user.

Yet for true blue bloods, there is hope on the horizon. Classic Tiffany wedding bands, horse racing, bare feet, beer, vodka, swearing, and George and Barbara Bush (as any good Andover man well should be) have all been ruled as IN items for the following year.

And despite whatever shades of gloom may have come over our glided institution in the past month or so, Women’s Wear Daily proudly states that marriage, falling in love, love affairs, friends, and yes, feminine curves are all still IN for the following year. For you freshmen males still searching for Romance In The Snack Bar In The Third Booth On The Left, this is it—you have been granted a year’s reprieve to still make good.

As for food, TOFU gets a raspberry, yet Lima Beans (lima beans, not green beans for heaven’s sake! but, ugh, lima beans), the stuff you used to pay Fat Eddie a quarter to eat for you at the lunch table at PS 109, yes, those Peruvian Pieces of Poison are IN.

In addition to Williams, finally, Yale, Dartmouth, Princeton, Brown, and Stanford are all IN if you are also, while Harvard, Cornell (some things never change—what’s that smell . . . ?) and “Big Midwestern Schools” are all passe. Not surprisingly, Amherst didn’t even make the list.

To put it mildly, the dictates of fashion have definitely changed from my fonder days at Ashburton Elementary on Lone Oak Drive (across from the old lady who gave me cookies every day on the way home). The COOL KIDS all got Ho-Ho’s in their lunches, which, of course, had a certain prescribed method of ingesting. THE NERDS would just eat it all at once but FOR THOSE WHO KNEW, you would eat it by first carefully peeling the chocolate covering off, bit by bit, unraveling the cake, and eating the creamy filling first, saving the devil’s cake for last. COOL KIDS got chocolate pudding Snack Packs in their Scooby Doo lunch boxes. NERDS got fruit pudding Snack Pack cups in theirs (meaning they wanted to be cool, but their Moms cared about their nutrition). And the list went on. The point is, unlike Women’s Wear Daily, this list went on for all six years of elementary school. And once established as a NERD, you were finished, no matter how many Ho-Ho’s you tried to eat from then on. Women’s Wear Daily makes no such final judgment; there is, after all, always next year for all you Sperry aficionados. So no complaints from the rest of you: “Whining and Complaining” have been ruled OUT.

Muddling through the Williams political scene

by Jon Tigar

Politics we bar,
They are not our bent;
On the whole we are
Not intelligent

As we face the coming of a new semester, bruised and battered from the initial shock of the return to academia, it would be wise for us to examine our current political situation here in the Purple Valley (that hotbed of radical activism). Every now and then, one can spot a Political Animal on campus, although not very often. The level of political ire seems to fluctuate between a soft whisper and a loud whisper, due, I suppose, to a combination of isolation from reality and the privilege of not needing to care. So, in order to best equip the political novice, and to refresh the memories of everyone on the fourth floor of Sawyer, who recently learned to his delight that fraternities had been abolished, I present a compendium of campus issues, past and present, by no means complete.

Winter Study

The big one just recently. If you don't remember it at all, try asking yourself why you still have a hangover. Oh, yeah, now you remember.

By last year, rumor had it, no one was taking Winter Study seriously. Instead of writing sophomore theses, or some such thing, your average Epherson drank, talked till all hours of the night, skied every day, or frequently left campus. This year we became very serious: we wore big yellow buttons with "Support Winter Study" printed in flashy purple letters. Some folks took that to mean that they should bust their butts, and did, obscuring those of the hard-core, old-time persuasion who think of Winter Study as a well-deserved break.

The Trustees, who gauged public opinion by holding a well-received reception at the Log, seemed all in favor of keeping Winter Study, but some faculty have different ideas. Which concept of the future Winter Study prevails at any given time is anyone's guess until we institute a wall poster system similar to the one in China. Something like a napkin board, only thirty times bigger . . .

Now that Winter Study is over, the adoption of a "wait and see" policy would only obliterate what little control the student body has in the outcome of the debate. The recommendation here is to yell and scream loudly in the direction of every administrator and committee that claims to have any say in January's fate.

The CIA, here and elsewhere

The Central Intelligence Agency received as much love and admiration upon the occasion of their visit as Barry Manilow gets airplay at WCFM. Their recruiting effort coincided handily with the visit of John Stockwell, the ex-Agency agent, who echoed in his speech the sentiments of the demonstrators at OCC.

Rumor has it that the Agency now conducts interviews disguised as an investment banking firm.

"The level of political ire seems to fluctuate between a soft whisper and a loud whisper."

Dogs

Freshmen probably find it amusing that a large number of studious youth abandoned their academic labors to congregate on Baxter Lawn, make signs and yell about dogs. We never managed to save the furry little suckers, so they are only a political issue insofar as they represent another loss for the student body. If the administration ever tries to convince you that you have control, just ask about the dogs.

Racism

I thought I'd sneak a real issue in here when nobody was looking. Why everyone is so reticent to discuss racism has always puzzled me, and I think our collective inability to focus on the issue of racism and resolve or correct it is the biggest flaw in the campus political make-up. The decision of over a decade ago to admit, and often actively recruit minorities into formerly all-white universities and colleges marked a depar-

Sexual Harassment

Oh, Christ, not this again. The problem with the sexual harassment was not the way WASH handled it or didn't, or the way in which the issue was presented to the outside world by the local media, even if those were the noisiest arguments. The problem was inundation: all the yelling and screaming came so fast that no one was willing to digest it all. Now everyone is sick of sexual harassment as an issue but not as an occurrence, which is what the activists didn't want. Where to now? Who knows?

The World

This one gets lumped together because that's the view most people seem to take: WE have no problems in Williamstown, ignored or c) being so behind on the current hot topic—try a week—that you have become a bore.

On the agenda

Coming up on the roster for debate is the proposal in the Housing Committee to restructure the transfer process in order to make it more difficult to transfer without a strong reason, and thereby promote house unity. This proposal will no doubt raise a fuss in less popular houses and meet with approval in popular houses trying to preserve the old guard. Since the majority of students live on campus, the transfer debate should last until something better comes along, which might take some time.

All in all, we Williams types aren't a political lot at all, favoring what immediately concerns us over what concerns the whole world. Many here speak as though that makes us rather unusual, but I'm not sure it does. A friend of my father's who attended Harvard in the 60s recalled only two demonstrations there of any import.

The first demonstration concerned the trees lining a particular street, which the administration planned to chop down. The second protested a proposal to change the language of the diplomas from Latin to English. One of the students gave a brilliant speech in Latin, lost to all but a few in the cheering mob below.

Granted, this fellow's stunt at Harvard preceded the Vietnam war, but the political climate was not very different from our own: conservative, peacetime, a renewed fear of communism.

Why is the student body so lackadaisical? The answer lies somewhere in the political and economic makeup of the class. Tuition, room and board now exceed ten thousand dollars per year, which automatically determines to a certain extent who can attend Williams.

While a large number of students hold jobs, only one-third are on financial aid, an indication that students' families are more likely than most to hold economic power.

Not only do Eph family members hold economic power, but a large percentage of College students view pecuniary gain as the prime goal of employment after graduation. It is therefore unlikely in a tightening economy and a conservative political trend that a Williams student is going to argue for changes in a system which favors those interests.

The worldwide political outlook which

"The CIA received as much love and admiration as Barry Manilow gets airplay at WCFM."

"activist" groups. In an age when James Earl Carter, a man with a soft-spot for interesting nuclear military technology and a member of a segregated congregation, is called a liberal, it seems fitting that any group advocating change be labeled leftist.

The political issues of the past year include draft registration, nuclear disarmament, and United States participation in the military, economic, and political affairs of El Salvador. All have been championed and berated by the same core of politically committed activists, all of whom have now banded together into the group which publishes the Progressive Newsletter.

On the whole, the political situation is unhealthy. If you take a stand on a world issue, you face the possibility of a) having no group support at all or b) having group support and being labeled a radical, which may or may not be to your liking. If you take a stand on a campus issue, you face the possibility of a) finding yourself the subject of a caustic letter in Parallax or the Record, b) being favors the maximization of personal economic interests also relates to the disproportionately large emphasis on seemingly obscure campus issues—the campus issues with the most longevity, such as row house dining, all concern personal comfort and its maintenance rather than questions of equity or social reorder. Maintaining the status quo turns out to be as advantageous in most campus instances as it is in the real world.

The campus activist, or even the dilettante with a marginal interest in political trends, need go somewhere else than the average student for his information. It seems clear that the long run can bring only less involvement and more attention to the less important things. As for the chances of a complete compendium, that will have to wait until we've stopped paying attention to the outside world altogether and the Dean's Office has regained full control of the campus. That would make the job much easier.

ture from the well-defined, oppressive behavior models of the past. Minorities had more freedom, but a greater burden as well—that of living up to the demands of a dominant culture. The Yankees who had championed equality were less than able to ignore how threatened they felt by the destruction of the old order.

Pressure to conform to the old white way, already strong elsewhere, was higher here. The Black Student Union was formed as a haven for blacks, an escape from the day-to-day pressure of Williams life. In 1969, the BSU took over Hopkins Hall. Having won recognition, the BSU has never managed to win complete acceptance or understanding. The cross-burning last year proved that the dividing line between blacks and whites is still present and very strong.

The current debate in the BSU over white membership/white participation at BSU functions is not a campus-wide issue by any means. What is of general concern is how quickly the issue of racism disappeared after the intensity of last year's discussions. It is always to the advantage of a dominant majority, in this case white students, to maintain the status quo, unless change would be to mutual advantage. Social integration beyond the current level would be beneficial to everyone.

Housing system should reflect diversity

by Tim Caffrey

In September of 1980, President Chandler initiated a formal examination of what he perceived to be problems with the Residential House System at Williams. The problems that he spoke of then continue to concern this campus. We lament the declining quality of student-faculty relations, the growing division and isolation of student groups, the apparent rift between social and academic pursuits.

In many ways, these problems are symptomatic of the declining role of a sense of community in our educational experiences. Yet the widespread concern for this decline is indicative of the genuine commitment to the great potential of the residential college. As the Gifford Committee correctly observed: "The primary function of a residential college is to create and sustain a residential ethos congenial to the formal educational goals of the College." The exact nature of this ethos is difficult to define. It is, however, closely related to the College's commitment to a spirit of learning that places as much emphasis on what can be gained outside the classroom as within.

VIEWPOINT

Simply bringing together a group of individuals committed to the Williams ideal does not assure the creation of the ethos so vital to the attainment of this ideal. The problems enumerated above indicate that the potential of our community is not being realized. We must exploit our diversity and common commitment, through the Residential House System, in order to profit most fully from what this community holds.

Lewis Perry, son of Ephraim, spoke of this wonderful diversity in addressing the members of his beloved Tavern Club. He said: "We are a group probably of over-contented individuals whose charm is in the differences which constitute our intimacies. Our closest friends are those with whose opinions we do not agree, whose prejudices we do not share, whose conversations we cannot understand."

At Williams we strive to understand those whose opinions, ideas, and backgrounds make little sense to us. We do this because it is only through this process that we come to question and understand ourselves and our world. All too often, however, we are content simply to tolerate those with whom we would not agree. A vibrant education, that to which we at Williams are dedicated, comes not through tolerance but through interaction: interaction fostering concrete friendships as well as concrete antagonisms.

The value of such interaction comes from our diversity. But this value is lost when we structure a residential house system that allows us to seek out those with whom we are comfortable rather than those who make us nervous.

The fact that the formal educational goals of this College are closely tied to a system of residential housing is not incidental. The Residential House System can provide the structure for living an education. While our caution encourages only a tepid participation in our community, the residential house can provide a structure within which the social and intellectual pursuits of students and faculty can be explored and nurtured. This can only be done, however, through a conscious rededication to the residential ethos whose weaknesses we lament.

To strengthen this ethos we must concentrate our diversity in a situation where education and living are entwined; thus producing a forum, not to be educated in, but in which to educate ourselves.

The strengthening of this forum requires a formal recommendation to the vitality of the residential house as the focus of a Williams education. As such, we must re-examine the policies that determine the fabric of our system. We must revitalize freshman orientation in order to instill in those who would enter this community a sense of our commitment to the Residential House System. We must examine our inclusion process to ensure that it is working to maintain the balanced diversity so essential to a dynamic house system. We must re-examine a transfer system that places the whim of the individual above the need for continuity and variation in the residential house.

First and foremost, however, we must recommit ourselves to the great potential of a residential house ethos and the ideal immortalized by James Garfield. Only then can the enrichment that comes through participating in our community be fully realized; and only then will our community reflect the strength of the individuals who participate in it. In this light, the argument that it is the right of the individual to live in an environment tailored to his needs is denied and our commitment to the ideal College is affirmed.

Eds. Note: Tim Caffrey, President of Perry House, is head of the Housing Committee's Transfer subcommittee.

Warnke warns of danger of militarism

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

The United States could severely damage the NATO alliance if it deploys medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe, claimed Paul Warnke, former U.S. SALT II negotiator, in a lecture here January 25.

The U.S. decided in 1979 to station 572 cruise missiles and about 100 Pershing II ballistic missiles in several NATO countries as a counterforce to 270 Soviet SS-20's targeted at European cities. Warnke warned that this plan will cause "an absolutely absurd confrontation" between the U.S. and its NATO allies.

"The affected countries agreed to the deployment on the condition that the U.S. explore arms control solutions making it unnecessary for the weapons to be deployed," Warnke stated. "Now they're having second thoughts."

Radioactive desert

Warnke explained that the Europeans fear a nuclear war fought between the superpowers on European soil.

"They believe both the U.S. and the Soviet Union would rather have Europe than their homelands turned into a radioactive desert," he proposed.

As many as 400,000 European citizens have staged massive demonstrations in opposition to deployment of the U.S. weapons. It would now be almost politically impossible for any European government to allow the weapons on its own territory, Warnke observed.

Already, each superpower has 10,000 warheads aimed at the other, so adding a few hundred extra "doesn't make much military sense," he claimed.

He added that European governments fear the U.S. might rely too heavily on a nuclear defense of Europe in the future. The Soviets could invade with conventional forces, leaving U.S. officials the choice of "giving up" Europe or starting World War III by launching a nuclear attack.

"Europe would be better defended by improving our conventional forces there," he insisted.

East-West trade vital

"Arms negotiation is a continuing necessity that does not disappear because of our day-to-day differences," Warnke said.

Continued on Page 6

House transfers

Continued from Page 1

dent response has been strong. Before seeing the recommendation, the College Council voted last Wednesday to support the current house transfer policy, in response to rumors that the transfer policy was going to be tightened.

Caffrey remarked, "I thought that was a very irresponsible move." The subcommittee's recommendation was not completed until yesterday.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.
Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

FOR VALENTINE'S DAY
I want you to love me,
need me
worship me,
adore me,
slay me a dragon
with your bare hands.

Inside: But I'll settle for a box of chocolates.

96 Water St.

Open Sundays, Too!

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

MARKETING AND SALES CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

WESTPOINT PEPPERELL

A major Fortune 500 Corporation will hold interviews for full time positions (for class of 1982) and summer internships (for class of 1983) on:

Monday, February 22 from 9:00 to 5:00

To make an appointment and learn more about West Point Pepperell, contact the Office of Career Counseling.

CLASSIFIEDS

Gradle- Get Ready.
It's Almost Time.
You will receive Further Instructions Tomorrow.
One Mistake—I'll torch them. Scorpio

"O, wondrous, wondrous bird! You fly so good."
—Fandrick Dunn 1969

"The Sun, the Thumb."
—F.D. 1971

DONNY MYKRANTZI—
Happy Valentine's Day.
Hope You'll be mine. I'll always be yours. Love-

It's Friday, and the storm clouds are gathering over Williamstown—Ergo?

SWGSBIM seeks oral robbers for religious experience.

Lost—Collie/St. Brnd. Gld/white.
Red Bandana. Call 6232

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole. Phone 458-8157. 10-2,
Monday-Friday.

Happy Valentine's Day

Panel blasts nuclear weapons

Calling President Reagan's approach to the Soviet Union "a horrible problem," Professor James MacGregor Burns outlined the United States' difficulties in achieving a peaceful foreign policy Sunday night in Brooks-Rogers as a part of a four-man symposium called "Nuclear War: A Community Issue."

Moderated by Chemistry Professor William Moomaw, the panel speakers included President of the College John Chandler and Juniors Geoff Nunes and Rob Parenteau.

Physics Major Geoff Nunes explained the effects in Williamstown of both a massive Soviet retaliatory attack on the U.S. and of a so-called limited nuclear war.

In event of a massive attack on a typical winter day, said Nunes, one-third of the population of Williamstown would survive the original fallout from a hit on Schenectady's research reactor 35 miles away.

However, for those lucky enough to be in shelters at the time of the fallout, said Nunes, the amount of radiation outside such shelters would not fall to a survivable level for at least a year. Nunes estimated that almost no one would finally survive such an attack.

A "limited" war, said Nunes, would be "the end of life as we know it," with survivors living in a world resembling the Stone Age.

Political Economy Major Rob Parenteau claimed that the economic effects of arms spending are a threat to national security as he defined it, exacerbating unemployment and inflation to dangerously undermine the economy.

Parenteau argued that arms spending is inherently inflationary, since its products never reach the marketplace. "When was the last time you ever saw a neutron bomb on sale?" asked Parenteau.

He also cited the 70 percent cost overruns of 1979 military spending, which cost taxpayers $86 billion. Profits from military contracts, concluded Parenteau, mean "megabucks for megacorporations," noting that the director of Rockwell International, a major arms producer, is on the Williams Board of Trustees.

James MacGregor Burns pointed to "a revival of a pattern of foreign policy-making" that led to "anti-Bolshevik hysteria" in the 1920's and to "a most fanatical period" after World War II.

In conclusion, Burns warned against placing one's faith in a particular candidate or election, saying that a long struggle would be required to achieve any kind of lasting peaceful foreign policy.

Freshmen surveyed

Continued from Page 1

form of financial aid, according to Admissions Office statistics.

Over 25 per cent of the freshmen identified themselves as Catholics, making this the largest single religious group on campus. Various Protestant denominations comprise over 30 percent of the class, while about 5 percent are Jewish. Nearly 90 percent are white.

Academic attractions

Ninety per cent said they came here for the "good academic record" of the College. One-fifth also cited "special educational programs" as a very important reason for choosing Williams. Another fifth noted both the financial assistance offered by the college and the advice of an alumnus as other important factors.

Politically, virtually two-thirds of the freshmen describe themselves as middle-of-the-road or conservative, yet there is a consensus for more government intervention in the economy: 60 percent of the respondents felt that government was not protecting the consumer, while more than 80 percent felt both that government was not controlling pollution adequately, and that it should work to discourage energy use.

Conventional careers

Generally, respondents were undecided about their careers, although more students cited as their probable occupations business executive, lawyer, or physician. This may reflect the fact that a greater percentage of the class of '85's fathers are employed in these three fields than they are in any other professions: 37 percent are businessmen, 12 percent are doctors or dentists, and 11 percent are lawyers.

Mothers of the incoming freshmen are, according to the survey, predominantly full time homemakers and, to a lesser extent, businesswomen.

The survey also recorded some differing opinions between male and female respondents. Half of the males considered being well-off financially to be a "very important" objective, compared to 37 percent of the females.

Warnke

Continued from Page 5

The U.S. could respond more realistically to the Polish crisis, asserted Warnke, if it better understood both the Soviet Union's interest in maintaining a "sphere of influence" in Eastern Europe and the Western Europeans' interest in continuing lucrative trade with the Soviets.

"It would be unwise to try to force the Western Europeans to 'toe the line' on sanctions against the Soviets," he said. "East-West trade is much more important to the Europeans than to the U.S. West Germany hopes for reunification with East Germany and does not want to risk losing current visiting and repatriation rights with East Germany by alienating the Soviets."

The Soviets' domination of Eastern Europe is "a regrettable fact of life . . . a tragedy," Warnke added, but the U.S. "should not continue to be heroes at somebody else's expense."

STUDY ABROAD AT THE ITHACA COLLEGE LONDON CENTER

- SEMESTER OR YEAR PROGRAM
- ITHACA COLLEGE CREDIT
- BRITISH FACULTY

COURSES — British and European studies are offered in literature, history, art history, drama, music, sociology, education, psychology, communications, and politics. Special program offered in Drama. Internships available to qualified students in International Business, the Social Services, and Communications.

Visits to the theatre, museums, galleries, schools, social and political institutions are an integral part of the curriculum.

For further information write:

International Programs - SP

Ithaca College

Ithaca, New York 14850

THE CLIP SHOP

Hair Salon of the 80's

Pittsfield
447-9576

Williamstown
458-9167

Bennington, Vt.
(802) 442-9823

Call for an appointment, or just walk in

Expensive as the best

Good as the best?

Editor's note:

With the upcoming process of freshman inclusion, many are facing difficult choices with what we feel is often imperfect knowledge. In order to alleviate this, we are running a review of upperclass dining halls for the aid of the concerned freshman.

by J. Jeffrey Louis III

It is common knowledge that an inordinate amount of New England's finest restaurants lie, inconspicuously nested, in Northern Berkshire County. Nevertheless, I became more than slightly suspicious when I was asked to review five restaurants which I had never heard of. I was informed that each was an affiliate of the Williams Food Service.

Mission Park

Being the first of the six restaurants that I attended, Mission Park was, by far, the worst. The trouble began when I phoned the Williams Food Service (597-2121) to make reservations for a young lady and myself.

They hung up on me twice.

I must admit that I was rather offended as, although my name is not known throughout the world of cuisine, it had never brought about such neglect. Persistently, I decided to attend the restaurant that evening without a reservation.

There we were, 8:00 p.m. sharp, our noses flush against the indoor glass, staring into a dark, closed, yes, closed Mission Park Restaurant. The place had closed for the evening over an hour earlier.

I spent the following two days calming my nerves and convincing my female friend to accompany me again to Mission Park for a 6:00 p.m. dinner. We waited in a line which ran down a long concrete stairway. It ended at a maitre d' dressed in a white smock.

"Table for two," I informed her.

She sensed my confusion and asked if I had forgotten my I.D. I began to inform her that I had suffered no lapse of memory and that I was a local celebrity, but I was interrupted by her rude laughter.

"Sign a chit," she requested.

Mistaking this for a vulgar teenage expression, I was thoroughly disgusted. However, after some discussion, I signed a bill (before dinner) and my date and I escorted

Continued on Page 6

(Farley)

College receives top grades

by Brooke Hand

Williams has received rave reviews in The New York Times Selective Guide To Colleges, a new college guide written by Edward B. Fiske, Education Editor of The New York Times.

The guide is a combination of statistical information and subjective in-depth essays on college life. A unique feature is its one to five-star rating system of schools in three areas: academics, social life, and quality of life. Not unexpectedly, Williams received the coveted five stars for academics, along with three for social life and four for quality of life. Harvard and Yale also received four stars, while Amherst only earned three stars for quality of life. The quality of education places it "among the finest undergraduate liberal arts institutions in the nation," according to the Guide.

Williams' academic reputation stems "from a tradition of excellent teaching and a rigorous curriculum in which active student participation in the classroom is expected." Strongly emphasized are Williams' heavy workload and student access to the faculty.

The graying of the Purple Valley

by Peter Muz

Students often take a year off after high school to make sure that college will be the right step for them, but in Douglas Hoffer's case, this process took ten years. He and the approximately twenty other older students bring a new perspective to prevailing campus attitudes.

"This is easy and fun. Reading and writing are enjoyable," says Hoffer, whose many job experiences since he quit high school in 1968 include deadweight, shipping clerk, concert promoter, and Maitre d'. He has also been married and divorced and ran for selectman in Stockbridge, Mass., in 1979.

Shella Glover was a waitress for 13 years before she became a candidate for an economics degree at Williams. Her ambition now is "to get a career, go into business, and to leave the hard life of waitressing behind."

She started out as a special student taking one or two courses to test her academic competence. Today she is taking a full course load and getting "mostly A's," Glover says. "(Williams) has surpassed my expectations, and I have more respect for the school now than ever before."

She is impressed by the administration and the faculty, who she says "have a terrific sense of humor." Glover considers the students "gentle people, who are considerate, hold doors open, and say excuse me."

Older students' reasons for coming to Williams included its location, facilities, intellectual intimacy, the faculty, academic intensity, and active alumni support of the school. However, their main reason for returning to school is to learn, and for the most part, they consider grades and improved job prospects only as byproducts of knowledge.

Stephen Holber, a 31-year-old sophomore, who has worked as an independent diamond broker and TV promoter, shares this view: "A Williams diploma is almost an introduction in certain circles, but it does not help you once you're in the door, you must then prove yourself. It is how much you learn which determines the quality of your education, and grades are important only to the extent that if they are below par you are not allowed to stay."

Another reason Holber decided on Williams was the "Williams Mystique. Part of the mystique is that everyone here has lots of money, I found that not to be entirely true, but when a girl last year deposited $19,000 into a Williamstown bank in the adjacent teller window, I realized that this also is not entirely false."

Allen Doyle, who took three years off between his freshman and sophomore years before transferring to Williams also feels that grades and career consciousness should be secondary to learning. Doyle does not believe most Williams students share his attitude.

Hoffer echoes this view. "The students (the few I've been in contact with) are much less interested in learning, and much more interested in careers and making money. This is, I suppose, not surprising considering the times and their backgrounds, but remains disappointing and sad."

Hoffer, who lives off campus, feels that "living in a dorm must be hell," and that "there is much less sex, drug-taking, etc., than when I was 18-20. This may be the nature of conscientious students, or a reflection of changing times, but frankly I have no real knowledge of what is going on, so I shouldn't speculate," he added.

Several older students felt that the present day student activists are no match for those of the 1960s. Holber said, "In those days, when we wanted to raise hell, we raised hell. I find that the present day activists are doing too much negotiating and not acting enough."

The older students also tend to avoid the main social stream at Williams. Doyle describes it as a "strained social life, a little misdirected to intense parties, and not very creative." Holber's reason for not participating in dorm parties is much simpler: "I have no desire to get beer poured over me."

All the older students interviewed feel that the outside world is a lot tougher than school. "Out there deadlines stick, and the boss doesn't care of the students who filled out a questionnaire on Williams last year, the star rating system is based on quantitative answers to questions on workload and social life. Willard could not recall specifics but remembers stressing that access to professors makes Williams stand out. He also praised its resources: "We're easily the best of the small schools in terms of resources, i.e. faculty and library. At Amherst they have to share facilities with U-Mass. The great thing, I think, about this college is that it has all the advantages of a large university with a much more pleasant atmosphere to work in."

On the subject of the infamous workload Willard commented, "Students at Williams handle pressure together, whereas at a place like Harvard or Yale it's cutthroat competition. People pull themselves up by pushing someone else down."

Shallow rating system

Many here at Williams criticized the ratings for quality of life and particularly for quality of life and particu-

Continued on Page 8

TRADITIONAL INTERNATIONAL DINNER

Saturday, February 13th

INVITATIONS AVAILABLE IF INTERESTED

CALL X 6031 or X 6160

You'll be MORE POPULAR

You'll be MORE FAMOUS

—if you send your ideas, interests, propositions, fantasies and trivialities to the

RECORD PERSONALS SECTION!

Five lines of 45 characters each cost a mere 25¢ (a pittance).
Deadline: Sunday 2 p.m.

Annual Ski Sale has started — 20% off

- | | |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| All Skis | All Boots |
| All Poles | All Parkas |
| All Warm-ups & Bibs | All Sweaters |
| All Turtlenecks | All Woolrich parkas |
| All Gloves & Mittens | and vests |
| All Hockey Equipment | All figure skates |
| | All ski bags, gaiters |

10% off Bindings

30-50% off selected clothing and equipment

Stop In While the Selection is Best!

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

Music in the Round flat

by Becky MacDougall

Last Friday's Music in the Round concert began with a duo for violin and viola by Villa-Lobos, performed by Julius Hegyl and Susan St. Amour, respectively of the Williams College faculty. The intricate dialogues between the two instruments and the sprightly themes of this piece made it an ear-catching program opener.

The Tansman Serenade for violin, viola and cello that followed was also performed with precision and with a good feeling of ensemble, making it perhaps the best piece on the program.

In terms of ensemble and pure musical expression, the Brahms piano quintet that made up the second half of the program was another matter.

The performance was without glaring errors, although occasionally passages in the upper strings left something to be desired in the way of intonation. But faulty communication between pianist and strings was evident in a certain imbalance and lack of sensitivity that pervaded the first two movements in particular. Relatively unimportant passages played too loudly in the strings drowned out significant sections of the piano part.

This was particularly noticeable in the Andante; Brahms can be gentle as well as stormy, and passages that should have been softly phrased had edges on them instead. Only in the last two movements did the group begin to unify. They took obvious joy in presenting the well-known theme of the third movement, and during the last movement the piano took a much more suitably dominant role. So in spite of stylistic errors made in the beginning, at the end, one was left with the feeling of having witnessed a competent performance.

BEER SPECIALS!

Michelob 12 pak 12 oz. NR	$ 5.49 each
Weideman 12 oz. NR	5.99/case
Molson's 12 oz. NR	11.99/case
Tuborg 12 oz. NR	7.99/case
Labatts 12 oz. NR	11.49/case

Schmidt's Carling Rheingold
16 oz. Returnable bottles 7.49/case
plus 2.50 deposit

1/2 PRICE IMPORTED BEER SPECIAL
John Corage English Beer
6 pack - 3.50 Case - 13.99

WEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2

BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

Washington's Birthday

SALE

10% off everything!

25% off 8-track tapes
and used LP's

February 12, 13, & 15

131 Water St.

458-5229

TOWN & COUNTRY FLOWERS

EPH'S ALLEY
on Spring St. Williamstown
behind First Agricultural Bank

458-5030

Show Someone How Special They Are on Valentine's Day

By remembering them with Long-Stemmed Roses
from

Town & Country

or

Choose from Beautiful Spring Flowers or a green plant.

Early orders are much appreciated
Open Sunday, Feb. 14 9-5:30

Williams cuisine

Continued from Page 7

ourselves to the smallest table for ten we could find. After sitting for one hour, we were never approached, nor did I ever see a waiter or waitress except to dismantle the ostentatiously placed salad bar. There were no tablecloths, no silverware, and from what I could see, all the placemats were an orange-peach color with the top two corners cut off.

Greylock

I'm afraid that I was treated in quite the same manner at Greylock Restaurant. It was certainly not the worst of the six, just the most boring. It is a dark brick, twelve sided split dining room. The atmosphere is sterile—if you can ignore the food, which for me was easy (since I couldn't figure out how to get any).

However, this article would never have been written if it were not for Greylock, because it was there that I met Lawrence. I was sitting alone at a small wooden table for eight when a heavy-set, unshaven, poorly dressed young man sat down beside me—Lawrence. Though Lawrence was phenomenally disgusting, and his voice muffled by rye bread, he explained to me how the food system worked.

Dodd

Located in what used to be the Williams Inn, Dodd has all the possibility of being a fine restaurant with a very special atmosphere. Unfortunately, it falls short of this description, but still would be considered by many to be the finest of the six. I was thrilled when I entered the dining room and found the maitre d' (could very well be the same one in all six places) dressed in white but reading the January issue of Bon Appetit.

We plunged deeper and deeper into the kitchen until finally we found the food. I chose the "puff pie" over the "dismantled chicken" and found it to be right out of the magazine—Car and Driver. I was told, however, that the food is usually quite good and the salad bar is always "the best."

The decor was somewhere between a simple cozy country home and what my date observed as a Florida bathroom style. An original combination had indeed been achieved.

Dodd is most likely the best people-watching restaurant I have reviewed and I highly recommend it. The only danger in Dodd is the sign that reads, "Dump glasses in the sink" ... be sure to read the small print.

Driscoll

After returning to Mission Park and Greylock in order to try their food, I found that the Williams Food Service offers a fairly consistent menu and quality in all of its affiliates. It is the quantity, set-up, and atmosphere that provides for a comparably better meal. In this light, Driscoll takes first place. The kitchen set-up is one of the best and makes up for the inadequate tray disposal. The food is a little better than usual, although the salad bar is lacking the abundance that Mission Park and Dodd display.

The dining room itself is fantastic. It is made up of two connecting circular dining areas that rotate in use (presently out of order, however).

Survey lauds Williams—

Continued from Page 7

larly for social life. Phil Smith, Director of Admissions, remarked, "This is a strongly functioning, self-contained campus. The community here is a supportive one and stronger than the star rating."

Nearly all students interviewed dismissed the comment "Smith College is just a six-pack away, and Mount Holyoke is just a little bit further (sic)".

The only really controversial statement, "Nearly 40 percent are bonafide preppies—the rest just look that way" elicited rich chuckles from many but was denounced by others. Dean O'Connor decried the "cliche" as "ridiculous nonsense," while Phil Smith asserted that he would "fight that statement".

Problems and Errors

Dean O'Connor admitted that "a major unresolved problem is integration of academic and social life—we can and should do better". He intends to ask the Gargoyle Society to make this an issue for next year.

Minor points in the essay are in outright error or are at least debatable. SAT figures given as 625v, 650m are "close but not accurate," according to Phil Smith, who declined to give exact figures, only stating that in actuality they are higher.

O'Connor disagreed with the ten per cent figure in each class of students with academically deficient records, a holdover from a ten-year study funded by the Ford Foundation in the sixties, but Smith backed it up as accurate, citing such criteria for acceptance as independent motivation, use of time, work experience, and socioeconomic diversity.

Older students—

Continued from Page 7

If your mother died, and everyone drinks a lot more booze," says Holber. Most also feel that their non-academic experience makes them better able to appreciate Williams, and when asked whether they were glad to be here, a unanimous yes was the answer.

Council approves harassment definition

by Laura Selgsohn

A suggested Student Handbook statement on sexual harassment and Freddy Nathan's announcement that he will not seek a second term occupied the College Council last week.

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor attended Thursday's meeting to garner student reaction to a revised statement concerning harassment.

The statement, approved unanimously by the Council stressed, "All members and guests of this community must be free from disturbance or harassment, including sexual harassment."

O'Connor then provided a specific definition for sexual harassment. "The term includes repeated or coercive sexual advances toward another person contrary to his or her wishes. It also includes behavior directed at another person's sexuality with the intent of intimidating, humiliating or embarrassing the other person."

Harassment recourse

The item advises courses of action for victims of different degrees of sexual harassment. The recourses begin with a dialogue between the victim and the offender, continue through reference to the Deans and appeal to the Discipline Committee and conclude with notification of the police.

The statement has already been approved by the faculty Steering Committee, the Committee on Undergraduate Life, the Colby Committee, the Discipline Committee and the College lawyer.

The faculty will vote on the statement tomorrow. If it is approved, copies of the Handbook insertion will be distributed to the student body.

Nathan retires

Nathan explained his intention not to run again: "I'm saying it early to encourage others to run." Nominations will be accepted by Elections Committee chairman John Segal through February 10.

Nathan outlined what he perceives as the Council's two main aims through April 7. First the Council will work to drum up support, for the institution of self-scheduled exams, for which Nathan said he senses overwhelming student support. Nathan noted that the system has met with success at other colleges and offers solutions to problems such as overlapping exams.

The second issue involved student input into the faculty hiring process. Nathan explained, "Some departments are already outstanding in this respect, but others could benefit from involving students more."

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.

458-5441

Chaplain Stephen Schmitt converses with a student

(Farley)

Students unaware of campus counselors

by Brett McDonnell

Williams has many services available for sexual harassment counseling, although most of them are not for that purpose alone. But many of the counselors said they think students are unaware of the options available.

"I feel we have plenty of resources," said Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor. "People don't seem to be sufficiently aware of them."

Counselors available

With two recent additions to the staff, Williams now has four psychologists available for counseling.

"We don't have any sexual harassment counseling as such," noted Dr. Eugene Talbot of the Infirmary.

However, the psychologists are available for any problems a student might have, including sexual harassment, he said.

"Over the years, long before it was a public issue, we have seen people who felt they were harassed," Talbot continued. "But very rarely have we seen somebody who comes here only for that. It's part of a broader issue."

"I haven't had a specific case where someone came to me and alleged he was sexually harassed," remarked Chaplain Stephen Schmitt, "but in talking about interpersonal relationships we border on that."

Congratulations, Julie Hey '84 who won our drawing for free text books. Have a good semester.

Renzi's COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

Vacation Ideas for Spring Break

Plan for SUN & FUN in the

- Caribbean
- Florida
- Bermuda

Charter programs are also available. Call or Stop in the Travel Store.

105 Spring Street

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

Valentine's Day

ROSE and ROSES

Stop at King's and purchase a bottle of rose and receive a coupon for 50¢ off on a $5 purchase of roses at Town and Country Flowers.

Valentine's Day Winter Carnival SPECIALS 10% discount* on Spirits and Posies

Spirit Shop 280 Cole Avenue

In cooperation with the Village Flower Shop Colonial Shopping Center

*details available at both shops

TONIGHT

SENIOR NIGHT AT THE LOG

Discounts for all card carrying members of the Class of '82

WEDNESDAY

Marc Hummon & Friends

will perform at the Log

(co-sponsored by Williams Coffeehouse)

FRIDAY

HAPPY HOUR 4 - 6 p.m.

featuring hot spiced wine and Happy Hour prices

THE LOG

by Robert McLean

While students at Williams often complain about academic and social pressures, faculty members face a much more serious pressure—proving themselves worthy of receiving tenure and its accompanying job security.

Through their first seven years of employment at Williams, members of the faculty hold the title of Assistant Professor. They know their future at Williams depends upon decisions made by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, and, according to Prof. Peter Berek, one of the three faculty members of the CAP, "They definitely feel the accompanying pressure."

When first hired, a faculty member is given a three-year contract as Assistant Professor, and at the beginning of the third year the CAP decides whether to give him another four-year contract as an Assistant Professor. In November of his sixth year the CAP decides whether to promote him to Associate Professor.

November tenure decisions are not final until approval by the Trustees in January, but ordinarily the Trustees approve the CAP's recommendations. The promotion to Associate with tenure means that unusual circumstances would be necessary for him to lose his job.

"Every year an Assistant Professor is here," said Dean of the Faculty John Relchert, "his department submits a report to the CAP containing progress reports on his teaching, research, and other contributions to committees, the department, or the College as a whole."

Faculty face tenure crunch

"Student opinion and judgment of senior people in the department are taken very seriously," Relchert said. "However, the CAP does not require the department to solicit student opinion in one specific way. Practices used include a CES or departmental questionnaire, student interviews, or consultations with a student advisory committee as in the Biology Department."

The CAP consists of three full Professors, one from each division, as well as three ex-officio members: the President, the Provost, and the Dean of the Faculty.

"This committee of six," according to Relchert, "studies the reports with great care and at great length and more often than not comes to a consensus in the decision. Occasionally, however, there are divisions of opinion and in that case what occurs is, in effect, a vote." There is an elaborate appeals procedure for CAP decisions, but Relchert commented that actual appeals are rare.

Recommendation by department leads to "a pronounced uneasiness on the part of non-tenured faculty members regarding the tenure process," claimed Richard Krouse of the Political Science Department. "Last May the Steering Committee documented the high degree of diversity across departments in finding that some keep their non-tenured faculty well-informed concerning departmental evaluations and others do not do as effective a job."

"There is a definite need for more uniform procedures," continued Krouse, who received a CAP recommendation for tenure this past November and who is chairman of the Steering Committee, which is a faculty-elected committee consisting of three tenured and three non-tenured faculty members responsible for dealing with general faculty concerns.

"The Steering Committee, consequently, is undertaking a study of possible means by which non-tenured faculty can be insured of the fullest possible access to department evaluations, and," Krouse concluded, "the Committee will report back to the faculty in March."

Affirmative Action, Relchert said, has no consideration in the CAP tenure decisions. Rather, "Affirmative Action comes into play primarily in great efforts in hiring to locate women and minority candidates."

Your typical insurance salesman, right?

Wrong.

The fast-talking, hard-selling, pain in the neck that we think of when we think of insurance is not alive and well at Unionmutual.

Our Employee Benefit Sales Representative is light-years removed from the old stereotype.

A Unionmutual sales rep is young, and is just as likely to be a she as a he, earns $30,000 plus in 3 to 5 years, works in one of our more than 30 Group Sales Offices across the country, sells group employee benefits (not individual life insurance door to door), sells to brokers and companies rather than the general public, is a college graduate with a BA or BS degree, is able to work independently with little or no direction, works well under pressure, has a high level of communications skills, both verbal and written, is ambitious, assertive, organized, a decisive thinker with problem-solving abilities.

Sound familiar? If you see you in this new breed of Employee Benefit Sales Representative, make contact with your Placement Office.

We'll be at your college on February 25. Consult your Placement Office for time and place.

Unionmutual
Putting your future
in a whole new light.

Unionmutual
is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Tracksters nudged, now 7-2

by Steven J. Serenska

The Williams College track team lost a close decision to Fitchburg State last Saturday, while both teams crushed the severely outmanned squads of Worcester State and Assumption. "We went into the meet missing several key personnel," coach Farley commented. He then added that "those who did compete, performed very well."

In the field events, Williams jumped to an early lead with several strong performances, including two 1-2-3 finishes in the shot put and the high jump. In the shot put, John Kowalik '83 released a personal best throw of 45' 6 1/2", followed by Bernie Krause '84 and Steven Serenska '82.

In the high jump, Seth Toney '84 also bettered his previous record by soaring to a height of 6' 4". His winning jump was followed by Paul Toland's six foot effort and Cam Burns' leap of 5' 10".

Taylor triumphs

Also aiding the Williams cause was Micah Taylor '82 who claimed a double victory in the long jump and 60 meter dash. His time of 6.3 seconds in the 60 was followed by second place finisher Tomas Alejandro '83, who recently returned to the squad after an injury.

Other bright spots in Saturday's action included a first place by Brian Angle '84 in the 1000-yard run Co-captain Charlie Von Arentschildt '82, running the half mile for the first time, won that event with a time of 2:01.1.

The Ephmen rounded out the day by capturing a first in the mile relay.

The Williams winter track team's record now stands at 7 wins and 2 losses. This week the team prepares itself for next Saturday's meet with Amherst, Wesleyan, and Trinity in Towne Field House. The field events begin at 1:00 and the running events at 2:30.

Exhibiting the fierce concentration and dedicated effort for which the crew is known, Junior Captain Scott Schweighauser performs on the erg machine in Baxter Lounge during the annual Ergathon staged by the men's and women's crew to raise money. The crews rowed continuously from noon Friday to eight Saturday evening. (Keating)

Women's hockey drops Little Two title

by Suzanne Dingwall

A spirited comeback in the second period could not prevent Williams from surrendering the "Little Two" title to Wesleyan this weekend. The women's hockey team fell 9-0 in what was often a roughly-contested match.

With ten minutes remaining in the first period, Wesleyan picked up momentum and blasted by the Ephs to score. Not even a masterful effort by freshman goalie Katie Myers could stop Wesleyan from scoring three more times before the end of the period.

Consistently intercepting passes, Wesleyan was able to control the game into the second period.

Ephwomen threaten

Spurred on by the thought of imminent defeat, an energized Williams team pulled out all stops and launched an aggressive offensive effort. An improved passing and shooting game enabled Williams to keep the puck at Wesleyan's end for the remainder of the period. Yet the fervent attempts of Pam Briggs '84 and captain Martha Livingston could not produce goals for the Ephwomen.

With Amherst not fielding a team, the win allows Wesleyan to claim the heralded Little Two title. The loss drops the Ephwomen's record to 0-3.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is sophomore Greg Zaff, the number one player for the men's squash team. Zaff had an undefeated week, including the Ephmen's only win over Harvard. Greg, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday

Watch Record
for specials.

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

The Mole Hole

Make Valentine's Day Special!
All silver, gold and amber jewelry
10% off through Valentine's Day.

118 Water Street

Open 9-6 Seven Days

Sweetheart Sale at GREYSTONE GARDENS

Greystone Gardens, an emporium for fine antique and vintage clothing invites you to our winter sale. Reductions of 20-50% on wool sweaters, skirts, pants, shirts, jackets and other winterwear. We'll be celebrating Valentine season all February by including a beautiful silk rose with every purchase of $10.00 or more. Also come and see our array of Victorian whites, vintage silks and antique jewelry at: 436 North Street, Pittsfield 413-442-9291 12-7 Mon.-Sat.

Thurs. 'til 9

Wrestlers thrash two, vanquished by MIT

by Ted Leon

Winning all but one of the weight classes, the varsity wrestling team defeated Trinity 36-12 this weekend. This follows a loss to MIT and a shellacking of Northeastern last weekend.

It was no contest for the Ephs at Trinity. Each member of the Williams squad turned in a fine performance, and this consistency throughout the various weight divisions proved to be the decisive factor for the Ephs.

Undefeated frosh

In the 142 lb. class, Ken Taylor '84 won with a pin at the four minute mark.

John Leahy '84 destroyed his opponent in the 150 lb. division by a 16-1 margin. Undefeated frosh Jeff May faced and defeated Trinity's best wrestler in the 158 lb. class, extending his streak to 13-0.

Also contributing to the victory were Lee Ordeman '84, who pinned his opponent in a 162 lb. division, and Chris Woodworth, a winner in the 177 lb. division.

The previous weekend included a 45-0 annihilation of Northeastern, as well as a 39-9 defeat at the hands of MIT.

The victory against Northeastern was highlighted by the performances of Scott Pond '85, May, Leahy, and Woodworth, each of whom won their match with a pin.

MIT potent

The going got rough for the Ephs when they faced MIT. One team member summed it up nicely when he said afterwards, "We weren't as psyched as they were". This was epitomized in John Donovan's '83 6-5 upset loss, his first loss in what has been otherwise an excellent season. Also losing for the first time this year was Woodworth, who was caught in an early pin. One bright spot was the wrestling of May, who won with a pin.

The wrestlers will host the Little Three Championship at Lasell this Saturday, in what will be their last dual meet. Amherst is one of the better teams in New England and will prove to be a formidable opponent. They boast two returning All-Americans in the middle weight classes. Wesleyan will also provide a challenge.

Division III New England Championships will be held the following weekend at MIT.

Win fifth straight

Icemen seek playoffs

by Rich Leavitt

Sparked by senior Dave Calabro's two goal effort, the pucksters disposed of Trinity 7-3 to up their undefeated streak to five games. The red hot stickmen have beaten Boston State, 12-5, Bowdoin, 7-5, UConn, 5-3, and tied Colby, 2-2, in addition to their recent win over Trinity.

Trinity showed that it came to play Saturday night as the Bantams beat Dan Finn '84 for the first goal of the game with less than two minutes gone in the opening period.

Quick reply

Junior sensation Bob "BB" Brownell quickly rectified the situation only 20 seconds later as he stole the puck from the Trinity defense and scored. The Ephs fired 18 shots at the Bantam netminder in the first period but only Brownell's shot eluded him.

Head Coach McCormick's squad put its game in high gear in the second period and connected for five goals in that period. Goal scorers in that period were senior Doug Jebb, co-captain Skip Vallee '82, top scorer Ed Finn '83, and Calabro with a pair.

Frosh standout

Particularly impressive during this stretch was the play of freshman Brian Rutledge whose puckhandling prowess enables him to set up both Calabro goals.

Mark Winters '85 closed out the scoring for the Ephs midway through the third period on a blast from the point. Trinity's Lou Shipley scored his team's last goal to make the final score 7-3.

Boston State romp

Against Boston State, the Eph scoring machine erupted for nine goals in the first period and then coasted the rest of the way for a 12-5 victory. Brownell and junior defenseman Sam Flood each collected a hat trick. Junior goalie Steve Flaim also saw his first action of the year in the nets as he played the final two periods of the game.

A major factor in the Ephs continued success has been the improved play of the defensive corps. The often maligned defensemen have started playing with more confidence and they have also provided offensive punch.

Ace scorer Dave Calabro backhands the puck home for the first of his two second period goals against the Trinity Bantams. (Farley)

Tracy Burrows '84 shoots over Wesleyan foe in the Ephwomen's victory over the Lady Cardinals. (Farley)

Women topple Wesleyan

by Dave Woodworth

Williams put four players in double figures to outclass Little Three rival Wesleyan, 60-50, in women's basketball on Saturday. Senior co-captain Anne Dancowitz led all scorers with 15 points and 12 rebounds, while teammates Tracy Burrows '84, Kathleen Gilmore '83, and Lynne Jaycobs '85 added 12, 11, and 10, respectively.

Tight defense by Williams and cold shooting on the part of Wesleyan allowed the Ephwomen to score 12 straight points en route to a 34-22 halftime lead. Williams came out of the locker room with the hot hand, and increased the lead to 56-32 with about ten minutes left in the game.

Cardinal comeback

At this point, Wesleyan appeared to have one foot on the bus, but the Lady Cardinals came storming back to outscore Williams 17 to two over the next seven minutes. With the lead cut to nine at 58-49, and 2:40 left, Burrows got a big basket to put Wesleyan on ice. Although Williams did not score again, Wesleyan also went cold, and was unable to get any closer.

Thursday saw the Lady Ephs triumph over Vassar by a 59-52 count. Good man-to-man defense and strong rebounding were the keys to a second-half comeback by Williams.

The Ephwomen were led by Kay Lackey '85 with 18 points, Anne Dancowitz with 13, and Jaycobs with 12.

Williams split its games over Winter Break, defeating AIC, 44-33, on Saturday, and failing to Harvard, 59-45, on Sunday. In the AIC game, co-captain Terry Dancowitz '82 had 13 points while Jaycobs had eight points and eight steals for the Ephs.

The win was a costly one, however, as Dancowitz, the team's leading scorer, injured her ankle and will be sidelined for an indefinite period. Her absence was particularly felt during the Harvard contest, as the lack of an outside shooting game for Williams, along with good ball movement by the Crimson offense, brought about the Ephs' downfall.

Cagers take Little Three foe

by John Clayton

The basketball team took a first step toward winning the Little Three championship with an 80-65 victory over Wesleyan Saturday night. Last Tuesday, the Ephmen (9-6) defeated Brandeis 84-74, after losing three in a row the week before to Middlebury, Bowdoin and Bates.

"It was a balanced team effort," said Coach Bob Peck of the Wesleyan game. "The whole team played well, and we controlled the game for most of the way."

The Williams guards tore the Cardinals apart, as sophomore

Art Pidorianno had 24 points and seven assists and senior co-captain Al Lewis had 18 points on five for seven shooting.

Ephs spurt

A 15-zip run in the middle of the first half turned an 18-16 Cardinal lead into a comfortable 31-18 Williams margin.

In the beginning of the second half, Wesleyan (4-6) came back, cutting the lead to 39-37, as the Ephmen did not score for the first six minutes of the half. But Williams, led by Pidorianno and junior center Steve O'Day, regained control and pushed the lead back up to about ten.

"We played tight defense," said Peck, "and didn't allow them to get inside. They had to operate from the perimeter. Also, we shot well from the foul line tonight for a change (78%), and sank the foul shots when we needed them at the end."

O'Day had 15 points on seven for 11 shooting. Co-captain Jeff Fasulo had 14 points, and Scott Olesen '83 added seven points in addition to a game-high 12 rebounds.

The JV team (4-6) also defeated Wesleyan, 84-75. Freshman forward Tim Rives had 22 points, while point guard Pete Griffith had 7 steals.

Aquaeph remain unbeaten

Div. I Colgate poses challenge Sat.

by Jim Roche

With victories over Springfield and Bowdoin during the past two weeks, the men's and women's swim teams continued their dominance in regular season competition. The men's squad is now preparing for its Saturday afternoon showdown with Colgate, which the team is calling its biggest meet of the year.

Last Saturday, the swimmers maintained their undefeated records, with both the men and women defeating Springfield at the opponents' home pool. The men's meet featured a strong overall performance against a noticeably weaker Springfield squad.

The women's 80-60 victory was especially significant, since Springfield was expected to be the toughest regular season competition of the year according to co-captain Barbara Good. "This was our biggest meet of the year without a doubt, and we were really pleased with our victory."

N.E. Qualifier

The strong effort was highlighted by senior Catherine Hartley, whose times in two close victories in the 200 yard I.M. and the 50 yard butterfly qualified her for the nationals. Kim Eckrich '85 also helped the Ephwomen with first place finishes in the 100 medley and the 50 and 100 yard butterfly events.

Colgate showdown

For the entire first half of the season, the men's squad has been looking to the Colgate meet as their biggest challenge. Wil-lams has never defeated Colgate, a Division I rival, but coach Carl Samuelson thinks that this team has a strong chance.

"Colgate has an excellent team, and this year is no exception. I feel that if we swim up to our potential and get fired up, it should be one hell of a meet."

New attitude

Senior co-captain Michael Regan expressed the same sentiments, saying that "In the past, we've assumed that we would lose to Colgate. This time, if we swim well and have a strong line up for all the races, we might pull it out."

The men's meet will begin at 1:00 p.m. at Muir pool this Saturday, and the women will take on Mount Holyoke afterwards at 3:00 p.m.

WSP report released

The Winter Study Review Committee released an interim report today outlining their two proposals. Proposal A would revise the Winter Study program to include Freshman seminars, sophomore and junior electives and senior projects. Proposal B offers an alternative two-semester calendar in case the faculty decides to abolish Winter Study completely.

Formal discussion of the proposals will begin at February 24 faculty meeting. That evening, the first of several all-college meetings will be held in Jesup Hall at 8 p.m., according to Review Committee Chairman Lawrence Graver.

"These discussions will continue through March and the faculty will debate our recommendations and others at the meeting of April 7 and then vote on all proposals on April 28," said Graver.

Informal student discussion begins this Thursday at an Adelphi Speaking Union debate scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in Jesup Hall.

See Winter Study
special supplement
pages 5 through 10

• Winter Study
proposals p. 10

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 16

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

February 16, 1982

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor announces the reinstatement of the Discipline Committee appeals procedure for sexual harassment cases at last Wednesday's faculty meeting. Under the addition to the Student Handbook harassment passage, O'Connor relinquished the final authority to decide such cases that President John Chandler granted him on January 18.

(Farley)

Council funding guidelines may tighten

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

The College Council may approve stricter guidelines for the allocation of funds to campus organizations, including a new application form requiring groups to itemize their spending not funded by the Council, according to Council Treasurer Beth O'Leary '82.

The proposal, which the Council will consider on Thursday, was drawn up by O'Leary, former Council Treasurer Steve Spears '83 and Russell Platt '82, and Council members Jan van Eck '85 and Matt Shapiro '83.

Last year's grant request application required a group to list its expenses and funding; the Council was asked to fund the difference. In the new application the group would itemize its "non-Council-funded expenses" and explain how it would fund them.

The new application would also ask the group to state its role on campus and the number of members it has.

O'Leary admitted the application could work for or against a group.

Dues for dinners

"The Council might be willing to fund an item which the group had not asked us to fund, such as equipment," she said. "But if we saw something like dues or advertising revenue being used for snacks or dinners, we might ask whether some of that money might be used to alleviate the Council's share of funding."

O'Leary claimed FinCom would not try to tell a group how to spend its Council funds, but rather would try to insure an equitable share of funding for each group.

"FinCom's goal is to allocate our limited resources to allow groups to express themselves and to shape life at Williams," she said. "In evaluating grant requests, FinCom inevitably has to compare groups' programs."

Open funding

"Some clubs have a terrible struggle to raise funds and others may not be striving enough to raise their own funds," she continued. "The new application will get all of the groups' expenses out on the table, so FinCom won't have to hear about questionable expenditures second-hand. Then we can judge requests more easily and openly."

O'Leary said she did not expect groups to consider the new application an intrusion on their affairs.

"We think that if we're open with them, they'll be open with us," she said. "Everyone can gain."

In addition to the new application, the proposal includes specific guidelines to help FinCom decide how much to allocate, O'Leary added. In looking at a group's activities, FinCom will consider the activity's "unique and creative quality," and its specificity. "It helps a lot more if you say 'we'd like X amount

Continued on Page 4

College Council Treasurer Beth O'Leary outlines suggested changes in Council funding regulations.

(Berg)

Housing Considers Transfer Quotas

Last Tuesday the Housing Committee decided to table the subcommittee transfer proposal requiring specific grievances with a house to be demonstrated before a reaffiliation is approved.

They did vote 13 to 6 with one abstention in favor of a tighter transfer policy and formed a new subcommittee to investigate a quota system for transfers. Several committee members were absent for the vote.

Co-chairman of the committee Kathleen Merrigan '82 suggested that a quota system would require "that houses should have a certain percentage of seniors, juniors, etc."

Fitch-Currier President Jonathan Light '83 said the subcommittee was working on a plan and hoped to present it to the Housing Committee tonight.

"We haven't gotten far enough into it to have a specific proposal," he said on Sunday. "We're still weighing different sorts of things."

The Housing Committee consists of all house presidents, five housing category representatives and five freshmen representatives.

Merrigan emphasized that all committee discussions on the transfer policy are preliminary. She added that any change in the system would be made with "some sort of commitment to those people already affiliated with houses. (Changes) are going to be slow, but they're going to start."

Council holds veto

A question arose as to whom the Housing Committee is responsible for its proposals.

The College Council constitution reads, "... the standing committees are under the direct jurisdiction of the Council which has the right of veto over any of their actions." The Housing Committee is listed as a standing committee.

Merrigan maintained that the committee is responsible to the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL). "As far as I've known, we've always made our proposals to the CUL... they often send issues down to us," she commented.

Council President Freddy Nathan '83 said he doesn't expect the Council to use its veto power. "I hope that it doesn't come to that," he remarked, "but I expect the Housing Committee will moderate their proposal enough from what they're

Continued on Page 4

Student debaters clash over U.S. foreign policy

by Susan Kandel

"Central America is not the place to exhibit Ronald Reagan's arrogant machismo in an arbitrary test case," protested Jane Weber '84 during last Thursday's debate on "The Proper Role for U.S. Foreign and Military Policy in Central America."

Central America Policy

Four debaters, representing either the Williams Republican Club or the Williams Coalition Against Militarism, disputed the legitimacy of U.S. involvement in Central America for over two hours, with each side finally calling for a "fresh look" at the foreign policy stance propagated by the Reagan administration.

Dave Moro '82 of the Republican Club defended the U.S. position in Central America, urging the government to strengthen the "forces of moderation" in power and to strive to find a peaceful solution to current conflicts.

Reagan encourages progress

"The Reagan policy is fully consistent with the goals of encouraging moderation and long term progress," Moro explained, "and our support of Duarte in El Salvador exemplifies this."

Franz Schneiderman '85, of the Coalition Against Militarism strongly disagreed with Moro's assessment of the validity of U.S. assistance to the Salvadoran civilian-military junta led by Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Continued on Page 4

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Baker tapped
as Gaudino Scholar p. 4

• James MacGregor Burns revisited p. 11

• Record review:
Nick Lowe's
latest p. 12

• Track wins
Little Three p. 14

The Williams Record

More Freedom from Choice

One frequently hears the charge of apathy levelled at students and our student government. The small number of candidates for College Council offices is an unfortunate example. It falls upon the Council to stimulate participation in student government; it should make every effort to allow interested students to run for offices. Yet the current prerequisite for College Council Treasurer seriously limits competition for that vital post.

The student constitution demands that all Treasurer candidates have experience as Finance Committee members. Of this year's dozen or so eligible candidates, only one chose to run, while non-members clamor for the chance. The FinCom requirement excludes a large number of talented and creative students, preventing us from making the best use of our student resources.

The problems inherent in a FinCom prerequisite are compounded by the fact that FinCom members are appointed. Thus, the Elections Committee effectively decides who may run for Treasurer in the following year. This decision should be left to the student body as a whole.

The FinCom requirement for the Treasurer's office should be struck from the constitution as soon as an amendment referendum can be organized. Until that is done, the Council should use the available loopholes in the constitution to insure that the students have a choice in the upcoming elections.

No 'Honors' for Effort

The WSRC has proposed an additional "Honors Grade" to the current Pass, PP, and Fail grading system. We recognize the burdens already on the Registrar's Office. We might respectfully suggest in the interests of record keeping efficiency that these grades somehow be abbreviated. Perhaps the convenient letters A,B,C, and E would work? Purely a random choice, of course.

If the Honors Grade is to be given out to only the few highest achievers, as the committee suggests, it will provide little incentive to the majority of students—including those who presently make little commitment to the program.

It will be an incentive for those competitive few who always strive for the highest grades—an incentive to abandon experimentation in favor of "safe" courses. This is inimical to some vital principles of Winter Study—motivation from within instead of from the transcript, and encouragement of risky experimentation.

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letter

To the editor:

In response to student and faculty concerns, President John Chandler established the Student Disciplinary Procedures Review Committee. He charged the Committee to examine the following:

1. What are the College's legal responsibilities and liabilities with respect to disciplinary procedures and penalties?
2. What should be the role of the Deans in disciplinary matters? Should the College's disciplinary procedures be modified so as to separate disciplinary duties from counseling responsibilities?
3. What procedural rules should the Discipline Committee follow?

4. Should the College's disciplinary code be more specific in defining infractions, penalties, and conditions of probation?

The Committee will hold an open meeting on February 22nd, from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. in Currier Ballroom for all members of the Williams Community to express their considerations and suggestions about the disciplinary procedures. We invite and encourage those with concerns, as well as those who simply want to listen, to attend this meeting.

David Colby
Assistant Professor

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

NEWS
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

FEATURES
Philip Busch

LAYOUT
Michael Govan

MANAGING EDITOR
Bob Buckner

OP-ED
Paul Sabban

SPORTS
Dan Keating

OUTLOOK
Jon Tigar

ENTERTAINMENT
Ronald Isen

PHOTOGRAPHY
Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

Looking beneath the facade of modern China

Editor's note: Eric Schmitt was a member of the Winter Study trip to China.

by Eric Schmitt

Undulating through rocky, windswept terrain, the Great Wall of China stands today as an impressive reminder of the monument's original purpose: to defend against alien invaders while keeping the Chinese restricted within their territorial boundaries.

Most of the Wall now lies in ruin but the struggle to stem the tide of Western influence into China wages on. Unsuccessful in its attempt to completely throw off the cloak of ancient tradition, modern China, created through revolutionary upheaval, wrestles with a paradoxical system.

In Peking, the splendid Forbidden City, palace of China's ancient rulers, contrasts the solemn memorial shrine to China's modern emperor, Chairman Mao. On the outskirts of Canton or Shanghai, a peasant stops his water buffalo and plowing to stare out at the hazy cloud of smoke from the city's burgeoning industries. The piercing shrill of a steam locomotive's whistle breaks the silence.

In many ways China is living in a past the present government tries so hard to deny. History, the classical Confucian teacher, has taken a curious Orwellian twist: The structures of the past three millennia still stand but the study of the cultures that built them is all but disregarded in favor of post-1949 "liberated" China.

At a teacher's college in Shanghai, an administrator told us that some previously impersonal.

Visitor's privilege

In an ostensibly classless society, the foreigner stands out as the VIP. Lines at airports and rail stations are circumvented. We stayed in special hotels, ate in private restaurant rooms and shopped in exclusive Friendship Stores with currency distributed only to foreigners.

One experience in particular revealed the glaring hypocrisy in China's egalitarian structure. The same young man in Guilin and I talked politics on the way back to my hotel one night. I asked him if he'd like to join me there for a beer. He said that as a Chinese he was not allowed to enter the foreigners' hotel. I thought of the famous sign that used to hang outside a Shanghai park during the Western countries' "occupation": No Dogs. No Chinese.

In its eagerness to attract favorable foreign reviews and capital investment, the Communist regime explains these special privileges as mere conveniences to ensure the comfort and privacy of its visitors.

What the Communist system means for the average Chinese, however, is not always clear. The people we saw in the cities and in a rural commune were adequately dressed, and from all appearances seemed healthy, well-fed and reasonably happy. Our guides claimed famine had been wiped out since Liberation. The standard of living in the cities and countryside reflected varying degrees of spartan modesty. Yet the number and availability of consumer goods was surprising.

While Shanghai's five-floor First Department Store may not be Macy's, holiday-sized crowds pushed and shoved

"In many ways China is living in a past the present government tries so hard to deny".

Liberation history is taught but that the emphasis is clearly on Chinese history and "political education" since 1949. A young man I met in Guilin, a scenic city in southern China, provided graphic testimony to this purge of history: He had never heard of Confucius. This was the same young man who knew enough to discuss current U.S.-China foreign policy.

China's inner conflict between ancient and modern values is exacerbated by the intrusion of Western influences. No entity embodies the spirit of modernity in China as well as the foreign traveler. Once reviled as rapacious capitalists, Westerners are now greeted with open arms and promises of lasting friendship.

For the traveler, the sheer numbers of people in the cities is staggering. A seemingly endless torrent of bell-ringing bicyclists, seven or eight across, stream through congested city streets. Packed buses surge through the crowds, blaring horns and leaving no doubt as to who rules the road. Pedestrians have no right-of-way.

The chaos abates momentarily at the sight of a Westerner on the sidewalk. Curious stares conduct a species evaluation: shoes, face and, finally, body. The feeling of physical, cultural and linguistic isolation is profound. There is no hostility in their eyes but the examination is to look and maybe buy everything from bicycles to clothing to musical instruments.

Clearly, socio-political tradeoffs balance any improvement in material well-being the average Chinese has gained since 1949. Conformity is the rule of thumb in dress, action and thought. Men and women wear the ubiquitous green, gray or blue shirts and trousers that are characteristic of the Mao suit. Except for some of the young people in Canton or Shanghai, the people make little or no attempt to enhance their physical appearances with jewelry or cosmetics. Colorful, romantic Imperial China left only a limited, fading legacy. In the cities, trees and flower bushes stripped bare by winter fail to conceal the drab, gray architecture. Bright colors are prominent only in the ancient temples and palaces, and in the clothing of the Chinese children.

Pervasive Communist ideology
More stark than the physical setting of China is the extent to which the pervasive ideology of the Chinese Communist Party has coopted the nation's soul. The Western notion of political liberties and economic freedoms does not exist in China. Whether the Communist system works in practice is debatable; whether the population believes in the ideology is even more uncertain. The Party itself, however, is respected out of fear and viewed with contempt by some Chinese.

Only four percent of China's 950 million people belong to the Communist Party. When I asked our guide in Canton if she was a member of the Party, she looked shocked and retorted, "Do I look like a Party member?" Since I'd never met a real Party member before, I had no way of knowing whether she did or not, but the concern in her voice was genuine.

Our Shanghai guide's response to the same question was equally revealing. An extraordinary man gifted with an encyclopedic mind for details and stories, he said somewhat sarcastically, "I've been a guide for 20 years serving the people. I guess I'll just have to serve another 20 to show my true dedication."

Certainly to the foreigner, and probably to most Chinese, the Party is a faceless monolith. Outside looking in, foreign experts are forced to speculate on much of China's arcane internal politics. A spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Peking said Western intelligence sources know less about the upper echelons of the Chinese government than of any other government in the world.

For a visitor, sifting through the propaganda is not the chore it once was. Still, the capricious winds of political favor leave China floating in a continual sea of uncertainty. The flaming wall posters of the late 1960s and 1970s exulting Mao, Stalin, Marx and Engels have virtually disappeared. Benign billboards exhorting the working class of the world have replaced them.

With hesitancy, China looks to the West for some of the solutions to its modern problems. To gain American friendship the Chinese are determined to depict the most positive scenario of their country.

Our insistence on having pointed questions answered fully perplexed our guides. During briefings, potentially embarrassing political or sociological questions somehow lost their meaning in translation and one could never be sure if the guide or site host was answering your question completely and accurately.

Much of what our tour guides showed us could be considered a form of propaganda. We toured two kindergartens, but never met any older students. In Peking, the director of a portion of that city's extensive underground bomb shelter network assured us that all of Peking's nine million people could be moved into the tunnels 45 feet underground within five or six minutes. That the bomb shelter was equipped with a tourist gift shop and no real defense against nuclear attack or fallout belied the importance he gave his system.

Peking's underground city epitomizes China's obsession with showing the industrialized world that it, too, has the capacity to perform great feats of industry. More accurately, however, the project exposes the lack of long-range growth planning and the widening technological gap between China and its highly-industrialized rivals.

Hotel and apartment construction was booming in all the cities we visited, yet there was no evidence of urban planning. Half-completed structures, void of any artistic or imaginative style, looked as tired as their nearby Soviet-designed counterparts.

Modernization has cameo role

Modernization, with its Western trappings, only recently has earned anything grander than a cameo role in China's development plan. Water buffaloes and plows are still the primary means of cultivating the land. Women still work huge looms in Shanghai's rug factories. Yet the Chinese desire some of the benefits of an industrialized society. The government is eager to obtain more foreign exchange and has sought to boost tourism markedly since official Chinese-American relations resumed ten years ago.

The paradox lies in that the tourist industry is growing faster than the Chinese are learning how to manage it. The government appears resolute in keeping tourists herded into groups where they cannot disseminate their alien Western influence among the people, thus a policy which will become unworkable as the number of tourists to China steadily increases.

Despite Chinese criticism of Western decadence, capitalist tendencies are creeping into factory production ethics. Plants and individual workers are rewarded for surpassing their state-assigned quotas. Factories engage in "social emulation" with each other. "Competition" is still too bourgeois-sounding a word to swallow whole.

Paradox shrouds even cases of genuine Chinese-American friendship. In Guilin, we had the excellent fortune to meet two high-level Red Army generals who were traveling on the same pleasure boat that we were. The two men, who had participated in the Long March with Mao, were affable and sincere. Their personal affinity toward Americans stemmed from the fact that the U.S. had helped defeat the Japanese in China during World War II.

That China fought against the United States in Korea and supported the North Vietnamese 15 years later seemed either forgotten or was unimportant. As with so many other examples, history had at least temporarily wiped out past differences and had fostered yet another paradox.

Maintaining a strict ideological identity while modernizing a nation-state has become China's premier challenge. In a civilization historically fraught with contradiction, modernity has served to increase the magnitude and scope of the paradox. Today, China gingerly straddles the horse of Western development, wishing the pleasures of the ride but unwilling to risk a possible fall.

'Socratic gadfly'

Baker tapped as Gaudino Scholar

by Michael Govan

Political Science Professor Raymond Baker, appointed the first Gaudino Scholar last week, is expected to be a "critical voice" for the College, working "in the mode of a Socratic gadfly," according to Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor.

Baker's job as Scholar is to perpetuate the innovative ideas of the late Professor Bob Gaudino, which involve helping to transform current campus issues into genuine learning occasions and integrating extra-curricular and curricular activities.

Baker will serve a two-year term; his first proposal will be an experiential education course in Cairo.

Gaudino taught Political Theory at Williams from 1955 to 1974. His ideas of experiential education made a great impact on his students and the Williams community.

Probing style

Gaudino was described as a "master of the Socratic method." He was known for his probing, "intrusive" questioning not only of his students but of his colleagues, their spouses, and other members of the Williams community.

He was a pioneer in the field of experiential education. His methods forced people to look at themselves through confrontation with things completely foreign. These experiences were usually unsettling, and his students have praised his value.

(Govan)

After Gaudino's death in 1974 several alumni helped to raise money for a Gaudino memorial fund. The fund is now administered by 12 alumni, all students of Gaudino, and is chaired by Jeffrey Thaler '74.

Last fall, a group of alumni, faculty and students met in New York City to discuss Gaudino's philosophies and how the fund might best be used to renew Gaudino's influence on campus.

The proposal to name a Gaudino scholar came out of that meeting.

"We seem to think all history ends with America, but it's not like that."

—Raymond Baker

The decision, made by seven faculty members on the Gaudino Committee, was approved by the alumni in charge of the Gaudino Memorial Fund.

'Useful Irritant'

"Baker was the obvious choice for the position," said O'Connor. "He's a bit of a radical. He will be a 'useful irritant,' a Socratic gadfly. He is argumentative and critical in a genial kind of way."

O'Connor stressed the importance of having a critical voice on campus to support and promote innovative ideas in the spirit of Gaudino.

Both Baker and O'Connor emphasized the independent nature of the Gaudino Scholar. "The Scholar will not be seen as an arm of the administration," Baker said.

Baker's experiential course in Cairo will be a combination of classroom study and field research, with a heavy emphasis on work in Egypt. Students will study "the character and interplay of structures of public authority on the local, regional, and national levels" in that country. The Cairo course is a highly modified version of a 1973 experiential course offered by the Political Science department.

For completion of Baker's course, students will write a major paper based on the experiences and encounters of the field research segment of the course. This reflection on experience is the driving philosophy behind experiential education.

Language limitations

Another of Baker's projects will be the encouragement of study in foreign languages and cultures, especially non-Western ones. Baker said he sees language study as a paradigm for what Gaudino was doing. In the process of learning a language a student is taken out of his familiar environment and made to realize his limitations, according to Baker.

"You become broader through language study and experiential education," he added.

"We seem to think all history ends with America," Baker observed, "but it's not like that."

Next October, Baker will work with the alumni to organize a Gaudino weekend. The weekend will feature seminars and panel discussions given by faculty and alumni.

Considered Inclusion

Continued from Page 1

now suggesting, so that it can be something that all students can support."

Dean Cris Roosenraad, chairman of the CUL, said that any Council veto would have little effect on the CUL's discussion of transfer proposals.

"The CUL has ultimate responsibility for housing issues," he noted. "However, I certainly would want to hear from both parties (Housing Committee and College Council) in the event of conflict."

Freshmen misinformed

Last week Merrigan sent a memo to committee members outlining problems with the current freshman inclusion system and proposing a solution.

"Continue to allow students to group as friends," suggested Merrigan. "Assign each friendship group a random number and randomly place students in the various houses."

Merrigan listed the problems she has with the current procedures, in which freshmen rank their housing category preferences from one to five.

"Freshmen . . . make decisions on hearsay of friends, JA's, etc. Often such decisions are based on misinformation," she observed.

She added that houses tend to compete with each other to gain popularity with freshmen and that freshmen must judge different houses when they order their preferences.

"A student probably wouldn't approach his first choice with the same attitude as his fifth choice house," she explained.

Tightening purse strings—

Continued from Page 1

for speakers A, B, and C on these dates," she explained, "than if you say 'we'd like some money for some speakers.'"

O'Leary added that a group can ask for funds for unscheduled events, but cautioned that FinCom would not actually disburse the funds until the group presents it with a specific proposal.

The proposal encourages political and religious groups to express their "ideas, beliefs and perspectives," O'Leary said.

Governmental influence

"We want people to think about influencing the government," she explained. "No direct campaign contributions are allowed, of course, but postcard drives would be OK provided that every student can express his or her viewpoint and is made aware of the opportunity."

On the controversial subject of the funding of meals, O'Leary said the proposal rules out funding for food or drink "rather strongly, except where FinCom deems it integral to the functioning of the organization."

"This is admittedly vague and will be defined in different ways," she predicted.

The proposal allows funding of travel when it is essential, such as for athletic clubs, or when the group "will bring some skill or knowledge back to the campus," O'Leary said. FinCom will take into account the number of people going and the distance travelled, she added.

The Williams Record

February 16, 1982

Winter Study history 1966-1982

"The first Winter Study period was like heaven on earth," recalled Biology Professor William Grant in 1979. Today, Grant finds himself a member of a committee assigned to make a serious review of a many feel has failed to live up to its expectation and potential. What happened in the interim affords us some sense of how student and faculty perceptions of the January term have reached their present state.

Time of Relief

The Winter Study period was an integral part of a sweeping curricular change proposed by the Committee on Educational Policy in the spring of 1966. The changes, designed to relieve the "regularity, fragmentation, and overload" present in the two-semester, five-course curriculum, featured a reduction of the student's semester load from five courses to four and the introduction of Winter Study as a "change of pace" in the month vacated by newly-shortened semesters.

For the C.E.P., the period's value was as a serious educational endeavor. The expected effects of Winter Study on students were seen in academic terms: "a chance to concentrate on a single subject," encouragement of independent study, and an opportunity to expand intellectual horizons by taking courses in new fields.

Values now frequently associated with Winter Study—experiential programs like traveling, internships, and skill-oriented courses; more free time; better social life; more opportunity for cultural activity—were conspicuously absent from the proposal.

In January 1968, students looked forward to the first Winter Study with enthusiasm. The overwhelming feeling was one of tremendous relief that pervaded not only January, but the entire year. Students felt that the calendar shift improved the year-long atmosphere for study.

While one student answering a poll that spring said "There was an attitude that this was a play month, most students defended the academic advantages of the new system—chances to travel, experience, and research."

This first Winter Study was dominated by intensive academic mini-courses, but the next year saw the beginning of a trend toward experiential education that

Continued on Page 8

Last fall—through meetings, questionnaires and interviews—we consulted with faculty, students, administrative officers and other members of the college community about the educational value of the Winter Study Program. From the start, we found that although students considered the January term to be one of the most valuable features of the College curriculum, the faculty was sharply divided in its evaluation of the program. Although nearly all faculty members agree that the original aims and goals of Winter Study are worthy and appropriate to a liberal arts education, many expressed persistent and often intense criticism of how in recent years the program has been working.

Some faculty believe that the college has never been able to produce a successful realization of the original conception of Winter Study, and within this group a number doubt if any satisfactory implementation can be found. Others believe that the implementation was originally vigorous but began to weaken in the late 1970's; and within this group some believe that the weaknesses can be corrected, but others do not. A substantial number of the faculty are satisfied with the present program, though they wish for particular improvements. Finally, some believe that though educationally valid and (at least in principle) capable of realization, the program as it now exists is less desirable than other ways of organizing the curriculum or the calendar. For instance, some members of the faculty prefer two fourteen-week semesters, while still others favor two twelve-and-a-half week terms with a six week period for faculty research in between.

In our meetings and interviews, we further discovered that the specific detailed criticisms of the present program are numerous and often not easy to reconcile with one another. What some people praise, others condemn; what some call innovation, others dismiss as frivolity, and so on. But no matter how much disagreement exists, certain

Continued on Page 10

Students dispute Central America policy—

Continued from Page 1

"I don't think there's any way that the government of El Salvador and its brutal military is a force of moderation," Schneiderman contended, "and it is a myth that our aid is going to a beleaguered government. They've killed 30,000 people in the past two years."

Cuban war machine

Danny Blatt '85 of the Republican Club focused upon the threat of communist intervention which is "overwhelming" Central America and has created a "Cuban war machine," arguing that the Soviet presence has necessitated U.S. involvement.

Schneiderman refuted the notion that revolution in Central America is an idea imported from the U.S.S.R., and cautioned the Reagan administration to "set aside the fictions of Hagl."

"Most Central American revolutions have been authentic and home-grown, not Soviet inspired," he claimed.

People die

Weber criticized the U.S. policy-making establishment for espousing its own interests, rather than those of Central American nations.

"People are dying and we remain a military regime forcing our views on others, even legitimate governments in power," Weber alleged.

Moro replied that Weber was making a fundamental error by assuming that governments in power were necessarily legitimate. He maintained that military involvement is always warranted if a nation is being forcibly allied to our enemies, if human rights are being violated on a genocidal scale or in order to ensure freedom and political self-determination.

Counting Bodies

Weber charged that it is the U.S. government forces themselves that are encroaching on the freedom and human rights of Central Americans.

"U.S. military intervention is cruel and unjust in any of these countries . . . we can't agree on body count numbers, but isn't the fact that we're counting bodies say that something is wrong?" she questioned.

Weber advised circumspection in believing what is being said in the press concerning the U.S. role in Central America. "The White House decides what is fit for us to read," she said, "and if Thomas Enders (Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs), who supervised the bombings in Cambodia, is the ultimate authority on censorship of human rights documents, I have to question every thing I read."

Force of terror

Blatt answered that the left has been as much a force of terror as has been the right in Central America, and that the only solution lies in supporting the more moderate and peaceful alternative.

Moro concluded by criticizing the leftist rhetoric of the Coalition Against Militarism, proposing that the "left and liberal forces on this campus stop taking it for granted that all popular support always lies with armed revolt from the left."

"When are people on college campuses going to get out of the past and give up those 60's clichés?" Moro questioned.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.

Dr. Thomas R. Maselli

OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET

NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247

662-2020 — 663-5845

penny's place

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY SALE

KNICKERS $15.00

NOVELTY SWEATERS .. $15.00

75% OFF DRESSES

50% OFF

ALL REMAINING WINTER MERCHANDISE

CHECK OUR BIG BARGAIN BOXES AT *5 AND *10

—ALL SALES FINAL—

CASH—VISA—MASTERCARD ONLY

CLOSED THURSDAY EVES. DURING FEBRUARY

458-5303

70 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN

Cyclists explore Southwest in 1350 mile trek

by Katya Hokanson

Not everyone bicycles 1350 miles during Winter Study, but sophomores Paul Bierman, Annette Hayes, and Andrew Stone did. They were accompanied on their Trans-America bicycling trip by two of Paul's friends, Marty Artes and Doug Mettee of Baltimore.

Beginning in Los Angeles on the 27th of December and ending at El Paso, Texas on the 24th of January, the five cycled 1350 miles, though they had originally planned to make it all the way to Jacksonville, Florida, a distance they had estimated at 2600 miles. Actually, it was a thousand miles more than that, which brought about a change of plans early in the trip.

50 miles a day

Intending at first to go "very fast—the average mileage per day was meant to be 90," according to Annette, the group soon made the decision to stop and talk to people on the way and to really see the land rather than to whiz by scenery in an effort to keep up the pace.

The cyclists were also slowed down by very heavy bikes (100 lbs. fully loaded) and the complications of camping, cooking and mountain ranges. Mileage per day was dropped to about 50.

"We weren't ready to do 100-mile days with that weight," Paul noted. "It would have meant six hours of sleep, no stops, and constant checking of watches."

Oatmeal for breakfast

Annette described a typical day: "Get up at 6:30 a.m. with the sun, pack the stuff, get the tents down, put the gear on the bikes, then have breakfast—oatmeal, usually. We'd try to do about 30 miles before lunch and finish the remaining 20 afterward. We'd try to camp an hour before sunset. We'd camp fast—we had three tents—and put the tarp on the ground."

Since they traveled mostly over desert, according to Andrew, "The temperature drops at night. We'd make dinner and eat outside or in the tents. Those who didn't cook had to wash the dishes outside in the cold, in cold water. Then we'd have hot cocoa or drink, and go to bed about 8:30 or 9:00 p.m."

L.A. to El Paso

Starting out in Los Angeles, the five cycled through Oceanside, Brawling, Yuma, Gila Bend and Ajo, California, continuing through Tucson, Benson and Douglas, Arizona, and going through Lordsburg, Las Cruces, and Alamo, New Mexico, finally reaching El Paso, Texas.

Dressed in black wool tights and wearing bell helmets and toe clips, and riding bicycles in a land of recreational vehicles, the group attracted attention from the start. Although temperatures were mostly in the 60's and 70's, the bikers didn't heat up because they moved fast.

Annette noted that their style of traveling "brings you that much closer. People feel sorry for you or think you're ridiculous. People come up and ask questions."

Local press called

Reactions to the travelers ranged from a very warm welcome at a Hall for Veterans of Foreign Wars in Ajo, California, where beer was paid for, dinner provided, and even the local press called in, to having a motel door slammed in their faces in Benson, Arizona. The group stopped in motels every week or so to clean up.

Paul emphasized the exposure to a different people and lifestyle. Stopping in the desert one night to camp, the group encountered groups of RV's set up in a circle like the wagon circles of the pioneers.

Rabbits and RV's

Often, however, the group would ride for days seeing little but hawks, coyotes, roadrunners and jackrabbits. And while RV's may have been common, all three were impressed by the general emptiness and beauty of the desert. One evening the group wandered out to an Indian burial mound amid cacti and horse tracks, far removed from everything. White crosses decorated with plastic flowers shone in the light of a full moon.

People were extraordinarily friendly, the cyclists thought, but "there was a dichotomy—people were warm and friendly, more than in the East, but could put fire marks in a desert ecosystem," Andrew observed.

East is cold

They also noticed that people tended to know their neighbors and were generally cohesive communities, especially compared to what Andrew called "the coldness of the East."

Easterners could hardly be called respectful to their environment either, Annette observed.

"We just go skiing and have different ways of tearing up our environment."

Sophomores Andrew Stone, Paul Bierman, Annette Hayes and two friends stop to rest after a hard day of pedaling. (Bierman)

VIEWPOINT

The Value of Winter Study

by Freddy Nathan

At stake in the issue over Winter Study is not just the future of the Program itself, but a test, as well, of the nature of Williams' commitment to a liberal arts curriculum.

Certainly in Williams' curriculum there is room for a variety of forms of education. And Winter Study offers a creative structure for the type of learning which can extend beyond the library, the laboratory, and the classroom. The Winter Study display in the lobby of Sawyer conveys this message well: "Winter Study is a chance to learn new things in old ways and to learn old things in new ways."

Winter Study, though, like other portions of the curriculum, has some weaknesses and, consequently, the Program has some critics. The complaint of the loudest critics, who call for its abolition, is that "the Winter Study Program is not academically or intellectually rigorous enough."

Whether or not this is true, I believe that January can be made more challenging and intellectually engaging without abolishing Winter Study and without sacrificing the many successful features of the current program.

Let me list a few of these here:

1) An opportunity to work intensively on research for a thesis or an independent study.

2) An opportunity to work on challenging independent projects such as 99s and Internships. (It seems to me from what I have heard at Faculty meetings about the late Bob Gaudino that the experiential nature of 99s and Internships best reflects the spirit of his teaching.)

3) An opportunity to experiment and concentrate in a new area of learning in the absence of grade pressure.

These opportunities, it is generally agreed, foster a better attitude among students toward their education.

The "not enough rigor" argument is questionable in another respect because it overlooks the basic educational goal of the Program as articulated in the Committee on Education Policy's Report of May 2, 1966, which initiated the Winter Study Program. At that time the Committee declared, "The Winter Study Program is intended to give the student a change of pace and open new horizons for him." The CEP further stated that, "The programs suggested by the various departments should encourage students to participate in an educational experience which, with its concentration in one area and its emphasis on individual initiative should be significantly different from that of a four course semester."

The CEP realized that "concentration in one area" as opposed to the four course load during the semesters could provide both academic rigor in that one area while simultaneously providing students a change from the pace of the semesters. Moreover, they recognized that "rigor" and "a change of pace" are not mutually exclusive as those who oppose the Program seem to think.

Perhaps, too, they recognized that the relatively relaxed environment of the Program would provide important cultural, athletic and social benefits in addition to academic advantages. How many times amidst the sweat and the grind of the semesters have we had to break a promise to ourselves or to our friends that we will attend a lecture, a concert, an athletic event, or an exhibit at the Clark Art Institute?

A wide range of informal student-faculty activities also seems to peak during January. One of the most attractive features of Winter Study is that there is more time for students and faculty to make real the promise of "Mark Hopkins and the Log."

Furthermore, professors themselves also derive academic benefits from Winter Study, although it is a heavy consumer of their time. It is a chance for them to teach and to learn from innovative courses, while the off-year in which they do not teach can be used as precious time for research. Some professors have even used their Winter courses as test runs for courses they planned to teach during the regular semesters.

Clearly there are many positive features of Winter Study. I am hopeful that the Winter Study Review Committee can offer a recommendation to the Faculty in April which will modify the structure of the Program in such a way as to build on the foundation of these many inherent strengths.

We as students must remember, though, that the Review Committee has to respond to a variety of constituencies and that the student body is only one constituency, but a very important one. Fortunately, the Winter Study Review Committee, in contrast to some committees in recent memory, has been very responsive to the concerns of students and they give every indication that they will continue to consult students.

The time has come to pledge a recommitment to Winter Study and a recommitment, as well, to the liberal arts education.

WINTER STUDY ELSEWHERE

What do you do with January?

by Stephen Spears

Williams College set a precedent in 1966 when it initiated the Winter Study Program. Many New England colleges have borrowed from our experience to develop a variety of January programs. As we reexamine our Winter Study, we can look to colleges in the area as working examples of how to implement different January curricula. The following is a selected summary of four schools offering different January plans: Middlebury, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, and Amherst. All four winter terms were recently revised or are currently under review.

Middlebury

The Winter Term of Middlebury College closely resembles Williams' Winter Study. "Our program began in 1968 and was modeled after yours," explained Middlebury's Dean Erica Wonnacott. "A couple of years ago we went through the same thing you're going through now."

Two years ago, Middlebury professors mounted an effort to

The Williams College Student Committee for Unrecognized Workers sends out an urgent call for aid in its winter drive for dried food, blankets, and warm clothing to help low-income workers in need. Boxes to collect donations are in Spencer, Armstrong, Williams, Sage, Berkshire Quad, Tyler and Mills. Volunteers are needed to aid in distribution through Western Mass. Labor Action.

For more information or if interested in helping, please contact Jim Foley X6112 or Chris Mullen X6342.

SUMMER at BRANDEIS AN EDUCATIONAL ADVENTURE JUNE 1 - JULY 2 • JULY 6 - AUGUST 6

- Undergraduate and Graduate Courses
- Humanities, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences, Computer Sciences and Fine Arts
- Theater Arts Program
- Premedical Sciences Program
- Near Eastern and Judaic Studies
- Archaeological Field Research in Israel

Small classes taught by Brandeis Faculty Suburban campus close to the excitement of Boston/Cambridge

Information, catalog and application
BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL
WALTHAM, MA 02254
617-647-2796

Summer Tour Guides

Admissions Office is now hiring
3 tour guides for the summer.

Information and Applications in Mather House
Deadline March 2

end their Winter Term, but the attempt was unsuccessful. A student campaign to reinforce and demonstrate their academic commitment to Winter Term fended off abolishment. Despite the students' success, Middlebury's Education Council is "again rattling the subject" of a 4-0-4 calendar, according to Wonnacott.

The Middlebury Winter Term places a heavy emphasis on academically rigorous courses. The Curriculum Committee can replace honors-pass-fail grading with an A through E system for a given course, but only if the professor requests it.

The number of petitions for the A-E scale is rising, but Wonnacott believes that students accept the trend with few complaints.

"I'm really surprised that there wasn't some huge outcry," she said. "Our students, like yours, are competitive, and I guess good grades are like a pat on the back—everyone likes to get credit for work."

Professors at Middlebury are required to teach one out of every three Winter Terms, and Wonnacott believes that course quality is declining. "I have found a lessening of faculty energy going into it," she lamented. The effect of this reduced involvement is to limit offerings to students. Fewer students are able to choose the courses they would like to take, and this in turn damages student enthusiasm.

The Dean acknowledged that some students "blow off Winter Term", but she expressed little concern over them. "If students don't take advantage of the courses, it's their loss," she concluded.

Mt. Holyoke

The Mt. Holyoke College Winter Term, established eleven years ago, is decidedly less structured than Middlebury's or Williams' programs. Students must participate in two Winter Terms, one of which

Proposals at a glance

Proposal	Calendar	Grading	Student Structure	Faculty
Review Comm Plan A	3½ wk. WSP 1 wk. winter break 1½ wk. spring break	Honors pass Perfunctory pass Fail	Freshman seminars Current WSP for sophs and Juniors Senior work in majors	Teach 2 out of 3 WSP's
Review Comm Plan B	4-4 No WSP December exams	—	none	none
Karells	4-1-4	Distinction High pass Pass Fail	Freshman & Junior seminars on "Great Books" Soph. and Seniors off	Teach 1 of 2 WSP's Team teaching
Group of 21 WSP	4-4, December or January exams	—	none	none
Group of 21 Faculty Research Month	4-0-4 January off	—	Students free to stay on campus, no curricular requirements	Faculty free for research

ALTERNATE PROPOSALS

Faculty devise WS programs

Winter Study is "a shadow of its original promise and purpose," according to the "Group of 21," an informal group of faculty who met to draw up alternative proposals to the present WSP.

The informal committee divided up into several subgroups, chaired by different faculty members, coming with proposals that include a revised WSP and two-semester options.

Arguing that "the energy and time of the faculty are not being used in the most effective way during the month of January," Susan Dunn's group proposed that faculty members not participate in Winter Study.

"Let us preserve what is unique about the January experience (its informality, the opportunity for independent study, for extracurricular activities, for short term-internships)," they suggested. Since faculty are not an essential part of this aspect of Winter Study, they should be free to do research and prepare for second semester classes, the group maintained.

Another group, headed by Norman Petersen, listed possible changes in the Winter Study Period designed to upgrade its academic value.

The group proposed an honors category for superior work, that all students take a minimum of three graded courses, and that grades not be included in the GPA.

Winter Study registration would occur in the preceding spring semester and grading standards would be clearly defined under this plan. A one-week break between Winter Study and second semester, to be made up at the end of the semester, would be added to the calendar.

Bill Moomaw's and George Pistorius' group offered an extended semester plan, under which some first semester courses could extend into Winter Study while other second semester classes begin during January and continue into second semester.

The Pistorius group suggested that a full semester's preparation would lend seriousness and concentration to the Winter Study project. In addition, extended courses would "produce a different spacing of papers and exams, and hence is likely to reduce pressures during the regular semester," the group claimed.

The Moomaw-Pistorius group also thought out four variations on a two-semester structure. They reviewed a thirteen-week semester set-up with exams before Christmas and late in April. A fourteen-week semester with classes and exams after Christmas and the last week in May would mean fall classes would start in late September. Fourteen week semesters with exams before Christmas and in the first week in May would place the start of classes in late August.

Finally, a fourteen-week schedule with exams directly after Christmas and in the middle of May would keep the first day of classes roughly where it is now—the second week of September.

The group suggested that no additional material be covered in the longer courses. "Not only would the longer semesters allow a relaxed pace, they would also reduce the work of gearing up and down for courses from three times a year to two," they claimed. "The burden of designing a special course package for January would also be eliminated."

A Winter Study composed of many 13-student groups all studying the same "enduring books and ideas" was also put forward by Robert Dalzell and Charles Karells.

The proposed program consists of a "Core" curriculum used to "provide common topics of conversation and a common stock of ideas to which students may react."

The most important feature of the general studies course, according to Dalzell and Karells, is that it offers the student "some common vocabulary for the purposes of communication and better understanding."

Karells emphasized the need for commonality in "an era of increasingly specialized education." He pointed out that of 20 "undisputed masterpieces" a student may now graduate having read none.

Karells and Dalzell propose a single course for all students which they feel is an improvement over the Winter Study Review Committee's proposal to divide freshmen into five-to-six seminars.

The course would "vary from year to year and would be designed each year by a faculty committee charged with the task and made up of members from each of the three divisions," Karells said.

FREE UNIVERSITY

Informal classes offer fun

by Jim Foley

During Winter Study, a student can take courses in everything from Hypnosis to Holism, Macramé to Marxian Analysis, all under the auspices of the Free University Program.

The Free University offers students the opportunity to participate in a totally student-initiated (and student oriented) education. Williams students, together with interested Williamstown residents, may teach a course or lead a discussion group.

Moreover, both "students" and teachers of Free U. courses can escape the student-as-note-taker and teacher-as-authority roles, because no one is getting paid, tested, graded or evaluated.

So why do people do it? If it's not part of an academic obligation, and it's not a party, and it's not a sport or club or newspaper, then what is it?

In the words of one student, "Free University is a community, a way of getting people together. What they do once they're together is their own problem."

Spontaneous Jitterbugging

Free University facilitates interaction. People who may share an interest but don't know each other wouldn't spontaneously gather to learn T'ai Chi or talk about black women poets, unless a club was started, or someone offered to teach a Free U. course.

Although it is possible to organize students during the semesters, it is easier to get people together and find willing teachers during the more relaxed Winter Study Period. Cardpulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) courses training over 140 students and a Jitterbug course enrollment of over 200 seem to demonstrate this property of Winter Study.

For fun, frankly

Of course, the main indicator of the Free U.'s success is the motivation of students to take advantage of the free structure offered to them. Entirely through individual effort, 64 courses were offered at registration this year (compared to last year's 41).

While it is difficult to generalize on the individual ambitions of Williams students, one can guess that most enjoy finding new ways to mix and learn with other people. Those who teach may also want to experiment with new ideas, find others who share a concern, interest, or hobby, or simply share something they think is valuable. Others may be interested in the experience of teaching, in bringing back a forgotten skill or even in forming a club. For fun, frankly.

A kind of joke

Despite the fun aspect, Free U. is taken seriously by a growing number of people. More "consciousness-raising" and language courses appear each year; these categories, now among the largest, barely existed two years ago.

One student who offered a course in American clichés "as kind of a joke, to see if anyone would sign up," reported that, "though people might not have taken attendance seriously, when they were there, it was like an upper level philosophy course. People really wanted to learn and discuss."

While one Japanese language course met four evenings each week during Winter Study, most Free U. courses will remain uninhibited ventures into fun, untraditional realms, rather than becoming copies of the Winter Study curriculum.

Free University provides a format for creativity in teaching, for students to explore new interests with new people, and therefore for some degree of integration between academic and social life. Because it is totally created by the students who teach and take courses, Free University is readily molded to fit the leftover extracurricular needs of the student body.

Students at Tufts, Mt. Holyoke, U. of Delaware, Wesleyan, and, starting this year, Amherst, also teach informal classes and lead workshops. This is a college phenomenon that seems destined to grow.

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

STUDY ABROAD AT THE ITHACA COLLEGE LONDON CENTER

- SEMESTER OR YEAR PROGRAM
- ITHACA COLLEGE CREDIT
- BRITISH FACULTY

COURSES — British and European studies are offered in literature, history, art history, drama, music, sociology, education, psychology, communications, and politics. Special program offered in Drama. Internships available to qualified students in International Business, the Social Services, and Communications.

Visits to the theatre, museums, galleries, schools, social and political institutions are an integral part of the curriculum.

For further information write:

International Programs - SP

Ithaca College

Ithaca, New York 14850

The Record will run classifieds at 25¢ per line. Deadlines are 4:00 p.m. Fridays. Total amount due must accompany this form. Mail or bring in person to Classifieds, The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Mass. 01267.

NAME _____	PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____	TOTAL ENCLOSED _____
AD TO READ AS FOLLOWS:
<table border="1"> <tr><td></td><td>1</td></tr> <tr><td></td><td>2</td></tr> <tr><td></td><td>3</td></tr> <tr><td></td><td>4</td></tr> <tr><td></td><td>5</td></tr> <tr><td></td><td>6</td></tr> </table>			1		2		3		4		5		6
	1
	2
	3
	4
	5
	6

99 PROJECT

T.A.'s adjust to Indian culture

An eagle feather on the flagpole instead of the American flag and high school students who were already mothers and fathers were only two of the things that Una O'Malley '83 and Lori Lewis '84 didn't expect when they went to teach at Lac Courte Oreille Indian Reservation in Hayward, Wisconsin this January.

Una was a teaching assistant in the art department for grades eight to 12 in the 94-student school of the Ojibwe Indian translated to "whenever, when you get there." The students were always late to classes and did not like being asked to hurry up, according to Una.

"It was as if they were doing you a favor because their bodies were present in the classroom," she noted. Many children, she said, only came to school because the building was heated; whereas their homes were not. Free food was also provided at the heavily-funded school, another attraction to available, said the two; presently students are awaiting a grant for their own radio station.

SAT's not given
Vocational training is pushed at LCO, agreed the two, largely because so few students go on to higher education. Last year for the first time, the ACT was administered at the school. The SAT has never been given. Last year none of the students who graduated from the six-year-old school went on to higher education.

The paradox for the Indian, Lori and Una agreed, is that to remain on the reservation means acceptance, but also retention of unsatisfactory status quo, while to leave to seek a better life is to risk rejection.

$400 Indian relief
Indian relief comes to about $400 per month for each adult, and motivation is not strong to work, they said. Indians who stay on the reservation are offered jobs because they are Indians. However, many jobs are summer construction jobs, which mean no winter employment. The outside world is often hostile; prejudice abounds.

some children.

The pair characterized the school as having very pleasant and adequate facilities, including a very up-to-date computer system which could be used for remedial work and for learning the native language of the tribe, Ojibwe. Much federal funding is Tribe, a branch of the Chippewa Indians, while Lori taught geometry, algebra and remedial math to students in grades nine to 12.

Unemployment, alcoholism
Following up on a small notice in the Register last semester advertising the opportunity to teach on a Wisconsin Indian reservation, the two spent from the 4th through the 22nd of January learning just how complex the situation of the American Indian is.

"It was rewarding, but it was more frustrating than anything else," said Lori of the month at the Lac Courte Oreille school, known as LCO.

The reservation itself, with 1800 to 2000 people, is the second-largest in Wisconsin, located in what is described by the two as "a very depressed area." Unemployment and alcoholism are two of the largest problems for the inhabitants.

Students always late
Lori and Una had different experiences; for Lori the month had a more positive outcome than for Una.

"It was frustrating, but I could relate to the students," Lori observed. As a result of an uncooperative teacher under whose supervision she worked, Una said she "felt like a babysitter. There were a lot of discipline problems."

Among the discipline problems was that of "Indian time," which the two women said

A young Ojibwe dances at a powwow on Lac Courte Oreille Indian Reservation. (O'Malley)

THE CLIP SHOP

AND YOU
"A TEAM THAT WORKS WELL TOGETHER"

We appreciate your choice in coming to us from time to time for your hair care needs. Whenever you have a question or problem with your hair, please feel free to stop in or give us a call and let us assist you in any way we can.

THANK YOU FROM ALL OF US AT THE CLIP SHOP.

Change is always in the works at The Clip Shop.
Maintain your status quo or take advantage of new suggestions!

W S HISTORY

Sixteen years of 4-1-4

Continued from Page 5

continued through the next decade. The percentage of academic courses steadily declined while experiential, skill, and independent courses became more frequent.

Also changing over the years were attitudes towards Winter Study among faculty and students. In 1971 the Faculty voted unanimously to support the program, but by the middle of the decade many faculty members were expressing dissatisfaction with it.

A 1971 student poll revealed that the projects were considered at least as challenging as semester courses, and that they imparted just as much knowledge while remaining highly interesting and worthwhile. A majority also felt that the Winter Study experience contributed more to their personal development than the regular semesters.

Yet students expressed continued concern about the period academic value in later years. Many felt that both students and faculty made the program "somewhat of an academic joke because of the low standards they set."

A number of reviews throughout the seventies attempted to recommit the College to the original principles of Winter Study, explaining its purposes to newer faculty, establishing guidelines for the amount of work expected in courses, and establishing a "perfunctory pass" grade.

Yet faculty still express considerable concern over a deterioration of standards within the program, and many would like to see it abolished. The Winter Study Review Committee's newly released proposals attempt to reestablish the commitment and enthusiasm that the first Winter Studies enjoyed, while holding to the basic principles of the original 1966 proposals. The most crucial period in Winter Study's history may be the next few weeks.

Few role models exist for the young people, the two agreed, and those who break away forfeit the ties to their people, knowing their choice is to stay away forever or to come back knowing that when they return they will be labeled "apples," red on the outside, white within.

One such "apple" with whom Lori and Una had close contact was the drug and alcohol counselor for the school, a native Ojibwe. He had received so many threats that he was about to quit, they said.

Knives pulled
"The kids liked him," Una said. "They almost all came to him, either with their own problems or because of family problems. Since he helped relocate kids whose families were abusive toward them, Una said, he had had knives pulled on him and had been driven off a road by the relatives of children he had helped."

Stares in laundromat
Both Lori and Una noticed the hostility of whites towards Indians: the looks in the laundromat, the fact that Indians would be last to be waited on in a store. "The students," Lori said, "seemed stripped of dignity. They had no belief in themselves. They didn't think they had any potential."

Una and Lori described the difficulty in gaining the students' trust at the beginning, and the initial cool atmosphere. Eventually they were accepted and gained some trust on the part of the kids, but when the time came for the two women to leave, "they tuned us out," in the words of Lori.

"The attitude," Una said, "was 'we gave you friendship, how can you leave?'"

Added to the young Indians' problems is a high pregnancy rate. Some students had children of their own, said the two.

In spite of frustrations, both Una and Lori felt the time they spent was well worthwhile. They were invited back to teach again, although neither knows whether she will accept the offer.

Sandals... our strips are a tease.

Eden, $44.00 Navy Blue

Come In And See Many Other Pretty Styles, Too!

CONCERNED WITH FASHION. FIT AND QUALITY

FACULTY RESEARCH

Typing for tenure

by Alyson Hagy

They say the hard part is finding enough time to do research. They say the professional horror is the truth of the "publish or perish" syndrome. When Williams faculty members offer radical options to a January Winter Study or organize themselves to support major changes in the College calendar, it is likely that they are moving to protect their professional research time.

The precariousness of a tenure track position and the importance of scholarly recognition within their professional field are all too obvious to junior and senior faculty members. But during the Great Winter Study Struggle, it has become clear to many professors that the student body probably does not fully appreciate the dilemma they face year after year. They do not think students quite understand how they are perceived as scholars beyond the bounds of Williams College.

Superman syndrome

The faculty is pressed by the small college atmosphere of Williams to give their time to teaching. The skill and availability of the faculty is, after all, one of Williams' biggest drawing cards. Students "demand" (in some sense) their professors' time and energy day after day because "that is what they are here for."

But as college and university level jobs become more scarce, the pressure for Williams professors to teach well and to accomplish impressive research increases. While some professors find the local "publish or perish" situation far less strenuous than the pressures endured by their colleagues at other colleges and universities, such "contentment" seems to be developing into the exception instead of the rule.

As a whole, the faculty maintains that Williams College is a teaching college, and they are adamant in saying that they are not out to "short-change" the students. Nevertheless, a student-teacher tug of war may well be in the making. Both professors and undergraduates would like to have the four weeks in January for more personal endeavors. The morale of both sides seems to rest heavily on the fate of Winter Study.

Any member of most departments in Division I or II is "expected" (the unwritten tenure rule, so to speak) to publish two or three of these articles before they can begin to look forward to promotion. Serious work on a book is even more tedious and involves years of continuous work.

Science professors, on the other hand, may have to publish less, but reaching conclusive results in order to complete one or two articles before the date of tenure decisions usually takes several years. While these professors often have the laboratory aid of thesis and independent study students during January, they generally still do not expect to accomplish much personal research because there just is not enough time.

Truth is sticky

One of the sticky truths of the Winter Study dilemma revolves directly around this question: how much research could the faculty really complete in four weeks (if the students were nowhere in sight) while they continued to serve on committees and prepare for the second semester? It is clear from recent discussions that even the professors themselves cannot agree on this point.

The newest calendar change, adding a week to the summer by shortening reading and examination periods, is more specifically to the faculty's liking. Winter Study research expectations are minimal at best. Some professors describe the period as useful for a small amount of editing and revision. Others note, with enthusiasm, that student researchers tend to make more progress in their work in January than their advisers do, as they (the professors) admittedly save the bulk of their work for the summer.

There is no doubt that the faculty is serious about its review of Winter Study. Ideally, it might be guessed that they would like more time to research and a more serious academic commitment from students, so that those professors actively teaching in January (while many of their colleagues work on personal projects) would feel that their teaching efforts were not in vain.

It may be difficult, however, to achieve both goals, and it is imperative that students begin to understand the faculty's serious and complex motives for advocating major changes in current January program.

The faculty, as a conglomerate of professionals, feels that the future of both their career endeavors—teaching and research achievement—is on the line. They will undoubtedly vote for a new program with both of those interests in mind. Right now, it is difficult to guess which priority will be uppermost when the votes are counted.

SUPPORT WINTER STUDY

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30- PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole, Phone 458-8157, 10-2, Monday-Friday.

"At the critical moment, he shot me through the head... I was in great pain, and told him so."
—Fandrick Dunn 1969

Students in visiting instructor Julie Schneider's Life Drawing class met for over four hours every weekday during January. (Schneider)

Winter Study elsewhere

Continued from page 6

must be spent on the Mt. Holyoke campus. Courses are graded pass-fail, and Winter Term, but an additional 200 to 300 stay to work or just relax. Freshmen make up the bulk of the on-campus Winter Term students. Some faculty members worry about how these freshmen use their January.

"Most of the students have never had an entire month of only one class," observed Allen. "If we fall short anywhere, it is in warning them how to use their time in Winter Term." Allen suggested holding classes four days a week instead of the usual two days, to "keep them on a schedule." She added that free time leads to a lot of travel by students which "undermines the residential community of the program."

Two years ago professors' contribution to the Program was increased to one Winter Term for every six regular semesters. The intent of the new rule was to increase course offerings. Allen felt that there was "much grouching" from some faculty when the rule was passed, this contention seems to be supported by the fact that most Mt. Holyoke professors have deferred their Winter Term requirement until next year. "We'll have more courses than we know what to do with," exclaimed Allen.

Smith
Smith College's Interterm is totally optional for both students and faculty. This year's curriculum included 85 courses and workshops—some lasting only a couple of hours, but most meeting approximately ten hours a week. Generally, the courses offered are of a non-academic nature, "although we did have some courses that could be called academic," according to Interterm Coordinator Anne Scheer.

"We've been trying for some more 'meaty' courses," said Scheer, and in that effort she claimed to have limited success this year. "The main problem is that since there is no credit and no requirement, there is no incentive for students to follow through," she noted with dismay. The low student commitment dampened faculty interest to the point where only five faculty members taught in last year's Winter Term. Student teachers filled the bulk of the curriculum. Scheer believes that "it's time that the faculty consider better-spent preparing for the second semester."

Results from student questionnaires indicate that a majority of Smith students would like a more structured Interterm. "A fairly small percentage of the College uses Interterm well," Scheer charged. "Many consider it a period where students goof off, and many do. Nevertheless, the option should be there for students who value the time."

Amherst
Amherst College just completed the first year of a reorganized Interterm, and it was "quite a success" according to Irwin Nussbaum, Assistant Dean of Students.

This year marked the introduction of Interterm curricular committees to search for and approve Interterm courses. A student committee and a president-appointed committee worked together to supervise the curriculum.

"Virtually any class was accepted," said Nussbaum. Nevertheless, he believes the committees are a beneficial step, "better than leaving it to see what comes up."

Fifty-eight courses were offered for the Amherst program. Topics included financial accounting, nuclear defense, and "Modern Philosophy in the Comic Book." The most popular subject was Jitterbugging, which drew 150 people from the entire five-college area.

The Amherst Interterm is a sort of "phase-in" program in which course offerings expand with each passing week of the term. The college's food service statistics show between 350 and 550 students in attendance during the first week, rising to 700 students by the end of the third week.

The Interterm is primarily a program supervised by students, for students. Most faculty members prepare for the upcoming semester or finish research for publication, according to Nussbaum.

When the idea of a student or faculty Interterm requirement was raised, Nussbaum balked. "The time off is important for students and faculty to get a breather," he suggested.

WINTER CARNIVAL CHAMPAGNE SPECIALS!

Franzia Extra Dry Champagne . . . $32/case of 12
Veuve Paul Brut . . . $40/case of 12 (French mousseux)
Valdo Prosecco . . . $40/case of 12 (Italian Sparkling Wine)

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

Winter Study Review Program

Continued from Page 5

themes have been sounded often enough for the committee to agree that faculty perceive significant problems with the present program that need to be addressed: the questionable intellectual rigor of some courses; the difficulties of getting some students to do serious work; certain inequities of workload for faculty and students; the belief of many in the community that WSP doesn't count very much (in evaluating the performance of students or faculty); the grading system; the time allowed each Fall for the preparation of the course offerings; and the absence of turnaround time between the end of the winter term and the beginning of the spring semester.

Whatever the specific criticisms (and the considerable contention that arises when any one of them is discussed), there is a widespread belief that faculty and student commitment to the Winter Study Program as an educational experience has declined in recent years. Although students are almost unanimous in their enthusiastic support for the opportunities provided by the January term, they too have criticized certain aspects of the present program. They agree that there are problems of commitment and workload (among faculty as well as students). They seem to want more sustained intellectual challenge and more equivalence between courses; they complain of being bounced too often through a series of first-second-third-fourth choices; and they wish to have more input into the kinds of courses offered each winter.

Given the intensity of faculty criticism about the implementation of the present program, we decided that one of our several tasks should be to rethink the original aims of the January term and to make a fresh effort to work out a more successful implementation. To that end, we asked a sub-committee to consider a revision of the structure of the present program. But since a significant number of faculty have expressed support for the abolition of Winter Study and the return to a two-semester calendar, we asked a second sub-committee to study alternatives to the January term which the faculty might regard as preferable.

" . . . Very large courses tend to become tempting for students seeking an easy way out, and we want to eliminate the temptation."

After having extensively reviewed a variety of proposals for a modified WSP, we have concluded that Proposal A described below retains many of the best features of the present program and makes it stronger. The second drafting group reviewed all feasible versions of alternative calendars and we recommend as preferable the one described in Proposal B.

PROPOSAL A

Proposal A—To Revise the Winter Study Program. This proposal is designed to provide clearer definitions of the educational goals of the January term, and—without sacrificing opportunities for innovation—to give the Winter Study Program greater coherence and more intellectual rigor. To achieve these purposes, we recommend that the program have a three-part structure based on the specific kinds of educational activities we wish students to pursue: required Freshman Seminars; Sophomore and Junior Electives emphasizing individual initiative and a variety of approaches to learning; and Senior Projects encouraging (but not requiring) advanced work in the major or program of concentration. In addition, we are recommending changes in the grading system, in the calendar, and in the administration of the program: a grading scale of Honors, Pass, Perfunctory Pass and Fail; a full week recess between the end of the January term and the beginning of the spring semester; a strengthening of the Coordinator's role; a rule exempting new faculty from teaching in the program in their first year at the College (except in special circumstances); a requirement that the Winter Study Program catalogue be ready one week before the April registration period of the year before the courses are offered; a stipulation that every course description include a detailed statement of the pattern of class meetings, costs, expected workloads and precise criteria for evaluation of student performance; and a more systematic evaluation of faculty performance in the program.

1. Freshman Seminars. Freshmen are required to elect a seminar devoted to the study of influential ideas and systems, great works of art, or major historical events, in which the subject matter is approached from several points of view by faculty from different departments. Five or six seminars are offered; each is taught in several sections with enrollment limits of twenty per section. Particular emphasis is placed on ensuring common experiences for many freshmen and for the faculty from different departments teaching in the program (reading the same texts, discussing the same concepts and phenomena; having lectures and other meetings in common). The topics of the seminars are determined by a faculty and student group of the WSP Committee in the spring of the year before the courses are given. Topics of the following kind might be given (they are listed here for purposes of illustration): Human Thought and Artificial Intelligence (taught perhaps by faculty from Mathematics, Philosophy, Psychology and Economics); The Idea of the Modern in the Arts (Art, English, Music, German, Russian, Theatre); Community and Authority (Political Science, Philosophy, History, English, Economics, American Studies); Science, Technology and Values (Philosophy, Chemistry, month on one subject with which they are just becoming acquainted or which they already know well. Our recommendation, then, is to preserve the variety of offerings and the freedom of choice that so many students and faculty single out as among the most distinctive and admirable features of the January term.

3. Senior Projects. We believe that many seniors will wish to use this final Winter Study opportunity for intensive work in their major (about fifty percent do so at present); at the same time, we recognize that some will feel that senior year offers the last chance to try something new and different. Accordingly, we encourage but do not require seniors to elect a Winter Study project in their major or program of concentration. Within the limits imposed by numbers we also encourage departments to offer several alternatives from among the following list, though we recognize that smaller departments will be hard pressed to participate in both Freshman Seminars and Senior Projects.

"What some people praise, others condemn: what some call innovation, others dismiss as frivolity . . ."

a. Independent Work: Thesis, 99 Project, Internship.

b. Departmental or Program Seminar. For example, a faculty member may wish to explore new and interesting work in the field with a group of senior majors.

c. Departmental or Program Research Seminar. A faculty member may wish to engage a group of majors or concentrators in his or her own current research projects.

d. Interdepartmental Seminars. Faculty members in different departments and divisions would conduct joint seminars that would, like the courses for freshmen, have some common meetings and lectures.

4. GRADING. Work in Winter Study courses should be normally evaluated on the following scale: Honors, Pass, Perfunctory Pass, Fail. We realize that in some projects it may make no sense to add the "honors" designation; for example, in the case of foreign trips. In such cases, an instructor could use the three current grades. The addition of an honors grade is designed primarily to encourage and recognize truly outstanding work in WSP projects.

5. The Calendar. Because we are attempting to add more intellectual rigor and also because we wish to encourage more varied forms of student writing and with it more careful evaluation by faculty members, we believe it is necessary to have more time between Winter Study and the beginning of the spring semester. We recommend having at least six days between the end of the January term and the beginning of the spring term. The necessary time should be gained by shortening the spring recess by three teaching days. For instance (using the 1983-84 academic calendar as a model), the January 1984 term might begin on Monday the 2nd and end on Thursday the 26th (allowing 25 calendar days as at present). The spring term could begin on Thursday, February 2nd; the spring recess might run from Saturday, March 10th through Tuesday, March 20th, classes resuming on Wednesday the 21st. Classes would end on Tuesday, May 8th and Commencement would take place on May 27th.

Administration of the Program. Given the changes we have proposed above, it is clear that we will need earlier planning for the Winter Study Program and more released time for the Coordinator to perform his or her functions. We therefore recommend the following administrative changes:

a. The position of the Coordinator should be strengthened by the provisions of an additional one-fifth released time. b. Except in unusual circumstances, new members of the faculty should not be expected to teach in the program in their first January at the College.

c. The catalogue of offerings for the program should be ready at least one week before the registration period in the preceding April. Upperclassmen will register for their projects at the same time as they register for their courses for the next year. We see many advantages to this proposal. The present calendar (with only a few weeks at the opening of the fall term for planning WSP courses and finding adjuncts) is too short if we wish to have increased cooperation and coordination among projects. Students will also be required to plan ahead and to think of the next year as an educational unit of two semesters and a Winter Study. We would eliminate one round of registration with its attendant strain on administrative resources. Freshmen would register in July for their complete freshman year program.

We also recommend that every course description in the Winter Study Program catalog include a detailed statement of the pattern of class meetings, costs, expected workload and precise criteria for evaluation.

d. We recommend that the Coordinator discuss with the Committee on Appointments and Promotions and with the chairmen of departments and programs better ways to evaluate the contributions of faculty members to the Winter Study Program.

e. The average expected enrollment in WSP should be approximately eighteen students for each project. Generally, there are about 110 instructors (80 faculty and 30 adjuncts) available for 1900 students. Some of the projects we envision, particularly in the senior year, will need to have an enrollment of 6-10. Other projects may wish to have more than 18 but we believe a cap should be set for all projects at 30-35. The primary reason for this is our wish to encourage more written work (in courses where that makes sense) but we also believe that very large courses tend to become tempting for students seeking an easy way out, and we want to eliminate the temptation.

" . . . at least six days between WSP and the spring term, the necessary time gained by shortening spring vacation by three days."

PROPOSAL B

Proposal B—An Alternative Calendar to the Present 4-1-4. This proposal is designed to provide an alternative calendar to the present 4-1-4 should the faculty decide to abolish the Winter Study Program. After weighing the advantages and disadvantages of different possibilities, the Committee recommends a two-semester calendar in which the fall term begins at the end of August and concludes around the 9th of December. Reading period and examinations would follow and the Christmas recess would begin around the 19th or 20th. The second semester would begin in the third week of January and end around May 8th, with a reading and examination period followed by Commencement around the 27th of May.

James Burns: Eclectic interests occupy talented prof

by Christian Howlett

What do Franklin Delano Roosevelt, John F. Kennedy, golden retrievers, writing books, and skiing have in common?

They are all some of the many interests of James MacGregor Burns, resident historian and Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government at Williams.

Burns has been in the public spotlight recently because of his involvement with the FDR centennial in January. He acted as a consultant for the three-hour ABC documentary about FDR, which aired Jan. 29. "I was tremendously impressed with the commitment they made on the FDR thing," Burns said, referring to its expensive prime-time slot.

Burns said he urged ABC not to over-glorify Roosevelt and to show his negative aspects as well, including forcing the detention of thousands of Japanese Americans during World War II. Burns himself appeared on the show several times, commenting on Roosevelt's life and political philosophies. These segments were filmed in the livingroom of Burns's Bee Hill Road home.

James MacGregor Burns is recognized as an expert on Roosevelt because of two biographies he has written about the former president. One of these, entitled Roosevelt—The Soldier of Freedom, won him the 1970 Pulitzer Prize.

Political failure

Although he never actually met Roosevelt, Burns grew up during his presidency. In 1936, when Burns was a sophomore at Williams, Roosevelt was seeking his first re-election. "I was determined to swing the election," Burns recalls. Full of enthusiasm, he borrowed a truck, set up sound equipment, plastered the sides with signs, and "sailed forth to battle." Unfortunately it rained, drowning out the amplifier and causing the painted signs to run. "I still claim I swung Massachusetts to Roosevelt," Burns maintains.

But Burns was undaunted by this inauspicious beginning. In 1958 he ran for Congress as the Democratic nominee for the 1st Congressional District of Massachusetts. Campaigning with him was John F. Kennedy, who was seeking reelection to the Senate. Kennedy won his bid, but Burns did not.

Asked whether he now regrets not having led a political life, Burns unhesitatingly answers "no." "I would have loved the experience," he says, but adds that he would probably not have served more than one term anyway. "I learned more from the campaign itself," says Burns, "getting into the grassroots of the district."

These days, however, Burns spends most of his time writing about politics. His newest book, The Vineyard of Liberty, is being published later this month. It is the first of a three-part series, The American Experiment, which Burns describes as a historical narrative of this country, with political analysis. In the past, most of his books have been biographies or works of political science.

Now you see him, now you don't

Burns is also a noted lecturer who has appeared everywhere from the presidential panels and JFK library in Boston, to college campuses and local Red Cross meetings. In all he gives an estimated 20 to 30 lectures a year. Burns gave two lectures at Williams this week alone, one on the Reagan administration and Russian policy as part of a nuclear symposium, and another entitled "Liberty in America and the Case of John Adams A—" as part of the faculty lecture series. In addition, he appeared on the Dick Cavett talk show Friday night.

All these activities leave Burns little time for teaching, although he still considers this his major occupation. He conducts a senior seminar on leadership for about 15 students yearly and occasionally teaches an introductory American Government course. "I think my biggest satisfaction at Williams has been recognizing potential in students and developing that potential," he said. "My definition of teaching then is helping them develop their own abilities so that they teach me."

"I have a theory," he adds. "My main field of interest is the study of leadership. I'm especially interested in the role of teacher as leader and leader as teacher. The great leaders produce qualities in a follower so that the follower ultimately becomes the leader."

Burns seems to have done this well. In his most recent seminar, six of the fourteen papers submitted received some form of A grade. In addition, one of Burns's former students, Michael R. Beschloss '77, published a book last year entitled Kennedy and Roosevelt: The Uneasy Alliance, for which Burns wrote the foreword.

In what little spare time he has, Burns keeps himself busy. He plays and "talks politics" with his two golden retrievers, does "lots of gardening and snow-shoveling," helps his wife with their two horses, and skis. Burns added that he "invented 'skreading'—reading on chair lifts," and had an article about it appear in The New York Times.

Although James MacGregor Burns is always busy pursuing some new activity, he describes his life in Williamstown very simply. "The key to my life is relating teaching, writing, and activism. My life seems compartmentalized. (I) lead three lives, but (my) lives are connected through Williams College and Williams is the center of my life." And happily for all concerned, he is quite content to stay here for the rest of his life.

James MacGregor Burns

In other Ivory Towers

Amherst College

Amherst last month disbanded the most controversial of its 13 fraternities, Delta Upsilon Delta (DUD). Dean of Students James J. Bishop cited "a pattern of antisocial and anti-intellectual behavior that was antithetical to the purposes of this college" to the Boston Globe as the reason for the action. The Globe featured the controversy in its Sunday edition of February 7.

DUD had been placed on probation many times before for such infractions as loud parties and "sexually suggestive" snow sculptures. Amherst imposed probation most recently last fall after a Halloween scavenger hunt that led to a police raid on the house. The police, after finding such items as a skeleton, signs from local businesses, and a motorcycle, arrested four students for larceny and property damage. The list of items to be scavenged included Dean Bishop's pet spaniel, Barney, and a local bus.

Some faculty reacted furiously to the scavenger hunt. "Obviously, I'm mad as hell about it," wrote music professor Bruce G. McInnes to Dean Bishop, referring to the theft of flags from the college music center. "A simple little slap on the hand or some sort of half-baked probation simply does not work." McInnes asked, "Is it our job to protect thieves? And what is the next step in the criminal hierarchy? Throw them out into the real world where they can practice their infamy to their heart's content?"

"This is going to sound a little stodgy," said college spokesman Carl Vigeland to the Globe, "but (DUD's) kind of behavior just is not representative of 99 percent of the Amherst College community. It couldn't be tolerated."

One fraternity member commented "a fraternity prank is a prank except at Amherst College, where it is an 'affront to the academic community.'"

All 62 DUD members face disciplinary hearings for their role in the scavenger hunt, but the four larceny cases were suspended pending good behavior. DUD members can stay in their building until the end of the year, but proposals are being sought for its future use.

In other Amherst news, President Julian Gibbs and his wife waded through the icy waters of Boston Harbor after their World Airways DC-10 skidded off a Logan Airport runway and broke in two on Jan. 23. Two people are missing and presumed drowned from the plane, but Gibbs was unhurt. Mrs. Gibbs sustained a slight knee injury. "We were very lucky," said Gibbs to the Amherst Student. "Not only were we seated in the best part of the plane, but we chose the right exit."

"I thought a plane was crashing through the windows," said Chris Bohjalian '82 after a beer keg exploded in his dorm room on Jan. 27, shattering windows and destroying a home-built cooler, according to the Student. Apparently air from a pressurized canister leaked into the keg, eventually ripping open its top. "I do not want to downplay the severity of this incident," said Bohjalian, who suffered minor abrasions. His room suffered $400 damage, with costs to be shared by him and his three suitmates.

Bates College

Tragedy struck Bates Winter Carnival as Oscar, Frye House's entry in the snow sculpture contest, toppled to the ground before a throng of aghast spectators. "Screams pierced the frigid afternoon air and many ran to view the carnage," said the Bates Student.

The snow replica of an Academy Award statuette apparently succumbed to "overzealous carving of the ankles."

"I had about as much affection for Oscar as I've had for any hunk of snow," said Laura O'Meara '84. "It was quite a disaster."

Lowe comes off sly but amusing

by Duffy Graham

"Mack the Knife" was such a big hit for Bobby Darin that he could never successfully follow it up. It was a song in the pop tradition, unlike his earlier hit "Splish Splash," which was straight rock n' roll.

Nick Lowe's allusion to Bobby Darin through the title of his new album, Nick the Knife, is suggestive and highly appropriate for his music. Lowe is, in many ways, the paragon of a New Wave performer. He bases his music on the ideas of many of the great performers of the 1950's, and updates them. The foundation of Lowe's music is rhythm (he is a proficient bass player himself), just as rhythm was the key to 1950's rock and roll. Lowe makes the point overtly through a rhythm section instrumental in "Let Me Kiss Ya," one of the best songs on the new album.

None of the songs on this album are as potent as previous Lowe hits like "Cruel to be Kind" and "And So It Goes," but several are quite catchy. Nick the Knife will not be a commercial smash, most likely because Lowe does not lower himself to the use of hooks as do almost all the current commercial superstars. But Lowe is consciously playing a role in today's music business: resurrecting and streamlining the sound of the 1950's.

Rhythm is one of the essential elements; the pop mentality is another. Lowe is a self-professed pop singer, blatantly evident in the title of a previous album, Pure Pop for Now People. Simon Frith says, "The power of pop singers is the power to make ordinary language intense and vital; the words bring a touch of fantasy into our mundane use of them. The language that hems us in suddenly seems open—if we can't speak in poetry, we can speak in pop songs." Whether in the simple phrases of some song titles such as "My Heart Hurts," or "Let Me Kiss Ya," or lyrics such as "You ain't no Mona Lisa/And I no speaka Italian/But you sure do look a picture/With your head on my pillow," Lowe is an admirable pop song writer. The play between his word selection and his music which imitates the sounds of our daily lives make his songs a success. Nick the Knife is simple to listen to but worth a lot of effort to understand.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

Miller
2-on-2 B-Ball
is back!

Feb. 27, 28
Lasell Gym
O. O. Coed teams
$300. Scholarship

Racy theatre riles audience

by Ric Johnson

Williams theatre's Three Cuckolds, currently on stage at the Adams Memorial Theatre, is an energetic, athletic production which provides both bawdy entertainment and bawdy jokes.

While the scenario of the play involving cooling lovers and cuckolded husbands was an accurate synthesis of commedia styles, the continued movement of the play seeped at times into predictability which might have been enlivened by an additional dance movement or variation in the pace of the show. The hot, racy atmosphere often seemed more hectic than artistic, and, while bouncing and jumping around can be amusing, continuous repetitions renders it tiresome unless it is alleviated by more subtle forms of expression.

The bawdy jokes became tiresome. Although sex makes an interesting focus for a play, Williams theatre appears almost to be riveted unnecessarily by the "knee and thigh" approach to sexuality—using it to support the whole weight of the play.

Yet the play was not entirely without its highlights. In his role of Arlecchino, Richard Dodds presented an interesting mixture of shrewdness and gullibility, while Tartaglia (Gordon Compton) was also a strong role struggling valiantly to deliver his messages to the merry adulterers whose antics the play is an account of. It is a shame that the heaviness of the directing and the extreme predictability dragged down what was a generally dynamic and enthusiastic cast of actors. The play's faithfulness of commedia technique, to the point of the Venetian setting and the Italian accents, came off only partially successful.

Despite the problems, the play is pleasant and diverting. The actor's enthusiasm, excellent tech work and superior lighting help mitigate the shortcomings and serve to provide a traditional, if not completely creative rendition of commedia dell'arte.

Concert Listings

prepared by

Toonerville Trolley Records
Wed., Feb. 17 Marlon Brown, Sheehan's, Northampton, Mass. (every Wed.)

Thurs. Feb. 18 Martha Reeves, Jonathan Swift's, Boston, Mass.
Dakota Dave Hull & Sean Blackburn, Lively Lucy's, Skidmore College, Saratoga Springs, NY.

Feb. 18 thru 20 Tom Winslow, Mother's Wine Emporium, RPI, Troy, NY

Fri., Feb. 19 Uistafarians, JB Scott's, Albany, NY

Earl Klugh, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston

Sean Blackburn & Dakota Dave Hull, 8th Step Coffeehouse, Albany

Persuasions, Hangar One, Hadley, Mass.

Rod Stewart, Clive Ctr., Hartford, Conn.

Huxtable, Christian & Hood, Cafe Lena, Saratoga Springs, NY (Sat. also)

Johnson Mtn. Boys, American Legion Hall, Hanover, Mass.

Sat., Feb. 20 Joan Armatrading, Palladium, NY
Ellen McIlwaine & Rory Block, JB Scott's, Albany, NY

Hudson River Moonlight Band, 8th Step Coffeehouse, Albany, NY
J. Gells Band, Madison Square Garden, NY

Sun., Feb. 21 Don McLean & Terri Gibbs, Clive Ctr., Springfield, Ma.
Joan Armatrading, Orpheum, Boston, Mass.

Roy Ayers, Stanley Turrentine, Lenny White, etc., Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston

Feb. 22, 23 & 25 J. Gells Band, Boston Garden (Sold Out)

Feb. 23 Dregs, JB Scott's, Albany, NY

Feb. 28 Joan Baez, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

Mar. 3 Prince, Orpheum, Boston

Mar. 4 Black Sabbath, Boston Garden

Clark concert on key

by Becky MacDougall

The only regret I have about the Music from Marlboro concert presented last Thursday evening at the Clark Art Institute Auditorium is that there were not more people there to enjoy it. Unfortunately, the weather seemed to have deterred many students from undertaking the short but cold walk out to the Institute; those who braved the elements were rewarded with an almost flawless performance of chamber music that included works by Schumann, Debussy, and Bartok.

The program opened with Debussy's piano duo "En blanc et noir," performed by Thomas Lorango and Bruno Canino. It is hard to imagine that this piece could be played with any more sensitivity than these two pianists demonstrated. From soft running passages to single bold melodic lines played so perfectly in unison that they gave the illusion of having been played by one piano instead of by two, Lorango and Canino showed incredible musical chemistry. Together, they played with nuances of tempo and dynamics so subtle that it often was impossible to distinguish the two parts.

Next on the program was Schumann's "Andante and Variations in B-flat Major" for a most unusual combination of instruments: two pianos, two cellos, and French horn. Lorango and Canino again played the piano parts; the cello parts were played by Karl-Lise Ravn and Jonathan Spitz with David Jolley on the horn. Comparatively speaking, this was the weakest piece on the program. The horn was often not audible at times when it should have been; and although the cello parts were usually beautifully blended, occasionally the lower register of Ravn's cello sounded raspy. But for the most part, any weakness in the performance was due to the piece itself; I found the theme of Schumann's Andante uninteresting.

But the Bartok "Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion" that made up the second half of the program more than compensated for any reservations I might have had about what preceded it. Tempos alternated from ponderous to frenetic; the entire composition was full of fiery rhythms and bold melodies. Pianists Lorango and Canino continued to demonstrate their rare sensitivity and technical expertise with Bartok's extremely demanding piano parts, while John Grimes and Neil Grover expertly showed the capabilities of percussive instruments ranging from the xylophone to the snare drum. Altogether, it was an electrifying musical experience.

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday

Watch Record
for specials.

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Basketballers vanquished by Jeffs

by John Clayton

Poor shooting and too many fouls were key factors in the basketball team's 72-61 loss to Amherst Saturday night. The Ephmen were also plagued with poor shooting when they lost to Worcester Tech on Wednesday, 59-53.

The Ephs as a team shot 41% from the field Saturday night, and an atrocious 39% from the free throw line. They also committed 29 fouls.

"The game was won at the foul line," said Coach Robert Peck. "We had more baskets than they did (27-23), but we put them on the line too much and missed some key one-and-one's when we were trying to come back."

Art Pidoriano led Williams with 17 points on 50% shooting. Center Jim Pettit had 32 for Amherst.

Ephs out

Four of the five Eph starters fouled out of the game, Scott Olesen leaving with ten minutes left. "We're just not good enough to play for that long with Scooter out of the lineup," Peck said.

Williams was doing well in the first half, getting leads of 4-0, 15-11 and 23-16. But the Lord Jeffs ignited for a 16-2 run with nine minutes left in the half to pull ahead 32-25 and then 34-27 at the break.

Amherst extended their lead to eleven points early in the second half and kept it there until Williams edged within six at 56-50 with eight minutes left.

"We missed three one-and-one's in this period," Peck said. "That would have been six points."

Jeffs stall

With five minutes left Amherst started a successful delay game, and eventually collected the eleven point margin of victory.

"They were a good team," Peck said. "That's one reason we got in foul trouble—we had trouble covering them."

During the Worcester game, the Eph's shooting looked pitiful, but it wasn't as bad as the Amherst game. Williams shot 40% from the field and 47% from the line in this one.

Missiles misfired

Poor shooting here could have been attributed to the "live" rims (very bouncy) and poor back-ground behind the basket at WPI, but Saturday's game proved that the team could do little better at home.

Al Lewis led all scorers on Wednesday with 19 points. Center Steve O'Day had twelve, and Pidoriano had eleven. But four Engineers were in double figures (although they didn't shoot that well either—42% and 50%).

A disappointing week. But the Ephmen get another shot at the Lord Jeffs at Amherst on the 27th. Meanwhile, they face RPI tomorrow and Tufts on Saturday, both at home.

The JV team scored the last 22 points of the first half to lead them to victory over Amherst in the warm-up game.

Fourth in nation

Squashmen roll on

by Gordon Celender

During the past three weeks the men's varsity squash team withstood perhaps its most difficult test of the season, winning four of six matches against highly ranked opponents and thus securing the number four spot in the nation.

Williams chalked up impressive 7-2 victories over Stonybrook, Penn., and Cornell, as well as a deceptively close 6-3 win over Trinity, while only losing to Harvard 8-1 and Dartmouth 5-4. The team's record now stands at an impressive 16-3, with only three matches left to be played.

This past Wednesday, the team travelled to Middletown, CT to face a powerful and young Trinity squad, with both teams vying for the number four national ranking. The Ephmen knew they were in for a struggle from the start, and after the completion of the odd matches they trailed 3-2, with wins coming from stalwarts Greg Zaff (#1) and Kennon Miller (#5).

Turnaround win

The match began to slip further away when Tom Harrity (#2) and Jamie King (#6) took the court and soon found themselves trailing 2-0 and 2-1 respectively. Fortunately, they were both able to turn things around, winning in dramatic five game matches. Another strong victory by Sam Nataraian (#8) sealed the match for Williams, and a close five-game marathon win for Bill Nau brought the final tally to 6-3.

Two weekends ago, the team took to the road to play both Cornell and Penn., and the trip was worth the while. Williams won both matches by a score of 7-2. On the previous weekend, the team defeated Stonybrook at home by the same 7-2 margin.

Pucksters split two, blanked once

by Rich Leavitt

Playing nearly flawless hockey, Middlebury skated to a convincing 5-0 decision over the Ephs. Panther goalie McNamara backboned his team's effort by kicking out all 29 shots. The game was characterized by Middlebury's persistent and tenacious checking which kept the normally high scoring Eph skaters off the scoreboard. It marked the first time the puck team had been shut out in two years. Earlier in the week McCormick's squad easily downed the Dutchmen from Union in an exceptionally well played game. Coach Crawford's skaters came to avenge the loss which the Ephs handed them earlier in the year at Middlebury. The Panthers took advantage of a power play situation in the first period to gain a 1-0 lead. In the second period, they connected for two more goals as they took advantage of the Ephs' sloppy passing. Middlebury added two more goals in the final period and goalie McNamara held the potent Eph offense at bay to collect the shutout.

Playing perhaps the best game of the year, the Williams stickmen downed a solid Union squad. Senior Jon Dayton started the scoring for Williams in the first period on a slapshot from the right point. Greg Jacobson '82 let go a bomb from the slot about eight minutes later for a 2-0 lead. Crafty Bob Brownell '83 set up the first of Calabro's three goals on a pretty drop pass which Calabro fired home to wind up the Eph scoring for the period. Union scored on a shot which somehow snuck between sophomore Dan Finn's legs.

John Whelan '82, Doug Jebb

Magoun, seventh, Pier, tenth, and Chris Eagon '84, 13th in the slalom, and Graham, eleventh in the GS.

In the women's alpine events, Williams took two fourths in the team standings. Some excitement was generated when captain Tricia Hellman came down and won the first run of the slalom race. She was edged out by Middlebury's Leslie Baker in the second run, ending up in second place in the final results.

Excellent results were again produced by nordic skiers Hangen and Chandler, who both took tenth in the individual races. Captain Brenda Mailman '82 followed Chandler in 15th position.

William was fifth in the four-event team results at UVM, in both the men's and the women's standings.

Carnival upcoming

Team-members are excited about the prospects at the Williams carnival coming up on Feb. 19th and 20th. As coach Leslie Orton says, "All we need is to have a carnival where every Williams racer skis to their potential."

Skiing success

Continued from Page 14
bly good race, finishing in 17th place. He was followed by Blaine McKay '82 in 32nd. These 3 skiers led Williams to an impressive fifth place in the nordic team standings.

In the women's nordic events, junior Ellen Chandler skied to a 14th place, followed by captain Brenda Mailman '82 in 18th and Sue Marchant '82 in 23rd, placements which brought them to sixth spot in the team standings.

In the overall team results, Williams placed fourth in the men's, their strongest performance in several years, while the women's team took fifth spot, behind UNH and the "big three"; Middlebury, UVM, and Dartmouth.

Strong second

The week before, at UVM's carnival in Stowe, Vt. spectators got a glimpse of the Williams potential, as the men's alpine team took second place in both the slalom and giant slalom events, behind only the formidable UVM squad. In both events, all three of the Williams point-scorers were among the top 15 competitors, including

The Valley of the Giants: Williams junior Steve O'Day towers above the field in tallying against the Lord Jeffs. (Govan)

Make a last minute check of your texts. We are going to start returning immediately to reduce huge overages.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is senior Tricia Hellman who captains and leads the women's alpine ski team and finished fifth and second in the slalom at the last two carnivals. Tricia, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

WINTER CARNIVAL BEER SPECIALS

R.W.B. . . $1⁹⁵/6 pk.

Matt's . . $2⁹⁵/case

Wurtzberger-$3¹⁵/6 pk.

$3⁹⁹

Peppermint Schnapps

Track takes Little Three

by Steven J. Serenska

Personal bests proved to be the rule of the day as the Williams Winter Track Team soundly defeated Amherst, Wesleyan and Trinity in last Saturday's meet. The Ephmen were in control of the competition from the outset, tallying an impressive score of 91½ points, against Amherst's 32, Wesleyan's 27, and Trinity's 22½.

The Williams high jumpers continued their domination of that event by taking first and second and tying for third. Seth Toney '84 won with a leap of 6'0", followed by Paul Toland '85 who climbed to 5'10", and Cam Burns '85 who cleared the same height, but attempted a greater number of times.

Jumpers high

Greg Lao '84 soared to a height of 13'3" to win the pole vault. In the long jump, Micah Taylor '82 sailed 21'5½" for the win, and was closely followed by teammates Charlie Von Arentschildt '82 who jumped 20'11¼" to take third place and Marc Hummon, '84, who jumped 19'5¼" to take the fourth.

In the other field events, John Kowalk '83 won the shot put with a toss of 45'3¼". Freshman Kevin Jenkins won the triple jump with a distance of 39'2¼".

Angle streaks

Brian Angle '84 led off the day's running events by winning the mile with an impressive clocking of 4:20.1. The Ephs went on to pull off a series of near sweeps in the 60 meter hurdles, the 60 meter dash, the 440 yd. dash and the 600 meter run. Senior co-captain Jeff Poggi broke the tape in the 60 hurdles in 7.8 seconds followed by Seth

Toney in third, and Kendall James '84 in fourth times of 8.2 and 8.5 seconds respectively.

Charlie Von Arentschildt, Ted Leon '84, and Dan Creem '82 achieved similar results in the 440 yd. dash. Von Arentschildt came in first with a time of 50.6 seconds, followed by Leon's third place effort of 52.0, and Creem's fourth place time of 52.6.

Tomas Alejandro '83, George Parks '85, and Marc Hummon '84 also finished 1-3-4 in the 60 meter dash. Alejandro's winning time was 6.4 seconds, followed closely by Parks and Hummon who both finished with a clocking of 6.8 seconds.

Completing Williams' domination of the running events were Jeff Poggi, Kevin Jenkins, and Mark Rice '84 who together earned eight points for Williams in the 600 meter run. Poggi crossed the finish line first with a time of 1:16.0, closely followed by Jenkins who ran a 1:18.4, and Rice who ran a 1:19.2.

Junior Tomas Alejandro breaks the tape for the Ephmen in the 60 meter dash this weekend. (Farley)

Cagers top Lady Jeffs Downhillers cop high finishes

by Ted Leon

Playing before a large crowd in Lasell Gymnasium Saturday, the women's varsity basketball team came one step closer to its seventh consecutive Little Three championship, by defeating Amherst 38-33.

Using a tight 1-3-1 zone defense and a patient offense which was able to successfully work the ball inside, the Ephwomen controlled the momentum and maintained a moderate lead throughout the game. Leading 22-16 at halftime, they increased the spread to eleven points midway through the second half.

Jeffs threaten

The lead dwindled as Amherst came out of their zone and pressured the Ephwomen fullcourt, cutting the margin to five points with 47 seconds remaining. The Lady Jeffs were not able to capitalize any further, however, and when the final buzzer sounded Williams had raised its record to 8-4.

Cathy Evans '83 and Anne Dancewicz '82 played especially well. Frosh support came from Kay Lackey, who led the team with ten points, and Lynne Jaycobs, who had a number of steals to go with her six points and fine defense.

Seesaw win

It was the third win in as many games for the team this week. Monday they traded baskets back and forth before pulling out a 58-57 win against Union, and Wednesday they blew by Mt. Holyoke 65-47.

In the Union game, it was Kathleen Gilmore's offensive rebound and subsequent basket which broke the 56-56 deadlock and provided the necessary margin for victory. The Ephwomen had a number of fine performances in that game. Jaycobs led the team with thirteen points, Lackey added eleven, and Evans and Anne Dancewicz both contributed ten. It was Evans who, according to Coach Hudson-Hamblin, "completely ran the team offensively and defensively."

Against Holyoke the Ephwomen relied on their tough 1-3-1 defense to roll to an easy win. The squad showed offensive punch as well, with five women finishing the game in double figures. Jaycobs led with fourteen points, followed by Lackey and Anne Dancewicz with twelve, Gilmore with eleven, and Tracy Burrows '84 with ten.

The women's varsity basketball team faces Trinity tomorrow at 4:00 in Lasell Gymnasium.

The past two weekends have seen some excellent performances by Williams skiers on the Division I carnival circuit. Racing against NCAA and AIAW national champions from UVM and Middlebury, respectively, Williams put a number of competitors in the places in both nordic and alpine events.

Last weekend at the Dartmouth carnival, freshman John Pier took third place in the slalom race, a scant .2 seconds from victory. He was followed by Martin Magoun, '85, in 13th, and captain Steve Graham '82 in 16th.

In the women's slalom, senior captain Tricia Heilman skied to fifth place in a race won by Olympic competitor Leslie Smith from Middlebury College. Team mate Marcy Rubinger '85 and sister Judith Heilman '84 were the remaining point-scorers, finishing 19th and 20th, respectively.

Fifth in nordic

In the nordic events, captain Don Hangen continued his string of strong performances, skiing to tenth place on the hilly Dartmouth course. Sophomore Tim Goss also had a remarka-

Continued on Page 13

Swimmers take first dive

by Jim Roche

"We swam extremely well again today, but they are a very strong team and were just too much for us to handle." This is how varsity swimming coach Carl Samuelson assessed the men's first loss of the year to Division I rival Colgate, 74-59, last Saturday afternoon. On a brighter note, the women maintained their undefeated record with a compelling victory over Mount Holyoke.

Although the Williams men entered the meet as a decided underdog, the team felt that a strong team performance could beat the Colgate powerhouse. The Ephs jumped out to a quick lead, however, after the fourth event they fell behind by four points, and were unable to overcome the deficit for the rest of the afternoon.

Records shattered

This meet will probably be remembered as the day when the Williams pool record book was rewritten. The quality of the competition was indicated an amazing seven pool records. However, six of the seven belonged to Colgate swimmers. John Shepardson of Colgate was the only swimmer to achieve two records with times of :47.67 in the 100 yard freestyle, and 1:45.70 in the 200 free.

The other new marks were set in the 100 breast, the 100 fly, the 50 free, and the 200 back.

The only pool record achieved by Williams was in the 800 free relay. The team of Rob Sommer '84, Jeff Mills '84, Jeff Mook '83, and Mike Regan '82 swam the race in 7:13.52, chopping a full seven seconds off the previous mark.

Good and bad days

Co-captain Regan turned in a brilliant performance, but only had the one record to show for it. In both the 50 free and the 100 free, Regan broke the pool record, only to have his times eclipsed by Colgate swimmers.

Other noteworthy efforts were turned in by freshman Peter Orphanos with a crowd-pleasing close victory in the 200 butterfly, and by diver Jim Stockton '83, who captured 1st and 2nd respectively in the two diving events.

Coach Samuelson offered these comments on the loss. "I felt that we could have had a few better performances. You have to expect swimmers to have some good days and some bad ones, but under the circumstances, I thought we did well against a very strong team."

Women undefeated

The women followed the men's meet with a runaway win over Mt. Holyoke, 81-34, pushing their season record to seven wins and no losses.

The meet was used primarily to qualify as many swimmers as possible for the New England and national championships. Among the women added on to the long list of qualifiers were freshman Anne Melvin and Marcia Gutsche in the 1650 freestyle event.

Coach Samuelson was pleased with the team's effort, and is optimistic about the team's chances at the New England competition.

The men and the women will conclude their regular season next Saturday at home with a meet against Wesleyan before preparing for the New England post-season competition.

Displaying great effort, Rob Sommer '84 glides through Muir Pool during the swim team's first loss of the year. (Farley)

Spikers drill Amherst

Displaying solid defense and a powerful hitting attack, the Williams men's volleyball squad rolled over arch-rival Amherst College 3-0 last weekend, raising their league record to 3-0.

One week earlier, the team took both Bridgeport University and Sacred Heart University without the loss of a game to claim an early first place lead in division IIB of the New England Collegiate Volleyball League.

Sunday's match with Amherst was characterized by a superb defensive effort by the Ephmen, with the blockers closing off Amherst's hitting. "They couldn't hit through us, and that was the key," said co-captain Paul Sabbah. "By forcing them to hit over us, we could set up our offense and control play."

Power spiking

Standout hitting was registered by co-captain Vince Brandstein, Steve Brewster, and Bob Alcasabas, who, along with sophomores Rick Goldstein, Marc Hummon, and Lee Link, anchored the defense. The usual solid setting was turned in by Brandstein and senior Dave Levison. The final game scores were 15-7, 16-14, 15-9, with Williams leading virtually constantly.

Two weeks earlier, the Ephmen traveled to Bridgeport, CT to play in the New England Jamboree, and, by posting an 8-2 tournament record, captured first place over rivals Amherst and Wesleyan as well as other New England collegiate squads.

Next up for the team is a match with Westfield St., which will be played tonight in Lasell Gymnasium at 8:00 p.m. Sunday Williams hosts Bridgeport and Sacred Heart to finish off the week's action.

Council strikes two from election ballot

by Laura Selgsohn

Two treasurer candidates were barred from the College Council election ballot on constitutional grounds by a 17-5 Council vote last Thursday, leaving John Smail '83 as the only contestant in the race. Smail meets the Council constitution's requirement: "Candidates for the position of Treasurer must be or have been members of the Finance Committee." Challengers Gary Brown '83 and Ned Stiker '84 have no Finance Committee experience.

Last year, Steve Spears '83 slipped through a semantic loophole in the Constitution to run successfully for treasurer. He pointed out at the time that the constitution states "when these qualifications cannot be met, nominations will be open to the entire student body." He interpreted this to mean that more than one Finance Committee member must run before nominations are closed.

Sticky precedent

This exception set a sticky precedent for the Council, which wanted neither to violate its constitution nor contradict itself at the expense of Brown and Stiker.

Robin Powell '82, who served on the constitutional review committee that inserted the Finance Committee requirement three years ago, explained, "At the time we made the decision, we felt it was a good one, because the experience one gets on the Finance Committee makes one a more efficient treasurer."

Powell admitted that the review committee did not consider the possibility of a one-candidate race.

Brown reminded the Council that Finance Committee positions are filled by appointments by the Council elections committee. He said he sought a seat on the Finance Committee last year, but was unsuccessful.

Unfair and undemocratic

He labelled the restriction of candidates to Finance Committee members unfair and undemocratic. "In a sense," he argued, "the position of Council treasurer is being artificially restricted."

Former Treasurer Russell Platt '82 supported Finance Committee experience for treasurer candidates, as did current Treasurer Beth O'Leary '82. "After a year on the Finance Committee, you

Continued on Page 5

Williams authorities invaded Baxter in full force on Friday night, the second anniversary of the infamous 1980 Freshmen food fight, in which the Class of '83 racked up over $800 worth of damages. (right) Assistant Director of Food Services James Hodgkins, Dean of Freshmen Cris Roosenraad, and Security officers Jean Thorndike and Bill Busi watch for signs of student uprisings. (below) Busi keeps a sharp eye on unruly diners. (Farley)

Snow sculptures

Vandals crack Humpty Dumpty

Vandalism may have plagued this weekend's Winter Carnival snow sculpture competition, but A-Gar-Wood's rendition of Humpty Dumpty managed to emerge victorious despite slight damage.

A group of three young men in a blue van was sighted on both Friday and Saturday nights in connection with the reported destruction of at least five sculptures, according to a Security spokesman.

The spokesman speculated that the vandals were Williams students or friends of students. "Last year there was vandalism, but not quite like this," he recalled.

Hockey sticks

Rich Henderson '83 reported seeing three men he didn't recognize as students attack Mills' entry Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

"It was bound to happen," remarked Dodd House President John Carlson '83 of the destruction of Dodd's Griffin and Mock Turtle sculptures.

Missy Booth '84, the organizer of the sculpture competition, remarked that it was unfortunate vandalism occurred.

"We postponed the judging for three hours on Saturday," she pointed out, "in order to accommodate those houses who needed to rebuild."

Chessboards and caterpillars

Coming in second to Wood's Humpty Dumpty was Dennett's version of a chessboard, complete with pieces, followed by a tie for third place between Mills' Tweedledum and Tweedledee and Lehman's depiction of a caterpillar on a mushroom. The selection committee based their decision on care, originality, detail, finishing and size.

"I wanted to give them all first place," Booth added.

Mills members repair Tweedledee and Tweedledum after the sculptures received a brutal beating at the hands of roaming vandals early Saturday morning. The pair garnered a third place award in Saturday's snow sculpture contest. (Berg)

Admissions letter sparks official, student concern

by Jon Tigar

Director of Admissions Phil Smith recently came under fire for an alumni newsletter which included several paragraphs on sexual harassment. The letter was mailed on February 3 to between six and seven hundred alumni admissions contacts.

The letter, authored by Smith, describes recent events on campus and their effect on the number of applications for admission. In the letter, Smith criticized the ad-hoc group Williams Against Sexual Harassment's (WASH) media solicitation, but said that "as a community, Williams is doing a responsible job of working with students and faculty to define individual and group responsibilities." So far, he noted, "there is no indication that the spate of publicity has hurt the application total this year."

Both Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor and WASH voiced concern over Smith's description of the kind and extent of the problem of sexual harassment on campus. "Let me be clear," Smith wrote, "that there have been no rapes on campus and no assaults. Either rape or assault is a criminal offense and must by law be handled by the civil authorities."

In fact, one assault has been reported and is as yet unsolved. "I gather that one of my facts is wrong," Smith said.

Aggressive bird-dogging

Smith also quoted in his letter history professor John Hyde, now on sabbatical leave, as saying that "what probably would have been termed aggressive bird-dogging in the '50's is now sexual harassment."

Smith said he "was trying to put it (the issue of sexual harassment) into an understandable context for alumni of a different generation, although maybe not of this generation."

Smith indicated that "it certainly was not my intention to prolong the issue of sexual harassment."

O'Connor said the letter "has the effect of trivializing the whole series of events and gives an impression he himself does not mean to convey," and "has undercut (the Administration's) efforts."

O'Connor also remarked that the Administration will ask Smith to send a follow-up letter, including "the motion that the faculty passed, perhaps my open letter, with a cover letter from him explaining that he didn't mean to convey that impression."

WASH responded to the letter with a written statement which is included on this week's Record Op-Ed page.

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Outlook:
Super
Student p. 4

• Council Candidates' statements p. 8

• Space invaders unplug pinball p. 10

• Eph skiers schuss
to second p. 12

The Williams Record

No Endorsement

The Record will not make its usual endorsement for College Council officers this week, for the nature of the candidates' campaigns has made it difficult to judge on any basis other than personalities.

Freddy Nathan has shown that creative initiative and specific programs can utilize the Council's manpower, money, and spokesperson power effectively. Yet the current presidential candidates give no hint that they have anything in particular to implement or express in the coming year.

When they mention issues at all, the candidates say they "see a need for" this or "encourage" that, but do not suggest they have constructive means for implementing their views. Worse, they establish their most important role as being spokesman for student opinion, on a campus where student opinion is rarely formed or focused. The President must "create" issues by drawing attention to them; he must channel the usually dormant student opinions and energies into effective rallies or post-card campaigns. The job has few specific functions but many opportunities for implementing specific ideas.

The vice-presidential candidates have some tangible proposals. Jay Ward hopes to establish a useful Financial Aid Committee; Steve Epstein shows he has a fine grasp of the V.P.'s potential in his suggestions for election publicity and guidelines. We wish their presidential counterparts would run in the same spirit.

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Jon Tigar

NEWS

Sara Ferris

Katya Hokanson

FEATURES

Philip Busch

LAYOUT

Michael Govan

OP-ED

Paul Sabbah

SPORTS

Dan Keating

ENTERTAINMENT

Ronald Isen

PHOTOGRAPHY

Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-597-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letters

"Honors"

To the editor:

Your February 16 editorial, "Honors for Effort," makes two claims: 1) that to add "Honors" to the present grade options for WSP would be equivalent to instituting the system in force during the regular semesters (i.e. letter grades), and 2) that adding "Honors" would only serve to turn the "competitive few" from "experimentation" to "safe" courses. Both of these claims strike me as dubious. As for the first, so long as WSP grades use descriptive terms rather than letters, they cannot be included in the grade point average. As for the second, it is based on a misunderstanding of the reason for adding "Honors" to the WSP grading options. The point is not to provide an incentive for harder work, but to provide a way of recognizing distinguished achievement. Even now, such achievement occurs during WSP, and it is frustrating to have no way of recognizing it. More to the point, it is hard to reconcile claims that WSP courses are academically "real" or "respectable" with a set of grade options that peaks at "Pass." Finally, your editorial is based on some distressing assumptions about why Williams students might pursue distinction. One wishes, at least, that the "competitive few" who have managed to become Record editors could distinguish between the pursuit of excellence and mere status-grubbing.

Prof. Michael Bell

Joy of research

To the editor:

I'd like to add to Alyson Hagy's very good article on Winter Study and faculty scholarship. I agree that our role as scholars isn't widely understood at Williams and it should be.

A main reason that many of us are deeply interested in scholarship and research is simply that it's exciting and important and satisfying to contribute to the better understanding of a confusing world. Scholarship is fun. It's fun to try to think your way through important and difficult problems and find solutions no one ever thought of before. It's the same excitement we get from teaching well—the excitement of helping others (and ourselves) better to understand urgent human questions. It's why we're academics.

What prompts this note is that it would be inaccurate and unfortunate if the passion for scholarship within the Williams faculty were to be seen only as a fearful response to the horrors of PUBLISH OR PERISH—to the pressures of a cruel outside world, pressures we'd like to see vanish but have to live with like famine and disease. A few of us may feel that way; a few of us may find teaching a fearful horror. But most at Williams don't.

Unlike the faculties at pure "teaching colleges"—the community colleges and undistinguished liberal arts colleges and universities—Williams' faculty does the same kind of research for the same kinds of reasons and with the same rewards as our colleagues at Yale and Stanford and Harvard: It's "publish or perish" for the same reason it's "teach well or perish"—because not to be involved in and excited about your work is pretty deadly. That threat is internal and so is the pleasure; the benefits are very public.

Gordon Winston
Economics Department

H & D reports

To the editor:

The Honor Committee heard 5 cases this academic year, from incidents occurring during the first semester. The case summaries are listed below, as required by the charter of the Honor Committee.

Case 1) Two students were found guilty of cooperating on a graded computer program without citing the assistance of each other. The disposition was a letter of warning for both students to remain in the Dean's file until graduation, and disallowing the affected work to be accepted for grading.

Case 2) A student was found guilty of not fully footnoting a paper. Penalty was a letter of warning to be placed on file with the dean until graduation, and the paper was deemed not acceptable as part of the final grade.

Case 3) A student was convicted of extensive plagiarism and was given a directed grade of E in the course and a letter of warning.

Case 4) In an unusual case, a student was convicted of plagiarism. Because of extenuating circumstances, the student was given a letter of warning and allowed to rewrite the paper.

Case 5) A student was found guilty of plagiarizing a paper. The penalty was a letter of warning and disallowing the paper to be evaluated in determining the final grade.

The Honor Committee is required to submit a summary of the cases it hears

Continued on Page 4

CORRECTION

Last week's chart on Winter Study proposals incorrectly listed the faculty teaching commitment under the Review Committee's Proposal A. Faculty would teach one of every two periods under the plan, as they do now.

Rediscovering the Purple Valley

I returned to Williams College from Germany a couple of weeks ago. I was back in the Purple Valley, the land of the Log, Argyle sweaters and L. L. Bean boots, and I had the wise words of Larry Fuchser to comfort me. Forgive me if I misquote from the sage, two years after his departure. "Sex is not nice at Williams College. Many things are not nice, including pimples and obesity." I figured I'd buy some Clearasil and cut down to two desserts per meal.

Monday morning, I awoke early and prepared to dress my best. First, I carefully applied a good, solid, and reassuringly long lasting coat of sarcasm; to that a resistant layer of cynicism, then old jeans and a button-down. Thus armored, I felt ready. I thought. The first two days I survived quite well, buoyed on a steady wave of superficiality. Maybe once or twice I let somebody through to see what I was feeling, but I figured it wouldn't be hard to plug the gaps.

Things, after all, were quite similar to know what was wrong with me, maybe I was just listening better. I started having great talks and discussions with people, some of whom I didn't know, when I should've been studying. A radical idea occurred to me. Maybe I should let the studying slide for a short while, and do some understanding instead.

I've had better discussions with people

Purple Valley

this past week than I have in a long time. Today, I met a girl at breakfast whom I'd never talked to before. We discussed writing, and I said it was something I'd always wanted to do. I don't know why the girl didn't just let it drop. Instead of treating it as a triviality, she actually asked to see some of what I'd written. I also discussed our social situation, this sad fingerprint of the Williams experience, with many people. I found out

"How many people graduate as emotional virgins?"

the condition in which I had left them last spring. I'd read the Record in Germany, and therefore knew that we had lost our dogs and our Row Houses, but that we still had our fireplaces. I had also heard about "sexual harassment."

So, of course I had to get the scoop on that, and of course most people had their own opinions and knowledge of what had occurred and participants involved. I decided to be my Williams me, and made a few jokes about sexual harassment. After all, I thought, there are serious issues here at school, but we have never let that fact get in the way of our own amusement. Surely we can trivialize anything, if only we apply ourselves.

Something about those best laid plans of mice and cynical students... I didn't that there are a few lonely people out there.

Talking with Williams students two weeks ago in London, I rashly promised that a social revolution would occur on campus this spring. I don't know if it will happen, but I do think I'm beginning to understand the problem. People on this campus are lonely sometimes, but either they don't know how to remedy the problem, or they don't work hard enough to solve it. I'd be afraid to see statistics on how many adult Williams students graduate as virgins. Perhaps this is sexually telling, but less physical and much more important, how many people graduate as emotional virgins? What a shame to have wasted four years of opportunity when we have the time and proximity to

Don't trivialize harassment

Last week, Williams Against Sexual Harassment (WASH) obtained a copy of "Alumni Newsletter #5 (Feb. 3, 1982)," a memo to alumni issued by Admissions Director Phil Smith. The memo demonstrates Smith's skewed sense of priorities concerning the issue of sexual harassment at Williams College. The tone and content of the letter imply that Smith thinks that some students and faculty have overblown the issue. What is most troubling is that, after the College administration has responded to the problem with concrete, positive steps, Smith trivializes it and shows that his unending concern is with admissions statistics.

While the Williams community has clearly taken sexual harassment seriously, the College Admissions Director has not. He quotes Professor John Hyde as saying, "What probably would have been termed aggressive bird-dogging in the '50's is now sexual harassment." This comment is somewhat at odds with Dean Daniel O'Connor's recent "Open Letter to Williams Students." In that letter, O'Connor states, "Every member of the community is urged to take this problem seriously... Persistent prejudicial behavior will not be accepted on this campus."

Smith also writes, "Let me be clear that there have been no rapes on campus and no assaults." This is a lie. Anyone believing otherwise may contact the

Viewpoint

Deans for clarification on this point. In an article on the second sexual assault case this year the Williams Record (Jan. 12, 1982) said, when the defendant appealed the Discipline Committee's original verdict, "The charge was again sexual assault, and allegedly the committee upheld its guilty verdict."

Part of Phil Smith's job is to select future Williams students. He directly affects the general nature of the student body. He seems to be satisfied with the current character of Williams students as a group. "We are convinced that the issues at Williams are broad societal issues... there is no problem of safety or attitude on the campus." Again, Dean O'Connor's letter contradicts Smith's assertions: "I am particularly anxious to find ways of ridding this campus of the prejudicial behavior which often follows the use of stereotypes."

As Williams is, indeed, part of a larger society, it suffers from broader societal ills, as Mr. Smith acknowledges. However, both the Deans' Office and WASH feel that Williams College is only starting to be concerned about sexual harassment, whereas other institutions have already recognized and begun to deal with it. WASH felt that, in calling the media, we were putting the issue at Williams into a broader societal framework. We question Phil Smith's implication that WASH acted irresponsibly in contacting the press. We also find problematic his statement that some students and faculty are seeking a return to "the more exciting days of the late '60's." Smith trivializes both our concerns and the efficacy of our actions. Our most recent steps have been recommending and submitting proposals for both the student handbook, and the Colby Committee's work in revising disciplinary procedures.

The grievously myopic attitude reflected in Smith's memo shows the need for a continued dialogue among members of the College community. We must not fall prey to the dangers of letting this issue become a fad. The problem has existed for a long time, and will continue to exist as long as we ignore or trivialize it.

Williams Against Sexual Harassment

Renelde Espinoza '82

Jane Fischberg '82

Greg Helms '83

Coming back from Germany, I see apathy and concern for self, but also a reaching, a hoping, an attempt to communicate and to understand. Larry Fuchser saw and pinpointed many of the problems here at Williams in his Record article of two years ago. However, he might have underestimated the potential we have here. I mean, we're all supposed to be intelligent, right? So let's get out of this disgusting mediocrity. It's amazing we put up with it. Maybe we could polish a few impurities of the ivory tower ourselves. Or maybe we should just continue on our present course, avoiding the gambles, watching our GPA's and perfecting our games.

—Peter Detwiler

Winter Study: The Alumni Option

The following is my own perspective on the issue we've all heard and talked so much about recently:

The Problem: Complaints about the current institution vary, but the fundamental problem most often cited is that the amount of work invested by a professor in developing a Winter Study course is not sufficiently matched by the amount or intensity of work invested by the students. Either a Winter Study course requires too much of a professor or not enough of a student, or both.

Obviously, no one claims that this is the case in each and every Winter Study course, but this form of dissatisfaction with the current system is sufficiently widespread for many people to actually consider such radical baby-with-the-bathwater "solutions" as eliminating Winter Study entirely.

Another complaint about Winter Study is that, because of the time commitment required of a faculty member, there is little or no time for a professor to do research or to write, let alone prepare for the second semester. This desire of the faculty for research time should not be viewed as selfish, for the entire Williams community benefits when its members have the opportunity for scholarly exploration. This form of exploration, something required of students, can hardly be denied to faculty.

The problem, in short, is a poor utilization of some professors' January energies. What is needed is a means by which the burden of obligatory Winter Study participation could be lessened or removed, while simultaneously retaining all the positive aspects of Winter Study—the diverse and stimulating curriculum, the internships and travel opportunities, and the blessedly relaxed atmosphere; then the problems associated with Winter Study would disappear.

The Solution: As often happens with problem solving, the "elegant" solution only becomes apparent after one has transcended the limits of the situation in which the problem lies in order to get a better perspective. I would like to regress for a moment to the first official College function I attended. At the freshmen orientation lecture to the incoming class of 1984 I was reminded that the word "college" meant "community of learning," a very attractive concept. With this in mind, I'd like to look at the Williams "college." Who constitutes it? Who participates in it? Who contributes to it? Who benefits from it? Obviously there are the students, as well as the faculty, staff, and administration. Is that all? The answer is No. In addition to these components of the Williams community, there are literally thousands of people all over the country who continually send millions of dollars to Williams. I refer of course to the loyal alumni. These are the folks who spent their glorious youth in the beloved Purple Valley, then went out and conquered the "real world." Experienced, intelligent, and capable of belting out "The Mountains" at a moment's notice, the alumni have the potential to resurrect the ailing Winter Study Program.

Of the several thousand alumni who are currently retired or retiring: just think how many would jump at the opportunity to relive the days of their youth, to return to the snow-mantled Purple Valley, to mingle with an intellectually stimulating student body, and, most importantly, to be able to share, over a two or four week period, something really tangible: not just money, but their accumulated knowledge and experiences.

The proposal, in brief, is to institute a program of paired two-week seminar courses, with each two-week segment to be taught by a returning alumnus. I feel that the selection of these alumni from the available volunteers, as well as their training (exactly how to transform a life's career into a stimulating two-week seminar), would be best handled by an alumni-composed committee. The members of this committee could arrive either this summer or next January in order to be trained in their task. One advantage of having an alumni committee in charge of the selection from amongst those wanting to participate is that the onus of rejection (in cases of course duplication, too many courses, or just intractability) is on a committee, not on the college (the implications for alumni giving are obvious).

Housing of these returnees could be handled in much the same manner as visiting lecturers are dealt with. Even should this prove difficult, the value of this program is well worth the effort and whatever expense. Winter Study is such an immensely attractive aspect of the Williams' curriculum that the cost of saving it is much less than the "cost" of losing it. Actually, considering the typical financial status of retired alumni, they would not even have to be paid for their efforts.

With such an increase in the teaching paul during January, the burden of an alternate-year teaching obligation could be lifted from the faculty. Depending on the numbers of alumni faculty, standard faculty teaching could either become encouraged-but-optional or a once-in-every-four-year obligation.

I hope you give this matter your attention... before the Winter Study Review Committee takes any action in ignorance of the "alumni option."

—Robert Kent '84

Searching for the definition of the ideal student

by Jon Tigar, Peter Muz and Katya Ilkanson

Narcissus would have loved it here: every time something happens on campus, a cry goes up for self-reflection. We will always search, of course, because we are seeking perfection, not functional excellence. We want to find the ideal student, and seem to have little idea of what he or she does or is, only the certainty that he or she is out there.

Students are only one side of the coin. How do faculty define the ideal student? Expecting to find a broad variety of answers, all of which put together would lead to a concrete definition, we approached a few professors. We found that thoughts on the subject are as vague and as diverse for most pedagogues as it is for their students.

General definitions of the ideal student ranged from the simple to the obscure. Philosophy professor Laszlo Versenyi adopted the general outline of a student "Interested in and able to pursue the type of inquiry undertaken in the course," while departmental colleague Tom Cook hoped for students who would "go home and wonder what freedom means." Adjectives which frequently cropped up: "enthusiastic," "interested," "insightful, creative and intellectually venturesome."

Picking them early

As Director of Admissions, Phil Smith's job is to search for the best possible students. How does he define the ideal prospective student?

"For starters," he said, "a person who's taken advantage of his or her surroundings . . . I view very negatively someone with a pronounced manana philosophy—all the tickets are there and he just hasn't used them. I find that disappointing."

Smith views extra-curricular activities, used by many institutions as a guide to leadership and social ability, with varying degrees of emphasis. "Students who are elected 'captain' are more valuable than students' elections. With student-body president or vice-president, a student can give one speech, wow 'em in the aisles, and it's all over. Peer elections seem to have the most validity."

Smith said he looks not for just one kind of ideal student, but "a whole series of ideal students, each of whom has some common ground in terms of his approach to his studies or his ability level."

The Greek ideal

Once they're here, a large percentage of Williams students participate in intramural and intermural athletics, harkening back to the ancient Greek ideal that every student should aim for a sound mind and a sound body.

Raymond Chang of the chemistry department felt that athletic development was "just as important" as mental development, in sharp contrast to Versenyi, who insisted that "we do not forget that the College is first and foremost an academic institution. The cultivation of the mind is its primary goal," he continued. "Everything else is secondary."

Religion professor Mark Taylor thinks the sound mind/sound body ideal still has importance, but is "distinguishable, if not separable, from a formal institutional commitment" to athletic development. Taylor feels that the "veneration of athletics" is more present here than at other institutions. While he says "that's not necessarily a bad thing," he argues that "Williams must constantly remind itself that there is a constant struggle between the desire to retain a prep school atmosphere and the desire to be a university."

Grade orientation

In an era of declining job opportunities and increasingly uncertain economic conditions, one would predict a greater emphasis on grades as a means of future security. Does the desire for grades differ from intellectual commitment? How important is intellectual commitment in determining the ideal student?

In contrast to the students who take easy courses which almost promise high grades, philosophy professor Rosemarie Tong lauds students who are "willing to take risks—venture into unfamiliar courses." Taylor echoed Tong: "Many students are afraid to take intellectual subjects seriously. The future crowds students too much."

How can that pressure be alleviated? "I don't know," Taylor responded. "That's a cultural phenomenon at this point in history."

Political participation

How able the ideal student is to confront campus and national politics was another point of contention. Versenyi said political participation is "OK, provided it does not interfere with anything important," i.e. anything academic. Meredith Hoppin of the Classics department feels that "a lot of students are not ready to get involved yet."

Taylor disagreed. "I think we all have political responsibilities," he contended. "I think it's a complicated question as to what constitutes political responsibility. I don't draw a sharp line between thought and action; I think thought is a form of action." Taylor said he is surprised by how unruffled or undismayed students are about the direction the country is in.

Everyone has a different view of the ideal student. How does the Williams student measure up against his academic counterparts? Can other schools look to Williams as an ideal?

Chang finds Williams students impressive, and "quite sophisticated because of their backgrounds and environment."

Hoppin expressed the general view: "Students here vary a lot. Some fit into the ideal student mold quite well."

Taylor went one step further. "There are many good students, but far too few. It's not that there couldn't be. It's that they're scared. They're natively intelligent, but afraid to venture."

Letters

Continued from Page 2

to the Record each semester so that the community can be aware of the committee's actions. The summaries are necessarily dry to protect the rights of the individuals involved.

The voting members of the Honor Committee include two students from each class—Lee Buttz (Chairman) and Liz Berry '82, Dan Flaherty and Martha Platt '83, Susan Martin and Paul Wolfe '84, and John Hull and Laura Volpe '85. Stephanie Adler '84 took the place of Paul Wolfe first semester, as Paul was not in school for that time.

The non-voting faculty members of the Honor Committee are Steve Flx, English, Joan Edwards, Biology, David Tharp, History and Harold Warren, Chemistry.

Students are elected to the Honor and Discipline Committee each Spring during College Council elections, and any interested student is allowed to run. The chairman is elected from within the committee.

Lee Buttz '82
Chairman

Anonymity?

To the editor:

Having read Paul Sabbah's article in The Williams Record, January 12, 1982, I want to float an idea as a possible communication stimulus and to express my reaction to the "Harassment at Williams" coverage in the College paper.

If "people really don't communicate here" is enough of a cause for concern, might the following idea provide incentive to open channels of thought to the public domain: What if the Record provided a prestige incentive to the five segments of the College (students, faculty, administration, "house" and trustees, and parents) to contribute anonymously-written "Letters to the College" to be printed in each issue of the paper?

With a little PR expertise, the notions of prestige and anonymity need not be regarded antithetically.

As a parent, and before our son's graduation, I would have liked to express my views on a number of issues anonymously, without feeling that anonymity was a copout. Reducing the "risk" factor in communication might ease the flow in these tight times.

On the subject of sexual harassment, I hope College emphasis will be placed on finding appropriate vehicles for communication through which 1) an exploration will yield an understanding of the behavioral roots for the temptation to "diminish" another person—(The Obsession, Kim Chernin, Chapter 13 "Boy and Girl") 2) men and women can come to terms with honest differences of opinion as to what constitutes harassment at one moment might amazingly be seen in the context of good humor in the very next moment 3) the young women on campus will focus their attention on how they can strengthen their resistance to vulnerability to harassment—a tough assignment, granted, but, in the long run doesn't it make more sense to fortify oneself than try to control the behavior of another? Continuing good wishes with your work . . . and play!

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Sincerely,
Sue Jordan
Scarsdale, New York

Faculty to decide fate of WSP

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

To pace the faculty's review of Winter Study plans this spring, the Winter Study Review Committee will propose a schedule for considering WSP proposals at tomorrow's faculty meeting.

The schedule itself and voting procedures for approving Winter Study Changes will first have to be approved by the faculty, who will then discuss the Review Committee's preliminary report and alternative proposals.

Two all-College open meetings to discuss the future of Winter Study are also scheduled, one tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Jesup and the other on March 10.

WSP abolition

Several alternative proposals call for the abolition of Winter Study and suggest various lengths and starting dates for the regular semester. The Review Committee's Proposal B for no WSP slates December exams and a mid-January start for second semester.

The proposed schedule calls for a faculty meeting on March 8 to discuss these different calendar options. The deadline for submitting alternative calendar proposals to the Review Committee would be March 10.

Under the proposed schedule, in its March 17 meeting the faculty would vote whether to substitute another calendar for Proposal B's calendar in the Review Committee's final report, scheduled for release on April 7.

The Review Committee's Proposal A, which would retain Winter Study, includes a plan to have a full week between the end of Winter Study and the start of the second semester, instead of the current three days.

Shorten spring break?

According to Professor Lawrence Graver, chairman of the Review Committee, the faculty would consider at its March 17 meeting where those three days might be taken from the present calendar. The Review Committee proposal would shorten spring vacation; another option would move Commencement into June.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 8:30-1:30. The Mole Hole. Phone 458-8157, 10-2, Monday-Friday.

Williams Beware! The Lone West Virginian is riding into Billsville to destroy midterm madness and cure a little loneliness!

Williams Women: like to BEE (or interested in learning how)? Find out about the new Women's Ultimate Frisbee Team by coming to the meeting Thurs. night at 7:00 p.m. in the Makepeace Room. If questions, call Karin 8-8060.

To RE
Who are you?

Chuck

"On March 8, my grandfather visited. I cast a rude glance at him, and he cast a spear at me . . . he won."

—Fandrick Dunn 1968

"Morals, cherished values of outdated sentiments . . . Who can deny that sinners are God's acne?"

—Mills Cook 1966

Whereas,
the Winter Study Review Committee has made extraordinary efforts to solicit the advice and concerns of both students and faculty.

Whereas,
the Winter Study Review Committee has made a recommendation, Proposal A, which significantly restructures Winter Study, while retaining many of the successful features of the present program.

Be it resolved
that the College Council hereby urges the Faculty to vote in favor of Proposal A at their meeting in April.

Passed 23-0 at the February 18 meeting of the College Council.

Two disqualified

Continued from Page 1

have become familiar with a lot of technicalities you wouldn't know otherwise," O'Leary insisted. Both O'Leary and Platt served on the Finance Committee before becoming treasurer.

Spears viewed his candidacy last year as an alternative in an otherwise one-man race. He asserted, "The greater responsibility is to the student body to provide them with a choice." Spears added, "I think you can do just as well without (Finance Committee experience)."

Powell responded, "I don't think you can 'legally' make an exception to the rule."

After the Council voted to exclude Brown and Stiker from the ballot, they charged the elections committee to propose amendments to the constitution before conflict arises for a third time.

Milton Friedman fees

In other business, the Council heard an appeal from Dave Moro '82, president of the Republican Club, for an allocation to help cover the fee of Milton Friedman, whom the Republican Club plans to invite to speak here.

Moro explained that the Republican Club gathered financial commitments from alumni on the conditions that College sources fund at least one-quarter of Friedman's $10,000 fee.

The Council approved the request on the condition that the Republican Club collect $1500 from other College sources.

The Council unanimously urged the faculty to vote in favor of the Proposal A revision of Winter Study.

Finally, the Council voted unanimously to adopt the new Finance Committee guidelines drafted under the leadership of Treasurer O'Leary.

Latin American policy tests East-West conflict

by Stuart Smith

The United States must "respond to a security threat that is in classic East-West terms" in its relations with Latin America, according to David Palmer, who spoke here last Monday.

Palmer, Chairman of the Latin American Program at the Foreign Service Institute in Washington, used El Salvador as an example, arguing that "a plausible case can be made for pursuing the current (U.S.) policy there."

El Salvador is polarized between the two extremes of left and right and the U.S. is trying to "keep the middle afloat," Palmer emphasized.

America drags feet
He included the U.S. response to Latin American economic problems as another major policy challenge.

Palmer accused the American private sector of dragging its feet in reply to Latin America's rapid economic growth. As the fastest growing part of the world, Latin America faces the problem of a "further distortion" of economic disparity, he claimed.

He listed important political trends in the region as a general shift "back to democracy and more responsive citizen-state relationships," and increasing Cuban activity in the area.

The Carter Administration worked hard to foster democratic tendencies in Latin America, Palmer said. While Carter's policy was originally based on a North-South axis and emphasized economic issues rather than security challenges, it was forced to change when Cuba "became more active in taking advantage of targets of opportunity in Central America," he noted.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
9:00 - 5:00 Mon.-Sat. 458-5717

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

McClelland's Stationery and Office Products

Hallmark Cards
Crane and Eaton Stationery
School Supplies
Art Supplies

McClelland's
36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

Make it Special

BURGER KING

WE DELIVER

EVERY NIGHT
7:00 — 11:00 p.m.
458 - 8686

1 FREE Apple Pie
with each order delivered!

(minimum delivery order of $10 — no service charge)

Minority applications up 50%

by Brett McDonnell

Director of Admissions Phil Smith studies one of the 4410 applications for the Class of 1986. Letters of acceptance will go out in April, after Smith and his staff have carefully reviewed every application. (Milloy)

Over 150 blacks applied to Williams this year, compared to 92 last year, according to Michael Reed, assistant director of admissions.

Total applications for the class of '86 are also up, numbering 4410, a jump of 200 over last year, but average for recent years, said Director of Admissions Phil Smith.

The West Coast supplied the greatest increase in applicants over last year. California applications in particular were up by 20 percent.

The ratio of male to female applicants remained about the same, at around 55-45 percent.

Williams admitted 158 of the 430 who applied Early Decision, compared to 144 out of 450 last year.

Smith explained how the College goes about getting minorities to apply to Williams. First, promising students must be identified. Next, the College tries to get them to apply to the school. In order to encourage applications, Williams recruits at academically advanced urban high schools like Banneker in Washington, D.C., and Renaissance in Detroit.

Next the College seeks to have black applicants visit the campus and tries to persuade those accepted to attend. Attendance is the toughest step, Smith claimed.

"I'm very pleased with the way things are going, but we're only halfway there," Smith remarked.

To try to influence the applicants, Williams sponsors a week-end every year for minority candidates in conjunction with the Black Student Union.

"This is an opportunity for them to look at Williams," Reed says. This year 110 were invited.

Housing battles over transfer quotas

by Susan Kandel

Quotas limiting house transfers to 125 per year dominated last Tuesday's heated Housing Committee meeting.

Submitted by Fitch-Currier President Jonathan Light '83 and four other members of the Housing Committee, the quota proposal calls for a minimum of 35 percent and a maximum of 45 percent of each house to be reserved for incoming sophomores. No more than 35 percent of a house may consist of seniors, and no more than 35 percent may be juniors.

No more than ten percent of a house may be composed of transfers from other houses.

Unbearable living

Since the proposal restricts the number of transfers each year to approximately 125, there will be cases where a student who wishes to transfer due to "unbearable living conditions" will not be permitted to do so, the report predicted. For these extreme cases, a petition may be submitted to the Dean in charge of student housing for consideration.

Preliminary discussion of the plan fostered confusion and controversy among the members of the Housing Committee.

Gail Harris '85, one of the authors of the quota proposal, defended its legitimacy, claiming "you just don't want too many new people in a house because it destroys house unity."

Berkshire Quad Representative Steve Willard '82 argued that the quota proposal itself might prove detrimental to the achievement of house unity, which is one of the major problems the Housing Committee is attempting to alleviate by tightening up the transfer process.

Paternalistic attitude

"The proposal may wind up making the numbers work, but those people who aren't lucky enough to get out will be more hostile to their houses and ruin any chance of house unity," Willard explained.

Added Bill Foraker '85, "People resent the paternalistic attitude of these tightening proposals. They don't want to be told what we think is best for them."

Co-chairman of the committee Kathleen Merrigan '82 emphasized the necessity of radically changing the present transfer policy, which she insists is the result of an "unhealthy housing system."

"We are here to plan for the future, not just to be responsible to the immediate needs of the students," she asserted.

The committee came to no decisions and will continue discussion tonight.

Does the Self know whether it exists? Panel doesn't know

by Peter Nicholas

"The self sees itself as the center of the person, and in many cases as the center of the universe," said Andrew Crider of the psychology department at last Wednesday's panel discussion, "Perspectives on the Self."

"But in fact the self knows very little about the constellation of abilities, motivations, ... that make up the entire being. The self can't know about the person: it distorts, defends, and denies all in a continuous effort not to know the person in whom it resides," he added.

Crider characterized the self as essentially aggrandizing and vain.

"Our selves like to take credit for desirable outcomes and blame others for the undesirable ones," he noted.

People who are depressed often see themselves in a more realistic light, according to Crider. "Perhaps this is why they are depressed," he suggested. "In order to survive in this world—to continue—maybe we have to aggrandize ourselves. Maybe life demands this in order for us to persevere."

"The safest thing for us to do is to deny the self and thereby abdicate responsibility," observed Nathaniel Lawrence of the philosophy department.

Lawrence drew a distinction between the active, passive, and transcendent selves, each capable of manifesting itself within a person at a given time. He described the passive self as "one whom things happen to; one who is oriented towards pleasure, achieving it through hearing what the active self has done."

While the world operates on the passive self, however, the active self operates on the world. The active self is one who is oriented towards a project, the success of which will bring pleasure. The active self "generates knowledge" and is "struck by ideas."

The transcendent is the enduring self, according to Lawrence. The transcendent strives for harmony, and achieves this by reaching a "relative height" that provides it with a "transcendent view," Lawrence posited that it is the goal of a liberal arts education to provide this perspective.

William Aspray of the mathematics department addressed the issue of whether an artificial intelligence—a machine—can possess a self.

"The behaviorists involved in artificial intelligence would argue that a machine has a self if it 'behaves' as though it does; that is, if it mimics the behavior of humans who claim that they have selves," remarked Aspray.

He discussed some objections to the behaviorists' theory. First, machines are not emotional; they don't have the consciousness to express their emotions. They can only do so by random chance. Nor can machines originate anything—they can only do what humans program them to do.

CUL rejects separate house for Francophiles

by Brooke Hand

Efforts to establish a house in which only French would be spoken stalled at last Tuesday's meeting of the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL).

Proponents of the proposed French house envision it as a co-op type of house, with about 20 beds and a kitchen, where students would speak French on a day-to-day basis.

According to Scott Cooper '84, Murray Hennessy '84, and Matt Shapiro '83, the creators of the proposal, members would be allowed to live in the house for only one year. The ability to speak fluent French would not be a prerequisite for residence in the house, they said.

Missing link

Cooper replied by emphasizing the distinction between a French house and a special interest house. A French house, he said, would link the academic and non-academic worlds. Hennessy and Shapiro claimed that people living in the house would be leaving their cliques behind. Membership would not be self-selective and large groups would not be allowed to apply to the house, they said.

"I'm very unhappy that a system which pretends to actively support diversity is uneasy over an authentic attempt to unify social and academic worlds," remarked Shapiro. "Diversity in the present housing system is lifeless; this is a small attempt to rejuvenate it. What kind of philosophy do we really have here?"

Hennessy, Cooper, and Shapiro plan to discuss the issue with President Chandler and the CEP.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.
Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS
Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.
85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

AUCTION

to benefit
WILLIAMS CREW
Sat. Feb. 27
8:00 p.m. in
Towne Field House

free admission

Items include: A Car (min. bid)
Furniture — chairs, lamps
Sporting Equipment, Household Goods
Gift Certificates, Services

TONITE

JUNIOR NIGHT AT THE LOG
Discounts for all card carrying members of the Class of '83.

THURSDAY
Williams Coffee House presents . . .

PURLY GATES 8:00 p.m.
swing and good time music
($1 at the door)

FRIDAY
Happy Hour 4 - 6 p.m.
Featuring Hot Spiced Wine and Happy Hour Prices

THE LOG

THE CLIP SHOP

Hair Salon of the 80's

Pittsfield
447-9576

Williamstown
458-9167

Bennington, Vt.
(802) 442-9823

Call for an appointment, or just walk in

President

Stuart Robinson

In the past, previous candidates have used this opportunity and space to espouse their views about the issues that they feel are important for the College Council to consider in the upcoming year. They then conclude with promises as to how they can rectify some of the trouble spots, which they had just mentioned. As a candidate for College Council President, I too have views and opinions about various "issues" dealing with Williams. Below I will offer my opinion about Winter Study and Housing. However, I believe the responsibility of the President is to mediate and assure that all views of the student body are treated equally and fairly. He is a fighter for the voices of the students on issues that affect them all. He may not agree with the majority, but he has dedicated himself to voicing the views of his peers. Thus he makes the student body the focus of his attention.

Throughout the year we have been informed that Winter Study is in jeopardy. Members of the faculty were losing interest and students were beginning to see the need for alterations in the present WSP format. The Winter Study Review Committee has worked diligently to offer a number of options for altering the present structure, which will hopefully satiate the dissatisfaction of both students and faculty. Of the options that have been made public, it seems that Proposal A is the best. Without a doubt, there are merits to the Winter Study program. It gives both the faculty member and the student an opportunity to pursue personal interests in a relaxed environment. However, the only way that Winter Study can be a successful program is for both faculty and students to make a concentrated effort to participate. Neither the student or the faculty member can be selfish. This allows us to interact and develop interests that normally go by during a semester.

As a Junior Advisor, one of the main questions among freshmen has been the talk about more stringent procedures for transferring. To make it more difficult to transfer from house to house will not necessarily guarantee house unity. For if a person does not like his or her situation, their contribution to the house will be minimal or nonexistent. House unity is not something that can be fostered through stringent rules.

In the small space that I have been allotted I touched on two of the "issues" of this election year. Other issues of equal interest are Apartheid, Sexual Harassment, Racism, and Athletics. However, in this space I can not sufficiently do justice to the subjects. I have offered a small sampling of my views. If I am elected, my task will not be to implement or work solely for my desires. My duty will be to serve the student body, to find out how the student body can be represented on issues that affect us. I have fully thought about my ability and time it will take to do a responsible job as President. I am not a showman; instead, I am an individual ready to dedicate myself to whatever has to be done to assure that the student body gets the respect it deserves in this community.

COLLEGE COUNCIL CANDIDATES

Dan Flaherty

The degree to which student opinion has been considered and has influenced decisions at Williams over the past three years has varied with both the year and the issue in question. Concerns were rightfully voiced in the '80-'81 academic year after a series of decisions were made by the Administration affecting life at Williams. This brought forth the question if indeed student input and opinion were being considered in the decision-making process of this institution.

The legitimacy of the process with which decisions were made must be scrutinized by the student body, who will be most profoundly affected by those decisions. The College Council must play a major role in assuring student representation in issues concerning the Williams community. The College Council is the organization on this campus with the potential for the broadest representational capacity of student opinion.

Having been on the Council for five semesters, I see this year's Council as having been relatively successful in mobilizing student opinion on issues such as the scheduling of final exam periods, responses to problems raised by the changes in dining on campus, and the future of Winter Study. I do, however, hope to increase the seriousness with which members of the Council view their positions as category or house representatives. I see a need for increased interaction and student representation in Trustee decisions. The Trustees are a highly empowered group which is further removed from our community. Another major issue I hope to face with the Council is the question of student participation in faculty living and tenure decisions.

I believe that it is necessary to be committed to an organization before one can be committed to an office in that organization. I hope my participation in the College Council during the past three years has shown this necessary commitment. I have become familiar with many of the political pitfalls and intricacies of the College Council and its activities. I believe this familiarity with the Council will be a great asset in my desire to be an effective leader of this representational organization of the students of Williams College.

Editor's note:

College Council elections will take place Thursday and Friday in Baxter Hall during lunch and dinner hours.

Primary contests for spots on the C.U.L., C.E.P., H. and D., Housing Category and At-Large Council representatives will also appear on the ballot.

The RECORD prints statements from Council presidential and vice-presidential candidates as a service to the student body. The candidates for treasurer and secretary are running unopposed.

Vice-President

Jay Ward

I hope this election will revolve around issues. Issues such as financial aid. What can students do to deal with the proposed $2.2 billion in reductions that will take place next fall? Issues such as the proposed housing transfer policy. Issues even as mundane as Div. III credit for statistics courses.

Ideally, issues have resolutions. Resolutions cannot be achieved without plans. During my term, I would establish a student-run Financial Aid committee whose purpose would be to work with the Administration to explore ways to assist the 31% of the student body who are on Financial Aid. The committee would investigate auxiliary means of student support, such as that practiced by Notre Dame, where the alumni association is planning to help students find summer jobs. I would also attempt to examine the nature of student opinion on the proposed housing transfer policy. Is this just a unilateral initiative by the Housing Committee? Or is there a genuine student sanction of this policy?

Further, I would encourage more student activity on the Winter Study proposal. The unanimous College Council resolution supporting Proposal A is, as we all know, not enough. Students must take the matter into their own hands and canvass the faculty and administration to insure the passage of the proposal.

Rather than take up the rest of this space with my own thoughts on how my past extra-curricular experiences will help me be an effective Vice-President, I shall simply list them and let you decide: 1) Freshman Council 2) Temporary Fresh Council Rep. to College Council 3) Co-Freshman Co-ordinator, WBSU 4) Minority Rep. to College Council 5) College Council Elections Committee 6) College Council Rep. to the C.E.P. 7) Finance Committee Review Group.

The relationship between the Vice-President and the student body is a bond of trust... and I trust that you will vote for the most qualified candidate on Thursday and Friday.

Steven Epstein

Williams is changing.

Since the Gifford Committee Report was released last spring, a multitude of changes has altered life on this campus. The headlines of this newspaper have informed us of the elimination of Row House dining, and, more recently, the potential restriction of the house transfer policy and potential abolition of Winter Study.

Officers elected to Council this year will have an obligation to maximize student input into how these changes will take place. As Council Vice President, there are many ways in which I could work hard to directly influence student participation in the decision-making process. The vice presidential duties, as defined by the Constitution, are to "Chair the Elections Committee," and "Assume the duties of the President, when the President is absent." But, for me, the job will entail much more than this.

My Constitutional role includes:

1. Overseeing student/faculty committee assignments.
2. Coordinating fair elections.

Committee Assignments. Committees comprised of faculty and students have had considerable input in the discussion of issues like the abolition of Row House dining and the fate of Winter Study. The Chairman of the Elections Committee must be sure that people placed on such committees are responsible and responsive to the needs of their peers.

I would strongly encourage participation on these committees from a wide cross-section of students so that all concerns will be heard. Especially on the Finance Committee, we must have students who both understand the financial constraints posed by the 1980s, but also strive to continue the diversity of programs funded by the Council budget.

Elections. Too often in the past, elections here have been characterized by low candidate participation and allegations of improprieties.

The first problem should be attacked through greater publicity to increase student awareness of the duties of Council officers and members. More students would run for Council if they knew what the job entailed.

The second problem should be alleviated by establishing and distributing a set of guidelines describing what types of "vote acquiring" techniques are acceptable, and prescribing set penalties for those that are not.

Communication. The other key aspects of my role, not outlined in the Constitution, deal in my most familiar skill, communication. I will, as a visible member of Council, be available to listen to all student concerns. The Vice President can and should work closely with the President in formulating policy. The only way to effectively do this is to hear the interests of the students.

As change occurs at Williams, the roles of those involved in policy changes must be altered also. It is necessary now, more than ever, for Council officers to be true to their constituency. As Vice President, I will be true to you.

The King of Entertainment

by Greg Pliska

Paul Whiteman. The name means little on campus today, yet 46 years ago Whiteman and his orchestra played to a sell-out crowd in Chapin Hall. Now the man once hailed as "The King of Jazz" is quietly memorialized in three rooms in Stetson Hall basement known as the Whiteman Collection.

Under the auspices of Curator Irwin Shalman of the music department and Associate Curator Carl Johnson, the collection houses almost 4,000 orchestrations, including scores and parts, and over 2,500 recordings from five major record companies. Periodicals, photographs, scrapbooks, varied memorabilia and a comprehensive compilation of newspaper clippings make the collection "a valuable music library... of popular music in America from 1890 to 1950," according to Johnson.

Johnson is quick to point out that Whiteman, whose career spanned the years from 1920 to 1950, in fact surpassed his epithet, "The King of Jazz"; more apt is the tag, "The King of Entertainment Music." "Whiteman and his band were the most versatile orchestra of their time," says Johnson. "They could play concert pieces, classical and popular music... they enjoyed broad audience appeal."

Dancing and depression
Born in 1890 to the man who created the United States' first high school concert orchestra, Whiteman was trained as a violinist starting at the age of six. By 1911 he had joined the San Francisco Symphony. There, in Associate Curator Carl Johnson of the Whiteman Collection reviews one of jazz great Paul Whiteman's albums.

1914, Whiteman heard ragtime musicians for the first time, writing of it later that "in spite of its uncouth quality, it was obviously trying to say something truly American." Four years later he had organized a dance orchestra for a roller skating rink on the "Barbary Coast"; two years after that the Whiteman Band was hired for the Palais Royal, New York's most fashionable dance and dinner club.

In 1924 Whiteman organized "An Experiment in Modern Music" at Aeolian Hall in New York. An ambitious undertaking, the concert featured a variety of jazz styles and arrangements, culminated by a new piece by a man named George Gershwin entitled "Rhapsody in Blue." According to Johnson, it was this concert that "made both Gershwin and Whiteman's reputations." Later that year Whiteman began a seven-month transcontinental tour.

With the advent of the Depression, much of Whiteman's wealth vanished. Plagued by despondency, Whiteman resorted to whiskey in what are described as the most difficult months of his life. Fortunately, he and his band were soon asked to perform in "King of Jazz" one of the first musicals filmed in sound and color. The $640,000 fee pulled Whiteman out of the hole, and he went on to earn money across the country throughout the Depression. He would remain solidly wealthy until his death.

Why Williams?

In 1935, President Tyler Dennett of Williams College received a letter from Whiteman suggesting the opening of a music museum on campus, primarily stocked from his copious collection of materials. Whiteman even offered to perform at Carnegie Hall to raise money for a new wing to the art museum. The Trustees responded favorably, and the Whiteman Collection was born.

What prompted Whiteman to choose Williams is unclear. "It was a fluke," says Johnson. "Whiteman didn't know what to do with all this stuff he had accumulated... His lawyer had visited Williamstown and was charmed by the change from the big city life he was used to." In addition, a member of Whiteman's public relations staff had worked from Dr. Dennett before he came to Williams. Whatever the reasons, in 1936 the first shipment, consisting of 581 phonograph records, arrived in Williamstown.

During the 30's, music underwent a change from the dance music of the "Jazz Age" to the livelier and more acrobatic dance music known as "swing." Whiteman never made this transition, but instead catered to an older, wealthier audience that was both unable to perform these wilder dances and unwilling to give up their style of music.

"Lady out of Jazz"

After World War II, the Whiteman Collection began to grow. In 1948 a shipment of 41 packing cases weighing six tons arrived in Williamstown, and the next year cataloging began under the direction of Prof. Roy Lamson, the first curator of the collection.

In 1950 Whiteman's career in music started to phase out. After a lukewarm reception from his first television audience, he gracefully retired, returning only sporadically for memorial concerts. On December 29, 1967, Paul Whiteman died at the age of 77.

Today, the Williams College Whiteman Collection functions as a resource center a music library, and a haven for all jazz enthusiasts. The collection is a memorial to an era and to the man who wrote in his memoirs: "I decided that the time had come to make a Lady out of Jazz."

Physics prof stargazes

by Susan Sohler

Pulsar? What is that? Unless you have taken an astronomy course, you might not know. Nevertheless, while wandering across campus, you may have noticed a Mercedes with a license plate that reads just that—"PULSAR". And who, you ask, is the man behind the wheel of a car with such an elusive message? None other than Jay Pasachoff.

Now an Associate Professor of Astronomy, Pasachoff has been at Williams for ten years. Prior to his arrival he studied at Harvard University and Cal Tech, but his interest in the stars stems from a much earlier time. At a recent reunion of his sixth grade class, his classmates said that even then his interests were obviously beyond the atmosphere of the earth.

Pasachoff believes, though, that all of us are born with an intrinsic fascination with the heavens. He simply allowed this interest to grow into a career, while everyone else "dropped out." Specifically, Pasachoff enjoys studying the sun and interstellar space using radio-telescopes and computers.

Expeditions eclipsed Much of Pasachoff's time is spent updating the textbooks he has written (Contemporary Astronomy and University Astronomy, both of which are used at Williams). Astronomy is such a dynamic field that continual revision is necessary, for new techniques, new heavenly bodies, and new theories are always emerging. Moreover, he has been involved in a number of expeditions and study trips.

In January of 1980, a group of his colleagues and he, supported by the National Science Foundation and the National Geographic Society, departed for India to prepare for the observation of an eclipse that was to occur a month later, a chore which included the careful set-up of two tons of equipment. He is still interpreting and cataloguing this data with the help of computers. The next eclipse will be best observed in Indonesia in June of 1983, and depending on the availability of government funding, Pasachoff plans to attend.

Pasachoff was fortunate enough to be able to travel recently to Mauna Kea on the Island of Hawaii. It is one of the best new observing sites, on account of its altitude, 13,600 feet, and the quality of the atmospheric conditions. This allowed him to participate in high-caliber solar and stellar observing and to be reunited with many of his colleagues in his field.

Squashes rivals

In spite of Pasachoff's intense involvement in astronomy itself, so evident in everything he does (for example, one will

Continued on Page 10

A la mode: "oo la la!"

by Margen Kelsey

French Fashion styles from 1850 to 1900 form a beautiful exhibit entitled "A la Mode" currently showing at the Clark Art Museum. Organized by graduate student Maura Feeney, the exhibit is one of a series of shows that reflect themes in the Clark collection. Here, Clark's preferences for nineteenth century French art as well as fashionably-dressed women are evident in twenty-five colorful drawings, prints, and paintings gathered from the collection. In addition, two antique dresses lent by the Albany Institute of History and Art and the Park McCullough House of North Bennington stand in the center of the room.

By focusing the exhibit on women's fashion, Feeney has unified a wide variety of works that would not normally be seen together. Even familiar works are made fascinating in a new context by providing insight into popular styles, as in Renoir's well-known painting, Madame Claude Monet Reading, 1872, where the Oriental influence on French fashion is made apparent by the rich patterned embroidered areas of her dress.

The change in fashions from 1850 to 1900 is emphasized by the chronological organization of the pieces. These trends are

Continued on Page 11

Noted actor Vincent Price will deliver a dramatic lecture entitled "The Villains Still Pursue Me" during his visit on March 1 and 2.

Prof sees stars

Continued from Page 9

of his office is lined from floor to ceiling with astronomy and physics books, while another is literally covered with issue after issue of the Astrophysical Journal, he has developed a number of other interests.

Photography is more than a hobby, for some of his pictures have been published. Pasachoff has developed a curiosity about painting and sculpture from exposure to the art of the other parts of the world he has visited. Squash too is an important part of Pasachoff's life, as he is a formidable member of the faculty team.

Pasachoff enjoys being a part

Astronomy Professor Jay Pasachoff takes a break from stargazing. (Berg)

Annual Ski Sale has started — 20% off

All Skis
All Poles
All Warm-ups & Bibs
All Turtlenecks
All Gloves & Mittens
All Hockey Equipment

All Boots
All Parkas
All Sweaters
All Woolrich parkas and vests
All figure skates
All ski bags, gaiters

Solomon 727
original price $135.00
NOW $94.50

Rossignol Skis — SM, FF, HPM, Strato
30% OFF

10% off Bindings
30-50% off selected clothing and equipment
Stop In While the Selection is Best!

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30
MASTER CARD VISA
Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

of the Williams community for many reasons. The personal interaction between the faculty and the students is particularly appealing, most apparently when Williams is compared to any large observatory, he says. Pasachoff enjoys the spirit, enthusiasm, and genuine interest evident among students here. He feels the Winter Study Program can be quite valuable and should be continued if the present "decline in the academic nature of the courses" is arrested.

Adequate facilities, bright students, and funds are important if he is to compete with his colleagues from other colleges in earning worthwhile, interesting research project grants. In turn, his teaching helps students learn in the classroom and his projects help his student assistants to be accepted into graduate programs in astronomy and computer science.

Concert Listings

prepared by
Toonerville Trolley Records
Wed., Feb. 24, Buddy Rich Big Band, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
Ronnie Spector, Paradise, Boston
Ellen McIlwaine, Jonathan Swift's, Boston
Hall & Oates, Coliseum, New Haven, Conn.
Thurs., Feb. 25, Rod Stewart, Civic Ctr., Hartford, Conn.
Mink DeVille, Paradise, Boston
Poussette-Dart Band, Jonathan Swift's, Boston
Roomful of Blues, Too Mattoon, Springfield, Mass.
J. Geils Band, Boston Garden (Sold out)
James Blood Ulmer, Savoy, New York, NY
Priscilla Herdman, Lively Lucy's, Skidmore, Saratoga Springs, NY
Feb. 25 & 26 New Moon Swing Band, Tin Shop, Saratoga Springs, NY
Feb. 25 thru 27 Bill Steele, Mother's Wine Emporium, RPI, Troy, NY
Fri., Feb. 26 Good Rats, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
Bobby Womack, Hotel Bradford, Boston
Sat., Feb. 27 Joan Armatrading, U. Mass., Amherst, Mass.
Arthur Blythe, McNeil Room, RPI, Troy, NY
Swallowtail, 8th Step Coffeehouse, Albany, NY
Sun., Feb. 28 Joan Baez, Symphony Hall, Boston
Rosalee Sorrells, Iron Horse, Northampton, Mass.
Arthur Tracy, Roy Smek, Sandman Sims, Shorty Craig, Valley Big Band, Academy of Music, Northampton, Mass.

The death of pinball

by Bruce Kelly

An era has ended at Williams, but the passing has been noted by few. Only among that obscure subculture which haunts the Baxter Hall game room has the removal of the last pinball machine, replaced with an electronic marvel named "Wizard of Wor", evoked reaction.

Pinball arrived at Williams in 1943. As noted in a contemporary account, that game, "Kick the Nip", consisted of "knocking over ten targets while the evil Emperor glared at the player." Well, we've learned a thing or two about ethnic stereotypes since then, but pinball has remained a bastion of sexism.

Through the 50's and 60's as the popularity of pinball expanded so did the prodigious proportions of the women who adorned the machines. In 1972 one of the first Williams women students protested the installment of the infamous "Big Ball" machine, and a 1980 Record article by Mike Rosenfelder accurately described the rampant sexism of the "Pinball Wizard" game.

The changing times were surely reflected in the introduction of the "Six Million Dollar Man" machine to Baxter which pictured no woman at all. But the dropping of sexist motifs did not sound the deathknell for pinball at Williams and throughout the United States; rather, it was the development of video games which sealed their fate. In today's sophisticated world zapping spacemen in games which require incredible reactions and quick finger work appeals much more than flipping a metal ball and pounding against the gameboard. Pinball can't compete with the computer graphics.

And so, the pinball machines are gone from Williams. As late as 1976 there were ten on campus, but now with the retirement of "Muhammad Ali" the old pinballers are left with their tales and legends. They are easily recognized, muttering about "tilts" and "flipper errors", while referring to the three ships in "Asteroids" as "three balls". They can be seen in Baxter Hall banging the sides of the video games, as though physical body English could influence the cold mechanistic circuits which create the gameboard.

The end of an era! Let this be a mourner's tribute from one who has been there from the glory days of "Blevo's Bow and Arrow" machine through to the final flurry of the gaudy and noisy "Muhammad Ali". It will never be the same again.

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday

Watch Record
for specials.

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Ephs swim away with meet

With the women wrapping up the first undefeated season in their history, the Williams College swim teams finished their regular season Saturday with uncontested victories over the Wesleyan swimmers. The women upped their record to 7-0 with the 99-31 win, and the men won 83-21 to make their final record 8-1.

The next order of business for both teams is the New England with the women competing next week at the University of Massachusetts (Boston) and the men the following week at the University of Rhode Island. Both the Williams men and women are defending champions and are among the best going in this year. Head Coach Carl Samuelson expects a tough challenge, especially in the men's which he predicted would be "a barn-burner."

Leading the women Saturday was freshman Jonna Kurucz whose 5:22.51 in the 500 free qualified her for the nationals. Other standouts included Catherine Hartley who registered 2:22.52 in the 200 individual medley and 2:19.35 in the 200 butterfly, and Clea Clepela who swam a 1:06.75 in the 100 backstroke.

The Williams men were paced by juniors Robert Bowman who stroked a 17:13.95 1650 free, and Jeff Mook who swam a 4:24.47 400 individual medley and classmate Jeff Milis registered a 22.28 50 free.

The freshmen medley relay team broke the old record of 3:48.1 which was set in 1975 by swimming a 3:45.67. The team of John Peloso, Rob Kirkpatrick, Peter Orphanos, and Chris Harned makes Coach Samuelson very optimistic about the future.

sport shorts

Winter Track fifth in NE

Led by a one-two finish in the 55 meter dash, the Williams winter track team garnered fifth place in the Division III New England championships held Saturday at M.I.T. Setting a New England Div. III record with his 6.48 in the 55 meter dash, Micah Taylor took first place and was followed by teammate Tomas Alejandro '83 who registered at 6.57 clocking. Alejandro had held the meet record since last year. Both runners will advance to the Div. I championships next weekend.

Also going to the all New England will be senior Charlie Von Arentschildt who placed third in the 400 meter with a 50.0 time.

The only other Ephmen who qualified for the Div. I New England were the mile relay team of Von Arentschildt, Ted Leon '84, Jeff Poggil '82, and Alejandro. The team took five seconds off their best time in running a 3:22 to cop second place.

Other impressive feats for Williams included a personal best throw for sophomore Bernie Krause in the shot put, a fourth place long jump of 21' 9" by Taylor, and a fifth place finish by the distance medley relay team.

The teams highest hopes lie with dash specialists Taylor and Alejandro, both of which have an outside shot at placing. Alejandro finished third in the NE's last year.

Wrestlers at NE's

With a third place and two sixth place winners, the wrestling team took eleventh place out of 17 teams in the Div. III New England held last weekend. Injuries to three top wrestlers handicapped the Ephmen.

The most distressing injury was that of sophomore Chris Woodworth who had been seeded first in the 177 lbs. class but hurt his ankle in practice the week of the tournament.

Jeff May '85 was the team's high finisher with his third place in the 158 lbs. division.

Captain John Donovan '83, who was second last year at 118 lbs., placed sixth this year after moving up to 126 lbs.

Sophomore Ken Taylor also placed sixth, wrestling at the 142 lbs. class.

The other injuries which hurt the team were to Lee Ordeman '84 and John Leahy '84. Ordeman was hurt at the tournament while wrestling Coast Guard. Leahy was hurt in practice during the week.

Squash crushes Amherst

Facing their arch-rival and defending their 12-1 home record, the men's squash team showed no mercy to Amherst Saturday, defeating the Lord Jeffs 8-1.

The win moves Williams' record up to 15-3. The Ephmen, ranked fourth in the country, have one more meet, against MIT and Wesleyan, before heading into the nationals.

The team is particularly enthused about the nationals this year because they are being held on the Williams campus. On March 5-7, the 1982 National Intercollegiate Squash Tournament will be held at Lasell Gymnasium. Approximately thirty teams from North American colleges and universities will be present.

Each school is represented by its top six players who are divided into three tournaments. There is a consolation round for first-round losers in each tournament. The overall winner is determined by scoring one point for each victory a school has (half point for consolation round victories).

In wrapping up their regular season, the Ephmen can win their eighth straight Little Three squash title by defeating Wesleyan Saturday on the Cardinals' home court.

French art—

Continued from Page 9

paralleled by a concurrent change in artistic style, so one sees not only the development of French fashion but the development of French art from the Realist tradition to the Symbolist movement at the end of the century.

The change during these fifty years was great and can be measured by a comparison between Alfred Stevens' The Blue Dress (1860's) and Dudley Hardy's Sarah Bernhart (1889).

The Blue Dress shows a pensive young woman sitting in her boudoir. Her blue velvet dress, supported by a hoop underneath, is so massive that it almost overwhelms her. Stevens' tightly-rendered brushstrokes have captured the rich hues of the dress and the play of light and shadow over the voluminous folds.

In contrast, Dudley Hardy's painting of Sarah Bernhart depicts the renowned actress in a more spontaneous style indicative of the later decade. The artist's loose brushstrokes emphasized the total woman rather than concentrate merely on her dress. Sitting sideways, the pose emphasizes the subject's feminine slenderness. Her body is not hidden by cloth but sensuously draped in a gray, filmy material.

By using art as a source to document fashion trends, one is reminded of the importance of fashion as a reflection of a woman's social class. It was important that women looked their best, and the result was two styles which overemphasized the female figure.

The first, developed in the

"A Girl of 1900"
by Albert Lynch

1850's, was the crinoline which was a stiff hoop placed under the skirt to give extra width. The pink silk ballgown of 1855 is an authentic example of a crinoline and closely resembles the gown in Eugene Fichet's A Girl in Pink, 1857. A later development, the bustle, replaced the crinoline in the 1870's. The brown and beige Day Dress of 1873 has an elaborate bustle which extends the fullness of the back of the skirt. By observing later works, one can see that by the 1890's, these structures were obsolete; women consequently wore close-fitting dresses instead, such as is shown in A Girl of 1900 by Albert Lynch.

Miller 2-on-2 B-Ball is back!

Feb. 27, 28
Lasell Gym
O. O. Coed teams
$ 300. Scholarship

February 27 - 28
Lasell Gymnasium
BASKETBALL
2-on-2

$300 in scholarship money spread amongst winners
Men's, Women's, and Co-ed divisions; minimum 15 teams each

No male varsity players may enter
No player may play on more than one team
No two women varsity players may play on the same team
Faculty members welcome

Rules: Single elimination tournament games will be played to 20 points in no more than 10 minutes. Games must be won by 2 points. Three fouls and a team is disqualified from tournament

Register by Noon Feb. 25 to the Miller box in the Baxter hall room.
Draw will be posted on Feb. 25 in Baxter

This liability waiver must be signed by Miller Brewing Company 2-on-2 participants. Any individual whose signature does not appear on this form will not be permitted to participate and, therefore, disqualifies that individual from competition.

In consideration of my participation in the Miller Brewing Company 2-on-2 Contest, the undersigned, independently and collectively, and on behalf of himself, his heirs, legatees, personal representatives, and all those claiming by or through him, consent to, and does hereby, discharge, release and hold harmless Miller Brewing Company, and its affiliates, its agents, servants, employees, assigns, successors and distributors from any and all claims, actions, losses, damages or expenses for personal or bodily injury (including death), and property loss or damage incurred by him or arising out of or in connection with his participation in the aforementioned 2-on-2 Contest to be held at Williams College.

The male gender as used herein shall include females. Any student, graduate, or undergraduate, that is currently enrolled in school, but has never lettered in collegiate basketball, is eligible to enter. Faculty members are eligible.

I have read the foregoing and am of legal age to consent to this waiver.

Name #1 _____ S.U. _____ Phone # _____

Signature #1 _____

Name #2 _____ S.U. _____ Phone # _____

Signature #2 _____

REGISTRATION FORM
AND WAIVER

Tricia Hellman '82 (above), captain of the Williams women's alpine team, shows fine form on her way to a fourth place finish in Friday's giant slalom. Chris Eagon '84 (left) wraps his way around another gate en route to a tenth place finish in Saturday's slalom.

Skiers show heavy mettle

Winter Carnival ski races at Brodie Mt. were a great success for the Williams men's and women's ski teams. Motivated by races at the home hill and by the return of previously injured alpine skier Crawford Lyons, Williams established itself for the first time as a legitimate threat to the traditional skiing powers: Vermont, Middlebury, and Dartmouth.

Several fine results were posted by Williams skiers. Among those, perhaps the most impressive was a fifth in the men's slalom by Crawford Lyons '84, who until two days before had not skied for over a month due to a torn ligament. Lyons, a former US ski team member, put on a knee brace for the Williams Carnival and placed better than anyone else on the team.

World Cup skiers

Tricia Hellman '82, competing against many of her old friends from the US World Cup team, posted a fourth and a fifth in the giant slalom and slalom. She was backed up by Kate Knopp '85 who placed 14th in the giant slalom.

Ellen Chandler '83 placed fourth in the women's cross country race for her best result of the year. She was backed by Brenda Maliman '82 in 12th, Sarah Bates '85 in 13th and Sue Marchant '82, 14th. Donald Hangen '82 posted his strongest result of the year with a sixth in the 15 kilometer cross country race.

Strong second

The men's alpine team again placed second in the slalom and giant slalom. Only former champions of the University of Vermont were able to outski Williams. The other eight teams were left far behind.

In addition to Lyons' fifth in the slalom, Williams skiers Martin Magoun '85 (another former US ski team member), Chris Eagon '84 and Steve Graham '82 finished up in sixth, 13th and 14th respectively.

The giant slalom was even more impressive with freshman John Pier in fourth, Graham in fifth and Magoun in 13th.

For the first time, the Williams team will send the maximum number of alpine skiers (five) to the Division I national championships held this year at Lake Placid, NY March 3rd-6th.

National ranking

Along with cross country skier Hangen, the Ephs, currently fourth in the East, are hoping to capture a national ranking among the top eight; and among the top five in alpine. Williams best placing in recent years was a tenth overall in 1979.

The women who were sixth in the US a couple of years ago, were fifth this weekend and hope to crack the top ten nationally.

Contenders for the championships will again be Vermont, Colorado and Utah, with the addition of Middlebury in the women's championship.

Men's hoops 2-0...

by John Clayton

They could do very little right last week against Amherst, but the basketball team could do little wrong against Tufts on Saturday.

Shooting problems had led to a two-game losing streak, but the Ephmen (11-8) bounced out of it with two wins last week—an exciting 71-60 victory over Tufts and a 67-50 win over R.P.I.

Topple #7

Tufts (15-6) came in the number one team in New England in Division III, but they played, to put it mildly, atrociously. The Jumbos played like elephants—big, but clumsy and inaccurate.

The Ephmen, meanwhile, were doing everything right. They ran their offense, they pressed, they stopped the Jumbos inside, they stopped the Jumbos outside, they rebounded, they ran the fast break. The only thing they didn't do was shoot foul shots (60%—better, but still bad).

Williams jumped out to an early lead and never looked back. By the middle of the first half they were up by ten and could afford to use a spread-out, slowed-down offense that ate up the clock and gave them easy baskets.

The second half was more of the same. A Williams press kept Tufts off guard, and although Cooper ended up with 23 points, the Jumbos offense never really got started.

Meanwhile, the Eph's delay-oriented offense kept working, yielding 24 points for Art Pidoriano, 15 for Al Lewis (nine for ten from the foul line), and 13 for Steve O'Day.

Williams missed some foul shots in the final minutes, and Tufts cut the lead to four at 64-60 with one minute left. But fouls caught up with the Jumbos, as three players fouled out and the Ephmen finally hit some free throws.

Shooting was the key to the R.P.I. victory; the Ephmen shot 58%, a big contrast from earlier games.

"Scooter (forward Scott Olesen 16 points) had a good offensive night, and all three guards played very well." Pidoriano had 15 points, Lewis had twelve, and Ed Schmidt had five points and five assists off the bench.

The Ephmen jumped out to an early lead,

Ace scorer Jeff Fasulo '82 outreaches Jumbo opponent in the Ephs victory.

peaking at 25-14, but R.P.I. came back, with O'Day and Olesen in early foul trouble, to make the halftime score 32-30.

In the second half Williams got back on track and steadily expanded their lead. By the five minute mark, there was little doubt as to the outcome.

The Ephmen have two more very tough games coming up: Clark tonight at home and Amherst away on Saturday. Clark and Amherst were tied for second (behind Tufts) in the latest New England poll.

The JV team beat Albany State Saturday to raise their record to 6-8.

... women win two too

by Ted Leon

In an exciting week for Williams basketball, the women's varsity squad edged Tufts 67-63 in overtime Saturday and defeated Trinity 54-50 on Wednesday. The two wins raised their record to ten wins and four losses and extended an unbeaten streak to six games.

In the Tufts game, Williams got out to a 20-9 early lead, but saw it quickly fade. The Jumbos, using an effective press and fastbreak, outscored the Ephwomen 24-6 over the next few minutes and led 35-26 at halftime.

Williams opened the second half with a press of its own and cut the Jumbos lead to one point. With three minutes remaining, the score was tied at 53-53.

Following a Tufts basket, Kay Lackey '85 (21 points, 11 rebounds) hit a baseline jumpshot with a minute-and-a-half remaining, to tie the game again. Tufts responded with another basket, giving themselves a 57-55 advantage with one minute and eleven seconds left in the contest.

The Jumbos lost their lead when they fouled Lackey, who sunk both ends of a one and one tie the game at 57-57. Cathy Evans '83 (11 points) then hit a jumpshot which gave the Ephwomen a two point edge. Tufts rallied once more and scored as the final seconds ticked off the clock, forcing an overtime.

Despite having lost Lackey and Tracy Burrows '85 (11 rebounds) on fouls during regulation play, the Ephs controlled the overtime period. Anne Dancewitz '82 put in two key baskets which sealed the victory.

Vicente Brandstein winds up for the men's volleyball squad in Saturday's contest against U. Bridgeport. Extending their unbeaten streak to six straight matches, the team defeated both Sacred Heart University and U. Bridgeport to solidify their hold on first place in Division IIB of the New England Collegiate Volleyball League. (Farley)

Financial Aid Special Section

Ronald Reagan's 1983 fiscal year budget proposal calls for a 40 percent slash in federal financial aid funds. Applicants for Guaranteed Student Loans will be tested for need. Wesleyan University recently dropped its aid-blind admissions policy in the face of financial aid uncertainties. Although Williams students turned in financial aid applications yesterday, they may face months of uncertainty as congressmen wrangle over financial aid programs.

The thirty percent of the student body on financial aid are not the only ones worried. Middle-income students who previously took out GSL's wonder if they are still eligible. If not, where can they turn for assistance?

Applicants for the Class of 1986 read about Wesleyan and question whether Williams will meet all their financial needs.

This week, the Record devotes a special section to financial aid. What are the proposed federal cuts? How will they affect Williams? And, more importantly, what are students and the College doing to alleviate the effects of these shortfalls?

The Record lists the latest federal plans and talks to campus officials about what can be done. President John Chandler tells how he helped start the Massachusetts Student Loan Authority. Russell Carpenter of the Development Office outlines what alumni are doing. Williams students relate their lobbying adventures in Washington, D.C. All this in the special supplement on page 5.

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 18

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

March 2, 1982

BSU closed party policy draws fire

Williams Black Student Union members reaffirmed on February 13 their policy to vote upon each function as it comes up to determine whether it will be open or closed, according to a statement issued Sunday.

"Each function of the WBSU is voted upon by the membership to determine whether guests will be allowed. This policy was reaffirmed as of February 13, 1982 by the WBSU membership," the statement read.

The vote came up following dissatisfaction expressed by several freshmen WBSU members when several of their white non-member friends were asked to leave a Mears House party.

Charging that the policy of not allowing non-members to Mears House functions is racist in practice, the freshmen, who wish to remain anonymous, claimed that black non-member guests frequently attend WBSU closed parties without being asked to leave.

WBSU coordinators stressed that the organization also sponsors all-College parties.

College policy, outlined in a formal statement by Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor, notes that "Any student organization is permitted to hold functions and meetings restricted to its own membership. Students who are not members of the BSU generally understand that they may attend functions at mears only as invited guests. On the other hand, social functions of any student organization which are open to guests may not exclude a non-member on the basis of race, color, sex, religion or national origin."

Students complain

Last week, according to O'Connor, several students came to see him to complain about the turning away of the three white non-members from the Mears House party. He in turn called in the eight coordinators of the WBSU, who he said denied that anyone was turned away from a party.

David Bowen admitted later that he had in fact asked three white non-members to leave the party. When asked whether other non-members were present whom he did not request to leave, Bowen replied that he did not recognize anyone else there as a non-member.

Continued on Page 4

Robinson wins C.C. race

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Stuart Robinson '83 defeated Dan Flaherty '83 by a 501-430 vote to become the next College Council President in elections held last Thursday and Friday.

Robinson's Vice President will be Jay Ward '84, who overcame Steve Epstein '83 603-352.

Patricia Chaplin '83 and John Smail '83 ran unopposed for Secretary and Treasurer, respectively.

In the only contested race for a housing category representative, Melissa George '84 edged Aaron Shapiro '83 to become the Dodd-Tyler representative. Berkshire Quad representative Geoff Mamiet '83, Greylock representative Kim McCarthy '83, Mission Park representative D. Robinson Snow '83 and Row House representative David Altshuler '84 all ran unopposed.

Paul Sabbah '83, Jan van Eck '85, Donna Wharton '83 and sophomores Julia Geniesse, Steve Johansen and Tom Paper were elected to At-Large College Council seats.

In most of the remaining races, no candidates earned a majority of the votes. Run-off elections, to be held March 4 and

Stuart Robinson '83 was elected College Council president last Thursday. (Farley)

5, will match the top vote-getters from each race.

Discipline run-offs

Run-offs for the Honor and Discipline Committee will be held for all three classes. Meredith McGill, Jim Brault, Matt Lynch and Mitchell Anderson will vie for the two Class of '83 spots on the Committee. Herve Jean-Baptiste, Cesar Alvarez and Robert McClean will run for the two Class of '84 seats. Sallm Currimjee, Kim Phillips and Laura Volpe will battle for the two Class of '85 positions.

Run-offs will also be held for one representative from each class for the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL.) Martha Platt and Jonathan Light will seek the '83 spot; Amy Elsbree and John McNicholas will run to be '84 representatives; and John Denaro and Lee Bernstein will compete for the '85 spot.

Five candidates will be offered in a run-off for three Class of '83 representatives to the new Honorary Degrees Committee: Elizabeth Cole, Lisa Eilers, Prasanna Parthasarathi, Willy Stern and Mitchell Anderson.

Kathy Galica '83 and Elizabeth Jex '83 will run for Division I representative to the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP.) Chinyere Okoronkwo '83 and Matt Shapiro '83 will compete to be the Division II representative.

In other races decided by last week's election, Falth Menken '83 was elected the Division III representative to the CEP; Herve Jean-Baptiste won the race for At-Large Representative to the CEP; and Geoff Mamiet ran unopposed for At-Large Representative to the CUL.

Demonstrators gathered outside the Office of Career Counseling on Thursday to denounce the U.S. Air Force's campus interviews and its discrimination against homosexuals in hiring practices. Although Air Force recruiters had cancelled their appearance, Jeff Menzer '82 delivered a short speech before the 50 protesters. He accused the College of promoting discrimination by allowing the Air Force to interview in College facilities, and he criticized increased defense spending and U.S. involvement in El Salvador as well. The day before the protest, President John Chandler reaffirmed the College's policy toward interviewing on campus at a faculty meeting. "The policies have been in place for many years," said Chandler, although he admitted that he found the Department of Defense's statement against homosexuals "offensive."

Not enough blacks

Faculty hiring blasted

by Susan Kandel

"Black students are coming out of institutions like Williams College with no appreciation of themselves, and a value orientation that forces them to reject themselves," alleged Dr. James Turner, chairman of the African Studies Department of Cornell University last Friday.

Dr. Turner addressed the problem of "Recruiting and Maintaining Black Faculty for Traditional White Colleges," asserting that the maintenance of black faculty and staff is critical to the quality of the educational experience of black college youth.

Turner cited the results of a tri-state study conducted by the Urban League, which revealed that despite a movement in the seventies towards increasing the number of black faculty, recently the trend has reversed.

"Ninety-five percent of all the professors in America are white, and only one percent of all full professors in the country are black," Turner claimed, adding that in 1977, three-quarters of those white male professors considered were granted tenure, compared to only half of their black counterparts.

"Despite affirmative action, minority education professionals have not made significant gains," he said.

Perceptible exodus

The relative absence of black faculty at institutions like Williams has become of particular relevance today, maintained Turner, because of the perceptible exodus of black students

Continued on Page 4

INSIDE THE RECORD

• House of Walsh
survives p. 4

• Who rings our bells? p. 9

• Swimmers capture
Title p. 12

• FINANCIAL AID
SPECIAL pp. 5-8

The Williams Record

Not Yet Begun to Fight

Wake up, students.

We're letting Winter Study's future slip into the often unfriendly hands of faculty, who may scrap the whole thing. The Winter Study Review Committee's Proposal A is not an executive fiat ready for rubber stamping. The proposal encountered a lot of opposition and little encouragement at last Wednesday's Faculty Meeting, indicating that a hard struggle is ahead to gain 60 percent support by April.

The proposal is not perfect, nor set in stone. Students ought to voice their opinions on the Honors grade or a 1½ week spring break. But they should also realize that the concessions made to faculty in the plan represent Winter Study's best chance for survival. The program will not endure in its present form. For this reason alone we should support the proposal vigorously and loudly.

We support it for another reason: it will result in a stronger Winter Study for all of us. Through more careful screening and evaluations, faculty will be more serious about their courses. The exciting Freshman seminars will help eliminate students' poor attitudes formed in fifth-choice courses. The flexibility of the present program will be maintained in upperclass years. Smaller modifications make the entire package a better educational opportunity for the community.

Students' relative silence on the proposal should probably be interpreted as a resounding endorsement on a campus where students never speak up except in protest. But the Faculty is likely to read silence as proof that we do not care about Winter Study.

We must convince our professors to adopt Proposal A. Students, talk to the professors you know well. College Council, keep the lobbying effort going. The battle is not about to be won.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

MANAGING EDITOR
Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK
Jon Tigar

NEWS
Sara Ferris
Katya Mokanson

FEATURES
Philip Busch

LAYOUT
Michael Govan

OP-ED
Paul Sabbah

SPORTS
Dan Keating

ENTERTAINMENT
Ronald Isen

PHOTOGRAPHY
Steve Farley

ADVERTISING MGRS
Katie Miller
Rich Mass

BUSINESS DIRECTOR
Priscilla Cohen

BUSINESS MGR.
Chris Toub

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letter

To the Editor:

OK, I know the Grammys were last week, but... I'd like to thank Steve Epstein. Throughout this campaign, Steve demonstrated a sense of fair play, decorum, and comprehensive knowledge of campus issues; qualities which I'm sorry that the entire student body did not get a chance to fully appreciate. A gentleman and a competitor, even in defeat, it was an honor to run against him.

I'd like to thank the Record for their impartiality throughout the election. The influence of this journal's endorsement on the College Council elections is immense, so, in view of the general excellence of all the candidates, I'm happy that the Record chose to remain neutral.

Finally, I'd like to thank the Student Body for their expression of confidence in my ability to execute the duties of the vice-president of College Council. I think I can speak for Stuart Robinson, John Small, Patricia Chaplin, and the rest of the students elected last week, when I say that we shall try our best to live up to your expectations and be deserving of your confidence.

J. Eric Ward

Ed's note: The Record Editorial Board decided not to endorse C.C. Presidential candidates this year because neither candidate presented a clear statement of the issues. The Record reserves the right to endorse qualified candidates for any student government office.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

"If there's a smile on my face,
It's only there trying to fool
the public..."

—William "Smokey" Robinson

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

Open Mears to everyone

by Claudia Rankine '85

Tracy Dick said at the sexual harassment panel that she came here expecting some things and demanding others. A small percentage of the student body expect and demand a traditional Black Student Union. Such a body would work toward preservation of the black culture and foster communication between the races. Within this small percentage there is an even smaller number of students who not only expect the WBSU to exist in its traditional sense, but also to act as a sanctuary. These people of late have demanded that it remain as such.

The term sanctuary, as they define it, means a place where they can be individuals among people as opposed to a black person among a white community. Though each of us would like to think he makes no distinctions among the people with whom he interacts, there are many blacks on campus who are repeatedly put on the defensive, made uncomfortable or subjected to ignorant, subconsciously racist remarks. For this reason many feel they need a sanctuary where they can avoid the pressures of the non-black world.

Simply by being black, all blacks become part of what is known as the Black Experience. Our heritage includes the slave trade of the 17th and 18th centuries, the race riots of the 60s and every overtly or covertly racist remark made or act performed here at Williams. A number of blacks feel they must have a place where they can interact solely with people who share that heritage, people with whom they need not explain themselves but merely be.

There was a time in the history of Williams when separation was advantageous to the blacks within a society which overtly sanctioned racism. However, at present any efforts by the BSU to foster communication between the races can only be profitable to one of the BSU's ultimate purposes, as stated in its constitution—to concern itself with the curriculum and general atmosphere of Williams College and to make it more conducive to black students and the black community.

During the discussion groups held during the commemoration of last year's cross burning, those people who were most vocal in condemning the lack of communication between the races on campus have been most adamant about remaining separate. Though I share the same culture with these people I do not share their personal experience and I am in no position to judge, condemn, or justify. However, I think it is in my realm to question what seems to be a blatant conflict between what they say should be done and what they are actually doing. At present most racism stems from ignorance, and the only way to overcome it is through active communication, in conjunction with lectures or movies sponsored by the BSU. At present it is easy to find lectures, classes, or movies dealing with black issues, while it is difficult for a non-black to actively participate in events formulated and discussed within Mears House. The only way to open communication is to give those few interested non-blacks (and I mean few) the chance to become involved in such events.

Though opening meetings and social events within Mears House would infringe upon the rights of those persons who believe they are in need of a sanctuary, this more personal interaction with non-blacks would hopefully begin to dissipate the need for racial shelters.

Finally, I don't believe it is within the authority of the BSU or its individual members to judge, on the basis of his race, the sincerity and the capability of any student who wishes to attend its functions, become aware of its causes and perhaps aid in the fight for those causes.

Whites and blacks need to talk

by Jol Stinson '85

On Saturday the 13th of February, the Williams Black Student Union voted to decide whether the social functions at Mears house should be open to the Williams campus, and if opened, to what degree. This subject has been a source of strife in the BSU in years past, but never before has the vocal contingent favoring the opening of Mears house been of sufficient strength that the leaders of the BSU felt a vote was needed to settle the disagreement.

Black students at Williams come from diverse backgrounds; some have gone to mostly white prep schools, others to schools with a sizeable percentage of minorities. Among this conglomeration are those who are used to functioning in a predominantly white environment apart from their school lives; their adjustment to Williams is comparable to that of any freshman. For others the Williams society is unsettling. The BSU is for them a haven, a sanctuary—a remnant of that to which they are accustomed and a place free from the pervasive "whiteness" of this campus. For a small percentage of this last category, the presence of a non-Afro-American in Mears House is at times disturbing. In deference to this group and to others of the black community who wish to keep Mears House closed for historical reasons or emotional ties, the general body of the BSU voted to adopt an understanding that Mears House is a place set apart for black congregation.

In the past, I have observed that Williams students either criticize or don't believe articles in the Record written about the BSU or the black community at Williams. I have been told that this is due to the BSU's failure to present a good image to the campus. This observation may be true and is worth examining. Not only BSU members but all of us may need a little introspection. Those who are concerned or upset about what they perceive as the policy of the BSU, or what they perceive as the reasons behind policy decisions, should also take the time for some honest self-evaluation.

I hope each of us will check to see if there's a beam in his own eyes before removing the sawdust he sees in the eyes of others. Those who are genuinely concerned about white-black relations on campus (who are not of Afro-American descent) and are dismayed, disgusted, or confused about the closed nature of the BSU do have a means of changing things. First, try to gain an appreciation of "blackness." Afro-American Studies is one of the departments at Williams. These classes, say some of their students, provide an atmosphere similar to that of a gathering of the BSU. They are an excellent opportunity for one to become familiar with black culture and black opinions of the past, through the readings, and of the present, through one's classmates. Most importantly, they are a means of communication.

The leaders of the BSU feel that the organization is attempting to communicate with the campus through films, events and lectures. The attendance by non-blacks has not been impressive. It is therefore difficult to convince the coordinators that there are concerned people on campus.

So I ask you, please, to show you care. Talk to blacks on campus on an intellectual level (the BSU is not necessarily the voice for all blacks on campus). Any form of communication, whether on a personal or a group level, will be a step towards helping to solve this problem. Although the present paths for communication in the form of courses, films and lectures may seem inadequate or unsatisfactory, I hope that once the apathy on campus has been slightly dispelled, the BSU will respond by initiating other forums for interaction.

"Those who are concerned about the policy of the BSU should take the time for some self-evaluation."

The BSU's purpose as delineated in its constitution is to serve the black community at Williams by providing an ethnocentric orientation and a group consciousness for its members. The BSU is also to concern itself with the general atmosphere of the College. Part of the BSU's responsibility is to the non-Afro-American population, particularly to those who have a desire to be actively involved in some way. But can one honestly say that the BSU has the impact on the campus and the black community that it once had?

While I encourage the campus to show it cares, I also encourage the leaders of the BSU, its members, and those in the administration to do some brainstorming with the intention of reaching the campus on a new level that will spark interest (not just curiosity) and provide encouragement for those who already care.

Racist events should be publicized

by Paul Sabbah

Saturday February 6th... A crowd of about 200 civil rights activists chanting "Fired up—We won't take it anymore," began a 160 mile march from Carrollton, Alabama to the state Capitol to protest convictions of two black women for vote fraud and to push for extension of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. Referring to the convictions of the two women, who were found guilty of forging the signatures of 39 elderly and often illiterate blacks onto absentee ballots, march leader Rev. Joseph Lowery emphasized that "what's happening in Pickens County (Alabama) is symptomatic of what's happening in the nation when we think of not extending the Voting Rights Act."

Tuesday February 16... 2000 people gather in front of the University of Cincinnati administrative building to protest the lenient sentencing of a campus fraternity which held what black students termed a racist party. Fraternity Sigma Alpha Epsilon (SAE) had earlier sponsored its second annual Martin Luther King Trash Party. In advertising the party, SAE published a list of items to be brought to the party, including a plmp, a Ku Klux Klan outfit, a copy of Ebony magazine, food stamps, and "your father, if you know who he is." University officials had sentenced SAE to a suspension while enlisting it to perform acts of community service.

"It must be questioned if it is in the best interest of the black community to support and attend the university," black student leader Chris Mack told the gathering.

Friday February 26th... About 250 blacks broke up a demonstration in Jacksonville, Florida, by Ku Klux Klan Imperial wizard Bill Wilkinson and a dozen followers, snatching off their hoods and chasing them into a courthouse. Chief Circuit Judge Cliff Shepard finally extends "protective custody" to Wilkinson and his followers.

In the isolated Berkshire hills, we often lose touch with the events that go on around us. If we don't see the T.V. news because we are at dinner, or if we forget to pick up a paper for a day, or a week, we tend to forget that there is much more going on than Joe Templeton's four minute ABC News show on WCFM would lead us to believe. For instance, we can look back on the month of February and see that it has been replete with incidents of racial tension the civil rights activism, not to mention the Atlanta murder trial.

I choose to argue that it is the responsibility of campus groups to (1), prevent rumors by informing the campus of sensitive issues that have campus-wide concern, and (2), educate the campus based upon their ideas. More specifically, I maintain that in order to educate whites so that racism can eventually die, one of the functions of the BSU should be to publicize events like those mentioned.

If sheltered students from upper class suburbia are naive enough to think that racism died in the 60's, they need to be shown otherwise. If activists give up hope because they feel that the civil rights movement is dying, they need to be shown otherwise.

"If sheltered students from upper-class suburbia are naive enough to think racism died in the 60's, they need to be shown otherwise."

For example, earlier in the month, Boston-area students organized a large anti-KKK demonstration in Cambridge. And these are just, to coin a rather inappropriate phrase, the highlights. You can be sure that there have been more. Yet when Williams students consider racial issues, they tend to overlook the vast amount of activity going on across the nation, and instead focus upon the myriad of rumors and incomplete information that accompanied the recent meetings of the WBSU. Can you blame people for falling into this "trap"? Yes, if you argue that it is the duty of all students to be aware of activity not just centered around this community, and the duty of students to realize, from very recent experience, not to form judgments based upon rumors. There is, however, an alternative argument.

In essence, the point to be made is that at sheltered, isolated, Williams College, we tend to lose touch with reality, and it is up to organizations like the BSU, or the Committee Against Militarism, or WASH, to shake us from our complacency, and tell us that everything isn't all right. We may have lost the fervor of the 60's, but I like to think that underneath grade pressures, career choices and beer, a social conscience sleeps, needing only to be awakened.

Certainly it's easy to criticize, and though it may appear to some that this is just another example of how the BSU gets bad press on these pages, we should realize that my criticism is constructive in its intent. Progressive change starts with awareness: help us to achieve that awareness and you will be serving the campus as well as yourselves.

A clearance sale at the House of Walsh prompted rumors that the store was going out of business. Two Williamstown entrepreneurs stepped in at the last minute to buy the shop and continue the Williamstown tradition.

House of Walsh survives

by Sara R. Gross

Two entrepreneurs revived the falling House of Walsh last week, refuting rumors of bankruptcy fostered by the store's recent half-price sale of all its merchandise.

Jlm Hunter and Norman Spaulding purchased Kerry Walsh's share of the store last Tuesday and will assume management this week.

Hunter attributed the store's business woes to its high prices and its adherence to "basic traditional high quality" clothing.

Hunter said he intends to expand the women's department and add a selection of moderately priced, high quality merchandise. "High quality does not necessarily mean high price," Hunter insisted, adding, however, that the House of Walsh will never become a discount emporium.

Answer to Brooks Brothers

Hunter expects the store to "change enough to attract business" while maintaining its conservatism. The House of Walsh is, according to Hunter, "a small town's answer to Brooks Brothers, a place to buy a really nice sports coat, or a good suit."

The House of Walsh has operated in Williamstown for 55 years. Hunter, who has lived here for 30 of those years, recalled that both students and townspeople patronized the store regularly in the past.

A "core" of townspeople has always supported the shop, explained Hunter, but "Williams students no longer buy all of their stuff here."

He added that the store receives orders from a substantial number of alumni across the country who purchase everything from purple cow shirts to items which could be found locally.

BSU draws fire

Continued from Page 1

One freshman agreed that at that particular party, no non-member blacks had been present, but said that non-member blacks frequently do attend WBSU parties in spite of non-member rules.

Another bone of contention for some freshmen was the way the vote reaffirming the policy of keeping Mears closed to non-members was enacted.

"We were supposed to vote the week after (post-Winter Study) vacation," alleged one freshman who wished to remain unnamed. "But they waited for Alumni Weekend (Feb. 13-14) and then underhandedly announced that nothing in the (WBSU) constitution said that alumni couldn't vote. But we voted not to allow alumni to vote."

He claimed that the voting was a hurried hand vote and that voters were affected by the fact that there were alumni present who wanted to retain the policy. Furthermore, he said, the fact that everyone could see how each person voted affected the vote.

The freshman called the non-member policy a "hypocrisy," saying that black non-members frequently attend closed parties, and "nothing is said because they are black, but the parties are still off-limits to whites."

"Because of moral convictions," he said, "I don't support a group that has what I call a racist policy. However, I do think the WBSU serves its purpose as a black political group."

College policy underscores the recognition of the need for an all-black organization at Williams. According to a written statement by Dean O'Connor, the faculty voted in 1968 to "endorse the efforts already being made by the Admissions Office to 'increase the number of academically qualified black students and students of other racial minorities.'"

In 1969 part of Mears House was set aside for a student center for blacks. "The College recognizes that there would be many reasons for black students to feel isolated at Williams," runs the statement.

"The rooms in Mears were set aside as a place for black students to meet and to carry on social, cultural and educational programs of special interest to them. In addition, black students were encouraged to organize and present for the whole College community programs, speakers, films, concerts which would expose everyone to the black cultural heritage."

The Provost thus pays $12,000 a year to the WBSU, over 97 percent of which goes to help sponsor campus-wide lectures, publications, and other events. No dues are required, according to O'Connor. The Provost also funds the Christian Fellowship, the Jewish Association, and the Newman Association.

O'Connor likened the WBSU closed-member functions to the Jewish Association's occasional closed-member brunches, but warned, "Once a function is opened to non-members, the guests can't be color-coded."

O'Connor also noted that, officially, anyone attending the College is allowed to enter a campus building. Mears, which falls into this category, should be open to all students under this rule.

The WBSU declined to comment Sunday, issuing only its single statement.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE, 118 Water St., 10 am - 2 pm, Monday-Friday. Phone 458-8157.

THEATER TRIP TO THE U.S.S.R. April 9 to 19th, Moscow and Leningrad. Five performances: opera, ballet, circus. Plus daily sightseeing and more. $999. Includes all. Karl Rodman, 12 Orchard Heights, New Paltz, NY 12561. Tel. (914) 255-1955.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, MOM! Only you could have had me! Every Monday morning from 7:30 A.M. - Fandrick Dunn pours forth knowledge on the Jay Ward Show WCFM-92. "He raced about, brandishing a sabre and taking swipes at everything near him. It absolutely ruined the Bar-Mitzvah." Eric Pomerance March, 1983

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information. 458-5441

McClelland's Stationery and Office Products

Hallmark Cards
Crane and Eaton Stationery
School Supplies
Art Supplies

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

March 2, 1982

The Williams Record

Federal college aid plummets

by Paul Van Bloem and Brett McDonnell

Massive cuts in federal student aid highlight the Reagan Administration's fiscal year 1983 budget recommendations.

Williams Director of Financial Aid Phil Wick explained, "Secretary of Education Terrell Bell has said that higher education was not a federal responsibility. We're seeing a 180-degree turnaround from the federal commitment to education of past years."

Wick outlined the projected cuts in federal programs, which constitute 13 percent of Williams' total aid to its 550 financial aid students:

• Pell Grants—This program, designed for low-income students, would be cut 40 percent under Reagan. He would reduce the current maximum award of $1800 a year to $1400 and lower the eligibility ceiling. About 250 Williams students received Pell Grants this year.

• SEOG and NDSL—The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant and the National Direct Student Loan programs would be completely dismantled under Reagan.

Wick pointed out that "Williams has continued to use the NDSL and SEOG programs to aid particularly hard-pressed students." This year, about 100 students collected $100,000 in SEOG grants.

NDSL loans carry a three percent interest rate and a ten-year payback period. Currently 80 students hold NDSL's.

Williams has a five to six percent default rate on NDSL's, according to Wick, as compared to a national rate of 18 percent. "We've really sharpened up our collection process," he noted.

• Work Study—Funds for campus jobs would drop by 30 percent, eliminating 250,000 student positions nationwide. Federal work study funds account for 40 percent of the $450,000 Williams spends on student employment.

Eighty-five to 90% of financial aid students hold campus jobs. "The College will use funds from its general budget to make up for federal work-study cuts," assured Wick.

"The College is really committed to a student employment program," Wick said. "Jobs have to be done. If students aren't hired we have to bring in higher-paid workers from the outside."

FINANCIAL AID INCOME

Aid-blind admission—will it last?

by Peter Nicholas

College admissions officers reaffirmed the Williams policy of aid-blind admissions despite Reagan administration cutbacks in federal student aid. Wesleyan University announced that it would abandon its aid-blind policy for the incoming class of 1986, opening the way for other New England schools to follow suit.

Aid-blind admissions, in which applicants are selected regardless of their financial standing, is the traditional Williams policy. College officials have made no promises beyond the 1982-83 year, leaving the Wesleyan approach as a distinct possibility for coming years.

Under Wesleyan's new policy, an initial list of applicants for the class of 1986 will be drawn up, with acceptances based solely on merit. If the financial needs of this group prove "intolerably" high—that is, requiring more than 10 percent of the university's Education and General Expenditures budget—students requiring financial aid at the bottom of the list will be rejected and replaced by students on the waiting list who can afford the full tuition.

Not over the barrel
Williams Director of Admissions Phil Wick cited the College's prudent management, the generosity of alumni and the comparatively low dependence on federal funds as reasons for continuing the aid blind admissions.

"Wesleyan was much more heavily committed to federal funds than we are, and Har-

"I hope that Williams students could see beyond themselves. What kind of image would Williams have for future students? It may no longer be perceived as a viable alternative for the large middle class."

Director of Financial Aid,
Phil Wick

vard has a much higher percentage of financial aid students than we do. We are not over the barrel with federal money," he explained.

Eight percent of Wesleyan's operating budget goes into scholarships now, and this figure is expected to rise to 15 percent if current admissions policy is maintained. Williams, on the other hand, puts only three percent of its operating budget into aid.

J. Hodge Markgraf, College Provost, assured that the general operations budget, projected at $24,909,000 for 1982-83, can absorb the additional $190,000 in federal aid Williams will lose.

"It will place another strain on our budget which will force us to delay or reduce our support of other programs that have competing claims on our

Guaranteed Student Loans imperiled

by Paul Van Bloem

No one in the Financial Aid office is pleased with the recently proposed Federal budget cuts in educational grant programs, but this dismay pales beside the concern felt for the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program.

This year, two-thirds of the Williams student body obtained loans under the GSL program. These loans amount to a staggering 20% of all the College's tuition income, according to Financial Aid Director Phil Wick.

More than half of the 1300 students who obtained GSL loans for this school year receive no Williams aid of any kind. While financial aid students are expected to obtain such loans, until recently it was possible for any student to borrow up to $2500.

New regulations require that families with incomes over $30,000 must pass a needs test to obtain a loan. Along with several other restrictions, this means that essentially only financial aid students will be eligible for these loans.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

For the 1982-83 school year, financial aid students are each expected to borrow $1750 before receiving any grant aid from the College. While Wick does not foresee serious problems developing immediately, he points out that the new forms will take longer to fill out, and longer to process, thus making the process a more difficult one.

Comptroller Robert Gewecke predicted that middle-income students who do not qualify for financial aid will still obtain GSL's, since Williams is a high-cost college.

On the horizon, he sees the new Massachusetts Loan Program as a possible route for those seeking loans who are not able to meet the requirements of the GSL program.

Even more restrictions are in the works to further limit the program. These include barring GSL loans to graduate students, increasing the interest rate to market levels two years after graduation, and

requiring 'demonstrated financial need'. It is these proposed restrictions that worry the Financial Aid office, said Phil Wick of Financial Aid.

It is generally recognized that the lack of an income limit has led the abuses of the program. "Reports of the abuses have been greatly exaggerated," claimed Wick, "but the system has encouraged those abuses that occur."

The loans made under the program carry no interest until after graduation, when the rate is 9% (7% for older loans).

Soc. Sec. aid frozen

Under legislation passed last year, students currently receiving Social Security checks because of the death or disablement of a parent are in for a surprise this summer. Instead of a check, they will receive a notice explaining that the Social Security Student Program is being phased out.

Specifically, student checks have been frozen at their August 1981 level. Students will receive no cost-of-living increases, will receive no checks for May through August and will have their monthly amounts reduced by 25 percent every summer until they graduate.

For example, someone who received $200 every month in 1981 received $2400 for the year. This year he will receive nothing for the months May-August, and will get $150 starting next September. This translates to $1200 for the 1982-83 school year.

Since students not enrolled full time by May 1982 will not receive checks at all, the entire program will be phased out by 1986.

Early enrollment

The rather complicated system of cuts produced several odd results. A number of high school seniors have enrolled in college a semester early in order to qualify for benefits during their normal college career.

Students who took last semester off, and so received no check last August, will lose their benefits: the Social Security Administration decided that anyone who did not receive a check last August is not entitled to one next year.

While the number of students at Williams receiving Social Security checks is not high (approximately 100, half of whom are on Financial Aid), the amount they stand to lose is sizeable: about $50,000 next year.

Installment tuition in '82

Tuition installment payments will help to ease the cash flow impact of tuition on parents next year, according to College Comptroller Robert Gewecke.

"We've become very concerned with family financial planning options," explained Financial Aid Director Phil Wick. "The Guaranteed Student Loan program offers the most flexibility. If that rug is pulled, where do families of non-financial aid students go?"

Tuition is now paid in two lump sums, one due August 15, the other January 15. "Some parents find it difficult to come up with that much money on those two days," Gewecke noted.

Under the new plan, parents would pay 10 equal monthly installments based on their share of tuition costs. The first installment would be due June 15.

Private companies have offered installment plans in past years, but with interest charges. Williams will charge no interest.

Gewecke explained, "We decided it was a good time to set it up ourselves." About 70 parents used the private installment plans this year.

A pamphlet explaining the installment program will be sent to all parents in the spring.

Financial Aid Section contributors:

Steve Farley

Sara Ferris

Brooke Hand

Brett McDonnell

Peter Nicholas

Mike Sutton

Paul J. Van Bloem

College up for $5 million loan

The newly created Massachusetts College Student Loan Authority will lend Williams as much as five million dollars for student loans, according to President John Chandler.

The Authority will issue tax exempt bonds whose revenues will be used for loans by Massachusetts colleges and universities. Participating colleges will put up collateral, usually buildings or bank credit from endowments, to secure the bonds.

Chandler, as president of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities (AICUM), played a large role in the passage of the bill.

"The leaders in the legislature were very cooperative, and so was the governor, because it doesn't cost the taxpayers anything at all," Chandler remarked. "The expenses of the Authority are paid for by the bond revenues... There's a certain amount of overhead that's taken out of the revenue they raise."

Williams has not yet determined how much it will borrow from the Authority, although Chandler predicted, "It could be as much as five million dollars in time."

"It's a question of deciding how much we would want to go into the market for whether we would try to raise enough money for next year's loan needs or whether we would want to make a bigger issue and get money to suffice for needs for a number of years," Chandler noted.

College Treasurer William

Reed said the College is waiting for instructions from the Authority. "We can't do anything until the commission sets guidelines," he explained.

Both Chandler and Reed affirmed that Authority money would go into the new Parent Loan Program (PLP), which lends up to $7500 per year at 12 percent interest with a two year repayment period for each year of borrowing.

"The advantage in using money from the Authority would be that there is a financial sacrifice in using endowment money. If we could get, let's say, 15 or 16 percent on investing the endowment in various markets, and we're loaning the money to parents at 12 percent, we're sacrificing 3 or 4 points," Chandler argued.

In this first year of the PLP, 160 parents borrowed about $400,000, according to Comptroller Robert Gewecke, who expects even more next year.

"We may have to institute an income cut-off next year at the $100,000 (parental income) level," Gewecke forecast.

Reed predicted however, that if Loan Authority money was put into the PLP, "perhaps it would mean lower interest rates and no income ceiling."

The College met with few problems during the first year of the PLP, said Gewecke. The Knight Insurance Agency of Boston computes interest and bills parents in the program for a "very, very small fee, about $12 per loan," commented Gewecke.

"Every month they send me a list of delinquent payments," he continued. "Only one or two people have gotten into the three months late group."

The College would not act until a payment is four months overdue. "We already have an office set up for loan collections," Gewecke noted.

Another potential problem may occur when tuition receipts fall short by the amount of parent loans, $400,000 this year. "Up to now that is not a cash flow problem," assured Gewecke.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O. Dr. Thomas R. Maselli OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

open 11-4-8580 or visit the recruiting office
on campus.

NATION-BUILDERS NEEDED:
All over the world, developing countries need people who can work independently and unselfishly — Peace Corps volunteers. Whether it's teaching, health care, agriculture, planning, marketing or engineering, we've got the challenge. You'll learn a language, learn a people and learn about yourself. Peace Corps — it's more important now than ever.

NATIONAL FIRM: Seeks recent

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film/info - March 8, 4:00 p.m.,
Interviews - March 9, 9-5:00,
Office of Career Counseling.

TOWN & COUNTRY FLOWERS

EPH'S ALLEY
on Spring St. Williamstown
behind First Agricultural Bank

458-5030

CARNATIONS 1/2 PRICE

50¢ each rather than $1.00

or

$4.95 a dozen

Williams financial aid in the '80's: an uncertain future

College President John Chandler outlined his view of the Federal budget cuts and forecast Williams' financial aid future in an interview last week with RECORD editors Sora Ferris and Steve Farley.

Q: How do you see Williams coming out in the Federal budget cuts?

A: We're assuming that for next year there'll be about a 35 percent cut in various Federal programs... Williams, by virtue of not having been as successful as most other colleges in getting Federal money in the first place, is not going to suffer as much. There's a kind of interesting irony in all that. A few years ago, we were very disappointed we weren't doing better, but now it means we're not hurt as badly.

Q: Do you see other financial aid programs such as the Massachusetts Loan Authority that could be set up? There seems to be a trend away from the Federal government to more college-based programs.

A: I have an idea that in the country at large, banks, insurance companies, and other sources of private capital may well become interested in colleges. As a matter of fact, some banks and insurance companies have already expressed interest in lending money to colleges for loan funds. But there's a worry in that because, after all, having to pay off loans can be an overwhelming burden to students and their families.

In the state of Massachusetts, the strategy will be to try to increase the direct scholarship grants from the state. Massachusetts has a very poor record in that respect. Let me give you a practical illustration. Williams gets something like $70,000 a year from the state of Massachusetts in various scholarship funds. If the College were located a few miles west in the state of New York, we'd be getting between a million and a million and a half dollars, because the state of New York has a much more generous program of scholarships.

Q: Do you expect Williams to be able to maintain an aid blind admissions policy?

A. Well, for the immediate future, we will be able to, but I certainly wouldn't want to make any assurance that in the long term we can. I don't think there's any college in the country that can be absolutely sure of that.

"A few years ago, we were disappointed we weren't doing better..."

There are more and more colleges and universities that are using scholarship funds to attract academically highly qualified students regardless of their need. I hope very much that Williams and its chief competitors will never get into that. If that should happen, that would complicate the financial aid picture, and I think also increase the prospect that high quality colleges would be attracting a much higher proportion of wealthy students than is the case now. That would be a regressive move in the country at large. That's what's disturbing about all these developments—they could add up to a retreat from a national commitment to the education of poor people, of minorities, and of other groups who, up until World War II, were generally neglected. Public policy didn't support their aspirations for a college education.

I think the wonderful thing about American higher education is that it is the most accessible, the most open system in the world. A higher proportion of the population here is educated at the university level than in any other country in the world, and I think any retreat from that goal would represent a moral defeat.

"... but now we're not hurt as badly."

Q: Could you estimate the number of years before we may have to go off aid-blind admissions?

A: Well, I think I can see our way clear for two or three more years. I really can't see it beyond that, because there are too many imponderables. There are some ponderables too, such as the drop in the college-going population and what's going to happen in the competition for those students. There are some predictions that there may be a fairly massive exodus from the private to the public sector. I don't think that's really going to take place, although there may be a lot of shifting over from the lower quality private institutions to public institutions. If the college-going public becomes much more cost conscious than it is now, and we have to become much more restrained in the level of tuition and fees, then that may have something to say about how long we can continue with an aid-blind policy. There are simply too many unknowns for anybody to make a prediction for certain.

Q: Have you decided on a figure for the raise in tuition for next year?

A: No. We're still debating. I'm pretty sure it's not going to be in percentage terms as high as some of those that have come out in the 15% range. I hope we'll know in a few days.

Class of '57 boosts scholarships

Scholarship endowment will benefit from the entire gift of this year's 25th reunion class as a result of the Development Office's increasing emphasis on scholarship fundraising, according to Russell Carpenter, Associate Director of Development.

The class of 1957 will fund "multiple" two-year scholarships for students entering their junior year. The grants will cover all Williams direct aid plus half of the loan obligation.

A committee of eight '57 alumni will select recipients of '57 Scholars gifts on the basis of "accumulated B average, but also demonstrated contribution to the larger Williams community," according to a class fact sheet.

"Needless to say, the timing for this particular class gift could not be more appropriate," commented Director of Financial Aid Phil Wick.

"They're doing this with our encouragement," noted President John Chandler, "and I hope other classes will come along and do the same thing with their class gifts. We are putting more and more emphasis on raising funds for scholarship endowment."

"We spend it"

Carpenter outlined how Williams raises funds for direct aid grants to students. Restricted gifts come from alumni who designate them for financial aid purposes. "The year we get it, we spend it," said Carpenter.

Restricted endowment funds are invested by the College, with the interest going for financial aid grants.

Restricted alumni gifts amounted to $76,000 this year, said Carpenter, while aid endowments came to $1.3 million. These funds are augmented with unrestricted gifts and endowment income from the general operating budget to attain the current Williams grant outlay of $1,351,000.

Alumni come through

Although Williams receives some grants from foundations, Carpenter is not optimistic about the prospects of private funds increasing to meet federal cutbacks but expects the alumni to come through.

"Financial aid is a favorite purpose for the alumni to give to. They feel very keenly the importance of trying to provide the kind of education they had to current students," he explained.

"It's very hard to predict what will develop from the federal cuts," he concluded. "Williams provides, and fortunately we've been able to so far. I have no question that we will this time."

THE CLIP SHOP

At the Clip Shop we're excited about the coming trends for spring!

Hair will be making a splash starting right now and continuing until fall.

Those who want to be a little bit dramatic, a little bit different will find what they're looking for at the Clip Shop.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
458-5717

LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS

Why not take the opportunity to study in London?

A wide range of subjects and courses is available in Central London for students of the social sciences.

Junior year Postgraduate Diplomas
One-year Master's degrees Research

Subjects include Accounting and Finance, Actuarial Science, Anthropology, Business Studies, Economics, Economic History, Geography, Government, Industrial Relations, International History, International Relations, Law, Management Science, Operational Research, Philosophy, Politics, Population Studies, Social Administration, Social Work, Sociology, Social Psychology and Statistical and Mathematical Sciences.

Application blanks from:
Admissions Directorate, L.S.E., Houghton Street
London WC2A 2AE, England
Please state whether junior year or postgraduate.

SUMMER IN EUROPE

It's not too early to start planning for your summer vacation.

Stop in or call us for information concerning:

- CHEAPEST EUROPEAN AIRFARES
- EURAIL/BRITRAIL PASSES
- AUTO RENTALS
- PASSPORT PHOTOS AND APPLICATIONS
- ACCOMMODATIONS

THE TRAVEL STORE
105 Spring Street
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

Thousands march on Capitol

by Peter Nicholas

"Reagan says cut back, we say fight back! 'Stop the blade, fight for aid! Legislate to educate!'"

The parallel to the wave of student activism and political consciousness that marked the 1960's is irresistible: hundreds of students chanting in unison on the steps of the Capitol, demonstrators circling the White House while police paddy wagons and patrolmen stand by. The issues at stake, however, have changed.

Five thousand students from around the country, including a Wesleyan contingent of 750, descended on Washington yesterday to urge influential legislators to oppose Reagan's proposed financial aid cuts. College Council President Freddy Nathan '83, Mark White '84 and Record reporter Peter Nicholas '84 represented Williams.

Sponsored by COPUS, the nation-wide Coalition of Independent Colleges and University Students, the event allowed students to protest the massive cuts and to target the congressmen who are believed to support the Reagan program.

Dallas Martin, Director of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, warned students that some members of Congress "are against the notion that there should be equal educational opportunity for all... who actually believe that the quality of education at these schools would be better if financial aid were not provided to needy students."

Martin added that these legislators may be pressured into reversing their positions if they believe students are prepared to vote against them. "There are many congressmen who won their seats in the '80 election by a smaller margin than the number of students who didn't vote," he asserted.

Massachusetts Senators Edward Kennedy and Paul Tsongas joined Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill and Congressman Silvio Conte in opposing the cutbacks. O'Neill cautioned, however, that "the President has the horses in Congress right now to sustain a veto, even if we do oppose him on these cuts."

A Kennedy aide urged out-of-state students at Massachusetts schools to pressure their home district representatives.

Tsongas noted that the Administration "does not view education as a right, but a privilege... but if Reagan thinks education is expensive, try ignorance!"

25 year policy reversed

by Peter Nicholas

The Reagan administration initiative to drastically reduce government aid to college and graduate students undermines a federal commitment to higher education that has endured for the past quarter-century. The magnitude of these cuts signals the President's intentions quite clearly: $2.2 billion in federal funds will be lost to colleges next year.

Economic elite

Federal money is a vital component of the financial aid package colleges offer to needy students, and the vacuum created by the proposed budget cuts is not so easily filled. Wesleyan's recent reversal of its "aid blind" admissions policy is illustrative of the predicament most independent colleges and universities will now face: heavily dependent on federal funds and with a comparatively large portion of its student body on financial aid. Wesleyan will now have to consider an applicant's ability to pay the $10,000+ tuition fee as a criterion for admission.

The implications of this are starkly clear: Qualified low- and middle-income candidates needing financial assistance may well be rejected in favor of otherwise unqualified upper class students who can afford to pay. Access to a Wesleyan education will no longer be equally available to all.

Wesleyan's quandary is by no means the exception. Other private colleges and universities, similarly squeezed by the federal cuts, are currently reviewing their admissions standards, and additional reversals of "aid blind" policies can be expected.

At Williams, the state of affairs is less odious. The consensus among various administrators of the college is that the school is in good enough financial shape to remain "aid blind" at least for next year, and no review of this policy has as yet been planned.

"Prudent management," cited by the administrators, may be one reason for the school's good fortunes.

For the majority of the students here who are not receive-

Viewpoint

ing any financial aid, these issues may appear to have little pertinency. But we all have a stake in ensuring that students from low- and middle-income families have an equal opportunity to attend independent colleges.

The alternative is a private school system that serves as an aristocracy of wealth and privilege rather than merit.

"Social safety net"

Reagan's budget for 1983 proposes additional cuts which will be reviewed by Congress in the next few months. Congressman Silvio Conte has told Assistant to President Chandler Judith Allen that as the ranking member on the Appropriations Committee, people are pressing him to oppose the cuts but are not applying the same pressure to his colleagues. Writing your congressman to express concern with the magnitude of the financial aid cuts is a vital first step in ensuring that the government retains its traditional commitment to higher education. Reagan must not be permitted to exclude from his acclaimed "social safety net" the "truly needy" pursuing an independent school education that, by "aid blind" admissions standards, they have earned. We all have a stake in this.

COLLEGE GRADS

- Agriculture -Business
- Engineering
- Fisheries/Forestry
- Home Economics
- Mathematics
- Natural Resources
- Nursing/Health
- Science -Vocational Ed.

Your degree/experience could qualify you for Peace Corps positions in Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Caribbean, So. Pacific. Learn a new language. Experience a new culture. Must be US citizen, single/married, no dependents. NO UPPER AGE LIMIT. Generous living allowance, paid travel, health benefits. Contact reps for info/film, 4:00 pm, March 8, for interviews, 9-5:00 March 9 at Office of Career Counseling.

INTRODUCING THE T-SHIRT YOU DRINK WITH A STRAW.

Now for the first time, LeShake® brand yogurt is right here on campus. LeShake is the delicious, real yogurt you drink with a straw. It's all natural, with real fruit. There are no preservatives. And it's available at your campus snack bar in our most popular flavors.

What's more, not only can you "Take a LeShake break,"™ you can wear one. Because the LeShake T-Shirt Sweepstakes is on. Just fill in the entry blank below, put it in the sweepstakes box at your snack bar no later than March 16, 1982, and you just might win one of 15 "Take a LeShake break"™ T-shirts. The drawing will be held on March 17, 1982, and winners will be notified. (No purchase is required. Void where prohibited or restricted by law.) LeShake. It's a nutritious snack, a great-tasting meal, and one heck of a T-shirt.

"Take a LeShake break"™ T-Shirt Sweepstakes

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____ Zip _____

Telephone _____

Now you can find LeShake yogurt, and enter the LeShake T-Shirt Sweepstakes, at Williams College Snack Bar. See rules on the entry box for details.

© Kellogg Company © 1982 Kellogg Company

In Other Ivory Towers

A Lafayette woman student is protesting the readmission on a limited basis of a man convicted of harassing her.

In the fall of 1979 at least four women "received envelopes containing bags of a substance thought to be semen," said The Lafayette. They were also sent letters that were "obscene, but in a loving way," said Leah Figur '82, the complainant. Figur and others began to get harassing late-night phone calls last spring.

Figur succeeded in tracing the calls this fall with the help of the Easton, Pa., Police. A man was arrested and convicted of two counts of harassment by communication. He was fined $500, but was not subject to Lafayette disciplinary action.

Figur complained to Dean of Students Herman C. Kassiah of the man's continued presence on campus. Kassiah investigated the case and suspended the man until psychiatrists recommended his return.

This semester, however, Kassiah told Figur that the man would be allowed on campus between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. two days a week to attend classes. He is living at home. Pressure on President David Ellis by the man's parents had much to do with the decision to "balance punishment with development" by readmitting him, Figur said, based on her conversation with Ellis.

Lafayette officials would not comment on specific details of the case and the man's reinstatement is not apparently being reconsidered.

Figur feels that the harasser's presence is "continual harassment," said The Lafayette. "I'm scared of going to my mailbox for fear I'll bump into him. It's not right for me to have to live this way."

Bowdoin College

Bowdoin students' abuse of their telephone system to the tune of $36,000 has led to a New England Telephone investigation and action by the administration, according to the Bowdoin Orient.

A combination of an antiquated phone system, additional outside lines and student ingenuity forced New England Telephone to bill Bowdoin for students' untraceable long distance calls. The college paid such early bills as one of $6.08 in January of 1981, but has returned recent monthly bills of about $9,000 unpaid.

NET is considering expensive new equipment to combat the problem, but is concentrating on catching students responsible. "We want the Bowdoin administration to inform its students that we are rightful (sic) by the state of Maine to take whatever measures are required," said company spokesman John MacKathron. "This may necessarily mean heavy fines or imprisonment." NET requested all students' home phone numbers from Bowdoin, but the college refused.

"When a local business requests that we force a student to fulfill a debt with them," said Dean of Students Wilhelm, "we must reply that the responsibility rests solely with the student." Wilhelm sent a notice to students advising them "to reconsider their irresponsible behavior."

All Over

Early signs of spring appeared on many campuses—announcements of hefty increases in tuition for next year. The cost of a year at Bates will go up about 17% to $10,500. Lafayette's fees rose 17% as well, to $9,580. Middlebury was also consistent, raising its costs 16% to $10,500. The price of a year at Haverford spiraled 12%, to $10,590.

What's in the belfry?

Several times each day the Williams routine of friendly chatter, studying and dining is interrupted by the tolling of the bells in Thompson Memorial Chapel. As the tunes sing out through the Purple Valley it is rare that an individual considers their origin. Many students and visitors to Williams are surprised to learn that the College actually hires employees whose jobs are to ring the bells. Surely, they ask, in this sophisticated day are not such tasks best performed by computerized, electronic marvels? While their question may have relevance to our cities, here in a village without a single traffic light what could be more natural than hand-rung bells? Indeed.

But, who is it that rings the bells? What person does the college deem qualified for this role? Pondering this question, my fertile imagination conjured up an image of the Hunchback of Notre Dame. Aha, a clue!

Alas, my careful observation of the salad bar in Baxter Hall over several dinners revealed no such grotesque figure. This surveillance was not without its risks. Some women interpreted it as overaggressive bird-dogging. Even worse, my questioning of an individual whose physiognomy, although no match for Hugo's monster, was rather strange-looking, netted me no information, but rather nearly a fat lip as the young man seemed to resent the line of my questioning.

Consulting official circles I got nowhere, with President Chandler saying, "Do not ask by whom the bell is tolled." Faced with this administrative stone-walling, I embarked on a dangerous course. One night as the bells pounded out "Stairway to Heaven," I crept up to the back of Thompson Chapel. Prying open the rear entrance I advanced cautiously through the bowels of the building. Becoming confused in the darkness I pushed onward along the narrow winding corridor. At last I came to a door. As the music swelled to a crescendo, I tried the knob. It was locked.

The mission was not a total failure; during my subsequent talk with Dean O'Connor I was told that Ted Thompson '85, Kate Stalford '82 and Patty Teng '82 are responsible for the ringing of the bells. Thompson, who resembles the famous Notre Dame ding-dong in no way, later conversed with me over the phone. Although initially disappointed that I had not uncovered some big secret, I was fascinated by Ted's description of the job.

The bells are rung three times each weekday, at noon, four o'clock in the afternoon, and in the evening after dinner, as well as on special occasions. They are tolled by means of a pulley system activated by wooden levers. The pulleys cause the clapper within each bell to strike against the stationary bell, producing the familiar ringing sound. Ted explained to me that as part of the job it was sometimes necessary to climb up in the Chapel to repair the bells. Altogether, it sounded like an interesting way to make a buck, especially considering the "fringe benefits," as the Chapel tower offers one of the best places for observing the campus.

Berkshire goes New Wave

by Stephanie Connor

If on Friday you said to yourself, "They're playing weird music at the symphony concert—I don't want to hear that!" then you missed a very entertaining evening. The Berkshire Symphony program of works, all of which were composed within the last century, was lively and well suited to the talents of the orchestra.

The concert began with Cesar Franck's Symphony in d minor, composed between 1886 and 1888. Although it was not composed along strictly classical lines, Franck employed a "cyclical" technique, in which themes from the first and second movements reappear in the third movement.

The violins began the performance with some rich bowing and careful observation of dynamic contrasts among the different themes. The tremolo passages were appropriately unsettling, although the attack of the descending scale passages was rather overly enthusiastic. The cellos played especially well in the opening theme of the third movement, and the lower strings led the crescendos with authority throughout the piece.

Although the Franck Symphony was a more challenging piece for the strings, the other instruments had their solo passages. The first movement was graced by a lovely French horn solo, and the brass quartet sections of the third movement were also smoothly played.

It was risky to leave the more recent compositions, which both date from 1964, to the second half of the program, but it was encouraging to note that the audience increased after the intermission.

The Reverie and Rondo by Ulysses S. Kay was replete with the lyric and chromatic elements which the composer had discussed in his lecture on Wednesday evening. Kay considers the three most important qualities of his works to be their lyricism, linearity of melody, and strong rhythmic definition. The opening measures of the Reverie fit Kay's description of "building a web of sound," by using a "thick harmonic palette," a musical technique which he compared to the use of 'impasto' in oil painting. Out of this harmonic cloud came a lyrical, minor theme played in unison by the violins. The Rondo, in contrast, had a definitely 'catchy' rhythm. Unusual instruments, such as the triangle and gong, were used to highlight the rhythm in each section. The ranges of double bass and violin were exploited; texture was constantly changing from rich to streamlined and back again. The Reverie and Rondo was short but clearly enjoyed by the audience and the performers.

Hommage to the Queen of Tonga, by Dominick Argento, was both difficult and long to leave as the final work. Rough edges appeared in the low notes of the brass and in the pizzicato timing of the strings. The woodwind solos, however, were very impressive. The flute solo in the second section was lightly and delicately played, though the accompanying strings threatened to mask it at times. The sonorous oboe and virtuosic bassoon passages which followed were an equal treat. The woodwind trio had a field day with the trills in the final section. Their irrepressible "chatter" was a very amusing contrast to the brass fan-fare of "Rule Britannic."

The Berkshire Symphony proved their ability to adapt to a non-traditional program, and demonstrated that listening to "serious" modern music is not necessarily an unpleasant task. It was a great opportunity to listen to the works of two living composers, with one of the most respected black composers in America, Ulysses S. Kay, present at the performance. Most of the audience came with no preconceptions of how the pieces—not taken from the traditional stock of concert works—should sound. The concert was therefore a success in its own right.

Ulysses S. Kay (foreground), composer of one of the three pieces performed by the Berkshire Symphony last Friday, receives recognition from the audience. (Farley)

2 on 2 match-ups big on campus

While both hockey and basketball teams were being blasted out of the playoff picture this weekend, some Williams athletes did have success. Perhaps it was because they were playing other Williams athletes.

The Ephmen and women were brought together by beer, which often stimulates competition, but seldom of the athletic nature.

$100 prize

Specifically, it was the annual Miller Beer Two-on-Two Basketball tournament. Players in the Co-ed and Men's (the Women's was cancelled due to lack of entrants) divisions squared off Saturday morning to vie for the $100 in scholarship money awarded to the winners. For those not lucky enough to go all the way, T-shirts were presented to all participants.

In a see-saw battle, Tony Toran '85 and Lori Lewis '84 vanquished Jane Parker '83 and Sidney Bridges '83 to capture the 17 team co-ed tournament. Toran and Lewis built up an early lead, but, following the example usually set by the varsity Ephmen, they surrendered it late in the contest.

Only a strong finale by the two, including the final six points, earned them the 20-16 win (take note, varsity!).

The men's tournament will be concluded at halftime of this week's Wesleyan basketball game in Lasell Gymnasium.

Size vs. speed

The championship features a classic match-up: tall leapers who intimidate defensively and score inside versus short, quick scorers who bomb and run.

The leapers and favorites are Keith Hopps '83 and Seth Toney '84 who allowed no opponent to score more than eight points against them in driving to the finals. Their semi-final game was a 20-8 romp over Kevin Collins and Vince Durnan '83. Durnan won the tournament a year ago on another team. The game fit the usual pattern for Hopps and Toney, who controlled throughout.

The underdog, but certainly not-out-of-contention team is Eddie Rosa '83 and Ray Headen '82. They defeated the size and speed combination of Bill (size) Street '84 and Steve (speed) Ziotowski '84. Rosa and Headen, led by Rosa's undefatigable shooting opened an early lead.

Street and Zio (for convenience), who had earlier defeated finalists from last year, mounted a stunted comeback which was blunted by the Rosa-Headen speed. The 20-12 victory sends the diminutive speedsters into the finals against the jumping giants.

Zebbras unshaken

The play was kept on the up-and-up throughout the day by referees John Lawler, Martha Paper, Don Mykrantz and Darrell White (all seniors). With a three foul per game limit on each team, and forfeit the penalty for violating the limit, officiating was often a devious factor. But the stalwart men (and woman) in stripes—they didn't actually wear stripes—were unruffled by any disruption.

With $100 on the line for the championship (purely scholarship money), the competition should be fierce when the two teams come head-to-head.

Tournament director senior Tom Casey will present the awards at, where else, the Log, on Thursday, March 11.

Truly profound

Ali in all, the tournament is a great example of student participation in athletic events. But there is one question that we are inevitably left pondering:

Would it be Lite humor or Busche league if the Budweiser Athlete of the Week went for the Gusto as the Blue Ribbon winner of the Miller Beer two-on-two championship?

Only students from well-to-do families may see this appetizing sight in future years if Reagan's proposed 40% financial aid cuts are passed (see pp. 5-8). (Farley)

Spikers take Little Three

Playing superb defense and showing mettle under pressure, the Williams volleyball team came out of last weekend with three victories, a Little Three title, and the New England Division IIB Championship. Saturday, the Ephmen blew out Wesleyan, 3-0, and Sunday at Amherst, Williams defeated the Jeffs and Wesleyan by identical 3-2 scores.

Saturday's match in Lasell Gymnasium saw the Ephmen totally dominate the Cardinals from the first serve, playing inspired and hustling volleyball throughout. Spikers Vince Brandstein, Steve Brewster and Bob Alcasabas controlled play at net, and totally closed off the Wesleyan attack.

Sunday, Williams travelled to Amherst in search of a Little Three title and the chance to extend its unbeaten streak to nine. A fired up Amherst squad was what they encountered instead. The Jeffs jumped off to a one game lead after Williams had taken an early 5-0 edge.

Game two turned out to be the most pressured and hard fought of the Eph's season. The lead saw-sawed early on until the Jeffs moved out to a 13-9 edge. Williams stayed tough, however, and the serve changed hands until the Ephs staved off three game points and held on for a 19-17 win. Momentum shifted constantly throughout the next two games, each team winning one, until Williams took an early lead in game five and sewed up the match at 15-11.

Immediately following that two-and-one-half hour match, Williams took the court against Wesleyan. Fatigue was a key factor as Williams took game one, but faltered in games two and four after taking early leads. Game five saw a tired Eph squad hold on for a 15-8 win and a 3-2 match victory.

Saturday, the Ephs take their 9-0 record to M.I.T. for the New England Collegiate Open, facing off against Division I and II squads from all over the East.

Run for fun—and help someone

There are two good things about the Williams Road-runners' 24-hour charity relay.

The first is the relay itself. Held in the Towne Field House, it is a sort of a mixture between a carnival, a campout, a track meet, and a marathon. Relay teams consist of from one to any number of people. Each team is given a baton, which is passed from runner to runner, and may loop the track as many as 2,500 times, in record-breaking attempts.

But not all teams are going for records. Some are there for the sheer fun of doing something novel, being with friends, or partaking of the various forms of entertainment provided for the event. In the past, these have included singing groups like the Oetel, musical groups such as the Jazz Ensemble, and a variety of movies and cartoons.

Ten to ten

The mechanics of the relay may seem confusing, but they are actually quite simple. At ten o'clock Saturday morning, the gun goes off, and the first runner on each team begins. Every team member usually runs a mile before passing the baton to the next runner, who also runs a mile and passes the baton, and so on. This continues until the following morning at ten o'clock.

Teams going for "official" times (according to the magazine Runners' World) must have 10 members. Most teams are more amorphous, consisting of either a large group of runners, or a few core members, who are supplemented by people who don't wish to stay the entire 24 hours, but come and run several miles, and then depart.

This type of approach is called "guest-milling". Guest millers may also float around unattached, running a mile here and a mile there for various teams, helping out when numbers on one team or another get slim.

Guest-milling is an attractive aspect of the relay, as it allows non-habitual runners and those who aren't able to make the 24 hour time commitment to take part. Thus, people can just drop in, run a few miles, and leave.

feeling that they have participated in something that is vital to the Williamstown community.

This brings us to the second "good thing" about the 24-hour relay. It is the one time during the nine months of our life here at Williams that the entire college takes an active role in supporting local charity agencies. Not only does this improve relations between college and community, but it allows us to put into practice some of the ideals we are learning about as a result of our liberal arts education. It is our chance to improve the lot and living conditions of a large number of less-privileged persons.

Supporters of the relay are asked to pledge some amount of money per mile for their favorite team, or else just to contribute what they can to the relay's "pot".

Relays in the past have been able to raise substantial amounts of money, which have greatly aided in the continued existence of local charities. Included in the list of charities are: The Mt. Greylock ABC (A Better Chance) Inc., The Help Line, The Hospice of Northern Berkshire, The Williamstown Boys' Club, Recording for the Blind, The Williamstown Day Care Center, and a newcomer, The Western Mass. Labor Action.

YOU can help

Many of these names may be familiar to Williams students. Who, at one time or another, has not said that they would help one of them out if they had the time or money? But it is not always an easy thing to help charities, as it's hard to determine exactly what should be done, and how one should go about doing it.

The 24-hour relay removes this obstacle by making it plain how such contributions can be made. Furthermore, donations are made simpler in that pledge collectors contact students in person in their dorms, rather than accosting them in Baxter and other dining halls, when they are hassled, hungry or otherwise preoccupied.

The two good things about the 24-hour relay provide two good ways to contribute. First, you can join a team or run guest miles, and enjoy the fun of the relay itself. Second, you can pledge to support the team of your choice, and thus play a role in community improvement. And there is a third alternative. You can do both!

Read Gorky Park. Last year's bestseller, now in paperback. Pre-Law Handbooks and many Grad. Exam Guides available.

Renzi's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS 01267

Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS

Something special is a gift from the Co-op

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday, March 3

Miller & Miller Lite Draft Night
Assorted Miller advertising
to be given away 9-12.

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

CONCERT LISTING

prepared by Toonerville Trolley Records

Tues., Mar. 2 King Crimson, Hullabaloo, Rensselaer, NY Renaissance, Paradise, Boston, Mass.
Mar. 2 thru 13 Dave McKenna, Van Dyke, Schenectady, NY
Wed., Mar. 3 Prince, Orpheum, Boston
Henny Youngman, Page Hall, SUNYA, Albany, NY
Kenny Rankin, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
Yehudi Menuhin, John M. Greene Hall, Smith College
Thurs., Mar. 4 Jonathan Edwards, Paradise, Boston
Ken Hensley & Clem Clemson, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
NRBQ, Civic Ctr., Hartford, CT
Black Sabbath, Boston Garden
Mar. 4 thru 7 Allen Ginsberg, Passim's, Boston
Mar. 4 thru 6 Fear of Strangers, Bogart's, Albany, NY
Fri., Mar. 5 Leo Kottke, Paradise, Boston
Leo Kottke, 8th Step Coffee house, Albany, NY
Albany Symphony, Troy Music Hall, Troy, NY
NRBQ & John Sebastian, Hotel Bradford, Boston
Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark, Savoy, New York, NY
Sat., Mar. 6 Visitor, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
Gary U.S. Bonds, Hotel Bradford, Boston
Mamas & Papas, Orpheum, Boston
Maynard Ferguson, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
Albany Symphony, Palace, Albany, NY
Reggae party with New Empire & Sir Walford, EBA Center for Dance & Movement, Albany, NY
Smithsonian Repertory Jazz Ensemble with Pug Horton & Bob Wilbur, Cohoes Music Hall, Cohoes, NY
Sun., Mar. 7 Lee Castle & the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra, Music Hall, Troy, NY
Mar. 13 Spyrogyra & Gato Barbieri, Opera House, Boston
Mar. 13 Arlo Guthrie & Shenandoah, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
Mar. 14 Arlo Guthrie & Shenandoah, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
Mar. 14 Dave Brubeck Quartet & Gerry Mulligan Big Band, Symphony Hall, Boston
Mar. 15 Dick Hyman Classic Jazz Band & New Black Eagle Jazz Band, Berklee Performance Ctr., Boston
Mar. 16 & 18 Cars, Boston Garden

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Co-recipients this week are swimmers Liz Jex '83 (left) and Kim Eckrich '85 who each tallied six victories in leading the Ephwomen to the New England title this weekend. Liz and Kim, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

The way to go

SEE more, ENJOY more, SAVE fuel and SAVE money—TRAVEL in FULL COMFORT

FIVE DAILY Thru-Service Trips

TO AND FROM BOSTON over the SCENIC MOHAWK TRAIL

— WILLIAMSTOWN DEPARTURE TIMES —
6:15am 8:15am 12:15pm 2:15pm 5:15pm
Only 3-Hours 25-Minutes to Downtown Boston

Also Westward to Troy & Albany
1:45pm Daily Departure from Williamstown

Stop In Or Phone For Schedules & Tickets To All Points
THE WILLIAMS INN
MAIN STREET — WILLIAMSTOWN
PHONE 458-9371

IT'S A PLEASURE TO SERVE YOU

PACKAGE SERVICE, TOO

Englander
COACH LINES, Inc.

HARVARD this summer

Tradition and the future meet at the Harvard Summer School, the nation's oldest summer session, featuring open enrollment in a diverse offering of day and evening liberal arts courses and pre-professional programs. The varied curriculum includes courses appropriate for fulfilling college degree requirements as well as programs designed for career development and professional advancement. The international student body has access to the University's outstanding libraries, museum, athletic facilities, and calendar of cultural activities, as well as the many events available outside the University in Harvard Square, Cambridge, and nearby Boston. Housing is available in Harvard's historic residences.

LIBERAL ARTS

Undergraduate and graduate courses in more than 30 liberal arts fields offered at convenient hours. Intensive foreign language and writing programs are available. Among the many areas represented are Anthropology, Computer Sciences, Fine Arts, Mathematics, Psychology, Music, and Visual and Environmental Studies.

PRE-PROFESSIONAL AND EDUCATION

Harvard Summer School offers all basic courses necessary for pre-medical preparation. Of interest to pre-law students are classes in government and economics. Business courses include computer programming, financial accounting, statistics, and a business writing workshop. Non-credit review courses for the GMAT, LSAT, and MCAT are offered. Graduate level courses in Education and in management theory and application meet the needs of professionals seeking to improve management skills or work toward advanced degrees.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS

Programs in expository and creative writing, drama, dance, and English as a Foreign Language. Instruction in 11 foreign languages, including the Ukrainian Summer Institute.

ACADEMIC CALENDAR
JUNE 21 — AUGUST 13, 1982

For further information, return the coupon below or contact:

HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL

Department
20 Garden St., Cambridge, MA 02138
(617) 495-2921 information
(617) 495-2494 line open 24 hours a day for catalogue requests

Please send Harvard Summer School catalogue and application for:

- ☐ Arts & Sciences and Education
- ☐ English as a Foreign Language
- ☐ Secondary School Student Program
- ☐ Dance Center

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL

Department 17

1-800-24-6580. Positions must be filled quickly.

SCIENCE/MATH SKILLS WANTED: Overseas opportunity demanding self-confidence and maturity. You'll work with people of all ages in urban or rural settings. Tremendous challenge. Learn about yourself and others. It's the Peace Corps. Is it for you?

SCIENCE TEACHER: Elementary school has openings for two science teachers.

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film/info - March 8, 4:00 p.m.,
Interviews - March 9, 9-5:00 p.m.,
Office of Career Counseling.

Ephwomen capture NE title

Swimming as if they were the only team in the pool, the Williams women's swim team ploughed through the New England championships this weekend and easily walked away with the title. Winning thirteen events outright and adding many high finishes in every race, Williams left its nearest competitor, Tufts, well over 150 points behind them.

Freshman Kim Eckrich started things off for the Ephwomen Friday night with a relay victory and two individual wins. After winning the 200 medley relay with juniors Katie Hudner and Anne Tuttle, and sophomore Ciela Clepiela, Eckrich won the 50 breast stroke, followed by teammate co-captain Barb Good in second. Eckrich finished up by taking the 200 IM with Good in seventh.

Other Williams winners Friday included freshman Jonna Kurucz in the 500 free, junior Liz Jex in the 100 butterfly and the relay team of Hudner, Kurucz, freshman Sue Knapp, and senior Catherine Hartley in the 800 free relay.

Saturday night brought more victories for the Purple and Gold with Jex taking the 50 free and 200 free, Eckrich winning the 100 breast stroke, and the relay team of Hudner, Eckrich, Hartley and freshman Rachel Stauffer stroking to win the 400 individual medley. Stauffer, Knapp, Tuttle and Jex also took second in the 200 free relay.

Team showdown

With the Ephwomen already 137 points ahead going into the final night of competition, the team continued to pour it on. The most exciting event of the night was a showdown between Jex and Eckrich in the 100 IM which Jex won over Eckrich by only a few tenths of a second. Both swimmers had other victories with Jex completing her mastery of the freestyle events by winning the 100 free and Eckrich rolling up the final breast stroke event with a first in the 200 breast stroke.

Kurucz contributed a second in the 1650 free and Hudner added seconds in both the 50 back stroke and 50 butterfly to her thirds registered the previous night in the 200 butterfly and 400 IM.

The final victory for the women was the 400 free relay which Jex, Hartley, Hudner and Stauffer won easily.

Headed for nationals

Three more Williams swimmers qualified for the nationals over the weekend to bring the team total up to ten. Good and freshman Peg Thomas made it in the 50 breast stroke and Knapp reached the needed time in the 200 free. Other team members who will be going to the nationals in two weeks are Jex, Hudner, Clepiela, Hartley, Eckrich, Kurucz and diver Dina Esposito, a junior. The nationals are at the same place as the New England, so the team will be returning there with high hopes on the weekend of March 11-13.

The men's team swims this upcoming weekend at URI. Having lost to only Div. I Colgate all season, the team is a favorite, but can expect a greater challenge than the women faced.

Intercollegiates here

Squash wraps up record year

Clinching a record eighth straight Little Three championship and establishing a new standard for most wins in a season with 17, the men's squash team crushed both Wesleyan and M.I.T. by 9-0 scores on Saturday.

Included in the 17-3 final record were wins over Yale, Penn, and Navy; the first time in Williams squash history that all three teams were defeated in the same season. Based on their dual match results, Williams will be ranked fourth in the U.S. in intercollegiate squash behind Princeton, Harvard and Yale.

Captain Kennon Miller '82 routed his opponents from Wesleyan and M.I.T. to set a new individual record for matches won in a season (19). He will probably be seeded number two in his division of the intercollegiate behind Charlie Duffy of Harvard, the only player to beat him during the season.

Sophomore Greg Zaff also won two matches Saturday at the number one position to strengthen his bid for a seed in the "A" division of the Intercollegiate and almost guarantee post-season recognition as an All-American.

Intercollegiates here

Zaff and Miller will lead the Ephmen squad of six players in the National Intercollegiate Championships, to be held here at Williams, March 5-7. The Intercollegiate actually consists of three separate tournaments, as the number one and two players all compete in the "A" tournament, the three and four players in the "B" tournament, and the five and six players in the "C" tournament.

Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Penn, and Williams are the only U.S. colleges ever to win the Intercollegiate with the Williams sole victory coming in 1958.

Led by Zaff, and Tom Harrity '84 in the "A", Jeff Sultar '84 and Bill Nau '84 in the "B", and Miller and Jamie Kling '84 in the "C", Williams is hoping to ride the home court advantage to an upset over favorites Harvard, Princeton, Western Ontario and Toronto.

Puck ousted from playoffs

by Rich Leavitt

An aggressive, opportunistic, and always hustling North Adams State put an end to the Eph stickmen's season by beating them 5-3 in the opening round of the playoffs before a full house in North Adams Saturday night. The Mohawks were ranked fourth in the West while the Ephs were handed the number five slot by the selection committee.

North Adams took full advantage of their home ice advantage as they checked and harassed the Eph skaters all night long on the small ice surface. Goalie Marhoffer proved to be the vital factor for the Mohawks as he turned aside 49 Williams shots, 19 of them coming in the last period.

Comedy on ice

Though the Ephs lost, the game was filled with both the exciting and the unusual. With just over a minute gone in the game, a Mohawk forward led a charge against two Williams defensemen. Then Charlie Chaplin got hold of the script as first one defenseman tripped and fell only to have the other one topple over him. With both defensemen lying on the ice the North Adams forward walked in alone against Dan Finn '84 and fired home the rebound after Finn made the initial save.

The relentless forechecking of the Mohawks rendered the Ephs' breakout all but useless. When Williams did clear its own zone, the North Adams defensemen were there to continually hit the Eph forwards.

The Mohawks entered the second period with a 2-0 lead and proceeded to keep the pressure on Williams. The Ephs adapted however and began to work around the pesky North Adams forwards. Try as they did, Williams could not score. Their best chance came when senior Doug Jebb was awarded a penalty shot after having been hooked from behind with an empty net staring him in the face. Unfortunately Jebb was denied by Marhoffer and the score at the end of two periods was 3-0.

Showing both poise and class, the Ephmen came roaring onto the ice at the start of the final period and refused to roll over and play dead. Within six minutes, Williams collected two goals to close the gap to one.

Leading scorer Ed Finn '83 banged home a rebound with assists going to Jebb '82 and Skip Vallee '82, both of whom played inspired hockey the entire game. Exactly two minutes later freshman Jeff Potter scored after a scramble in front of the net. Mark Wysocki '83 and Brian Rutledge '85 picked up the assists.

The tide, however, was quickly reversed as the Mohawks picked up two more goals within a minute after Potter's goal. Senior Greg Jacobson scored from Bob Brownell '83 and Mike Uretsky '85 to make the score 5-3, but that was as close as the Ephs would come.

North Adams did their best to let Williams get back into the game as they picked up four penalties in the last ten minutes of the game. Marhoffer held the vaunted Eph power play at bay, however.

Thus, for the second year in a row the Ephs lost in the opening round of the playoffs. It was an exciting season though and McCormick's squad proved it can play hockey with the best of them.

Help Needed

Williams is hosting over thirty colleges this weekend for the National Intercollegiate Squash Championships. Coach Sean Sloane is asking anyone who has played or watched squash to assist by being a scorer.

Over 125 scorers are needed to compliment the many faculty and students already helping.

Orientation sessions for those willing to help are being held at 5:00 pm this Tuesday and Wednesday on the squash courts.

Hoopsters flirt with glory

by John Clayton

Well, they were able to play world-beaters for a week, at least.

After beating two number one teams—Tufts and Clark—in a row, the men's basketball team lost to Amherst Saturday 74-68.

There wasn't much to say about the Amherst game. The Lord Jeffs were a better ball club that night. Williams was able to contain center Jim Pettit (who had 32 points in their last meeting), but Amherst had five men in double figures.

Quick lead

The Ephmen started the game very well, getting their biggest lead at 24-14 with 9:20 left in the half. But over the next five minutes the Lord Jeffs scored 14 straight points to lead 28-24.

From then on Amherst never let go of the lead. It was 35-32 at the half, and the Jeffs hit three straight jumpers to start the second half, expanding the lead to 41-32.

Comeback overturned

Art Pidoriano '84 and Scott Olesen '83 led a Williams surge with five minutes left that put the Ephmen on top 62-61. But Amherst answered with six straight points, and the lead was back to five, where it stayed the rest of the game.

Olesen led the Ephmen with 19 points, Al Lewis '82 had 16, Steve O'Day '84 had 14 and Pidoriano had 12.

Top the tops

After Williams beat Tufts last Saturday, The new Division III New England poll had Clark in first place, so Williams knocked off Clark as well.

But they didn't just knock 'em off, they blew them out, 98-80. That's right, they almost broke 100 on the best team in their division in New England.

The game was closer than the score indicated, as Clark was leading with as little as eleven minutes remaining.

But the Ephmen, with the whole team contributing, brought the lead (which they had most of the game) back up to ten points with 5:13 left, 71-61.

Score climbs

Then, Clark started fouling to get back into the game. Usually this strategy is ineffective, and substitutes come in to get some playing time in the last two minutes.

But that never happened. Clark never stopped fouling, and Williams never took its starters out. Williams kept hitting foul shots until it became clear that they had a chance to break 100. As it was, they just missed.

The Ephmen could do little wrong. Five men reached double figures: Pidoriano (21), Schmidt (17), Captains Lewis and Jeff Fasulo (16 apiece), and O'Day (15). Olesen just missed with nine.

Sophomore center Steve O'Day reaches for the rim amidst Amherst foes with captain Al Lewis (#12) and Scott Olesen looking on. (Farley)

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 19

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

March 9, 1982

Williams College observatory where tomorrow's alignment of the planets will be eagerly scrutinized. The planets will be closer together (when seen from sun) than they've been in over 150 years. (Farley)

Students play musical houses

March is the month for housing—freshmen go through inclusion, and upperclassmen apply for house transfers. Now that the housing season is open, the Record presents subjective sketches of the College on-campus residential houses.

The following descriptions explain the positive and negative aspects of each housing option. Dining, recreation, and adjacent facilities are an intrinsic part of life in a given house. Thus, the descriptions go beyond the size of one's room to discuss amenities and the social atmosphere of different housing.

Fitch-Currier

For many years, Fitch-Currier has suffered from a bad reputation: weird, antisocial, isolated. Fitch-Currier is also hampered in the housing selection process by its association with Prospect House.

Over the past few years, that reputation has started to change, largely due to the efforts of former house president Kathleen Merrigan. While Fitch-Currier still remains separate from the campus in many respects, separation is now by choice. Residents have started to recognize a good thing, and want to keep it that way—off-beat. As a whole, the house is more unified than any other on campus. The social life is strong and cohesive, and the people are open and friendly.

The isolation has its drawbacks. One needs to make more of an effort to stay in touch with the social life on the rest of the campus, since one's neighbors aren't likely to care. House activities rarely draw members of other houses, and friendships, normally central within any house, are especially so in Fitch-Currier. All of which is fine, as long as you really like it there.

The proximity to Prospect House presents another trade-off. Although one would think that the presence of about ninety people so close by would lead to social interaction, the two houses avoid each other like the plague. Fitch takes most of the blame for the relationship, rejecting opportunities to become more united.

A final benefit is the dining facilities. Driscoll is warm, small, and as cozy as a dining hall is likely to get. The cooks and the rest of the staff are friendly (sometimes) and good at what they do (always).

Prospect

Prospect House has worked hard to deserve its reputation as the worst place to live on campus, although it does have hidden benefits. The rooms are uniformly large and most have built-in desks and enormous walk-in closets. These advantages are more than outweighed by the ugly tile floors and the tissue paper walls that turn each room into a giant stereo speaker. Residents are usually

Continued on Page 8

Student workers fail to earn aid quota

by Brett McDonnell

Only 22.5 percent of all financial aid student workers earned the amount demanded in their aid packages last year, most earning about two-thirds of the average expected by the College, according to Financial Aid Office statistics.

"I think Williams students have a lot of priorities," observed Phil Wick, Director of Financial Aid. "Studying and extracurricular activities often prevent students from working as much as they could."

Apparently, most workers disagree. At a recent meeting with freshmen financial aid students, Wick asked how many had trouble getting sufficient hours at their jobs. Seventy percent reportedly raised their hands.

Unsure freshmen

Most departments have hour guidelines for student employees ranging from six to twelve hours per week. Wick suggested that freshmen, unsure of what they can handle, take a low number of hours at first.

However, according to figures provided by Jean Richer, 28 percent of last year's freshmen financial aid students met their financial aid expectations, a figure higher than any other class that year.

Freshmen financial aid workers are expected to earn $650, sophomores $800, juniors $850 and seniors $900. Next year these figures will increase by $50.

Students pay shortfalls

Financial aid students usually put their earnings toward living expenses and some of the tuition costs. Job expectations are subtracted from the College grant total and students or their families must make up any shortfalls in earnings.

A student's class year does not affect his wage rate, although freshmen, who frequently have little experience, often fall at the low end of the scale, which ranges from $3.50 to $3.80 an hour.

Dave Yaskulka '84 said he works roughly 6 and one-half hours per week, the usual total at Baxter, but still does not make what the Financial Aid Office expects.

Dan Carter '82, the top headwaiter at Baxter, noted that some students have trouble getting hours because of conflicts with classes and extracurricular activities. "We still have trouble finding people who are willing to come and work immediately," he said.

Amity Smith '82, Driscoll's headwaiter, maintains her workers have no problems getting enough hours. Greylock's headwaiter, Art Leo '82 concurs.

However, Vlanda Vives '83, Mission Park's headwaiter, says scheduling problems hurt many of her workers, with classes and sports causing the most trouble. Vives has to use about 20 non-financial aid students to fill shifts.

Phase out students

In the past, many non-financial aid students had jobs, but Richer has tried to phase this out.

Juniors and seniors not on aid who had jobs before 1980 have stayed on, but most freshmen and sophomore workers are on financial aid. There are roughly 400 non-financial aid workers left out of the total 930 workers.

"It seems to us," stated Wick, that students who are motivated and willing to do almost anything seem to be able to manage."

"I think the jobs are there if you want to look for them," agreed Elizabeth Flynn '83, who works at Baxter and for Security.

"I'd like to think there isn't too much of a problem," Richer remarked. "But with the Art Museum renovation and the elimination of Row House dining we lost some jobs this year, which didn't help us."

BSU clarifies position

BSU coordinator Dave Bowen '83 told the Record last Sunday that while last week's Record article on the BSU referred to a single party, BSU coordinators were speaking of two separate incidents when talking with Dean O'Connor and Record editor Katya Hokanson.

A March 2 Record article reported O'Connor's assertion that the BSU coordinators "denied that anyone was turned away from a party" and that "Bowen admitted later that he had in fact asked three white non-members to leave the party."

This week Bowen said that the coordinators told O'Connor that no one was turned away at a February 13 Valentine's party. When speaking to the Record reporter, he asserted, he had been referring not to the February 13 party but to a January 16 incident where members were twice informed of the BSU's no-guest policy. The BSU also clarified that the non-members were not asked to leave; rather, their member escorts were again reminded of BSU guidelines.

Hokanson, who wrote last week's article, said that she asked Bowen to explain why O'Connor and the Record were told conflicting stories about the party; at that point, she said, Bowen did not explain that two different parties were in question. Instead he asked Hokanson to refer the question to the Coordinators for an official response.

Four members of the BSU, including Secretary Elijah Alexander '84, were allowed to read the completed Record article before publication. The four made no mention of the party incidents, and only asked for a clarification of BSU funding.

When asked Sunday why no complaint was made upon reading the article, Alexander said that he and the other members "did not see" the sentences referring to the O'Connor meeting or Bowen's admission.

Student library employee Leigh Repko '84 labors in pursuit of what some consider the financial aid office's unrealistic earnings expectations. (Molloy)

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Op-ed:
Eph's real birthday

p. 3

• Outlook:
Dave Moro
disapproves

p. 4

• Arts:
A Price-ful performance

p. 7

• National squash
Championships
here on campus

p. 12

The Williams Record

A Forgotten Birthday

In 1860, a Williams alumnus named Nathan Jackson gave $2,000 to the College for an annual celebration of "the Founder's birthday," a celebration to honor Colonel Ephraim Williams.

The celebrations in the late 19th century were elaborate dinners for the entire student body. The College grew, and the program was reduced to a few concerts each year. By 1915 the fund could only cover one celebration every four years. After that, the tradition faded into oblivion.

It is unfortunate that today we have no official commemoration of our founder. Such an event would remind us of Williams history and the philosophy of education that we practice. A Record editorial from 1927 observed: "Is it not fitting that one of these days should be devoted to the formal recognition of the magnanimous spirit of the one who established this college?"

Undeniably, times have changed, and student attitudes are not what they were. It is fashionable to deride liberal arts, tradition, and ceremony. The unfortunate result is a loss of spirit for all members of the College community. An annual celebration to honor Ephraim Williams would be an excellent opportunity to remind ourselves of the successes of our College and the pride of a tradition that dates back nearly two centuries.

The celebration could take many forms. It could be a day to emphasize liberal arts, with speakers discussing a variety of thought-provoking topics. The College could hold ceremonies in memory of Ephraim Williams himself. Perhaps a suspension of classes could be declared to allow students to explore the Berkshires—a la Mountain Day, another long lost tradition. This would be especially appropriate, for Williams left home on his eighteenth birthday to seek adventure at sea.

A day to remember Colonel Williams is a Williams tradition that should be restored. The mere passage of years should not be allowed to diminish the observance of our founder and his legacy which we share today.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Jon Tigar

FEATURES

Philip Busch

OP-ED

Paul Sabbah

ENTERTAINMENT

Ronald Isen

LAYOUT

Michael Govan

SPORTS

Dan Keating

PHOTOGRAPHY

Steve Farley

ADVERTISING MGRS

Katie Miller

Rich Mass

BUSINESS DIRECTOR

Priscilla Cohen

BUSINESS MGR.

Chris Toub

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

Letters

Objection

To the editor:

The Republican Club has been trying to get Milton Friedman to speak on our campus. How much is the fee for this renowned and controversial economist? $10,000!

At the Council meeting on Thursday, Dave Moro '82, president of the Republican Club, stressed that only a quarter of this amount had to be collected from campus sources and that alumni had pledged to pay the remainder. In effect, the Council would be paying $1,000 and other campus organizations would be contributing $1,500.

In talking to quite a few classmates and house members, I felt my strong objection to putting such a large sum of money into a single two-hour lecture was shared. Furthermore, a big turnout of students at the lecture wouldn't necessarily portray their approval.

Dave Moro emphasized that by calling the media to cover this event, Williams would get some positive publicity for a change. I realize the good intentions of the Republican Club, but I feel that this wouldn't say much about the student body. At a time when a few of our class members, including College Council President Freddy Nathan, have gone to Washington to protest the budget cuts in financial aid, we shouldn't be paying a speaker $10,000 to raise the "prestige" of our College! I am sure we can find other well-known conservative speakers who charge far less and could still attract the media's attention, if that is part of our purpose.

This money is equivalent to a student's yearly tuition and, even though the alumni are paying a large portion of it, I feel we can't allow or justify the purpose that the money is going towards. Moreover, it isn't sufficient to say that "there isn't anything better to invest this money in."

I realize that the Republican Club has worked hard to convince Mr. Friedman to lecture on our campus, but I am, in principle, against investing such a large sum of money into any one lecture.

Furthermore, I question the educational value of having Mr. Friedman as a speaker. We've read his views and considering the amount of money we would pay, I daresay he won't teach us as much as a professor does in a year. Yet his fee is equal to what some professors make in a year.

Maryam Elahi '83

Big hand

To the editor:

The Record staff, particularly contributors Steve Farley, Sara Ferris, Brooke Hand, Brett McDonnell, Peter Nicholas, Mike Sutton, and Paul Van Bloem deserve a big hand for their special section on Financial Aid in the recent March 2nd issue. Your comprehensive and accurate coverage (except for your pie graph which used 1977-78 figures) has provided a timely educational service to the community and helped to bring into initial focus the complex array of funding sources and the far reaching implications if major cuts are enacted.

Thank you for interest and concern—which I hope will be a continuing one—in an area that is vital if we are committed to the ideal of maintaining students' ability to choose among educational institutions of a variety of types and costs.

Philip Wick
Director of Financial Aid

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

Following Williams College's victory over North Adams State in the Miller Beer Two-on-Two Basketball Tournament, one student exclaimed:

"That's the first major sporting event we've won all year."

Ephraim: over the hill or still going strong at 268?

by Jenny Bleks

What did a nice boy from Newton, Massachusetts think he would find in 1755 in the wilds of Williamstown? A lot of trees? A pile of snow? A couple of Indians? If his name was Ephraim Williams he thought he could find a school, and—surprise—he did.

This week has been officially marked out as a celebration of his birthday, but, like many of the facts on Eph, the date of his birth is not very clear. According to "old" (Jullian) time he was born on February 24, 1714; "new" (Gregorian) time on March 7; and Baxter "let's decorate the dining hall" time on February 22. Yes, Eph is a pretty mysterious guy.

Rumor has it that, in fact, Eph never really wanted to leave any money for any school at all. It seems his gift was a violent reaction to having been jilted by his cousin, Elizabeth. She had refused his worldly goods and, hence, Williams College was founded on them.

A cradle robber?

If it is any indication of Eph's preferences in women, the only facts we have on this "Elizabeth" is that she never used more than one digit to tell her age. Getting to sound a little fishy, huh? Was Eph a cradle robber? The actual instigator of sexual harassment? We may never know.

Ephraim was the son of Ephraim Williams Sr. and Elizabeth Jackson. For unclear reasons, little Eph was sent away to live with his grandfather. Eph had his share of bad luck; when his grandfather died Eph's brother was left a small fortune to pay for all further education and living expenses. Eph Jr. was left 50 pounds... to be dispensed over the next five years. For Ephraim this would be just the beginning of a string of rather bad breaks.

Killed in ambush

Little is known about Eph's early life except the fact that he "followed the seas... acquired graceful manners and a considerable stock of useful knowledge." (Not necessarily in that order).

The seas were less than kind to our hero who then took to the task of being a soldier. On June 10, 1745 Ephraim took over command of a line of forts in western Massachusetts. His luck seemed to turn until 1746 when Fort Massachusetts was captured and burned to ashes around him. Eph was supposed to be in command. Ephraim moved on undaunted.

In the French and Indian War, Eph raised himself to the rank of colonel. He became commander of a corps situated near Lake George, New York. Colonel Williams, unfortunately, could not escape his fate. On September 8, 1755 he led his troops straight into an ambush, tried to flee, and was killed on the spot.

Ephraimville?

Eph did have some endearing qualities. He was known to entertain Indians with money sent for the troops. In his eulogy he was categorized by Ebenezer

Colonel Williams signs away his fortune for a free high school, while his lawyers plot how to in fact make it an expensive college.

Fitch as "... large and fleshy... with a taste for books." Perhaps Wyllis Wright, who took the time to write a lengthy biography, summed it up best when he was forced to admit, "Ephraim was not a great man and certainly not a great military commander."

Regardless of these trivial facts Eph really was a fairly good guy. Along with generously bequeathing brother Thomas all his shoe buckles, he did leave a portion of his estate (9175 dollars to be exact) to "maintain a free school." Of course, the only stipulation was that the school had to be situated in a town named after Eph himself. Ephraimville was rejected. Hence, in 1765 'Williamstown' was officially chartered. In 1793 Williams College was founded.

And now, in 1982, people still pronounce Eph's name wrong. "He don't get no respect." So Eph, happy birthday. This Bud's for you.

Paul Sabbah

Diversity and the residential ethos

Now that those housing transfer forms have been submitted, and the issue is out of our hands for this year, we can look back on the process for a little assessment. As one who transferred from one of the small, exclusive houses to Mission Park for two years, and who is now in the process of reversing that situation, I speak from my particular experience: a flexible transfer policy is healthy.

In September 1980, President Chandler charged the so-called Gifford Committee with the job of evaluating the Residential Housing System. Chandler's statement praised the college's residential system, emphasizing that it "... opened up the campus and bridged the chasm that had separated the residential campus ethos and the college's formal educational goals and programs." He went on, however, by pointing out those developments which he considered "disturbing." The increasing volume of house transfers was first on that list.

The Committee's report was received with the usual controversy and disagreement: since Row House dining was the main topic of conversation at the time, little attention was paid to other parts of the report. One such part stands out now. With regard to the transfer policy, the Committee report stated at the outset that "the fairly high levels of application for transfer among the residential houses at first impressed us as evidence of instability in the residential house system." Apparently, parts of the Housing Committee agree.

In a February 9th Viewpoint in the Record, Tim Caffrey, Perry House President and head of the Housing Committee's Transfer Subcommittee, described his strategy behind a limited transfer policy. His main point was that diversity is fostered by a limited transfer policy, and diversity is an integral part of education. On this point I most sincerely agree. Our diversity does allow us to encounter people of different frames of mind, cultural backgrounds, political ideologies, or extracurricular interests. In this way, we are shown that the world is not made up of clones who eat, sleep, and think alike. Diversity forces us to be open-minded, and that is the most valuable result of a college education. Caffrey even quotes Ephraim Williams' son

PANORAMA

Lewis, who maintained that "we are a group of probably over-contented individuals whose charm is in the differences which constitute our intimacies." Once again, I agree. Often, we find that we have the greatest respect for those with whom we differ.

Caffrey spells it out when he writes about student interaction: "the value of such interaction comes from our diversity." However, he goes on to write that "... this value is lost when we structure a residential house system that allows us to seek out those with whom we are comfortable rather than those who make us nervous." Obviously Caffrey and I agree on the ends, but can we disagree so violently on the means? Does he mean to say that diversity must be legislated?

I sense that Caffrey and those who agree with him have ignored the results of the Gifford Committee report which he referred to in his viewpoint. That report implies that we don't need to force different people to live together so that their diversity will serve to educate them: we are all different enough already. As the report states

"... the term 'diversity' did not loom as large in our discussions as it would have ten to fifteen years ago, in part because the campus population is so much more diverse now than it was and in part because diversity seems healthy enough at present to survive without further attempts to program it."

Based upon this reasoning, as well as the changing nature of friendship groups, the Committee concluded by regarding the number of transfers

"... as evidence both of the importance of small groups of friends and of the flexibility and effectiveness with which the present residential house system accommodates those groups as they shift and reform from year to year."

If the growth in transfers is an indication of a changing campus, we must accept that change, and heed the Committee's advice. Diversity is a source of education, but it needn't be forced upon us.

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

Outlook

Sexual harassment: overblown, misconstrued

Editor's note: The following appears on this page as a partial response to the issue of January 19.

by Dave Moro '82

Williams College loves a good campus scandal, and it insists on having one every year. Perhaps there's a feeling among certain people that their lives are sorely lacking in momentous events or conflicts; maybe they're just frustrated and have an axe to grind. Whatever the reason, the pattern is by now familiar. First, a fairly innocuous or insignificant event is designated this year's "incident" by one of our notorious "progressive" groups—the Feminist Alliance, the BSU or the homosexuals. Next come the rumors, the letters of outrage to the Record, and the sensationalism by the campus media, all to the refrain of haughty, Pharisaical pronouncements by the more vocal opinion leaders of the group in question. These folks are not above attacking the person of those who disagree with their assessment of the situation (witness the reaction to Phil Smith's letter) and benefit greatly from the resulting atmosphere of enforced consensus. To this we must add a good dose of administration-baiting, a pastime gleefully indulged in by our more unscrupulous scandal-mongers, and a willingness to slander the good name of Williams College whenever it suits their ends. Finally there comes appeasement: campus-wide rap sessions, memos from the beleaguered souls at Hopkins Hall, or new clauses in the Student Handbook, all accompanied by the unexpressed hope that people will grow up by next year.

The pattern is familiar: a fairly innocuous or insignificant event is designated this year's "incident" by the Feminist Alliance, the BSU or the homosexuals.

In view of the recent events on campus, it would be an understatement to say that hope remains unfulfilled. Never, to my knowledge, has the Purple Valley been beset by such foolishness, extremism and lack of imagination as was unleashed in the wake of the sexual harassment scandal. Step back for a moment and take a look at some excerpts from this year's comedy of errors. Say what you will, it was not Williams' finest hour.

Comedy of errors

At the Chapin Hall meeting, Tracy Dick—an avowed homosexual—lectured the student body on what was wrong with their sexual attitudes. Her charge that we had "ruined" her college years must have raised some eyebrows, but by far the most telling part of her tirade was her use of the family analogy. Her likening of students to "children" was condescending, to say the least; equally contemptible was the suggestion that the transgressions for which they should be punished by the Williams "family" are a cut-and-dry matter. But lest you think that this didactic, self-assured air is particular to Tracy's kind, take a look at Charlie Pardoe's piece (Outlook, Jan. 19) in which he calls upon us to redefine all standards of male and female behavior. "We must redefine men's roles," concurs Prof. Langston. One can only commend our progressively minded social engineers for not shying away from the big tasks. But before they undertake to correct several million years of human evolution, they would do well to ask themselves the following question: Is it really the much-maligned traditional roles for men that are responsible for the present malaise on campus? Or is it the new "liberated" role, pushed by the feminists, and featuring such questionable virtues as effeminacy and the ability to cry?

In answering this question, it would be highly instructive to examine the image projected in Jon Tigar's Outlook of January 19, 1982. The man presented in that piece is a feminist's dream: he asks for his kisses, he's "vulnerable" and "sensitive," and—you won't believe this—he's capable of being harassed himself. Tigar gives an example of just such a "harrowing" experience:

"I picked up the phone and a woman using a nasal voice asked if I knew whom I was talking to. I didn't. Then she asked me if I was ticklish. . . . She asked if I knew how to do an adagio dance. I didn't. She told me to look it up in the dictionary. She asked me where I was going that night. I put the phone down and walked away."

All I can say is, if Langston & Co. have to do any redefining at all, let's hope they come up with something a little more exciting than this. Where's the Williams man of yesteryear? I mean the one who would have taken that gal out for displaying a little spunk and a sense of humor? Next time anyone gets a call from this harassin' hussy, put her on hold and find out who she is. I want to pin a medal on her.

Harassment and the emperor's new clothes

Typical of the reactions to the harassment scandal was Beth Byron's Outlook article. While granting that rape and violent forms of harassment are not the issue here, she nevertheless insists that harassment is a serious problem at Williams. It consists, she says, of "clever remarks, slight grabs and pats and pinches." But since when do such acts "invalidate (a girl) as a female and as a person?" If the opinions of girls I've talked to are at all representative, then quite the opposite is true. Miss Byron comes prepared, however, to handle any such sacrilegious doubts as to her notion of harassment. "If you do not understand why so many people are so upset about this, perhaps you need to learn more about it rather than to assume it is not important." Well, perhaps. But her own approach (which she shares with WASH and many feminists), is repeating ad nauseam that harassment exists and declining to provide concrete, meaningful evidence of it. It's The Emperor's New Clothes all over again: If you do not see that something exists, convince yourself that it does, because everybody else says it exists.

... "Stereotype" is just a negative term for what is, in essence, a very good and necessary thing . . .

All this inconsequential drivel has its amusing aspects, of course, and were the sexual harassment hubbub limited to it, there would be no real cause for concern. But there have been far more serious consequences, consequences largely brought on by underhanded, dishonest and coercive tactics on the part of WASH, Williams Against Sexual Harassment.

This ad hoc group of students began its activities in a rather quixotic fashion. With all the fervor of Orwell's Youth Anti-Sex League, they demonstrated in front of Hopkins Hall, protesting what they saw as a complacent and over-lenient approach to harassment by the administration. These charges were unfounded; not a single case of rape has been proven, and the much-touted "assault" cases, (which according to some people, were simply a matter of a fellow getting overpassionate and pushy with his date) had been handled by the Honor & Discipline Committee. But even had the rape charges been true that in itself would not have proven that harassment is a widespread, everyday pheno-

It's "The Emperor's New Clothes" all over again: if you do not see that something exists, convince yourself that it does.

menon at Williams College. WASH was determined to be taken seriously, however, and decided to play hardball. They contacted the media, presenting them with a factually incorrect statement of the incidents on campus. Fully aware that Gresham's Law applies to the media, they publicly sullied the name of Williams College; the only way for the administration to get rid of the bad press was to give in to WASH's demands, thus implicitly validating the group's original, trumped-up charges. At first, WASH declined to comment on the reasons for their drastic actions. The best defense they've been able to come up with since then is that they were "putting the issue in a broader societal framework." Doubletalk aside, I challenge anyone to tell me what that means.

One cannot fault the administration for giving in, under the circumstances. Their first responsibility is to the College. What is reprehensible, however, is that they let de facto libel and extortion on the part of WASH go unpunished even after the media hoopla had subsided. Instead of striking down the coercive precedent set by WASH, they began to indulge in something dangerously close to coercion themselves. If you can't lick 'em, join 'em. . . .

Mind control

This last point was driven home to me rather forcefully the other day, when I happened to find Dean O'Connor's letter together with a letter from the ACLU in my mailbox. The ACLU letter had the following message printed on the envelope: THE NEW RIGHT DOESN'T ments of Tong's definition—"teasing", "jokes", "looks", "remarks", "gestures"—but "stereotyping" as well. The conventional wisdom is that stereotypes are "bad", so I suspect few people got too upset when O'Connor unleashed his latest crusade against them. But "stereotype" is just a negative term for what is, in essence, a very good and necessary thing: a notion, or a mental model that allows us to understand and predict phenomena we come across in day-to-day living. No one should doubt for a moment that the feminists at WASH, Prof. Tong, and Dean O'Connor himself all have their own set of models or stereotypes. In fact, the specific content of these stereotypes is becoming increasingly clear as time goes on. Now, whether their stereotypes fare any better than the traditional ones in terms of understanding and prediction is a matter of debate; I would submit they don't, by a long shot. But whatever your position on the matter, it is unconscionable to take it from the realm of free deliberation and place it into the realm of coercion.

The good Dean O'Connor understands all this, of course, and he has personally assured me that disciplinary measures will not be automatically taken to enforce the ban on "prejudicial behavior" or the more fantastic clauses in Tong's definition of sexual harassment, but would instead encourage the parties involved to talk. I have always respected Dean O'Connor as a person and as an administrator, and have never doubted his sense of justice. But this is not the point. As matters stand now, we are being asked to trust his discretion in matters that clearly should not be discretionary. Unwarranted discretionary powers can be very easily misused; witness the coordinated effort to prevent Phil Smith from rectifying some of the more destructive effects of WASH's disinformation activities. Both the Dean and the President of the college should publicly discard Prof. Tong's ill-conceived definition of sexual harassment as a basis for disciplinary action (along with O'Connor's disappointing amendments). They should restrict themselves to a definition that has a solid legal basis. It would include rape, assault, battery, and persistent use of the phone or mail system for the purpose of conveying annoying or obscene messages. There is no justification for further intruding on students' lives.

Levin was right

A few weeks ago, Professor Levin from NYU told a hostile audience in Brooks-Rogers that feminism is inherently threatening to liberty and the democratic process. At the time, most people considered that a pretty far-fetched thesis. Yet just about everything that has transpired on this campus since then, with regard to sexual harassment, has served to prove his point. Perhaps those who disagreed with him ought to do a little soul-searching. I, for one, would welcome an effort by the feminists on this campus to demonstrate—through their actions—that what Mr. Levin said is not always and everywhere true.

It will be said and rightly so, that my contribution so far to this whole issue has been primarily negative; that it is not enough simply to criticize others' reactions, however deserving of criticism they may be. I do feel that not all is well with male-female relationships on this campus, but the problem has nothing to do with "sexual harassment" or "sexism."

Remember Gifford?

CUL examines housing system

Faculty will sit on the Housing Committee if the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) approves its housing subcommittee's alternate proposal to the Gifford report, both of which will be considered by the CUL this month.

The CUL subcommittee would redefine the Housing Committee's membership, eliminating all but one freshman representative and adding "assorted Senior (faculty) associates." House presidents, the Director of Housing and a Dean's Office representative would continue to serve on the committee.

Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta of the CUL subcommittee said later that the exclusion of four freshman representatives "was probably an oversight on our part. We had no plan to get rid of any student representatives."

The role of the Housing Committee would "establish, publicize and enforce room-draw procedures, and rules for inclusion and transfer" under the subcommittee's strict definition.

"That's been the traditional role of the Housing Committee," affirmed Kenyatta.

Beyond room draw

"We believe the Housing Committee role should go much beyond room draw," asserted Housing Committee co-chairman Kathleen Merrigan '82. "We've looked at house president role definitions and policy problems. There are a lot more issues we can touch upon."

The Gifford Report does not specify a role for the Housing Committee, but instead transfers many of its responsibilities to new "Advisory Councils" for each housing cluster: Mission Park-Tyler, Berkshire-Dodd, Greylock, and Row Houses.

The CUL subcommittee retained Gifford's suggestion to have sophomores choose a faculty associate when they join a house. In each house, faculty associates would sit with students on a committee responsible for student-faculty interaction and resolving "minority complaints within the house (e.g. noise)."

In loco parentis?

Faculty members objected to this peacekeeping function of faculty members. "Are we getting into in loco parentis on the part of the faculty?" asked biology professor Hank Art.

Rosemarie Tong of the philosophy department concurred, "The faculty person would find him or herself in an awkward position."

CUL members also debated the term "minority complaints."

The Gifford Report defined minorities as small, fragmented groups within houses who "do not always share the majority's values about personal privacy, peace and quiet, entertainment, etc.," emphasizing the fluid, shifting nature of these groups.

Tong predicted that students would associate minority with a certain group of people. Kevin Hirsch '82 questioned, "Who's a minority? It seems the term can be easily mangled."

The subcommittee report did not discuss how funds would be allocated to minority interests. "That's very much up in the air," noted Kenyatta. "The subcommittee couldn't come to any agreement on that. We'll have to hash it out in the CUL meetings."

The subcommittee would also create a house governance subcommittee to the Housing Committee to define the role of House presidents and other officers.

The CUL will continue discussion of the residential system as it takes on the Gifford Report itself this afternoon.

Faculty approves major changes

by Susan Kandel and Katya Hokanson

Two new freshman-level studio art courses will replace two sophomore-level courses under revisions of the studio art curriculum approved by the faculty two weeks ago.

Art 111 and 112 will replace Art 211 and 212 as requirements for the studio art major, according to art professor Edward Epping, and a junior seminar course, the equivalent of Art History 301, has been added to the major requirements.

Other plans include adding Art 110, a drawing course for College gets George grant

The College has received a $100,000 grant to establish a Henry George Fund for the study of progress and social justice from the Robert Schalkenbach Foundation in New York.

To be administered through the economics department, the grant will become part of the permanent endowment of the College, and income from the fund will be used to acquire books and support faculty research on social justice.

The fund will also be used to establish the Henry George Lecture on Social Justice, to be given every other year by a distinguished social theorist.

"The research of some members of the economics department, and the close ties of the department with the Center for Development Economics at Williams mesh nicely with the concerns of the Schalkenbach Foundation," commented Gordon Winston, chairman of the economics department.

Henry George was a late 19th century American economist whose writings focused on the problem of the persistence of poverty in nations of growing wealth and on the proper role of taxation in combining economic growth with social justice.

non-majors, and raising the number of sophomore level drawing courses from two to three. During spring semester, one oil-painting course will replace one of the two watercolor courses currently in the curriculum.

Drawing emphasized

The new plans call for giving more importance to drawing, according to Epping, who called the changes "quite a revision in current standing."

Art 110, explained Epping, will be a basic drawing course, intended for those who may simply want to take a studio course. Art 111 and 112, which must be taken as one full-year course and which will be required for majors, will divide art into the pre-1950s and post 1950s. The latter will discuss more modern art media such as performance, film, and video, Epping remarked.

Senior Studio Art Major Joel Bernard said the new freshman-level courses would allow "greater access for freshman" to studio classes.

The junior seminar will be required of all art studio majors, said Epping, and will treat ideas relevant to contemporary art, combining the historical and critical aspects of art with actual studio work.

Hard arteries

Numerous changes in Division II departments were also approved by the faculty, involving the addition of 19 new courses and the revision of six courses.

The self-paced Keller Plan, under which Psychology 101 is taught each spring, will be modified. The new format will increase the amount of class time over that previously used in the spring semester, and increase the amount of self-paced instruction used each fall.

The original Keller plan, according to Lawrence Graver of the CEP, "died of hardening of the arteries."

The faculty also voted to continue the Critical Languages three year test program, through which students may study Arabic, Chinese, Hebrew, Japanese and Swahili.

To date, 39 students have enrolled in the self-study program, entrance to which requires faculty approval. Tutors are hired for two to three hours per week of drill work in the language, but it is the student's responsibility to work on grammar individually.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE. 118 Water St., 10 am - 2 pm, Monday-Friday. Phone 458-8157.
THEATER TRIP TO THE U.S.S.R. April 9 to 19th, Moscow and Leningrad. Five performances: opera, ballet, circus. Plus daily sightseeing and more. $999, includes all. Karl Rodman, 12 Orchard Heights, New Paltz, NY 12561. Tel. (914) 255-1955.
Congratulations Phil, (chunks)—You're a man.

WANTED: I am Koala to write to gemini in Yugo. Must be blond, cute, loveable. App.S. Sohler. Greetings, TK! Love, Jean.
"Will thou not believe me simply because I lie?"
—Fardricke Dunn 1966
"A caterpillar...a moth...a half eaten pair of slacks."
—Mills Look 1968
Anyone Interested In advertising for the RECORD please contact S.U. 1829.

STARTS SUNDAY

The Year's Most Powerful Story of Love & Courage

"JONI... may be the most moving human interest drama God has ever permitted mere man to produce."
—Baltimore News-American
"Joni portrays herself... a sterling performance."
—Minneapolis Star

STARRING JONI EARECKSON AS HERSELF

EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS WILLIAM F. BROWN PRODUCED BY FRANK R. JACOBSON
A WORLD WIDE PICTURES RELEASE DIRECTED BY JAMES F. COLLIER
SCREENPLAY BY JAMES F. COLLIER BASED ON THE BEST-SELLING BOOK JONI BY JONI EARECKSON WITH JOE MULLER

IMAGES CINEMA
MARCH 14, 15, 16

JONI COUPONS ACCEPTED
NO OTHER PASSES

Spring Classics

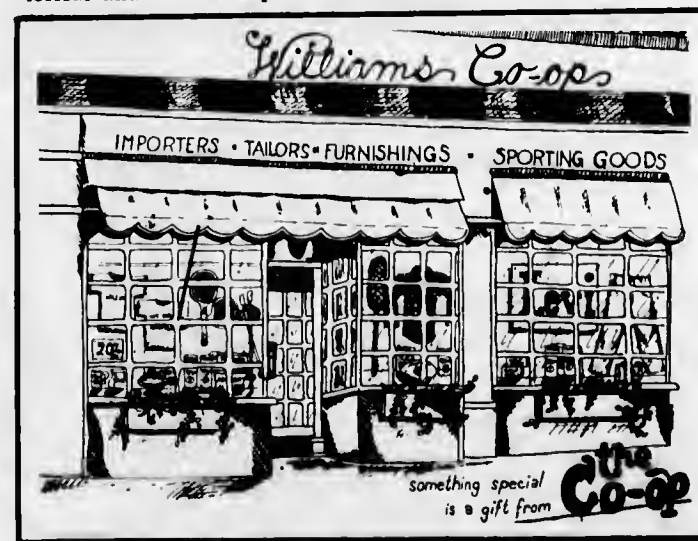

Bass*
Sunjuns Too.

$29.00

Bass* takes summer comfort one step further with Sunjuns Too. Dependable comfort on suede wrapped cushioned innersoles. Classic styles in leather and fabric uppers.

Sunjuns Too...for the summer in you.
Have a Great Spring Break!

Salvatore's
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
CONCERNED WITH FASHION.
FIT AND QUALITY

GOING TO FIND THE SUN?
Don't forget to take along your
DR. SCHOLLS
EXERCISE SANDALS
AT
Harts' Pharmacists, Inc.
$17.99 a pair
Enjoy Your Spring Break !

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film/info - March 8, 4:00 p.m.,
Interviews - March 9, 9-5:00,
Office of Career Counseling.

STUDENT CREDIT

Ever wish that while traveling, vacationing, or maybe just for emergencies, you could have a national credit card?

Well, now — YOU CAN — obtain a Master Card or Visa while still in school, no co-signer required.

We have established a division to exclusively handle the credit needs of college students... freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors... so you can enjoy the conveniences of credit NOW, and have your credit established for your professional life after graduation.

On a 3 x 5 card, print your name and complete address. (Enclose $2.00 for postage and handling.) Send to:

Creative Credit International Collegiate Credit Division
Suite 303—Penn Lincoln Bldg.
789 Penn Avenue
Pittsburgh, PA 15221

Close votes mark committee races

With winning margins in several races as small as two or three votes, the remaining seats on student committees were filled in last week's run-off races.

Matt Lynch and Meredith McGill were elected Class of '83 representatives to the Honor and Discipline Committee after Lynch squeaked by Jim Brault 72-70.

Cesar Alvarez and Herve Jean-Baptiste filled the Honor and Discipline Committee after Lynch squeaked by Jim Brault 72-70.

Phillips came out just three votes ahead of Salim Currimjee to join Laura Volpe in representing the Class of '85.

In other run-off decisions, John Denaro edged Lee Bernstein 110-105 to become the freshman representative to the Committee on Undergraduate Life. Martha Platt '83 and John McNichols '84 were also elected to the committee.

Elizabeth Jex '83 came out only four votes ahead of Kathy Galica '83 to be the Division I representative to the Committee on Educational Policy, while Chinyere Okoronkwo '83 will represent Division II majors.

The first election for the new Honorary Degrees Committee, which will decide on Convocation and graduation speakers, was very close and resulted in a tie between Class of '83 contenders Elizabeth Coleman and Prasanna Parthasarathi, who each had 76 votes. John Segal '82, vice president of the College Council, said that he will sit down next week with President John Chandler, Coleman and Parthasarathi to determine the final outcome. Lisa Ellers and Mitchell Anderson, '83, were also elected to the Degrees Committee.

Few take interdisciplinary route

For students who don't feel that normal major programs meet their needs, the College reserves ten places in each class for so-called "contract majors."

"The contract major has made a big difference in keeping me here," remarked Ellen Vander Schaaf '83. "I was getting upset about my future prospects."

One of the seven contract majors presently at Williams, Vander Schaaf said she was dissatisfied with her biology and psychology double major, and concluded that her interest in memory and learning could best be explored with a contract major in neural science.

The application procedure is not overly difficult. "The Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) is willing to approve the plan if you have put a lot of thought into it," she observed.

In order to be considered for the program, which was established about six years ago, the student must first get endorsement from two faculty members. The professors, who must be from different departments, must be willing to take a crucial role in the contract major's "implementation, criticism, and ultimate validation," according to the student handbook.

Next the student must submit to his advisers a written statement describing the area of study, a list of the minimum of nine courses to be included in the major, and a list of the courses the student needs to complete remaining divisional requirements.

Upon approval of the advisers, a dean submits the proposal to the Committee on Educational Policy, which votes on each case separately. To earn a degree with honors, eleven courses and one Winter Study are required. The honors thesis ordinarily consists of two semesters' work along with a Winter Study.

The appeal of the program for Margaret Guerra '82 is that it "has a certain interdisciplinary unity that's different from working in a department." Guerra, a contract major in Renaissance studies, said that submitting her proposal seemed "terribly difficult," but was worth it.

Since her main adviser went on leave, Guerra had to find new advisers to support her undertakings.

"The unity and responsibility for continuity fell on me," said Guerra. "I had to let (the major) not just become a bunch of classes."

Guerra does not plan to write a thesis, but recently finished an independent project on Renaissance sculptor Donatello and architect Alberti.

Contract majors must take a combination of courses regularly offered, along with some independent studies, including a senior major course. The student must have a particular theme in mind, explained O'Connor, and must demonstrate that the particular focus cannot be explored following the normal route.

A progress report must be submitted in April of the junior and senior years, listing grades, changes, and including the advisers' signatures.

O'Connor described the contract major program as a sort of "tutorial system." The program is expensive in terms of time and money, he stressed. He also emphasized that the student risks not having a conventional major to fall back upon should something go wrong.

Independent students praise flexibility

by Annabelle Cone

A few weeks ago, I told my roommate, "I wish I could read whatever I wanted this semester." As a second semester senior, I wanted a chance to study books that I had always wanted to read, but were not on any syllabus.

As a result, I am one of 95 students this semester who are doing independent studies as alternatives to regular courses.

After filling out a petition describing the project, we must seek an adviser with whom we will work closely. Independent projects must be approved by the Committee on Educational Policy and by the department which will give credit for it. The topic and the timetable are determined by both the student and the adviser, and the adviser is responsible for the final grading.

The projects range from creative work to laboratory research to interdepartmental pursuits.

Mary McGill '82 is doing honors work on American avant-garde art of the 1920s and 1930s. As an art history major with a strong concentration in English, she finds that studying a period in which the two disciplines were so closely linked "bridges the gap between art and literature."

Flexibility is seen as another advantage of independent study. McGill plans to look at original paintings in New York and Boston. "By arranging my own unofficial field trips, I can supplement the reading that I do," she said.

For those students who need to work hours at a time in a museum, a lab, a piano room, or in the case of Duffy Graham '83, the WCFM studios, freedom to work whenever they please is an important factor.

Graham's project, "The Sociology of Modern Culture: Politics in Popular Music," involves the reading of sociology books and hours of listening to music.

Dance in Talley's heart

Ed's note: Producers, directors, and writers of upcoming events are invited to contribute to From the Director's chair, a new regular feature of the Arts department in which upcoming shows are discussed by those who know them best—the producers themselves. Interviews and viewpoint pieces are acceptable. Interested parties are urged to contact the Entertainment Editor two weeks prior to scheduled performances.

by Kip Cinnamon

On the evenings of March 5th and 6th, Williamstown had the opportunity to view the first entirely student organized AMT mainstage production Feral Precocity, choreographed and produced by Ken Talley '82. Kip Cinnamon was on hand following the opening performance to speak with Ken about his production.

RECORD: What do you intend to suggest with the title Feral Precocity?

TALLEY: Feral refers to wild and animal-like, and precocity to precociousness. The dances both represent and actually are wild and uninhibited young people doing their thing, trying to anyway, at least from one person's viewpoint.

RECORD: This was an entirely student initiated and organized project. How did you put it together?

TALLEY: Getting the money together was just a lot of footwork. Campus organizations and houses—most of the houses anyway—were pretty responsive.

The Williams Department of Theater and Cap and Bells bent over backwards for us. This has been the first show performed on the mainstage without direct faculty control.

Ted Colburn, our stage manager provided the big push to go for the mainstage which I doubted we could get.

FROM THE DIRECTOR'S CHAIR

RECORD: How was the music chosen?

TALLEY: Generally the music is secondary. It was chosen to fit the dance. However, with the two numbers written by John Russell '82 and Dan Morris '84, I worked closely with the composers. We talked about how we could coordinate our ideas and make it work.

RECORD: What are the creative roots from which your dances grow?

TALLEY: These are things I have in me, right here, in my heart.

RECORD: What things?

TALLEY: For instance, the theme of how men and women affect each other ran through the trilogies. "Vintage", the first trio, emphasized the stud, while the third trio "More Melancholy than Sad" suggested the unsure, indecisive man. One took both women; the other couldn't make up his mind. In contrast the three women in the second trio "Blue not Brown" portray the warmth and solidarity of solely female companionship. Another piece "Each and All" put men in very vulnerable positions, a kind of role reversal, showing men can be tender and bruised.

RECORD: So love and relationships are a central focus. Where does this come from?

TALLEY: Hey, I look around me and see love isn't all it's cut out to be. It puts people in awkward situations. A lot of the dances focus on Williams College. When you talk about love relationships here, people often appear superficially united, but really they're torn by the ambiguities of insufficient communication. I tried to show this.

RECORD: As a senior, is this an undergraduate culmination?

TALLEY: Yes, but I didn't get any credit for it. It was a lot of hard work. I could get credit if there was a dance major at Williams, which I'm sorry there isn't.

RECORD: What are your future plans?

TALLEY: Either law school or dancing. Dance law may be a growth field, you never know.

Playing dead with Rock

by Duffy Graham

Van Morrison said recently that he no longer wants to be associated in any way with rock & roll. With his new album, Beautiful Vision, he need not worry about any such associations.

Morrison, with the reputation of a mystic, was always temperamental and unpredictable. He always projected a distance from his listeners, but now, as a result of his attitudes and his personal life, he has removed himself too much from his audience. He says rock is dead; rock is a business. Making records is, to him, a job and nothing more.

All of his traditional concerns—being an Irishman who lives away from the turmoil of his homeland, a yearning to rediscover a peaceful homeland, and finding a way to be free in the world—are present on Beautiful Vision, as two of the song titles, "Celtic Ray" and "Beautiful Vision," suggest. But the vocal deliveries are empty, and the emerging impression is that Morrison is perfunctorily going through the motions. He is an expert musical arranger, but the sounds here are only nice, if not, more accurately, dull. This album misses because he places his themes in the wrong musical context. Rock is their proper forum.

"I'm not concerned," Morrison told an interviewer, "with what people think about what I'm doing. I just do what I do. Take it or leave it."

Leave it.

CORRECTION: We regret that Bruce Kelly's name was inadvertently omitted from his piece "What's in the Belfry?" which appeared in last week's Record.

Arts Beats

Seamus Heaney, described as "Ireland's greatest poet since Yeats," by poet Robert Lowell, will perform a reading of his work next Monday.

Critic Harold Bloom referred to Heaney as "keyed and pitched unlike any significant poet now at work in the language, anywhere." Heaney has recently completed a new volume of poems entitled "Field Work." The lecture is free and open to the public.

"The Collection"

This Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Cap and Bells present "The Collection," a one act play by the renowned British dramatist Harold Pinter.

The story involves three men and a woman searching for the truth about an alleged affair between one of the men and another man's wife. In the process, it makes an important statement about the thin lines between truth and falsehood, reality and illusion.

African Dance

Chuck Davis and members of his dance company will begin a six week residency at Williams College starting on April 5, focusing on the general theme, "Sherehe: An African Experience." Davis has a distinguished record as a well known teacher of African, Afro-Caribbean, modern and jazz dancing. Beginners and dancers alike are encouraged to participate and may call Judith Madden at Weston for additional information (Mon-Fri., 9-12 at 597-2391).

Composers to Lecture

The Tremont String Quartet performance scheduled for March 16 at 8:30 in Brooks Rogers will have an additional attraction: the presence of two of the composers, James Willey and Raoul Pleskow. Both composers will be available to speak about composing and their compositions in particular at a 4:15 workshop to be held the afternoon of the performance in Bernhard Music Center.

Batman to Oscar Wilde

Great Price stirs students

by Richard Dodds Jr.

In his two-day whirlwind tour last week, actor Vincent Price lectured to, performed for, and chatted with hundreds of students, faculty, and townspeople. Many attended his dramatic lectures; probably half as many more who would have liked to attend simply could not because of insufficient space.

"The Villains Still Pursue Me", a dramatic lecture, opened the series of appearances on Monday, March 1 at the Adams Memorial Theatre. An aggregation of poems and soliloquies, humorous memoirs and personal glimpses of villainous greats, the two hour presentation rarely wavered in its maintenance of high audience interest. Mr. Price would make an academic point about acting as a villain, then enhance it with a story or two. The titillating tidbits always evoked a special satisfying laughter from audiences that can be described only as warm and relaxed, and gave a clue as to why Mr. Price has such wide appeal.

It is difficult, indeed, to name any other actor today who can boast of the same recognition and respect from different generations as Vincent Price. In a career that has spanned half a century Mr. Price has had the unusual chance to work with the greats of both today and yesteryear, yet his name elicits roughly the same response in me as it used to in my parents in their teen years. Monday's lecture pointed out the wide span of ages drawn by Mr. Price's allure: one section of the audience buzzed reminiscently at the mention of his 1958 sci-fi classic The Fly, while a totally separate group cheered and clapped wildly for Price's portrayal of Egghead fame in the late Batman TV series.

One possible explanation for Vincent Price's long reign in the usually whimsical throne of fame is his obvious intelligence. Studying at Yale and in London gave him the foundation he would then use to form himself into an actor of the 'old' school, the school to which Clark Gable and Cary Grant belong. He is one of the few remaining thespians who exemplifies the witty, articulate and refined actor one used to find in films of past decades.

One other explanation for Mr. Price's notoriety is simply his acting: his actual conduct on stage, believability, and rapport with the audience. In a last minute change of plans, Mr. Price consented to replace his Tuesday afternoon lecture on the making of horror films with a performance of the first act of his one-man show "Delights and Diversions". As Oscar Wilde, Mr. Price was a tremendous hit and in his own element. He captured Wilde's wit, charm, and self-realization of brilliance to a tee. Intermingling Wilde's honesty with his healthy ego and gentle wit, Price captured the essence of the writer's genius and struck a chord of melancholy in us all that so few men like Wilde exist today.

The most heartening comfort after the performance was the knowledge that we were in the company of just such a man at the moment. Of the many statements Mr. Price made about villains, (kids are crazy about them; they must keep you guessing; they come in many different styles, etc.) one theme was prevalent. The gothic tales of the past, as opposed to today's gory horror films, had a flavor all their own that made them special. Instead of smut there was wit; rather than mumbling psychopaths, the villains were interesting characters with an "eloquent disdain"; and the intriguing mixture of fear of suggestion with laughter had not been replaced by sheer violent terror.

Vincent Price is not the museum piece so many of his contemporaries have become, but a living legend in the true meaning of the phrase. He can still pack the houses because people want to reassure themselves that men of his caliber still exist—that their memories haven't been overly imaginative in recounting fading eras. And judging from Mr. Price's two day visit to Williams, he satisfied many questioning minds. One is reminded of a statement of his about the old-time villains: "They last forever."

Ready for take-off?

No, it's not Kennedy Airport, merely a scene from Feral Precocity, performed this past weekend at the Adams Memorial Theatre.

Concert Listings

prepared by Toonerville Trolley Records

Tues., Mar. 9 - Roger McGulinn, Jonathan Swift's, Boston, Mass.

Wed., Mar. 10 - Human Switchboard, JB Scott's, Albany

Betty Carter, Fine Arts Ctr. Concert Hall, U.Mass., Amherst, MA

Thurs., Mar. 11 - Nick Brignola, Lark Tavern, Albany

John Coster, La Cocina, Pittsfield, Mass. (every Thurs.)

Blotto, Tin Shop, Saratoga Springs, NY

Pastiche; Someone & the Somebodies, Channel, Boston

Fri., Mar. 12 - Son Seals Blues Band, JB Scott's, Albany, NY

Jimmy Dorsey & Tommy Dorsey Orchestras, Park Plaza Hotel Ballroom, Boston

Sat., Mar. 13 - Arlo Guthrie & Shenandoah, JB Scott's, Albany

Spyrogyra & Gato Barbieri, Opera House, Boston

Clancy Brothers, Roberts Ctr., Boston College, Newton, Mass.

Roberta Flack, Bushnell Auditorium, Hartford, Conn.

John Cage, David Tudor, etc., Symphony Space, New York, NY

Sun., Mar. 14 - New Moon Swing Band, Paul's, Albany, NY

Dave Brubeck Quartet & Gerry Mulligan Big Band, Symphony Hall, Boston

Arlo Guthrie & Shenandoah, Berkeley Performance Ctr., Boston

Mar. 16 - Cars, Boston Garden

U-2, U.Mass. at Boston, Boston

Mar. 17 - Nick Lowe, JB Scott's

Mar. 18 - Cars, Boston Garden

Mar. 19 - Ella Fitzgerald, Symphony Hall, Boston

Cash for textbooks from Wallace's College Book Company.

March 8-12 & 15-19 (9-4 only)
May 12-14 & 17-21 (9-4 only)

COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

1-800-424-8580. Positions must be filled quickly.

SCIENCE/MATH SKILLS WANTED: Overseas opportunity demanding self-confidence and maturity. You'll work with people of all ages in over 60 foreign countries. Tremendous challenge. Learn about yourself and others. It's the Peace Corps. Is it for you?

SCIENCE TEACHER: Elementary school has openings for two science teachers.

Peace Corps and VISTA Volunteers

Film/info - March 8, 4:00 p.m.,
Interviews - March 9, 9-5:00,
Office of Career Counseling.

Housing:

Continued from Page 1

considerate about turning music down after midnight (or after a few good bangs on the wall), but voices and typewriters carry very well. Some relief is provided by the antiseptic study room. One little known attraction is the large number of transfers and exchanges from other schools who end up in Prospect. Upperclassmen who stick Prospect out often end up with first crack at a good part of the annual Smith-Wellesley-Mt. Holyoke contingent.

Resident apathy has destroyed what little house unity traditional social scene and prefer to make the most of Prospect, but most people end up hating the place.

Dodd

Dodd manages to retain much New England charm with its wallpapered, carpeted rooms and hallways, beautiful living room, and cozy dining room.

The outlying houses offer many of the best rooms, but the main house provides a strong social base centered on the dining and the foosball table. House meetings and the Thursday night parties are well-attended—residents really know each other.

Despite this spacious room, Prospect has the reputation of being the worst house on campus.

ever existed. Pro House members generally fall into clearly defined social groups within the house, and these groups pursue their social interests privately or at other Houses' parties. Despite the cliquish atmosphere, most residents are friendly. House social activities range from pitiful to abysmal, and members pay dues in order to attend the big three parties (Homecoming, Winter Carnival, Spring Weekend). For example, Prospect sponsored a bowling trip last Friday. Nine people went, including the House faculty associate, his wife and his sister.

A strong plus for Pro House is its proximity to Driscoll, the best dining hall on campus. If you hate salad bar-scoping, Driscoll is the place to eat.

Prospect House is conducive to people who don't enjoy the Tyler House has a reputation as a "safety" for unlucky Dodd applicants—a reputation that is not entirely undeserved. New Tyler residents may be pleasantly surprised, however; Tyler offers individual baths and even a few fireplaces. The house is slated for major reno-great parties. Tips for new residents—bring plenty of posters to cover the cinder-block Annex walls and hope for a fireplace senior year.

Greylock

The four houses of the Greylock quad offer consistently good housing in a traditional college quadrangle atmosphere.

Bryant, Hopkins, Carter and Gladden houses are modern in their simple design, but the red brick construction and rolling landscape avoid the sterility that so often appears in modern architecture. Large windows provide a panoramic view of the Berkshires and serve to brighten the rooms. In early fall and late spring the large window ledges become private sun decks, giving the quad the appearance of a mass-production tanning factory.

Continued on next page

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

Wednesday, March 10

Banzai
Vodka Night

Open 1 p.m. Sundays

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Freshmen inclusion

Privacy is a distinct advantage to Greylock rooms. In singles or suites of two and four, everyone gets his or her own room—no double occupancy. The soundproofing is relatively good, so that many students choose to study in their rooms rather than migrate to some far corner of the campus.

Regarding house unity, this varies greatly from house to house. The privacy that is so appreciated at times can be an obstruction to a cohesive residence. The fact that so few people share a bathroom or a stairway makes chance acquaintances infrequent. It is not difficult to meet one's housemates, but a little extra effort may be necessary.

Greylock dining hall is bright and spacious, but there is no doubt that it is a cafeteria—not a dining room. Students used to seat themselves in specific sections for each house, but the loss of Row House dining sent a horde of Row House "foreigners" to descend upon Greylock. Although there was considerable worry about Greylock overpopulation, the influx of new people seems to have promoted a degree of intra-Greylock mingling that was unknown in years past.

Greylock guarantees a good, private room, pleasant grounds, and an adequate dining hall. Anything beyond that depends upon the student's initiative.

Mission Park

Mission Park is not highly sought-after housing, but sophomore year in "the Park" can be worthwhile if you like your class. A good part of it will be there with you, as few of the some 250 residents of Pratt, Armstrong, Millis, or Dennett are juniors or seniors.

Mission is the closest you can come at Williams to an urban lifestyle—it's big, lively, and a bit impersonal. There is an active social life ranging from house snacks to the hotly contested Mission Park Olympics to the famous (or infamous) "Armstrong Wreck Room" parties, but suites can also be too self-contained.

Ambiance, or the lack of it, drives many away after a year. Mission is a concrete gem decorated in a classic Early Linoleum style reminiscent of a large hospital. The sparsely furnished entries are conveniently color-coded in bright shades of red, yellow, blue, green, or orange.

The rooms are nice, if you like walls—each of the oddly-shaped rooms has at least six of them. All rooms are singles, which is fortunate considering their small size. They are carpeted, well-lit, and relatively quiet.

The dining hall is within the building, a definite convenience on a cold or wet day. Mission is well furnished with lounges, one of them with a big-screen TV. Suites consist of five to seven adjoining rooms, one of which is often used as a living room in the absence of a housing shortage.

Despite the random selection of house members, Mission houses tend to have consistent characters. Pratt is typically the rowdiest house and Dennett the quietest. But house unity varies due to the artificial nature of the houses.

In short, the Park isn't as bad as you may think. It's a good choice for sophomore year. And who knows? You may even decide to stay.

Spencer-Brooks

Spencer-Brooks has been transformed for the worse. This year it lost its dining; next year sistently nice underclass rooms.

Of the three, Agard is predominantly sophomore housing. Most rooms are singles, although it does have a few large one-room doubles. Its reputation for being far away from campus is undeserved—it is far by the road, but natives always take the "back way," which is sense of house unity.

Perry-Bascom President Tim Caffrey '82 has adopted the philosophy, "The House is What You Make of It."

Already blessed with some of the most spacious and attractive rooms and common areas on campus, Perry-Bascom this year has expanded its house activities beyond the traditional realm of cocktail parties and special weekend house parties.

Perry-Bascom, which next year will consist of Perry, Bascom, Chadbourne and Woodbridge houses, has organized weekly snacks and special brunches and dinners for its members and guests, although only a few house members attend them. This semester the house is sponsoring a series of informal faculty-student discussions in Perry.

Caffrey says he believes that in the past few years too much emphasis has been placed on a house's physical qualities. To a great extent Perry-Bascom's activities this year reflect an attempt to draw upon the talents of house members rather than to rely upon the myth that a beautiful house will naturally foster a beautiful social environment.

The shift has not been an entirely successful one. Clearly, the dining change has broken one very important common bond that linked the house's four living units. As a result many house members still do not know each other.

Beautiful Dodd houses beautiful people.

it will be saddled with all of West College. Granted, West has some big rooms, a great location, and promises of renovation—but some say nothing can make up for the linoleum floors and the narrow-hallway arrangement.

The rooms in Brooks and especially Spencer are very good. Making all of West part of this one social unit may help house unity, especially if worthwhile common rooms are created there. Good house leadership is counteracting the dining loss by being receptive to doing just about anything. The residents are diverse but surprisingly unified—most show up for house meetings.

Spencer has a beautiful small library and great spaces for frequently great parties. The last may be the house's greatest asset; many groups and freshman entries throw parties there, and residents crash them to meet a lot of new people.

A-Gar-Wood

Among the Row Houses, A-Gar-Wood stands apart. Besides having some of the highest dues on campus ($17 non-drinkers), the trio has con-much faster. A quiet house, Agard often hosts other houses' parties.

Wood houses upperclassmen almost exclusively. The three-room doubles are always snatched by the house's seniors, and some of the singles are larger than freshmen living rooms. Wood also has a new (unfinished) living room a la Dodd.

Across the street between these two houses is the social hub of the three, the old Tudor mansion, Garfield. Garfield has a nice mix of all upper classes. The sunniest of the three, Garfield has "great bathrooms"—lots of space and hot water. Its drawback is the hypersensitive fire alarm system, which has been known to go off for slamming a door too hard.

Socially, each house is a separate unit. Agard and Wood generally have nothing to do with one another, while Garfield plans and executes the big weekend parties.

Perry-Bascom

With the abolition of in-house dining this year, the Row Houses have been forced to find other ways in which to instill a

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.

Dr. Thomas R. Maselli

OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

STANFORD

summer session

Introductory and advanced courses, workshops and seminars in the arts, earth sciences, education, engineering, the humanities, social sciences, sciences, and mathematics.

June 21 through August 14

All students in good standing are invited to attend.

For a 1982 Stanford Summer Session Bulletin and application form, mail this coupon to Stanford Summer Session, Building 1, Stanford University, Stanford, CA 94305

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

RSVP

The way to go

SEE more,
ENJOY more,
SAVE fuel and
SAVE money—
TRAVEL in FULL COMFORT

FIVE DAILY
Thru-Service Trips

TO AND FROM BOSTON over the SCENIC MOHAWK
TRAIL

— WILLIAMSTOWN DEPARTURE TIMES —
6:15am 8:15am 12:15pm 2:15pm 5:15pm
Only 3-Hours 25-Minutes to Downtown Boston

Also Westward to Troy & Albany

1:45pm Daily Departure from Williamstown

Stop In Or Phone For Schedules & Tickets To All Points
THE WILLIAMS INN
MAIN STREET — WILLIAMSTOWN
PHONE 458-9371

IT'S A PLEASURE TO SERVE YOU

PACKAGE
SERVICE, TOO

Englander
COACH LINE S, Inc.

PICK UP CASH...

JOIN THE

6-PAK PICK UP

COULD YOUR CAMPUS GROUP USE A QUICK $500—$1,000?
IF YOU'VE GOT THE TIME...WE'VE GOT THE PLAN!

Miller Brewing Company and our local distributor are conducting an exciting six week contest on your campus. Your organization could qualify for one of the three $1,000.00 or three $500.00 cash awards. Winners will be determined at the conclusion of the contest. So remember, make your next pick up a Miller High Life, Lite or Löwenbräu. Quality pays off in many ways!! Contact your local Miller Campus Rep for more details.

INFORMATIONAL KICK-OFF PARTY

Wednesday, March 10 at 7 p.m.
at Dodd House

PICK-UP's will be on Mondays:

March 15, April 5, 12, 19, 26, May 3.

Contact Campus Representatives for more information.

Tom Casey x6278

Jon Dayton x6269

Women's basketball takes NIAC third

by Ted Leon

An elated group of women stormed into Baxter Hall Sunday night, rambunctiously celebrating a 80-56 blow-out victory over Skidmore College in the consolation round of the Northeast Intercollegiate Athletic Conference (NIAC) women's basketball championships.

Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin summed up the game: "We got ahead and never looked back... It was a good final game. Everybody played."

In fact it was a slaughter from the start. The Ephwomen took their commanding 38-19 halftime lead and rolled to an easy victory, putting five players in double figures.

Lynne Jaycocks '85 led the team with 16 points, followed by Tracy Burroughs '84 and a healthy Terry Dancewicz '82 with 13 apiece. Anne Dancewicz '82 and Kay Lackey '85 both chipped in with eleven.

In Saturday's first-round game, Williams lost to Smith College 52-67, despite excellent offensive performances from Jaycocks (16 points) and Terry Dancewicz (20 points).

Thus, with the win over Skidmore, the women's basketball team finished third in the NIAC tournament, and wrapped up a highly successful season.

The 1982 team took yet another Little Three Championship, despite losing senior co-captain and all-time high scorer Terry Dancewicz for a number of weeks.

Losing stars

Terry and her sister Anne will be sorely missed next year. Anne maintained a steady double-digit scoring average for each of her four years, while Terry broke several school records, only to fall short of the 1000 point mark due to a disabling injury. Terry came back strong and was named to NIAC's All-Tournament team.

All is not lost, however, for a strong freshman class returns. Heading that list is Jaycocks, who scored 32 points over the weekend, led the team with ten steals, and put in a pair of fine defensive efforts.

Hoopsters downed in finale—

Continued from Page 12

Wesleyan roared out in the second half to obliterate a 36-33 Eph lead and go ahead by as much as 13.

Season sum-up

The Ephmen finished the season at 12-10, tied with Wesleyan at 1-3 in the Little Three (Amherst was 4-0). But included in those twelve wins were some outstanding games against some of the top teams in New England.

Especially exciting were the back-to-back victories over Tufts and Clark, who came into Lasell as number one teams and went out humbled losers.

Another highlight of the season was the five wins in a row during which MVP Al Lewis led the Ephmen to victory in the Berkshire Classic at North Adams.

Next year also looks good for the Ephmen. "We've got a good nucleus," said Peck. "For the first time in a while, we've got a center." Indeed, one of the brightest spots of this season is the maturation of O'Day into an excellent ballplayer.

Lost will be captains Lewis and Fasulo and seniors Whit Magruder and Joe Daigneault (who all started Saturday). Their loss will hurt, but there are people waiting in the wings.

Freshman Peter Griffith and Tim Rives are two of the best players to come up from this year's JV team (5-11). Coach Erv Chambliss says Griffith is the quickest guard he's seen this season and forward Rives led the team in scoring.

COLLEGE GRADS

- Agriculture -Business
- Engineering
- Fisheries/Forestry
- Home Economics
- Mathematics
- Natural Resources
- Nursing/Health
- Science -Vocational Ed.

Your degree/experience could qualify you for Peace Corps positions in Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Caribbean, So. Pacific. Learn a new language. Experience a new culture. Must be US citizen, single/married, no dependents. NO UPPER AGE LIMIT. Generous living allowance, paid travel, health benefits. Contact reps for info/tim, 4:00 pm, March 8, for interviews, 9-5:00 March 9 at Office of Career Counseling.

Div. I tourney

V-ball places sixth in NE

Thanks to impressive wins over MIT and Maine, the men's volleyball team was placed sixth out of twenty-two teams at the New England Collegiate Volleyball Open last weekend. Williams was the highest placing Division II squad in the tournament, losing to Yale in the quarterfinals, but posting a 6-2 tournament record over four Division I opponents.

This year's squad was the first in Williams history to reach the quarterfinal round of this tournament which is perennially dominated by Division I schools.

Play began early Saturday at MIT as Williams split games with Boston College who went on to play in the semifinals.

Round two found the Ephs splitting two with New Hampshire, taking the first 15-7 and dropping the second 9-15.

The squad caught fire in rounds three and four however, dominating Maine and MIT by controlling the net and playing excellent defense.

The quarterfinals saw the Ephs taking on a tough Yale squad. Williams fell behind early in game one as Yale ran out to a 7-4 lead, but the Ephs came back to tie the game at eleven. From there, the Yale attack turned on and the game ended 15-11. Game two saw Yale jump out fast again, but the Williams offense could post no comeback this time, and the Ephs dropped the game and the match.

Tonight Williams travels to Westfield State for its final match of the season. The squad's undefeated 9-0 record will be on the line.

After the regular season will be the Division II New England Championships, in which the Ephs will probably be seeded number one. Williams will be seeking revenge over arch-rival Providence College for two losses last year.

THE CLIP SHOP

At the Clip Shop we're excited about the coming trends for spring!

Hair will be making a splash starting right now and continuing until fall.

Those who want to be a little bit dramatic, a little bit different will find what they're looking for at the Clip Shop.

MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
The academic unit of Massachusetts General Hospital

offers graduate level programs in nursing, social work and speech-language pathology especially designed for college graduates.

The Social Work in Health Care Program leads to a graduate certificate after one year of study and prepares students for LSWA licensure and specialized practice in a variety of health settings.

MGH Institute of Health Professions
Bartlett 410A
Massachusetts General Hospital
Boston, MA 02114

(617) 726-3140

BEER SPECIAL High End

Heineken Beer 15.99/case

Low End

Wiedemann Beer 12 oz. NR 5.99/case

"Do you get the needies for your Wiedies?"

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is freshman Lynne Jacobs who tallied 32 points to boost the Ephwomen to third place in the NIAC basketball championships. Lynne, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

This Summer, Cornell

What better place to be than far above Cayuga's waters as you improve your writing skills, work with computers, participate in a pre-law program, or take a course in conceptual drawing? Nowhere else can you learn in the company of so diverse a group of faculty and students in such a uniquely attractive setting of hills, lakes, gorges and waterfalls.

At Cornell, you can fulfill requirements, accelerate your degree program, or simply take advantage of the opportunity to study those intriguing subjects that you have always put off.

Request an Announcement and see for yourself all the reasons why Cornell is the place you should be this summer. Tuition is $145 per semester credit or less.

Cornell University Summer Session, B13 Ives Hall, Ithaca, New York 14853

Harvard wins nationals here at WC Ephmen finish in sixth

by Gordon Ceisender

This past weekend, the best collegiate squash players in the country were all right here in Williamstown to compete in the 1982 National Intercollegiate Squash Championships. When the smoke finally cleared on Sunday afternoon, there were three big winners: Harvard University, which captured the six-man team trophy; Yale's Victor Wagner, who won the "A" division; and the many spectators who filled the galleries to witness some of the finest squash to grace the Williams courts in years.

With one point per win in each of the three main draws and ½ point per win in the consolation draws, Harvard amassed a total of 22 points to win team tournament honors over Princeton, finishing second with 20 points. The University of Toronto was third with 19 points, followed closely by Yale (18½).

Williams finished in a very respectable sixth place with twelve points, just ½ point behind Western Ontario. Williams was the highest scoring small college, topping rivals Tufts, Trinity, Dartmouth, and UPenn.

All six Ephmen competing were successful in their first-round matches. Sophomores

Tom Harrity, Jeff Sultar, and Jamie Kling, numbers two, three and six respectively, played tough against three highly-ranked players in the second-round but could not secure victories.

Seeded sixth in the "A" division, All-American Williams sophomore Greg Zaff displayed his explosive brand of squash to crush his first three opponents without losing a game. In the quarter finals, he ran into number one seed David Boyam of Harvard.

A huge crowd assembled to see the showdown and cheer Zaff on, but Zaff was unable to pull off the upset, bowing to Boyam in three close games. Zaff's play was so strong that he was named to the All-Tournament team on Sunday.

Williams number four player, sophomore sensation Bill Nau, was unseeded in the "B" Division, but fought his way to the quarterfinals by defeating number eight seed Scott Shuman of Yale and other fine players. He was downed in four games by Paul Dunning of Toronto, number three seed and subsequent finalist in the "B" division. Dunning was later presented the tournament's Sportsmanship Trophy.

Seeded fifth in the "C" division, senior co-captain Kennon

Williams number one player Greg Zaff '84 lines up a shot during the intercollegiate squash championships held at Williams this weekend. (Farley)

Miller became the third Ephman to reach the quarterfinals, where he was stopped by number three seed Jon Moore of Princeton. Miller, who set a Williams record with his 19-1 record in match competition this year, will be sorely missed by the Purple and Gold next year.

In the finals on Sunday, the "A" division was all upsets.

Everything had gone as expected up to that point with the top four seeds in the semifinals. But fourth seeded Victor Wagner of Yale downed Boyam in a fifth-game tie-breaker, and third-seeded Saki Khan of Tufts topped second seed Allen Grant of Toronto.

The finals saw Wagner overcome Khan in a thrilling five-game match. Khan electrified the crowd with blazing rallies and superb dropshots, displaying some of the finest racquet skills of the tournament. Nonetheless, Wagner's cool head, lightning-quick speed, and anticipation enabled him to get to many of Khan's shots. He eventually forced Khan into mistakes in key situations.

In the "B" division, top seed Tom Sheperd of Princeton withstood stomach cramps in the middle of the second game to defeat third-seed Paul Dunning of Toronto in just three games. Sheperd lost one game in his five tournament matches and was especially tough in the final, where he wore down the speedy and very talented Dunning.

Number one seed Charlie Duffy of Harvard outsmarted seventh seed Julian Benello of Yale to win the "C" tourney in three games.

Swimmers sweep NE

by Jim Roche

Capping off a nearly flawless season, the Williams men's swim team easily captured their fourth consecutive crown at the New England championship held last weekend at the University of Rhode Island.

The Ephmen garnered an impressive 494 points by notching at least a fifth place finish in fifteen of eighteen events, and left second place Tufts in their wake with only 371 points.

Williams sweep

The victory completed a Williams sweep of the event, as the women won their third consecutive NE title the week before.

The team was led by senior co-captain Mike Regan, whose two individual wins and two relay victories made him a co-winner of the Robert Muir award, presented to the senior scoring the most points in Association championships. The award is named after former Williams swim coach, the great Robert Muir.

Regan leads

Regan took first in the 50 freestyle Friday night and the 100 free on Saturday night. Along with junior teammates Jeff Mook, Ben Aronson, and Richard Bowman, Regan also won the 800 free relay. His final victory was in the 400 free relay with sophomores Jeff Mills and Rob Sommer and junior Frank Fritz.

Williams' next leading scorer was Sommer, who, along with his relay win, finished first in the 200 individual medley, second in the 200 back stroke, and third in the 100 back.

Another triple scorer was Aronson, who won the 200 butterfly, followed Sommer with a third place finish in the 200 I.M., and was fourth in the 1650 free. Junior diver Jim Stockton continued to perform well after a lengthy mid-season layoff, taking second in the one meter diving and seventh in the three meter.

The one other first for the Ephmen was in the 400 medley relay. Freshmen played a big role in the win with Peter Orphanos and John Peloso teaming up with Dave Rowley '83 and sophomore Mills. Freshman Robert Kirkpatrick also helped the cause with a fourth place finish in the 400 I.M.

Headed to nationals

With New England now over, both the men and the women are looking ahead to NCAA Division III national competition. This weekend the women's squad will return to the University of Massachusetts in Boston, where the ten swimmers who qualified for the nationals will compete. The following weekend, the men's swim team will travel to Virginia for their national meet.

Head Coach Carl Samuelson and his teams will be trying to collect their first Division III national title ever, and judging from the strong regular season performances and the sweep of the New England championships, the teams should be strong contenders. Last year, the Williams men finished third at the big meet.

Ephs nipped in last-second thriller, 78-76

by John Clayton

Their last-minute comeback attempt falling short, the basketball team lost the last game of the season to Wesleyan, 78-76.

After being down as much as 13 with 11 minutes left in the game, the Ephmen came back, led by Steve O'Day '83 and Art Pidloriano '84. In the next seven minutes, O'Day had 11 points, and Pidloriano had eight, until a short jumper by O'Day tied it at 73 with 3:40 left.

After two more points by each side, Williams played a delay game, holding for the last shot. Steve O'Day was intentionally fouled with 20 seconds left, and made one of the two foul shots.

Last chance

But the Cardinals came right back, and Bill Stephan hit a jumper with six seconds left to give Wesleyan a 77-76 lead. The Ephmen got a break, though, when Al Lewis was fouled on the inbounds pass. However, he missed the one-and-one.

Wesleyan gave Williams one more chance, as Stephan also missed a foul shot, and the Ephmen had the ball under their own basket with two seconds left. However, they threw the ball away, and the ballgame ended.

"We made a terrific comeback," said Coach Bob Peck, "but it wasn't enough."

Ephmen rolling

The game had started out well for Williams, as they were able to score at will against the Wesleyan zone defense. O'Day (24 points) was able to score from low and high post, and Captain Jeff Fasulo '82 scored all of his ten points in that half.

Continued on Page 11

Sophomore Seth Toney wheels on North Adams State opponent in driving for the hoop in the Ephs victory in two-on-two competition during half-time of the Wesleyan game Saturday night. (Farley)

Skiers downed in Div. I

Travelling to the site of the 1980 Winter Olympics, the men's skiing team competed in the NCAA Skiing Championships last weekend. The Ephmen matched ability with 200 skiers from 22 of the nation's other top Division I ski teams, and were soundly reminded as to just how tough big time competition can be. Overall, Williams placed twelfth, a satisfactory finish, moving up from last year's fourteenth.

The Eph skiers and head Coach Bud Fisher expected to place among the top ten. Unfortunately, Williams was beset with falls in the challenging downhill events which demanded all-out, no-caution racing.

The women travel to Stowe, Vt. this weekend for their national championships.

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 20

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

March 16, 1982

Tuition jumps to $10,731

Federal cuts add $140 per student says Chandler

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Tuition and fees for the 1982-83 school year will rise to $10,731, an increase of 10.4 percent over this year's $9,716, President John Chandler announced Friday.

Tuition will increase by $850, room and telephone by $60 and board by $105, said Chandler in his letter to students and their parents.

He mentioned the need to keep faculty salaries abreast of inflation as a major factor in the increase.

Treasurer William Reed said the College tries to raise faculty salaries at a rate one or two percent above the inflation rate of the previous year, which for 1981-82 was nearly nine percent.

Quality faculty

"The central element in the excellence of Williams is the quality of the faculty," explained Chandler.

"Other colleges compete with Williams for faculty," noted Reed. "So the College must give faculty an incentive to stay."

While inflation is behind the faculty salary increases, food and heating prices have remained relatively stable, according to Chandler. The board cost hike is seven percent, less than the rate of inflation, and heating costs are leveling off because of the current glut on world oil markets.

Reductions in federal financial aid grant and loan programs proposed by the Reagan Administration are another factor behind the tuition increase.

The College will lose an estimated $267,000 in federal aid, a 35 percent decrease, Chandler explained. "The loss added about $140 to per student tuition," Chandler said. "Without the cutbacks, the increase would have been about nine percent, about the same as the inflation rate."

Chandler said Williams is relatively less hurt by the cutbacks than comparable schools, some of which received three times as much federal aid as Williams.

Enrollment drop

The College will reduce enrollment next year because over-crowding in residential houses has increased in recent years, Chandler said.

The enrollment reduction will cause a projected loss of $175,000 in tuition fees, according to Chandler.

Last year the freshman class was unusually large, as was the number of transfers and returnees. This year the Admissions Office will cut back on the number of freshmen, transfers and exchanges accepted.

Chandler pointed to the College's fund-raising efforts, its endowment and savings from the elimination of Row House dining as reasons why the College has been able to keep tuition increases down to 10 percent while similar institutions have increased tuition from 12 to 16 percent.

Good fund year

Williams had its best fund-raising year in 1980-81, raising over $11 million in gifts. Williams' endowment now stands at $120 million, making it one of the best-endowed small colleges in the nation.

Chandler attributed the growth of the endowment to its "high quality management." High interest rates allowed the College to make some profitable investments this year, Reed explained.

Tuition accounts for about 60 percent of the College's total operating expenses. The remaining 40 percent comes from gifts and the endowment. Many other comparable institutions depend on tuition to fund up to 90 percent of their expenses.

Three hundred escape houses

by Brett McDonnell

About 320 students applied for house transfers this year, almost 100 more than last year, according to Housing Committee Co-Chairman John O'Rourke, '82.

All the requests have been processed and the Student Housing Office released the final results today on how many requests were granted.

Twenty-five students were lost in limbo after last week's Housing Committee meeting left them with no House affiliation.

Fifty-two rooms will open up after new Junior Advisers are selected, and the 25 will be placed on rooms "to their best advantage, going through the (transfer process)," said O'Rourke.

O'Rourke said he was not particularly concerned about the high number of transfer requests. Asked about the controversy concerning the relationship between transfers and house unity, he replied, "That's something that's still up for debate, depending on what happens when people get to a house."

Continued on Page 5

Women win Nationals

Undefeated, untied, New England and National Champions for Div. III. The 1981-1982 Women's swim team pictured above with coaches Marc Ellington (l) and Carl Samuelson (r) won Williams' first national title since 1958 and first ever for Ephwomens. For details, see page ten.

Students decry WSP honors

by Brooke Hand

In an attempt to save Winter Study from the executioner's axe, about 160 students gathered to discuss proposed revisions set forth by the Winter Study Review Committee.

Liveliest debate centered on the plan to add an honors grade to the present pass-perfunctory pass-fail system.

Review committee member Karen Black '83 claimed that the honors grade would give deserved recognition to those who worked exceptionally hard during Winter Study.

Several students objected that honors would intensify a highly competitive atmosphere. As one student put it, "I think the bulk of the people here, given an opportunity to see themselves ranked against their classmates, are going to do it, just because they do it all year 'round."

The freshman Interdisciplinary seminars outlined in the committee's Proposal A also drew fire. The committee maintained that freshmen would be more enthusiastic about Winter Study if more of them were

Continued on Page 5

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Outlook: lower-class losers? p. 4

• News: Russia to fall p. 5

• Students run for the money p. 10

The Williams Record

Free Market Speaker

The free market isn't fair. Some people end up with more money than others. The price of a year at Williams is greater than the price of three years at UCLA Law School. And Milton Friedman charges $10,000 to speak.

Uncle Miltie knows about the vagaries of the free market; he also knows what price the market will bear for his services. Critics of the proposal to have Friedman speak at Williams are correct in thinking that ten thousand dollars is a large sum. That much money could buy more books, help to upgrade dining, or pay half the salary of a new, untenured professor.

Fine. Unfortunately, the College does not face a set of options. Interested alumni have decided to spent $7500 on Milton Friedman, money which otherwise might not have gone to the College at all. The College and groups within it must pay only the remaining $2,500

Friedman's supporters and opponents should jump at the opportunity to interact with such a well-known critic of social science, at what is, in essence, a lowered price. A personal exchange of views between Friedman and the College community would:

- force Friedman to answer questions which he can avoid in print and on TV,
- put Friedman's arguments in the context of an academic environment;
- and possibly allow the community to exploit his presence by, for example, broadcasting his speech on WCFM or printing an interview in the Record.

Friedman's friends and foes alike will probably never get a similar opportunity. If the alumni want to give, we should be happy to receive.

Corrections

In the March 2 Issue of the Record it was mistakenly reported that the Jewish Association holds closed brunches. Dean O'Connor explained last week that his statement to the Record was incorrect and that all Jewish Association functions are open.

The Record last week incorrectly attributed a comment that the Psychology 101 Keller Plan died of hardening of the arteries to Professor Lawrence Graver.

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-597-2100). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1941 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and registered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

LETTERS

Star Guide

To the editor:

(Yawn!) Many thanks to A. J. Mor and his associates for their guidance and assistance during the pre-dawn viewing this morning of the 'Grand Planetary Alignment'. A. J. was a knowledgeable guide of the solar system as some thirty or forty persons crowded onto the observation decks of Thompson labs in order to peek at Jupiter, Saturn, and Mars through the telescopes. I believe A. J. supplied the 'traditional beverages' which helped to take the edge off the chilly air and gave a celebratory atmosphere to the event. Many of us had waited for many years to witness the celestial happening, and found the early-morning viewing a memorable moment to share with others.

Thanks again. I hope we (or our descendants) can do it again next time!
Universally yours,
Calvin J. Anderson '83

RECORD harasses

To the editor:

"One little known attraction is the large number of transfers and exchanges from other schools who end up in Prospect. Upperclassmen who stick Prospect out often end up with first crack at a good part of the annual Smith-Wellesley—Mt. Holyoke contingent (The Record, 3/9/82)." Those who seek examples of sexual harassment at Williams need look no further. The statements above fit into Category 1 of Professor Tong's definition of sexual harassment: "unwanted sexist remark or behavior." That these remarks are unwanted is obvious to anyone who talks to an exchange or transfer student. That they are sexist is clear from the following:

a) They refer only to females. The What's What for the class of '85 lists ten female and two male exchanges and transfers who live in Prospect House; yet the article only refers to the females (Smith, Wellesley, and Mt. Holyoke are all-female colleges).

b) They portray the women as objects. The concept of having "first crack" has no place in a discussion of healthy male/female relationships. It is a concept more aptly used in a discussion of the House of Walsh's Distress Sale... or in an invitation to try out the "latest merchandise" in a brothel. Before Williams became co-ed, carloads of women were "imported" for the weekends. Happily for desperate Record reporters, coeducation brought with it certain technological improvements: instead of enjoying "Smithies" for just a weekend, now Williams students could enjoy them for the whole year. So, The Record tells aspiring freshmen, "Join Prospect House and maybe you too will get lucky. Line up here and you too can get "first crack." And who says Williams students don't plan ahead?

Sarcasm aside, these are hurtful statements. They demean female exchanges and transfers and deny them their "right to be treated with equal respect and concern (again, from Prof. Tong's definition of sexual harassment)."

The Record reporter who wrote those statements and the Record editors who published them are guilty of sexual harassment. Somehow that seems to me to be fitting for an organ which accused WASH of "pandering."

Geoff Mamlet '83

Courage

To the editor:

We applaud the courage shown by the Record in publishing Dave Moro's article on sexual harassment. We would also like to point out that his view is shared by a significant number of people on this campus.

David E. Woodworth Scott Garabedian
Samuel E. Flood Mark Wysocki
Suranand Vejajiva John C. Downey
Marissa Gulino Sheldon B. Ross
John M. Kaczynski Bob Brownell
James G. Hellmuth, Jr. Kerry Traylor

Narrow-minded

To the editor:

Dave Moro's article "Sexual Harassment: Overblown, Misconstrued" contains several valid points, but at the same time demonstrates narrow-mindedness, intolerance, and a lack of understanding of other people's perspectives.

Moro is correct in criticizing the sexual harassment controversy. To have considered sexual harassment a major problem at Williams, to have held demonstrations on it, and to have called in the press to cover the "problem" all reveal what he has astutely referred to as a "love [of] a good scandal." Some people at this school indeed do enjoy imagining problems where none exist.

However, Moro is equally extreme in the opposite direction in saying that "clever remarks, slight grabs and pats and pinches" do not "invalidate... a person." Clearly, when a person is treated as just a sexual object part of that person's "humanness" is denied and inadequate respect is shown toward him/her.

Likewise, stereotypes deny people's "humanness." A stereotype implies that every person in a category (e.g. and ethnic group) has certain characteristics, usually negative ones; this denies the uniqueness of their personalities and leads to judging people by preconceived and close-minded conceptions rather than by who they are.

Continued on Page 3

French House: C'est bon?

"Undergraduate life is organized around... residential units which provide a focus for intellectual and social exchange among their members." — Williams College Handbook

The necessity of integrating academic and social life has been a persistent challenge to those involved in shaping Williams College policy. Now, there is a specific proposal before the CUL for a residence which would enhance the learning of a foreign language through daily house life.

Fluency in a language can only be achieved by constant, day-to-day conversation. According to Langue et Langage, a text used in French 101-102 at Williams, the student "must necessarily remain submerged in the oral language in order to acquire fluency in both speaking and reading." Therefore, in the French house residents would only speak French. A one-year residence limit would insure that everyone interested might have a chance to live there. Places would be allocated by the French Department solely on the basis on language proficiency with an effort to include a wide range of abilities (no preference given to French majors).

The department's teaching assistant (whose salary and room is already provided by the College) would live in the house to provide one source of native French. Thus, the French department would play an active role in matters of language.

As in any residential unit the house would be self-governing; social activities and house business would be managed by house members. The house would sponsor events such as French films, lectures, meals, and receptions all open to the entire community.

A common objection to the house is that it would resemble a fraternity or that it would isolate itself from the rest of the student body. The house would not have the self-selecting process that perpetuated anti-intellectualism and social elitism in all-male fraternities because new members would not be chosen by those already living in the house.

The one-year residence limit prevents the calcification of values and attitudes—it would be a completely new set of students every year. Applicants would not be choosing to live with a group of people they already knew; rather, to join the house requires that they leave behind groups of friends. Students would enter the house to learn something, not to join a particular clique or student type.

Regarding isolation, the house could not become ingrown, its members associating only with each other, since a small group of French speakers would not necessarily have other characteristics in common that would separate them from the community. The list of 40 names collected of those interested in living in a French house shows a wide range of majors and classes.

Another fear is that the creation of a language house would set an open-ended precedent for special interest housing. The house was proposed to fulfill an academic need. According to French department philosophy, language cannot be taught past the intermediate level in a classroom—upper level courses deal only in literature. Therefore, the house would fill this gap. A person interested in theatre, for example, can spend many hours in out-of-class dramatic productions intimately involved with other students in all elements of acting and technical production.

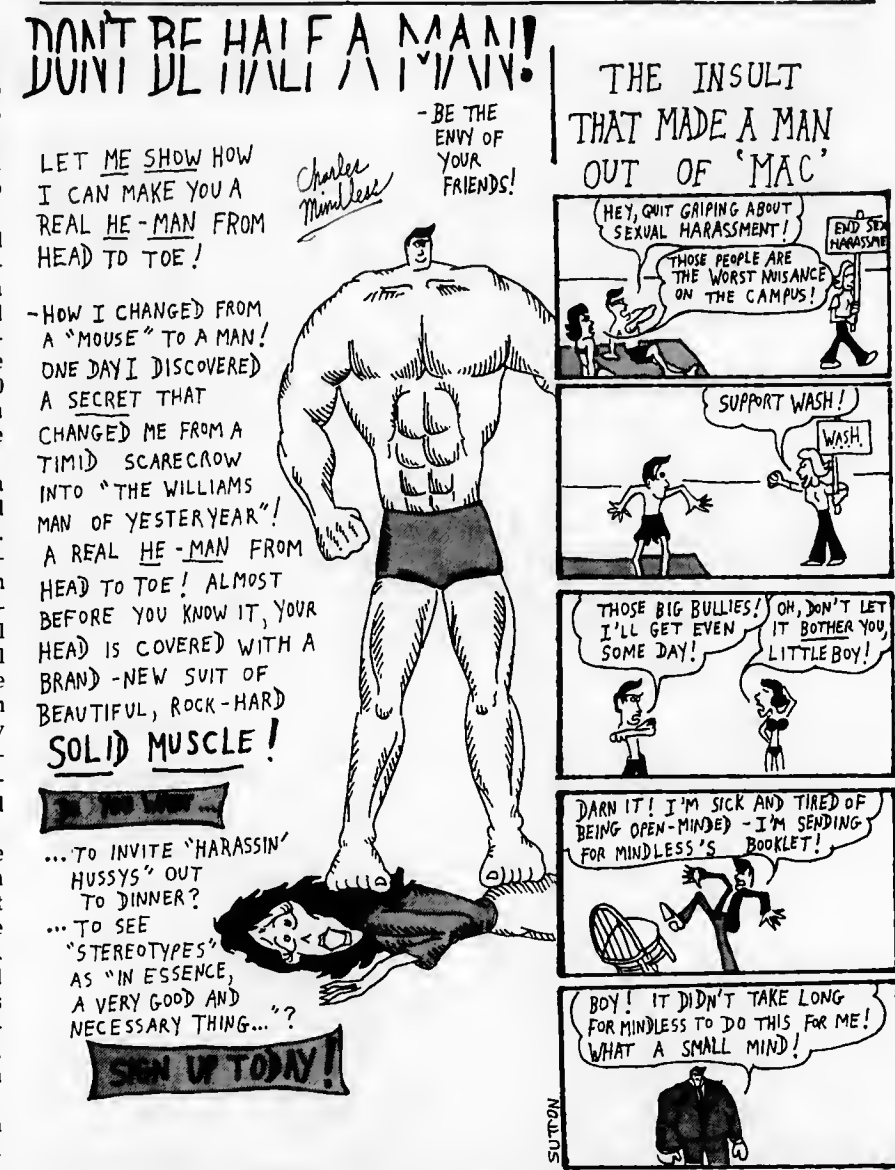

To attain fluency in a language one must live with it. It is not essential in understanding economics to live with it constantly. Having a common language does not imply an especial social bond. A Jewish house, for example, would emphasize existing social distinctions based on religion and cultural background. Such social distinctions would not hold for the group of francophones on this campus.

The French house takes nothing from the College because French speakers, spread out as they are, rarely use the language in public and thus are very little in evidence as francophones. Nor does the group of French speakers constitute a large segment of any significant group within the student population. The net result of a French house is to increase the visibility of spoken French, augmenting the College's diversity, while removing no particular group from the system.

Amidst a widespread vague dissatis-

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

faction with the residential housing system, the CUL can take a stand. Intellectual growth, if it is to be part of residential life, is not served by rearranging Row House groups or establishing transfer quotas. The French house is one alternative that would provide a meaningful year of dorm living. It is an option specific to a group, not a panacea for all those under the housing system.

Yet, this group of people is as varied as any that might be drawn upon to fill a dorm. Above all, the nature of the house answers ideals that underlie a liberal arts education and institution: diversity, intellectual exchange, and common experience.

Scott Cooper
Murray Hennessy
Matt Sharpino

Letters

Continued from Page 2

than as individuals. A stereotype is never a "very good and necessary thing."

Another dangerous assertion Moro makes is that "Williams College... insists on having [a scandal] every year," implying that the cross burning incident of last year, like this year's sexual harassment controversy, was an innocuous or insignificant event."

Yet another problem with the article is Moro's implication that Tracy Dick has no business talking about sexual attitudes because she herself is a homosexual. Referring to her as "an avowed homosexual" implies that her sexual practices are morally wrong and that she therefore is stepping out of her place to "lecture the student body on what [is] wrong with their sexual attitudes." Indeed, Moro could argue that Dick cannot talk about heterosexual relationships with the understanding of one who has participated in them. But her homosexuality in no way invalidates her human and legal right to comment on the situation.

Even worse, Moro's criticism of the redefining of gender roles that has taken place in the past two decades reveals a definite lack of understanding. This redefining has been a means of social progress, allowing more freedom of opportunity to both men and women. Advocating sensitivity in men does not mean advocating effeminacy or weakness.

Finally, Moro ends his article by saying that, based on the behavior of the Feminist Alliance at Williams, he must conclude that "feminism is inherently threatening to liberty and the democratic process." This is indeed a terrible accusation to make! Here Moro is showing just how bad stereotypes really are. Simply because he feels that the feminists at Williams have stepped beyond their proper bounds, he cannot apply his feelings to all feminists and say that feminism is everywhere evil.

Stephen Magnus '85

Bigoted

To the editor:

I commend David Moro for his "Outlook" column on sexual harassment. His marvelous piece of satire has made many of us realize that there are bigoted people in the Williams community who actually oppose feminism, homosexuality, and equality. Keep up the good work, David! The world needs more people like you.

Eric Bagan '84

Reincarnation

To the editor:

May Dave Moro be reincarnated as a woman in the society he envisions for us all today.

Lorraine Driscoll '82
Will Layman '82

Mindless

To the editor:

Does Dave Moro honestly believe that the Feminist Alliance chose to make sexual harassment this year's "scandal," that they are responsible for the attempted rape outside the library, the confusing reversals of disciplinary actions for two men found guilty of sexual harassment, and for the resulting anger/fear felt by myself and the majority of my friends? Does he really think that the only reason sexual harassment has been discussed in faculty meetings, special committees, college-wide panels, the Record, dining halls, etc., is that the entire college community is so mindless as to talk about whatever the Feminist Alliance or W.A.S.H. is concerned about? And that one Dave Moro is among the superior few to really understand the situation? How can anyone say that the problems with male-female relationships on campus have nothing to do with sexual harassment or sexism? Moro's opinions show such lack of awareness of what happens at Williams that I fear it is a waste of my time to attempt to dissuade him from his beliefs. But since I have been personally subjected to sexual harassment at Williams, I cannot remain in silence when someone denies that such harassment exists and is a problem. Or doesn't my perception of the problem count, since I am a woman (a "girl" in his mind)?

Julie Isaacs

Squeamish

To the editor:

The Record perhaps inadvertently and rather poetically underlined a certain irony about Williams life in its March 9 issue by printing two articles which seemed unrelated but which actually address the same issues.

First, the full-page spread given to David Moro, which I wish I could have taken as a satire on the Darrow-minded attitudes which white, heterosexual males such as myself find ourselves falling into all too often here at Williams. Moro implied that the significance of such incidents as the 1980 cross burning and more recent cases of sexual assault and harassment is being "overblown and misconstrued" by a small band of extremists (i.e. women, non-whites, gays—and by inference all others who do not assume the neo-Klivanian attitude expressed by Moro). Moro repeatedly referred to female students as "girls", although considering himself a "man"; he used the word "homosexual" in such a way that suggested that he really wanted to say "faggot"; finally, he described efforts by the deans and faculty to deal with sexual harassment and racial tension on campus in a way reminiscent of Barry Goldwater's tirades against our mollycoddling of the commies in Russia, China, Southeast Asia, and right here at home, under our own beds.

The tunnel vision, hatred, and bile of the world according to Moro was left far behind in the too brief interview with Ken Talley, creator of Feral Precocity, a dance performance attended by a large number of Williams people last weekend. Talley and Ted Colburn created in the show a statement which with a few gestures and songs expressed a vision of what interpersonal relationships at Williams and on the planet Earth are and can be; the dances in Precocity illustrated how some patterns of male-female interaction (particularly those which sometimes seem the norm at Williams) are self-limiting because by causing us to treat others as objects, they turn us into objects.

Were you there, David Moro? If so, you no doubt were squeamish about what must have seemed to you the meaningless antics of some of your least favorite Continued on Page 4

Reflections on a change of class

Papers vs. pistons, or who's really smarter?

by David Robertson.

As the end of my four years here at Williams has approached, I have come to realize that I have undergone a transformation, one which I share with a number (although certainly not the majority) of my classmates: a change of socioeconomic class. In my case, I arrived here in September of 1978 as a member of a lower-middle-class family in a primarily working- and lower-middle-class community. When I leave in May, I will have that valuable certificate which will permit me to enter the upper-middle-class. The role of a Williams education in this transformation should not be taken lightly; it has been pivotal. If I had attended a state college or university, my chances for this degree of socioeconomic mobility would have been considerably lower.

Perhaps the most important thing that I have perceived while attending Williams is that what we learn in these classrooms constitutes only one form of knowledge. In this college and others like it, being able to summarize a philosopher's theory in a ten-page paper is defined as "knowledge"; in other sectors of our society, knowing how to repair an automobile engine or run a piece of machinery is "knowledge." The reason that our abstract knowledge is "better" than the knowledge of vocational pursuits is related to historical circumstances: the ruling class defines which form of knowledge will receive the greater social prestige and economic reward.

Although economic rewards for the possessors of the different knowledge-systems have become similar for some occupations, social prestige has not. (For example, heavy-equipment operators may make more money than some college professors, but the former still feel a sense of humility in the presence of the latter.) To say, then, that working-class people are "dumber" than those of Williams' caliber (which I have heard a few students here say on several occasions) is based upon a culturally-instilled bias. From the perspective of a working-class person, we are "stupid" if we cannot fix our cars and appliances.

Returning home for vacations, I have had to re-orient myself to an environment from which I have felt increasing social distance. Yet I have been able to maintain considerable empathy with my friends who have had less fortune within our status-defining educational system than I have. In addition, traveling between the two disparate milieus, I have noted several differences in both behavior and attitudes.

The differences in behavior seem trivial vis-a-vis the difference in attitude. Nonetheless, they are interesting. For example, the way men sit: Most upper- and middle-class men sit with one leg crossing the other at the knee, but sitting in this manner in a working-class bar (where men sit with the ankle of one leg resting on the knee of the other) immediately draws stares and occasional snide remarks concerning one's masculinity. Furthermore, the use of obscene words in speech is markedly different. Many Williams students use expletives jokingly (often mimicking their working-class peers) or only when angry. Those of the working class, on the other hand, often pepper their daily conversations with profanities, although not as frequently as members of the higher classes like to believe.

The differences in attitudes are more serious and important than the disparity in actions. First, members of the lower classes feel greatly alienated from the power centers of society, even at the local level. Moreover, they often have not learned the channels of communication through which to express grievances, feel that their opinions do not make much difference, and feel hesitant about transmitting their ideas. For instance, a 21-year-old friend with whom I worked in a warehouse a few summers ago wanted to write a letter to the local newspaper, but he did not have enough confidence in his spelling and grammar to do so.

Second, I have noted a feeling among some friends that life has reached a dead end. Some express it through anxiety about the future, while others speak in despairing and cynical tones. This observation has not been made simply in the past year or so; I remember verbalizations of anxiety and confusion coming from friends a few months after our high school graduation, when they gradually began to realize that further paths to progress were clamped shut. To hear such an attitude is a chilling experience for a person like myself who, because of certain hereditary and/or environmental reasons, has mastered the educational system.

Instead of casting off people to live in a state of dependency and apathy, we can assure that they develop the skills to communicate their problems and seek changes.A suggestion for change

Is there any possibility of changing this situation of alienation and defeatism? I believe that the potential for change exists through a change in this country's educational philosophy.

In a study published in 1980, Raymond Wolfinger and Steven Rosenstone examined many cultural and socioeconomic variables among people who voted in the 1972 and 1974 elections. They found that the level of education was the most important factor in voter participation—more important than the other major variables of income and occupation. Although voter participation may not be perfectly correlated to overall participation in community affairs, increased education provides people with an improved capacity to understand and process information, to think abstractly, and to learn the appropriate channels through which they may express their interests and communicate them effectively.

I do not want to suggest, however, that we begin creating new elite liberal-arts colleges in every town and city. What I wish to propose is that changes can be implemented at the elementary and secondary level. From my own experience at a public high school and from various other sources, it is apparent that many students are not challenged to work up to their ability. These are the students whom the educational institutions prematurely label as having "low or moderate intelligence", and who are either discouraged by guidance counselors or barred by school boards from taking "tough" or honors courses. Thus, the educational system engenders self-images of inadequacy in one segment of students and achievement in another (i.e., people like those who go on to Will-ams). If this former group, from their start in the first grade, were challenged, made to feel that they were individuals, and not labelled "dumb" at an early age, then perhaps we would be rid of the syndrome which has trapped so many lower, working, and lower-middle class people in a perpetual state of alienation and defeatism.

Such an improvement in education may also bring social change. With greater education, the working classes could well become skeptical of the one-sided media and seek and demand information from alternative sources. They may also come to realize that they are citizens of the larger world as well as Americans. The range of possible attitudinal changes is large. Moreover, since the lower classes do not have the degree of vested interest in the status quo which the higher classes possess, they will have additional impetus to push for change.

I believe that the possibility of educational change exists. It will not require an enormous increase in expenditures, but only an alteration of our current educational philosophy. What is most needed is the will of the people of the powerful classes—people like ourselves in ten to twenty years—to encourage these changes. We are the ones who will serve on school boards, have influence in our communities, and shape the future. Instead of casting off people to live in a state of dependency and apathy, we can assure that they develop the skills to communicate their problems and seek changes. A potential hazard of this proposal is that the ruling class may lose a portion of its powers of social control, although undoubtedly it will move to minimize this loss if the social changes become too threatening. Nevertheless, the improvement in community participation and human dignity may make this small sacrifice worthwhile.

The author wishes to thank Professor Robert Friedrichs for his comments and suggested changes, many of which have been incorporated in this essay.

SVTON

Letters

Continued from Page 3

people. The futility of the Moro attitude towards life, which takes one's own privileged position as the center of the universe and dismisses or seeks to repress all that contradicts it, is now more than ever clear to me and to many of those fortunate enough to witness Feral Precocely.

Jeffrey Perry

Smugness

To the editor:

It is with pounding heart and quivering pen that I dare question the supreme being—Dave Moro. His abhorrence of the "Pharisaical pronouncements" by "notorious homosexuals" and other "extremists" is matched only by my disgust at the egotistic smugness and callousness of his recent "Outlook" article. Perhaps Dave Moro—an avowed conservative, and heterosexual—should do a little "soul searching" himself; maybe he will discover a spark of humanity somewhere within his breast and recognize that even his views are not infallible. Whether one agrees or disagrees with opinions and actions of "extremist" groups such as the BSU, Feminist Alliance, and (Jerry Falwell close your eyes) homosexuals, all (except the Dave Moros) must admit these groups are motivated by the desire to create a better (subjectively better, I grant) environment at Williams, otherwise, they would not devote the considerable time and effort necessary to cause change. That Moro does not agree with these others, of course, no doubt, means they are wrong, but I'm certain that such a literate individual could find a more sensitive and effective vocabulary with which to correct the erring masses. To conclude, I regret that my own writing style might have degenerated to that of Moro's, but I regret it, and that's the difference between us.

Sincerely,
Rick Wentz '82Fascist

To the editor:

It was utterly irresponsible of you to have allocated so much space to Mr. Moro's bigoted and childish whining about the issue of sexual harassment on campus. The idea of a free press does not mean that a newspaper must print homosexual-baiting, so one wonders why the Record stooped so low. Would the Record be so quick to publish racist or antisemitic drivel? I think not; but why the compulsion to provide a forum for hysterical homophobia?

Moro's article is not worthy of rebuttal. Such malicious raving is well outside the scope of reasoned discussion of important issues. What most disturbs me is an editorial policy which fails to distinguish between the notion of a free press and providing a platform for fascism. I will say this though: Moro, as president of the Young Republicans, reveals that party for what it truly is.

Such unreasoned writing also makes one wonder what sort of students we are admitting to this College, and what we are teaching them.

Nathan Katz
Assistant ProfessorEmigre charts Soviet collapse

by Amy Connolly

"I predict that one hundred years from now, the historians will write that there was once an experiment called Communism, and it failed," asserted Pavel Palei, a Russian emigre and former Gulag prisoner who spoke here Tuesday.

Communism's demise will partly result, Palei speculated, from the realization that the Russian economy is negatively affected by Communism. The major problem in the market sector of the economy is lack of private property and ownership rights, he said.

Palei used the example of a tractor, which in the Soviet Union would be thrown out after two years, he claimed, whereas in the U.S. a tractor would outlive its owner because he would care enough to look after his own property.

The difficulty in the USSR, said Palei, is that nothing belongs to anyone, although Communist propaganda assures the people that everything belongs to everyone.

Police and propaganda
Communism will fail, said the emigre, because the people of the Soviet Union will begin to suspect infringements on their inherent rights to freedom. The only possible way to facilitate this realization is from the outside, Palei claimed, since Soviet society is permeated by police enforcement and propaganda, which quell even the slightest flareups.

"If America put to work one-half the policemen working in the U.S.S.R., there would not be a single crime in the U.S.," declared the emigre.

He claimed it is both beneficial and relatively easy for the U.S.S.R. to expand its leadership because its people are kept in fear. Palei alleged that this situation is a formidable threat to world peace, saying, "appetite comes while you are eating."

Children in Russia are brought up to believe that capitalism is evil, and furthermore, that forces are always getting ready to attack the Soviet Union, Palei explained.

Terminate U.S. aid

Palei then focused on the contemporary arms race. He advocated a termination of all U.S. aid to the Soviet Union. He proposed this, he said, not because he was hostile towards the people of the Soviet Union, but because he was convinced that aid can be converted into money which he said can then be converted into military arms.

The emigre asserted that any arms race will ultimately end in tragedy, and that the current military arms buildup allows the people in power to remain in power.

Because of the past history of failed negotiations and lack of communication between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., Palei feels that the most beneficial course of action is to cease all aid.

He used the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as an example of lack of communication, claiming, "Imagine how funny it was for me to see Russia invade Afghanistan and see Jimmy Carter shake his head and say, 'boy oh boy, what a mean bunch of guys'... Imagine the American President not knowing what was going on in Russia."

Negotiating monkeys

He further asserted that "if two monkeys were negotiating today instead of Reagan and Brezhnev, the arms race would have been licked a long time ago."

Given the circumstances in the world today, as well as the nature of Soviet-American relations Palei sees no other alternative than a complete break with the Soviet Union, which he hopes will lead to both demilitarization and a refutation of Communism, with the end result of peace benefitting all people in the world.

Winter Study debate

Continued from Page 1

allowed into their first-choice courses.

Common experience

Black stressed that freshmen would share a common experience and that "Winter Study is a time for intellectual discussion." Seminars would be taught by interested faculty and limited to 30 students to facilitate discussion, asserted committee members.

Dean Grodzins '83 noted that the seminars would bar freshmen from independent and travel options during Winter Study. He urged that these options should be maintained as one of the advantages of a small liberal arts school.

Committee Co-chairman Fred Greene responded, "If salmon can swim their way upriver, freshmen will find a way out of (the seminars)."

One student criticized the attention showered on freshmen and questioned whether the apathy felt by both students and faculty is built into the Winter Study system.

Greene observed that confusion surrounds student and faculty perceptions of Winter Study. "That's one of the charms of Winter Study. One of the reasons why Winter Study has so many problems is because of its peculiar nature. It doesn't fit snugly into the organized framework," he said.

No fun and games

Although students reminisced about positive past Winter Study experiences, Committee

Co-chairman Lawrence Graver repeatedly reminded them, "There is an overwhelming feeling on the part of faculty that Winter Study is not working. You're in a situation where there are irreconcilable differences."

Graver cited the national trend away from Winter Study, claiming only ten percent of the colleges in the nation have some sort of Winter Study. The committee stressed that an honors grade would be a small concession to make in order to save the program.

Greene urged students to get in touch with members of the faculty to express their views: "If you want to express your opinions, now's the time to do it without becoming a wild-eyed pressure group but to have discussions."

House transfers

Continued from Page 1

Dean Mary Kenyatta, on the other hand, did express some concern about the pattern of large numbers of transfers.

"Freshmen no longer base their decisions on a house they want to live in for three years," she said. "Many transfers weakens the group of potential leaders within a house."

Dodd was the most popular house, with 113 students vying for 25 available places.

"This pointed up to me that people are not trying to transfer out of a bad situation," said Kenyatta. Instead, they try to move to a more pleasant place, she suggested. According to Kenyatta, this year's is the highest number of transfer requests ever. Last year there were 230 transfers, in 1980 there were 190, and in 1976, only 70.

Cornell Law School
Undergraduate Prelaw Program
June 7 to July 20, 1982

A demanding six-week program
for college students who want
to learn what law school is like.

For further information write to
Jane G. Death, Cornell Law School
634 Myron Taylor Hall, Ithaca, NY 14853

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE. 118 Water St.
10 am - 2 pm, Monday-Friday.
Phone 458-8157.

"one, two, three, four, five, six,
seven." —Fandrick Dunn 1986

"I started my career with only $3 in my pocket and not much money." —Mills Cook 1969

NORM'S AIRPORT SERVICE

to all Major Airports
and Cities

663-8300
663-3261
North Adams

SCORE POINTS

with Miller bottles
& cans
MILLER 12 pks...
...$5.29

OTHER BEER
SPECIALS

U.C. . . $1.90/6-pk
R.W.B. . . $1.95/6-pk
Wurtzberger was
$4.90 now $3.15

JOSEPH E. DEWEY

9:00 - 5:00
Mon-Sat

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

WILLIAMSTOWN
NATIONAL BANK

Williamstown, Massachusetts

COMPLETE BANKING AND TRUST SERVICES

We Know How To Help

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.
Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

HARVARD
this summer

Tradition and the future meet at the Harvard Summer School, the nation's oldest summer session, featuring open enrollment in a diverse offering of day and evening liberal arts courses and pre-professional programs. The varied curriculum includes courses appropriate for fulfilling college degree requirements as well as programs designed for career development and professional advancement. The international student body has access to the University's outstanding libraries, museums, athletic facilities, and calendar of cultural activities, as well as the many events available outside the University in Harvard Square, Cambridge, and nearby Boston. Housing is available in Harvard's historic residences.

LIBERAL ARTS

Undergraduate and graduate courses in more than 30 liberal arts fields offered at convenient hours. Intensive foreign language and writing programs are available. Among the many areas represented are Anthropology, Computer Sciences, Fine Arts, Mathematics, Psychology, Music, and Visual and Environmental Studies.

PRE-PROFESSIONAL AND EDUCATION

Harvard Summer School offers all basic courses necessary for pre-medical preparation. Of interest to pre-law students are classes in government and economics. Business courses include computer programming, financial accounting, statistics, and a business writing workshop. Non-credit review courses for the GMAT, LSAT, and MCAT are offered. Graduate level courses in Education and in management theory and application meet the needs of professionals seeking to improve management skills or work toward advanced degrees.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS

Programs in expository and creative writing, drama, dance, and English as a Foreign Language. Instruction in 11 foreign languages, including the Ukrainian Summer Institute.

ACADEMIC CALENDAR

JUNE 21 — AUGUST 13, 1982

For further information, return the coupon below or contact:

HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL

Department
20 Garden St., Cambridge, MA 02138
(617) 495-2921 information
(617) 495-2494 line open 24 hours a day for catalogue requests

Please send Harvard Summer School catalogue and application for:

- ☐ Arts & Sciences and Education
☐ English as a Foreign Language
☐ Secondary School Student Program
☐ Dance Center

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

MAIL TO: HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL
Department 3N

AN OPEN LETTER TO PARENTS AND ALUMNI

As you may know, student financial aid programs have been severely slashed by the Federal Government for the current year. In addition to these cuts, the Administration is proposing further cuts and reductions through rescissions for fiscal year 1982 and even more massive cuts for fiscal year 1983.

Cuts which have already been made include the following:

- Social Security Educational Benefits—ELIMINATED
- Pell Grants (BEOG)—250,000 students dropped from the program
- Guaranteed Student Loans—up to one million students dropped from the program
- National Direct Student Loans—143,000 students dropped from the program
- Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants (SEOG)—75,000 students dropped from the program
- State Student Incentive Grants (SSIG)—30,000 students dropped from the program
- TRIO Programs—60,000 students dropped from the program

Most of us would agree that some cuts in federal financial aid funding may be necessary, and higher education should not be exempt from sacrifices that may be required to achieve national goals of economic stability and growth. However, the severity and direction of these further cuts will have a significant impact on both low and middle income students. Such cuts could curtail their opportunities to get a college education and would make it difficult for some colleges to survive—particularly those institutions which do not have the endowment or the pool of applicants with which Williams is blessed.

Students, faculty members and administrators on this campus and other campuses are uniting to oppose further cuts in student financial aid programs. This week Williams students sent nearly 600 postcards to Washington, D.C. protesting the proposed cuts. Please write your Senators and your Congressmen today and urge them to support higher education.

Senator	Honorable
U.S. Senate	U.S. House of Reps
Washington, D.C. 20510	Washington, D.C. 20515

PAID FOR BY THE COLLEGE COUNCIL

Center for Development Economics

World influence from Route 2

by Derede Arthur

From Billsville to Bangladesh, Williams' Center for Development Economics molds the future of the world's economy. The Center operates a year-long masters' degree program in development economics and is rated an almost unqualified success.

Each of the 20-25 Fellows who annually participate in the program is a professional economist with between two and ten years' experience working for the government of a Third World nation, explained Professor Paul Clark, Chairman of the Center. This year, the 23 Fellows of the class of '82 represent 15 foreign countries, including ones as distant as Tanzania, Zambia, and Sri Lanka.

Williams' CDE, Clark believes, has obtained a high reputation throughout the developing world, and as a result, the admissions process is "quite competitive." Government agencies in Third World nations nominate one or two highly qualified economists, each of whom is then personally interviewed in his or her home country during January by either a Williams professor or a colleague from Harvard's Mason Program, with which Williams has a cooperative interviewing arrangement.

Broaden perspectives

All CDE instructors are members of the economics or political science departments and teach undergraduate courses. Most have spent time in such Third World nations as Iran, India, Botswana, Colombia, Kenya, and Thailand.

Clark, along with Political Science professor Vincent Barnett, was one of the "founding fathers" of the Center. Both cited several factors as influential in the decision to establish the Center in 1960. Of primary importance was the belief that industrialized nations should aid Third World nations in training people skilled in the problems of developing economies. Equally important was the desire of certain economics professors to improve their department by attracting additional faculty and by creating greater opportunities for overseas teaching and research.

Exam-oriented

During its first few years, the Center and its students were financed almost entirely by CDE students share a laugh at a lunch-time class.

(Millo)

attracts one group of people especially interested in development and makes us known around the world so that we can have more opportunities for working abroad than we would if we didn't have the Center... It certainly has been a success in the way of the training we've provided for Fellows and in being one kind of enrichment at Williams."

Most of the CDE fellows interviewed felt that the program was a good one, which, although "very intensive" and "exam-oriented," would be "very helpful for developing countries." One of the most praised aspects was the diversity of the Fellows which, said Leila Sutedja of Indonesia, enabled each to "learn from the experience—the successes and failures—of others in similar conditions." Shelia Patawaran from the Philippines praised the diversity through which "we're able to interact with other people from developing countries... you realize people are different and yet the same."

Isolationist atmosphere

Barnett cited the limited degree of interaction between the Fellows and the undergraduates as the only source of "disappointment" in an otherwise "extraordinarily successful program." Clark admits that, despite occasional socials with

Continued on Page 9

In Other Ivory Towers

Wesleyan University

A shaving cream pie struck Dean of the College Edgar Beckham in the face last month. The assailant was one of a group of students protesting the end of aid-blind admissions, reported the Wesleyan Argus.

The alleged attacker, a senior, "became outraged with Beckham's answers to students' questions, went to her home, and prepared a shaving cream pie," said witnesses. She returned to the meeting and flung the pie in Beckham's face.

A security officer grabbed the student as an outraged Beckham shouted, "Call the police, I want that girl arrested! She assaulted me!" Middletown (CT) police took the woman away in handcuffs. Beckham reduced assault charges to breach of the peace, but is "taking the fullest court action possible" as well as taking College disciplinary action.

One police officer reportedly said, "We went through this all through the war—I hope this isn't the sixties again."

Hamilton College

A sniper fired a BB or pellet gun from a window of Dunham dormitory at maintenance men last month, injuring physical plant employee Thomas E. Boehlert, said the Hamilton

Spectator.

The pellet shattered the back window of a tractor being used to clear snow. Flying glass struck Boehlert in the eye, causing minor injuries.

Hamilton security searched the dorm but found no trace of the mysterious gunman. The College is continuing the investigation with the help of the New York State Police. Several suspects have reportedly been identified. If caught and convicted, the sniper could face up to three years in prison.

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute

The Student Union Bookstore at RPI recently removed Hustler and Penthouse magazines from its shelves, but will continue to sell Playboy, said the Polytechnic.

Two reasons prompted the removal—complaints from several women students and low sales. "The magazine rack was crowded with people just reading Hustler and Penthouse, but not buying them" said bookstore manager Mike McDermott.

In response to the complaints, the bookstore surveyed female faculty, staff, and administrators on their feelings. They found Playboy least objectionable.

So the store will continue to sell Playboy, its largest-selling magazine. Scientific American and Omn are the second and third best-sellers.

THE WILLIAMS MADRIGAL

arranged by H. B. Wood '10

1. Around her neck she wore a purple ribbon,

Refrain: She wore it in the springtime and in the month of May.
And if you ask her why she wore that ribbon,
She wore it for her Williams man who's far, far away.
And she wore it for her Williams man who's far, far away.

2. Around her knee she wore a purple garter,
She wore it in the springtime and in the month of May.

(refrain)

3. Around the block she pushed a baby carriage,

Behind the door, her father kept a shotgun.

On the wall she keeps a marriage license.

In the desk the sheriff keeps a warrant

And in her heart she has a secret passion;

She has it for an Amherst man who's not so far away.

Before you head South for vacation —

Come see our new collection of Men's and Women's swimsuits by

Head & Speedo

Goff's Sports, inc.

Mon. - Sat. 9-5:30

Thurs. 9 - 9

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street

458-3605

Williamstown

White Plum
Royal New Pink
Natural Maize
Sky Blue Navy

classic, elegant and incredibly comfortable. impeccably tailored, this all cotton fine gauge interlock is worthy of the famous BRONZINI unicorn embroidered on the front. select yours today from colors that are undeniably feminine. sizes S, M, L, XL.

$20.00

LaCocina

OPEN EVERY DAY
FROM 11:30 AM
SUN. FROM 4 PM

home style Mexican cooking
all legal beverages

nightly entertainment

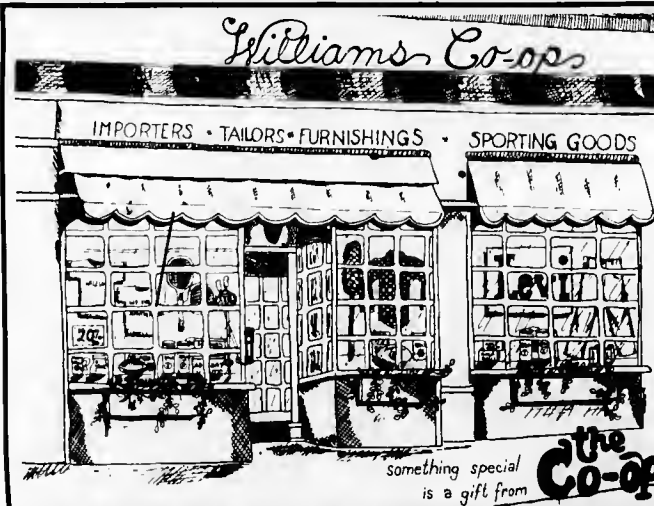

MONDAY AND TUESDAY

25° DRAFT BEER

LUNCHEON
SPECIALS

850 State Road, 664-4757

The Berkshires Most Unique Family Restaurant

something special is a gift from the Co-op

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday
Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday
Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday
Watch Record
for specials.

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

From the Director's Chair

THE COLLECTION

Record: Why did you chose to perform The Collection, a play many describe as "weird"?

Director Shawn Lovley I think I'm really attracted to the ambiguities of it. As in life, there's really no factual basis for the events of the play. Latter scenes refute information supplied in earlier ones. I really haven't decided myself what happens. I try to communicate this and hope people go away with different interpretations.

Record: Audience reactions varied from saying the play was "really bad" to expressions of emphatic enjoyment. As a director, how do you feel about this broad continuum of response?

Lovley: I think you have to separate how they react to the play from how they react to the production. People react to Pinter much like they do Shakespeare, they either really like it or they hate it. Nonetheless, problems with the production may have negatively affected some.

Record: What problems?

Lovley: Well, one of the biggest is working in Jesup. It's a lecture hall not a theatre. We had to literally put the settings on top of each other. I give much credit to Dan Bona, the set designer, whose settings afforded us very adequate room in such a cramped space.

Record: Then why didn't you perform the play on the more spacious mainstage in the AMT?

Lovley: This is a Cap and Bells production. We're separate from the Department of Theater which has jurisdiction over the mainstage. They have never allowed a Cap and Bells production there.

For all its space limitations, Jesup is a very intimate hall.

You place the performance in the people's lap almost.

Record: Many people found the play very funny, an unusual response to a Pinter drama. Why do you play up the humor?

Lovley: People can't sit through a grim play about sexual infidelity and just be serious. It would be boring. I try to play up the humor by encouraging the performers to enjoy themselves on stage. It works, I think, without detracting from the more serious elements in the play such as the disparity of intent that haunts much communication.

The play is also very tense. I use dramatic techniques such as crumpling newspapers and situating the characters in antagonistic stances. This serves to emphasize the tension within the very indirect dialogue.

logue concerning discovered adultery. The humor provides a relief, a contrast which I think heightens the anxiety in Pinter's script.

Record: Why do you direct plays?

Lovley: Having both acted and directed, I find directing much more satisfying. In terms of artistic control, it's a more powerful position. I decide what a show means to me and try to communicate that. I don't like striving for what somebody else sees in a script.

Record: What's in store for you after May?

Lovley: Next year I'm going to the Drama Studio London at Berkeley for a one-year professional actors training course. Then I want to act and ultimately direct more plays.

Shawn Lovley '82 covers some final pickups as director of Cap & Bells' "The Collection."

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

McClelland's Stationery and Office Products

Hallmark Cards
Crane and Eaton Stationery
School Supplies
Art Supplies

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

Theatre review

Continued from Page 7

1961. In The Collection, a husband, James, attempts to learn the truth about his wife Stella's claimed affair with another man, Bill. Bill is "kept" by an older man, Harry, who is hurt and resentful towards not only Stella, but James as well, who is himself latently attracted to Bill. The issue is amusing at first for both James and the audience, but by the end becomes shattering. The play never arrives at a true resolution of the relationships, and I'm told that Lovley and company couldn't answer it for themselves either. Perhaps this is what Pinter intended, though. He says, "The desire for verification is understandable, but cannot always be satisfied... The thing is not necessarily either true or false; it can be both true and false."

The play itself is as difficult to act as it is to direct, but without exception the cast in this production performed quite well. Marc de la Bruyere '82, playing James, expertly showed the complexity of his character, smiling eerily, finding his search a bit of a lark, but winding up an unsmiling, uncertain, and a slightly pathetic figure. David DeNicolio '85 performed equally well as Bill, nicely intensifying the uncertainty of the issue at hand. Playing Harry, Bruce Goodrich milked much of the humor and viciousness of Pinter, although he was at times a bit too broad and mannered for such a small theater.

Lastly, there was Margie Duffield '85, simply superb as Stella, rendering both a subtle and complex performance. Using her expressive face with great effect, she let us see all that was underneath the dialogue. Her subtlety and pathos were especially effective in the small Jesup auditorium, creating an empathetic immediacy.

The handsome set was designed by Dan Bona '83, who skillfully made the most of the limited space in Jesup, even cleverly incorporating the theater aisles in his setting. The lighting by Julie Schmutz '84 served the production well, helping the smooth flow of the short scenes.

The production of The Collection was better than it had any right to be, Shawn Lovley and company giving a fine rendition of a difficult work.

Staging takes precedence over dialogue in Harold Pinter's works, as in the scene above from Cap & Bells' "The Collection."

Economics center

Continued from Page 7

the International Club and intermittent meals in the college dining halls. "We've never had as much interaction as the circumstances warrant."

Assistant to the Chairman Rita Dillon, while noting that CDE Fellows participate in several intramural sports and occasionally audit undergraduate courses, attributed the lack of interaction to the intensity of the CDE program. The single year of residency and the Center's separate housing also tend to discourage Fellows from building close friendships with undergraduates, she noted. As a result, the Center tends to become "a microcosm of interaction" unto itself.

One Fellow, Moses Below of Nigeria, expressed dissatisfaction with this lack of interaction. Below explained, "This program was specifically meant to bring young planning officials from developing countries here, to train them, and to let them return. This seems to me to be isolationist. The program at Harvard is much more integrated. The isolationism comes from the fact that American nationals are not here as part of the program. This program can be expanded without limiting the number of people that come from developing nations. And if they expanded the courses, more (diversified) interests would be satisfied."

CONCERT LISTINGS

prepared by

Toonerville Trolley Records
Wed., Mar. 17 Nick Lowe, JB Scott's, Albany, NY
U-2, The Ritz, New York, NY
McCoy Tyner, Art Blakey & Jazz Messengers, Opera House, Boston
Thurs., Mar. 18 Cars, Boston Garden (sold out)
Fri., Mar. 19 Ella Fitzgerald, Symphony Hall, Boston
Cars, Civic Ctr., Hartford, Conn.
Sat., Mar. 20 Jerry Jeff Walker, Paradise, Boston, Mass.
Mar. 27 Pete Seeger, Alumni Auditorium, Northeastern, Boston
April 2 Ozzy Osbourne, Boston Garden
April 2 Rickie Lee Jones, Orpheum, Boston
April 2 Rod Stewart, Civic Ctr., Glens Falls, NY
April 4 Beach Boys, Chateau de Ville, Framingham, Mass.
April 7 & 8 Rod Stewart, Metropolitan Ctr., Boston
April 10 Keith Jarrett, Opera House, Boston
April 10 Police, Civic Ctr., Hartford, Conn.
April 12 Police, Boston Garden (sold out)
April 14 Grateful Dead, Civic Ctr., Glens Falls, NY
April 17, 18 Grateful Dead, Civic Ctr., Hartford, Conn.
April 23-25 B-52's, Orpheum, Boston
April 23 Bonnie Raitt, Palace, Albany

THE CLIP SHOP

"THE HAIR SALON OF THE 80'S FOR GUYS AND GALS"

We're excited about what's new for '82. Starting right now—and continuing into the fall, hair will be making a splash. And here's what's important. Volume, but with more softness, more femininity than before. Whether hair is shorter, or longer, the net effect is the same: hair that is easy to wear, hair that is positively pretty! We believe that cellophane colors, fashion accessories, and head wrappings will be the key elements in design for all hair cuts in the 80's. It is by means of video that we know how to make the latest trends and techniques work. There would be no other way to learn so many new cuts so well so fast.

The Clip Shop has been serving the men, women, and children in the area for eight years, since the opening of the first salon in Williamstown. And today there are three locations. We invite you to stop in with your hair care problems or questions or for a free consultation.

"Those who want to be just a little bit dramatic, a little bit different, will find what they've been looking for in '82 at the Clip Shop."

Pittsfield
447-9576

Williamstown
458-9167

Bennington, Vt.
(802) 442-9823

The Wallace Catalogue arrived late so our Buy Back will run daily until Spring Recess.

COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

Why not intern and study in London this Summer, Fall, or January 1983?

Places available in Parliament
Law Firms, Social Science,
Town Planning, Education and Museums.

FULL ACADEMIC CREDIT AVAILABLE.

Costs: $1400 (Summer 10 weeks)

Board, lodging.

$2650 (Fall 14 weeks)

Board, lodging, tuition.

Contact: EPA
Marymount College, Tarrytown, N.Y. 10591
Phone (914) 631-3200

This Summer, Cornell

What better place to be than far above Cayuga's waters as you improve your writing skills, work with computers, participate in a pre-law program, or take a course in conceptual drawing? Nowhere else can you learn in the company of so diverse a group of faculty and students in such a uniquely attractive setting of hills, lakes, gorges and waterfalls.

At Cornell, you can fulfill requirements, accelerate your degree program, or simply take advantage of the opportunity to study those intriguing subjects that you have always put off.

Request an Announcement and see for yourself all the reasons why Cornell is the place you should be this summer. Tuition is $145 per semester credit or less.

Cornell University Summer
Session, B13 Ives Hall,
Ithaca, New York 14853

TONITE

THE WALDO SELDEN PRATT
QUARTET, a new campus jazz band will perform

WEDNESDAY
ST. PATRICK'S DAY NIGHT
AT THE LOG

Sean Crotty '84 will sing songs of Ireland Special beer: Mickey's Malt Liquor (in big mouth bottles) and GREEN beer.

prizes & surprises!

THURSDAY

The Springstreeters will perform
9:00

The Log will reopen Sunday, April 4
HAPPY SPRING BREAK!

THE LOG

NATIONAL CHAMPS! Ephwomen drown all opposition

by Jim Roche

In a year that has been plagued with sports disappointments, Williams finally has a big winner. Last weekend at the University of Massachusetts in Boston, the women's swim team captured first place at the NCAA Division III Championships. Their convincing victory, which followed an undefeated season and included the New England crown, was the first National championship for a Williams swim team ever.

The team compiled 402 points and, as has been their custom, left the closest competitor far behind. Kenyon College, which had five more qualifiers than Williams, finished second with 303 points.

Constant winners

The ten members of the women's squad, who qualified for the nationals during the season, won all five relays at the meet, as well as nine individual events. This gave Williams a first place finish in 14 out of 24 events. In addition, all ten scored in their events, which indicates an overall finish of twelfth place or better in each race.

Two of the Williams swimmers, Kim Eckrich '85 and Liz Jex '83, overwhelmed the rest of the field with incredible individual performances. Eckrich led the way with five individual victories coming in the 50, 100, and 200 yard breast stroke events, and also in the 100 and 200 individual medley. She was also a member of two of the winning relay teams.

Jex, not to be outdone, captured four individual wins in the 100 butterfly and in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle races, and contributed to first place finishes as a member of three relay teams.

Samuelson exuberant

The win was especially satisfying for Coach Carl Samuelson, who has had a number of strong teams in the past, but had never captured the elusive national title. The ecstatic coach couldn't say enough about the team.

"I don't think that there was any way we could have done better. The drops in times from our last meet were impressive, and the whole team was just outstanding. We got better as the meet went on, and at the end we just blew the competition away."

Perhaps the greatest compliment paid to this team for their successful season and subsequent national championship came from Samuelson himself. When asked to describe his feelings about this year's team, he replied, "There is no question that this is the best team I've ever had."

Men's turn

This weekend, the men's team will attempt to bring home their first national title ever. The NCAA Division III tournament is being held this year at Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia. The men's squad, led by senior Mike Regan, won the New England crown with ease, but will face a stern test from Kenyon at the nationals, according to Coach Samuelson. The team flies down today for the meet which begins Thursday and continues until Saturday afternoon.

24 hr pain for gain

by Patricia Hellman

Seventeen teams took part in this year's Roadrunner's 24-hour Charity Relay. Held in the Towne Field House on Saturday and Sunday, it was, as usual, an overwhelming spectacle. People in multi-colored sleeping bags lying asleep on the floor despite pounding music, young and old running together around the track with bright metallic batons, and tables laden with food and refreshment for tired runners were just some of the sights to be seen that night.

The 24-hour charity relay is one of few occurrences where fun and party can double as work. Money raised by competing teams is taken and distributed to charity agencies in the Williamstown community. People generally pledge a sum of money per mile to their favorite team.

This year, the grand total of miles run by all participants in the relay was 3454 miles, a distance which would have placed the runners, if they had started here and run straight west rather than around a track, somewhere off the coast of California.

The Southshore Striders logged the greatest number of miles, with 254, and were followed by the New England Pioneers with 247, and the Williams Roadrunners with 246. Among competing

Brian Angle '84 of the Williams Roadrunners leads the herd of runners in the opening lap of the 1982 24-hour Charity Relay. (Farley)

Williams dorms, Fayerweather-East put in a strong effort, finishing with 227 miles to their credit.

Solicitors of pledges now start the crucial stage of the process, as it is only through the actual collection of pledges that money is raised.

Don Hagen '82 of the Retreads paints the sole of a jogging shoe to print the team's symbol on the back of a junior Retread's T-shirt during the relay. (Farley)

IM fever - CATCH IT!

by Ted Leon

Well, the Williams pseudo-athlete is living up to his/her reputation. I remember reading the Insider's Guide to the Colleges back in 11th grade, and being amused and attracted to their insinuation that everyone at Williams is a jock.

Naturally it wasn't altogether true. There are some people who struggle through the dreaded P.E. requirement, vowing to return someday and put a bomb in Lasell Gymnasium. But really, Williams is built at least partially around its athletic programs, and that doesn't just mean varsity and JV teams. To quote intramural coordinator William McCormick, "About 50% of the campus gets involved with the IM programs at one time or another."

The IM program is designed such that houses compete against one another in all the various sports. At the end of the year, an overall champion as well as a freshman champion is determined on the basis of total points.

Frosh lead

Last year the overall champ was Gladden, followed by Dodd, Hopkins, and Tyler. The frosh winners came from Sage.

This year, the freshman trio of East, Fayerweather and Lehman lead all houses with 49 points, while Tyler and A-Gar-Wood are close behind with 44 1/2 and 44 1/3 points respectively.

Hockey, skiing and basketball were the main IM sports during the winter months, with squash, ping-pong and volleyball picking up a little later and continuing into spring.

Puck showdown

Hockey was run with a Monday/Wednesday league and a Tuesday/Thursday league. Hopkins/Carter, an amalgamation team from the Mon/Wed league, took the title by overcoming Pratt, the Tues/Thurs winner.

Intramural skiing was held at Brodie Mountain with each house represented by three skiers. The winner was based on the best average time for the three.

Tyler victories

Wendy Brown '82 and Kris Strohbehn '83 gave Tyler the edge with their fourth and first place finishes, respectively.

Tyler House also snatched the basketball crown with a victory over Sage in the championship game. As with hockey, the basketball champion was determined by pitting the Mon/Wed winner vs. the Tues/Thurs champ.

Falls sports

Football, cross country, golf and tennis were the fall sports, with golf and tennis to be finished in the spring.

In football, the Coop squad emerged as victors, beating Mills in the championship game.

Dennett triumphed in the cross country which also had exciting competition, despite less participation.

Along with the conclusion of golf and tennis, this spring will feature swimming, track and softball.

INTRAMURAL HOUSE STANDINGS
HOUSE		POINTS
East/Fayerweather/Lehman		49
Tyler		44 1/2
A-Gar-Wood		44 1/3
Dodd		38
Sage		33
Williams		32 1/2
Mills		32
Prospect		29
Dennett		25 1/2
Bryant		25
Pratt		25
Spencer-Brooks		23 1/3
Perry		22 5/6
Hopkins		21 1/2
Carter		20
Coop		20
Armstrong		18 1/3
Fitch		15
Morgan		11 1/2
Faculty		11
Thompson Inf.		6 1/2

Eph skiers finish in flurry

Posting one of their best finishes of the year and sending four skiers to the nationals, the women's ski team concluded its season in strong fashion.

The final carnival was the Eastern Championships at Middlebury College. The Ephmen finished fifth, only two points out of fourth place. Led by slalom skiers Tricia Hellman '82, Kate Knopp '85 and Marcy Rubinger '85, and cross country people Ellen Chandler '83, Brenda Mailmen '82 and Sara Bates '85, Williams held third place entering the second day of competition.

Mailmen, Chandler, Hellman and Knopp went to the AIAW Nationals held last week in Stowe, Vermont and skied against competition including a 1976 Olympic Gold Medalist.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Beyond a shadow of a doubt, the deserving recipient of this week's award is the entire women's swim team! Capturing the first national swim title ever for Williams is truly a laudable accomplishment. Great job, Ephwomen, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

Faculty vote to abolish Winter Study

In a hastily called press conference early this morning, President John Chandler, Dean Dan O'Connor and a dejected College Council President Freddy Nathan announced that the College has abolished mandatory Winter Study, moving to an optional program of winter course instead.

The new program has been tentatively entitled "Fred" and will replace Winter Study as we now know it. Professor Raymond Baker, the author of "Fred", explained how it will work. "It'll be a somewhat complicated system, but quite fair. Once in every three years, a prof. will have to teach "Fred". In one of the other years he may do research. In the third year he must do construction work over at the Art Museum extension. We'll save megabucks on professional contracting that way."

Students will have many potential options during "Fred", which is not required, but strongly encouraged. Said President Chandler, "No one will have to take Fred, but anyone that doesn't will have to write a paper over winter break and do some menial housework at my place for credit when we get back." It is expected that this part of Fred will be eased up a bit when the Chandlers' maid returns to Williamstown after a lengthy labor-related dispute.

College Council President Nathan was upset, but still optimistic in defeat. "It wasn't what we fought for, but I like the name," stated Nathan, always the politician. "But we're not going to quit here. Students will try their darndest to bring back the old set up. In fact, I'm ordering 'Eliminate Fred!' buttons this afternoon."

Faculty reaction to the idea was mixed. "I especially like the year off for travel" commented Peter Berek, who is taking a sabbatical next year, and under the new provisions of Fred may get to go away until 1987 if he wants to. "I'm very upset about the construction work idea," commented History Prof. Peter Frost, who owns the construction firm working on the art museum addition which will now be fired. "It's all a question of Yin and Yang," said Frost, "and I'm getting the Yang here."

Student reaction was quite mixed after Fred was announced. A release was placed in all student mailboxes explaining the plan that read as follows:

"Beginning in 1984, Fred will take the place of Winter Study. Students in the classes of '84 and '85 will be required to take optional courses in their major, if their major is in Division I. All Division II majors must take courses beginning with "C". All Division III majors must take phys. ed.

Members of the classes of '86 will be exempt from Fred throughout their college careers. Members of the class of '87 will be forced to take a course that does not interest them, taught by a female Classics professor named Hilda. People with the nickname Chip may write a thesis or independent project instead."

Registration for Fred will be the Third Monday after the First Friday in September, and the deadline for course choices must be placed in Dean Grodzins' mailbox by noon of the following Sunday. Late entries will not be accepted.

All 99's must be submitted in Latin to Professor Fuqua before the student is accepted to Williams. ("That'll keep them on campus," later remarked Fuqua with a sneer.)

One freshman commented, "Fred sounds nice to me. I can't wait to see Chuckles Karells lifting those boulders every three years." A sophomore was a bit more philosophical, and stated, "Hunger, poverty, famine, disease. Fred can't solve them. But at least it'll give us something to bitch about for another few years."

Dean offers resignation

Already stunned by last year's departure of Dean of Freshmen Lauren Stevens, who now runs an innocuous little local newspaper, the College again sustained a heavy administrative loss last week when Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor announced that he would leave his job with the College to sing lead vocals for English pop/heavy metal/punk group 999. Current lead vocalist Nick Cash will assume the Dean's post in Hopkins Hall. O'Connor will assume both jobs until next fall.

Both men are enthusiastic about the career trade. O'Connor, busy learning the words to such faves as "Homicide," "High Energy Plan," and "Drooling on Quaaludes to the Sounds of Cliche Guitar Riffs," managed to squeeze in time for an interview. O'Connor said he decided upon the change "sitting at my desk, fondling a bowling ball. I suddenly realized why shaved heads are so cool." O'Connor then remembers "rising from my desk, going into the next room and telling the President to piss off. Great fun, really."

O'Connor recently cut his hair in preparation for his new job,

Dean Dan shows off the haircut he got for his new job. (Would have been Farley, but he was busy at the time) and he now arrives at work in black cotton pants, engineers' boots, a silver lame t-shirt, and a button which reads "Academic beat."

Cash is just as excited. "What this place needs is some f-ing excitement. I'm the guy to bring it in. First, this whole lot needs a haircut. All these wankers who just sit in the library are bloody done for. They can open their eyes to the world and get about a bit more," he said in his stilted Cockney accent, "or we start playing Christopher Cross in the library. I don't know about these blokes, but that would drive me bloody crazy."

Cash also plans to eliminate all house parietals concerning noise levels and all College rules which deal with questions of respect, academic performance, and other areas of "suitable behavior." "I got better things to do than enforce stupid rules," Cash said.

Freddy Nathan's Gulfstream jet sits outside its hangar at North Adams' Harriman Airport. (No, not Farley)

Nathan lobbies Reagan

by Bye Birdie

College Council President Freddy Nathan '83 volunteered last week to visit Barbados in an attempt to lobby colleague Ronald Reagan about proposed cuts in student financial aid.

Council funds will be used to pay for Nathan's lodgings at the Waldorf Astoria in Barbados, to hire a limousine with a chauffeur, and to jet Nathan to the Caribbean island aboard College Council One.

"I think it's a fine, selfless gesture on Freddy's part," commented fellow Council member Russell Platt '82. "Council officers should be involved in student concerns and should be willing to give their time to represent their constituents. Freddy is making a real sacrifice to go down there to talk to Ronnie."

Nathan modestly declined to say how much the trip would cost. "I'm sure that an enterprising Record reporter will dig up the vouchers a year from now," Nathan said. "At that time I'll be in Europe and will talk about it over the phone."

Asked how he planned to approach Reagan, Nathan said he was lined up to give swimming lessons to Actress Claudette Colbert, with whom Reagan and his wife are staying.

"Once I've taught her the jellyfish float, Ronnie and I can probably drift into casual conversation," Nathan remarked. Spearheading the opposition of use of Council funds for Nathan's trip was Matt Shapiro '83.

"There has been no precedent for this kind of lobbying in the past," Shapiro objected. "It's fine if Freddy just wants to take a vacation, but I think if he wants to lobby, we have to draft some new rules."

Dan Flaherty '83 was quick to note that he had no idea what was going on.

"Undercutting the pecuniary consolidations of scholastic achievers is a nonsensical approach to the furtherance of worldwide parity," said Flaherty. "I think closing the window of vulnerability on this account would be comparable to placing all your eggs in one basket. Furthermore, leaders ought to abstain from recidive utterances."

Friedman replaced by T.V. star

"10,000 dollars is just too much to fork over to a piddly economics specialist," President John Chandler announced this week. The administration has decided not to hire the world-renowned economist Milton Friedman to speak to the College.

Instead, Chandler announced that the College has persuaded Milton the Toaster (of Kellogg's Pop Tarts fame) to speak for a much more reasonable sum of $1.37 (including electrical costs).

Cries of outrage were heard from the student body about the enormous sum Friedman would receive for a single speech. The College Council was responsible for quelling student furor over the plan.

"Not only did we refuse to add the necessary $1,000 to pay Friedman," said College Council member John Segal, "but we proposed a popular compromise." "We did something, we really did something!" several Council members were overheard saying.

Apparently Segal came up with the idea of having Milton the Toaster speak while he was having continental breakfast in Baxter Hall. "I was eating my Captain Crunch and reading a note on the nutritional value of a good breakfast supplied by the Food Service," explained Segal,

"When I got a craving for a Strawberry Kellogg's Pop Tart."

"I luckily had one with me, but I couldn't fight my way to the toasters," continued Segal, "Wouldn't it be great if Milton were here, I exclaimed."

Milton the Toaster is well known for his superior toasting abilities, but achieved his real fame through his many national T.V. and radio spots and lectures on breakfast nutrition in the early and mid 70's. He was singly responsible for the great popularity of the Kellogg's Tarts.

Food Service overwhelmingly supported Segal's idea of having Milton speak. "We've long been trying to persuade the College to bring Joe Salada, professor of Tea-bag Philosophy at Peking University, on campus," said Director Ross Keller. "Having Milton come is beyond our greatest expectations."

"He could inspire a whole new series of nutrition notes in dining halls," said Keller. The Record learned that The Toaster has already ghost-written several.

The speech will touch on several important issues. Appliances close to The Toaster have informed us of the topic: Toaster Tech, The Economic and Energy Saving Feasibility of Computerized I.D. Card Toasting Systems.

INSIDE THE RECORD

• Someone who wrote an Outlook likes Williams p. 4

• Concert listings for last week p. 5

• Dump page: continuations, boring articles p. 7

• Photographs of attractive athletes engaged in competition p. 10

Endorse everything

The Record has decided to change its mind. We have been given the reputation for being rather self-important in our endorsements and pronouncements. We feel this reputation is undeserved, but we still withheld endorsements in the College Council races to try to rid ourselves of this label. We were wrong. We've decided to endorse candidates after all. And that's not all. We're going to endorse for other things too.

We'd like to endorse Stuart Robinson and Jay Ward for College Council President and V.P. Heck, they'll do as good a job as anyone. Besides, they won and we have to work with them, so what the heck.

We'd like to endorse Henry Fonda for Best Actor and Kate Hepburn for Best Actress. The Record Staff went to see "On Golden Pond" together (we packed into Buckner's Subaru) and we all cried.

We'd like to endorse John Chandler for President of the College. We'd like to endorse the San Francisco 49ers for Pro Football Team of the year.

We'd like to endorse both sides in the Falkland Island dispute. We'd like to endorse America as a nation.

We'd like to endorse "Chariots of Fire" for Best Picture. Spears liked it better than "On Golden Pond".

We'd like to endorse ourselves for a Pulitzer Prize (for effort) That's all.

EP 4-12-82
here

The Williams Record

New Insect Killer

EDITORS

Total Arrests for 1981
81215

HELP WANTED

Barry Manilow

NEWS

The CIA, here and elsewhere

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

Not Intelligent

Flirts with a

OP-ED

the backs of the sheep

Ronald Isen

Discover the Great Pleasures of

SPORTS

Dan Keating

Michael Govan

The Fresh Standout

Have a good insecticide on hand.

Deadline 10:00 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price $12.00 per year.

Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class

FREAKSHOW

Your typical insurance salesman,
by Banevicius

I HATE REAGAN AND ALL THE REPUBLICAN FASCISTS!

THE WILLIAMS COLLEGE ADMINISTRATION MAKES ME WANT TO THROW UP!

I HATE THE WHOLE DAMN WORLD AND EVERYTHING IN IT!

BUT OF COURSE, I'D NEVER LET "SIDESHOW" BECOME VINDICTIVE! I JUST WANT TO MAKE PEOPLE LAUGH!

EPHAILURE

INTANGIBLES

by SUTTON

LETTERS

Tears

Dear Record:
You don't remember me, but I remember you. It's not so long ago, you broke my heart in two. Tears on my pillow, pain in my heart, caused by you.

Sincerely,
Lyman Casey Williams Octet

Which Bell?

Sirs:
Yes, I know we're all English professors in the Department, but let's get this straight once and for all. I'm the one who wears the Timberlands that are three sizes too big for my feet. And I'm a hell of a lot better looking than Ilona, anyway.

Sincerely,
Michael (no, not Bob) Bell,
Williams English Dept.

Dribble

Dear Record:
You printed a full page of Dave Moro's closed minded dribble and only a few inches of mine. I demand equal time.

Sincerely,
Nathan Klutz

Dean scrubs sheepdip

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor last week announced the abrupt cancellation of the planned six-week interdisciplinary colloquium "Sheepdip: A Falkland Islands Experience." Instead, Williams will sponsor an alternative symposium entitled "Aggression: An Argentine Affair."

The visit of the Falkland's Royal Governor has been cancelled, as has been the Falklands Film Festival. The sheep-shearing performance on Baxter Lawn will not take place, and the ethnic meal of fish-and-chips and warm beer will not be served.

A committee has been formed to plan Argentine cultural activities. They will include a visit by an Argentine general, massive street demonstrations, a military parade, an execution or two, and Argentine cuisine in the dining halls.

"We feel that the new program, by providing an interdisciplinary view of a Third World culture, will help students expand their horizons and conquer new intellectual territory," said O'Connor. "I'm very excited about it."

Dean Roosenraad commented, "The reason for the change of plan was the threatened occupation of Williamstown by 4,000 Argentine Marines, which we frankly didn't think would be beneficial to the academic community."

Dean Mary Kenyatta called the substitution "a great victory for oppressed Third-World students over vicious imperialism and neo-colonialism."

Student coordinator of the Falkland symposium James Carrington '82 could not be reached for comment, as he has apparently disappeared from the campus. "I'm sorry, Senator, but we have no record of such a student," said Security Director Ransom Jenks. "I cannot help you."

In a related move, the Trustees announced that tuition increases will be tied to the Argentine inflation rate. In consequence, next year's tuition bill will rise 140 percent.

Members of the Amherst Zumbies will perform in Brooks-Rogers auditorium this Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Admission is free. (Farley's mother)

Students playing the latest intramural rage, "Kitty Toss." The game involves throwing a kitten onto a roof, where several players then attempt to catch it. The first to catch the animal three times becomes the thrower. Half points are awarded for a handful of fur. "It's a great game," enthused Tom Casey of Dodd House. "You can have fun and get a suntan at the same time." (Your Mother)

Whereas,

Nobody really wants to be here in freezing, icy, frigid, wet, stormy January weather anyway.

Whereas,

Nobody can understand any of the proposals put forth by the Winter Study Review Committee and it's possible they're all on drugs.

Whereas,

We have no real power anyway and the administration will inevitably do what they please over our firm objections

Be it resolved,

that the College Council hereby urges the Faculty to ignore Winter Study until it goes away.

PAID FOR BY THE COLLEGE COUNCIL

HARVARD this summer

Learn to appreciate your Williams education by attending the Harvard Summer School, the nation's oldest summer session (most marginal Harvard types need all 12 months to pass), featuring open enrollment in a diverse offering of day and evening liberal arts courses, bloodlines permitting. The varied curriculum is taught by none of our prestigious faculty members, who are all on Martha's Vineyard sunning themselves with the Kennedys in return for past favors. No, you get the finest in graduate students as teachers, who most likely know even less than you do about the subject being taught. The international student body has access to the University's outstanding libraries, museums, and athletic facilities—but you don't. They're all closed for the summer. Even our dorms are closed for repairs, but a tent pitched in just the right part of Harvard yard is just a step away from paradise.

LIBERAL ARTS

Liberal what? Harvard is a university. We keep our prestige by recruiting for our med school, law school, and business schools. Do you think we have time to waste on undergraduates? They're all over at the Lampton biting the hand that feeds them or in Harvard square eating up leftist propaganda. We'll ignore you the same way. Great undergraduate courses in departments such as Anthropology, Computer Sciences, Fine Arts, Mathematics, Psychology, Music, and Visual and Environmental Sciences are all available. However, they are all advanced courses with prerequisites impossible for liberal arts students to have attained. We don't care. We're Harvard. We don't have to.

PRE-PROFESSIONAL AND EDUCATION

Harvard Summer School offers basic courses necessary for pre-medical preparation. But let's face it, if you need summer school you're not going to get into Harvard Med anyway. We use the eight week course to taunt you about this. Our profs are schooled in the art of using sarcasm and insults to make the student realize he'll never make the grade and become a Harvard man.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS

Programs in expository and creative writing, drama, dance and Preppy as a Foreign Language. Instructions in 11 foreign languages, including those spoken by most Harvard undergrads. Also, make fun of students attending the Ukrainian Summer Institute.

ACADEMIC CALENDAR
JUNE 21 - AUGUST 13, 1982
For further information, contact:
HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL
Department of Inferior Liberal Arts Students
P.O. Box 1, Cambridge, MA 02138
HARVARD. WE DON'T CARE. WE DON'T HAVE TO.

Please send Harvard Summer School catalogue and application for:
☐ Arts & Sciences and Education
☐ English as a Foreign Language
☐ Secondary School Student Program
☐ Dance Center

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____

HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL
Department 3N

THE CHOP SHOP

Hair Salon of the 80's

Pittsfield

Williamstown

Bennington, Vt.

Call for an appointment, or just walk in

Specializing in Williams students' sexual problems.
Editor, The Idaho Messenger
Rich Hendershot
September 29, 1981. Triplets

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-897-2400).
Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.
Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

Officials Strip Women

In a shocking move last Saturday, the NCAA officially announced that 1981-1982 Division III National Women's Swimming and Diving Champion Williams College has been stripped of its title following an extensive investigation which revealed a lucrative alumni slush fund.

The investigative committee refused to release its evidence before the Grand Jury indictment.

The Ephwomans, who had gone undefeated enroute to capturing the New England and National titles, have now technically forfeited all their matches to drop their record to 0-9. All members of the team have also been declared ineligible by the NCAA for further competition.

Head Coach Carl Samuelson was unrattled by the announcement. As he boarded his personal Lear Jet Sunday, he said, "That's OK. We can buy a new team next year."

Notre Dame basketball coach Digger Phelps, who tipped the NCAA off to begin the Williams investigation, recently revealed to the Times that the current price for a top college basketball player is $10,000 a year. Rumor has it that Division III women's swimmers can be obtained for the more reasonable sum of $15-20. That bargain rate may explain why alumni are more willing to purchase swimmers than to buy a new pool.

In an attempt to defend the school's reputation from the badgering of national press, Head of Admissions Phil Smith sent a letter to alumni and parents. He put the incident into perspective, saying, "What probably would have been termed aggressive recruiting is now termed athletic harassment."

The outcast swimmers are confused about what to do next. Senior Co-captain Barb Good complained, "My paychecks from Coach Sam will take care of me for a while, but then I might have to sell the Porsche."

Kenyon College of Ohio was named champion in Williams' place, leading Head Coach A.L. Wet to comment, "This is the greatest day of my life. I've proven that I can have a winning team while only spending half as much as Williams."

In a show of unity, the men's swim team cut off all their hair. Said one woman swimmer of the demonstration, "They shave their heads so often, who cares?"

The indicted women's swimming team, identities hidden to protect the innocent. (Farley's dog, Freckles)

Wrestlers help out

by the Mad Hungarian

College officials revealed plans yesterday to stage professional wrestling matches in the Towne Field House as one way to offset projected cut-backs in federal financial aid.

"I think it's a wonderful idea," grinned President John "Mad Dog" Chandler as he applied a flying double-knee headlock to a hapless Dean of the College Daniel "Blitz and Kick" O'Connor. "It will be a great way to increase cash flow and utilization of college facilities at the same time. I'll bet the Committee on the Eighties never thought of this one."

The administration hopes to establish Williamstown as the capital of this fast-growing sport. Most of the business will come from town residents, Chandler noted; demand curves prepared by the economics department show that Berkshire natives rank wrestling second only to midget clown women shows and log-sitting.

However, in order to attract students, the College plans to put several faculty members into the line-up, basing tenure decisions on win-loss records as incentive. Faculty will be able to take out the frustrations of "classroom politics" on their rivals in interdepartmental

"tag team" matches; the German, physics, and political science departments are listed as early favorites, although the history of ideas and art history departments were reported to be busily practicing the double-backflip-necklock.

A special feature will be faculty-student-administration free-for-all night. Even the rugby team fears the awesome trickery which the "Mean Dean" team reportedly is capable of displaying.

Professional wrestling is a long-standing but little-known tradition at Williams, dating back to Ephraim himself. Known as the "Greylock Gouger," he was never good enough to go on the international circuit, but did achieve major acclaim from his victory over Lord "Turncoat Sissy" Jeff. By means of a twisting double-elbow groin thrust, Eph proved that Lord Jeff had nothing much to damage there anyway.

In fact, former President James Garfield's famous remark about Williams was a misquote: he actually said, "the ideal college is Mark Hopkins at one end of a log, jumping off and landing a spread-eagle chest-hammer on the wild Hungarian at the other end."

NEWSBRIEF

A wave of emotion swept over the Williams campus as word was received of the canonization of Professor Whitney Stoddard '35 by the Vatican. Created a saint by Pope John Paul II in a Saint Peter's Square ceremony, Stoddard is the first Williams graduate to become a saint since the elevation of George Steinbrenner '52 last year.

PAPA CHUCK'S DELI ANNOUNCES OUR NEWEST IN WILLIAMS COLLEGE SPECIAL SANDWICHES

THE STEVE EPSTEIN-Kosher Salami and a pickle.
THE WILLIAMS RECORD-2 oz. of meat and lots of filler.
THE RENZI'S and DEWEY'S- A $3.50 sandwich for $6.75
The A. J. MOOR-Pure ham, nothing else.
THE CYRUS M. DODD HOUSE-A beautiful sandwich with little substance.
THE DAVE MORO-Turkey on Republican White Bread. Leans to the right.
THE RUGBY CLUB-Beer between two pieces of bread, rolled into a cigarette.

BEER SPECIALS!

Front End:

Hungarian Beer You Can't Pronounce $67.00/case
Ostrich Nipple Beer From Kenya 54.87/case

Rear End:

Donkey Slime 5.99/case
Weideman 2.99/case

PARTY WINE SPECIAL!

Thunderbird (twist off) .49/bottle
"The Breakfast of Champions"

BLEST PACKAGE STORE

ROUTE 2

Between N.A. and Williamstown

The Williams Record, in conjunction with Art 101, Philosophy 213 Political Science 425 and the Kennedy For President committee proudly present: The James McGregor Burns Coloring Contest

INSTRUCTIONS AND CONTEST RULES

1. Color in the picture of Prof. Burns as neatly and carefully as possible using imagination, creativity and manual dexterity.
2. In the spirit of Prof. Burns, begin coloring from the far left side of the page. Attack the far right if at all possible.
3. Do it right the first time, there will be no new deal.
4. Submit your entry to the Williams Record, c/o Ron Isen, Record Arts Editor and author of "360 things to do with crayons in the privacy of your own home."
5. First prize will be a copy of Burns' new book, "The American Experiment, Part I". Second prize will be two copies.

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 22

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

April 15, 1982

Freshmen pick Row Houses

by Brett McDonnell

Nearly 90 percent of the freshmen received their first or second housing choices this year, a rate about on par with previous years, according to Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta.

Overall, 15 percent of next year's freshman class will be in the Berkshire Quad, 16 percent in Dodd-Tyler, 28 percent in Greylock, 27 percent in Mission Park, and 15 percent in the Row Houses.

Berkshire in the basement

Under 5 percent of the freshmen listed the Berkshire Quad as their first choice, while 62 percent put it last. Still, Dean Mary Kenyatta stated that "the majority of people who are there now want to be there."

The most noticeable trend was a 64 percent increase in first choice requests to Row Houses, from last year's 84 to 138 this year. That is the second highest number of first choice requests for any house affiliation.

Greylock remained the most requested affiliation, with over 39 percent of the freshmen listing it as their first choice. Dodd-Tyler was third, followed closely by Mission Park.

Dodd-Tyler was the first choice of 76 freshmen, exactly the same as last year. This year, though, all 76 made it in because many of this year's residents were seniors and spaces for sophomores were intentionally left open during the upperclass transfer process. The number of people listing Mission Park first was down from 126 last year to 71 this year.

Five people did not turn in their inclusion forms and will receive letters from Wendy Hopkins, the Director of Student Housing. "Some of the excuses were pretty lame," said Kenyatta.

Vicious plot

Dealing with the disaffected can be a headache. "People

Requested (granted)

Choice	Berkshire	Dodd-Tyler	Greylock
1	22(22)	76(76)	199(137)
2	44(16)	59(4)	67(2)
3	58(13)	156(0)	89(1)
4	64(17)	184(0)	135(0)
5	314(6)	17(0)	11(0)

	Mission	Row
1	71 (67)	138(76)
2	192(42)	129(0)
3	76(17)	122(0)
4	37(3)	81(0)
5	128(0)	31(0)

don't really want to accept the fact that it's done by a computer," sighed Kenyatta. "They think it's a vicious plot against them personally." She has received about ten people in her office officially complaining and has talked to more people informally.

Kenyatta suggested that freshmen unhappy with their affiliation try swapping, but the deadling for that passed Monday. Beyond that, they can also file for a summer room affiliation change and try to win the spot of someone who does not come back next year.

J.A.'s picked by peer committee

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

Are the same kinds of people chosen each year to be Junior Advisers? Is the Junior Adviser Selection Committee, made up mostly of present and former JA's, a self-perpetuating clique? Do applicants whose JA's are on the committee have a sure bet of being selected?

These questions were on the minds of many whose dreams were made or dashed during the week before Spring Break, when the Selection Committee announced its decisions. The RECORD has tried to answer them by probing the makeup and procedures of the Committee.

Dean of Freshmen Cris Roosenraad is ultimately responsible for selecting JA's but the Deans have traditionally delegated the job to the all-student Selection Committee. Roosenraad believes that students, particularly present and former JA's, are most qualified to judge which of their peers have the most dedication and interest in being a JA.

"The selection process has withstood the test of time," he said. "I've discovered from talking with students that it has a lot of credibility."

Roosenraad added that he does not believe that JA's have the same characteristics or are a homogeneous group from year to year.

"I have reviewed the JA's who were picked in recent years," he said. "I've looked at their GPA's and where they live on campus. It is sometimes possible to characterize a group of JA's—for example, quite a few of last year's JA's were involved in intercollegiate athletics—but the characteristics change from one year to the next. This year, fewer JA's are involved with sports."

Advisory mold

JA's do share the qualities of being out-going and willing to devote time to their entries, Roosenraad claimed, which is part of their advisory role. But beyond this, he said, they do not fit into any specific mold.

One-third of the 20-member Selection Committee were seniors who were JA's last year. Some charge that seniors could be biased in favor of the JA applicants who lived in their entries the previous year. But the committee members claim that applicants who were friends with many of the members could actually be at a disadvantage.

"It's a false assumption that the people selected to be JA's 'know' someone on the committee," said Jon Dayton '82, the committee chairman. "The better you know someone, the more you get to know their weaknesses. There were cases where someone who was friends with the applicant said the applicant wouldn't be a good candidate . . . the members judged their close friends very fairly."

Personal bias?

"I know of two cases where committee members voted for a person they didn't personally like," added Rich Stern '83. "It made the difference between those applicants staying and going."

According to Carol Sutton '82, the committee devoted several hours a week to discussing the applicants, so she doubted that anyone joined just to get their friends selected.

The senior JA's were very helpful," added Donna Wharton '83. "They have the most accurate knowledge of candidates' strengths and weaknesses."

The other two-thirds of the committee was made up of current JA's and at-large representatives (see accompanying article on page 3).

The members of the committee stressed that selecting an applicant who was unqualified and uninterested would be a disservice to both the incoming freshmen and the applicant himself.

Continued on Page 3

Snow. Spring. Yeah.

(file photo)

Faculty begin final WS debates

by Katya Hokanson

Emphatic endorsement of Winter Study and strong criticisms of the concept of Winter Study itself marked the end points of the opinion spectrum at yesterday's faculty meeting.

Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor, speaking in behalf of the Winter Study Review Committee's Proposal A, praised its retention of the present system for sophomores and juniors, calling the winter period "an educational laboratory."

"The trips, the 99's, and the intensive work will still be preserved (under A)," he noted.

The freshman interdisciplinary seminars and the opportunity for seniors to undertake special projects will strengthen Winter Study, O'Connor added.

O'Connor also pointed out, however, that adding a fourth "honors" grade to the Winter Study marking system, as the Proposal suggests, might cause medical and law schools to count Winter Study courses in student GPA's. The Review Committee will thus reconsider its support of the honors grade, he said.

Abolish WSP

Chemistry professor Bill Moomaw spoke in behalf of Proposal B, which would abolish Winter Study and lengthen each semester from its present 12 weeks to 14 weeks.

"The question comes down to how much value the regular semester has in relation to Winter Study," Moomaw said. "The price for Winter Study is paid in the way you conduct the regular semester. The semesters here are barely longer than quarters at many other institutions."

Moomaw said that material in the present course system "comes thick and fast—students can't digest it or think about it."

Great Books

Fearing that proposal A's freshman interdisciplinary seminars "threaten to be amateurish in the bad sense," Philosophy Professor Charles Karells spoke in support of his Proposal for freshman Great Books seminars in place of Proposal A's interdisciplinary seminars.

Karells criticized what he felt would be the teaching of specialized information by non-specialists in proposal A's freshman seminars.

Some faculty members upheld the idea of Winter Study. Political Science Professors Vincent Barnett and James MacGregor Burns supported what they felt was the innovative, educational quality of the winter term.

"We can't retreat from Winter Study's central thrust," Barnett noted. "Faculty have benefited from trying new teaching methods and subject matter."

Barnett advocated Proposal A, suggesting that the faculty "revitalize their commitment to the winter period."

"The abandonment of a worthy experiment would be a reversion to orthodoxy and would diminish the reality and the perception of Williams," Barnett said.

Burns noted that, because of monetary constraints, "Innovation after innovation is being cut back at other places. It would be a fine statement about the quality and uniqueness of Williams if . . . we reaffirmed Winter Study."

Continued on Page 5

An open letter to the Faculty

- "Student opinion seems to be unified in favor of Winter Study," Daniel O'Connor
- "Look at the strong support for Winter Study coming from our best students," Peter Frost
- "Reversion to an orthodox calendar would diminish the reality and perception of what we want Williams to be," Vincent Barnett

At yesterday's faculty meeting, your colleagues raised some very important points in support of Winter Study. Unfortunately, not all of you believe in the value of Winter Study. To those of you who are unmoved by the efforts of your students and fellow faculty members, we address the following observations.

On the whole, Williams selects fine students who appreciate the educational opportunities offered by this school. Winter Study is one of the most prominent of those opportunities.

Students who work seriously, the majority of students, have earned the privilege of our January term. To end Winter Study as a punishment for a few undisciplined students would be vindictive.

Our introspective examination of Winter Study tends to magnify the program's shortcomings. To broaden our view, look at the January programs of other nearby colleges. Students at schools like Amherst and Smith are struggling to increase January course offerings and strengthen their program to a level that we achieved long ago.

Williams should be proud of what it has done in Winter Study. It would be folly to eliminate our January program because it failed to reach perfection. The constructive solution is to revise the curriculum, seeking the best possible results for faculty and students.

Liberal arts education is much more than a varied classroom experience. Liberal arts as practiced at Williams includes alternative classwork, travel, work experience, and extracurricular activities. The goal is to provide a wide-ranging exposure to learning that will serve as a springboard to a lifetime of education.

Regular semester courses do not have a monopoly of worthwhile education. Thus it is unfair to measure Winter Study against hours spent in regular semester classes. Both programs play a unique role in our education.

When you consider your colleagues' comments, student concern, other colleges' programs, and our liberal arts philosophy, it would be difficult for you to conclude that we must eliminate Winter Study. We hope you will bear these factors in mind when you make your decision in the coming days.

LETTERS

War party

To the editor:

I was so shocked after reading Dodd's "Raid the Falklands Party" flyer, that I thought there must be some mistake. Whether or not violence will occur in the Falklands, human life is potentially endangered. I'm surprised and disappointed that some students at Williams are so divorced from the reality of war that it becomes a party theme. I would have expected more maturity and respect for life from students who pride themselves on their depth of thought in so many other areas.

Sincerely,
Gretchen Ziegenhals

$2,000 too much?

To the editor:

I agree with Maryam Elahi '83 (Record, 3/9), that $10,000 to Milton Friedman is too much for a talk, and agree that the amount is too close to a professor's salary. Still, it is interesting to look at the economics of the matter. Prof. Friedman is in that rarefied class of academics who have agents, and the agent takes about 50%. 50% of the remaining $5000 goes for Federal income tax, and another 10% or so for state tax, leaving him with about $2000.

We would do better getting our Nobel Prize speakers on their way up, before they have agents or are in high tax brackets.

Jay M. Pasachoff
Assoc. Prof. of Astron.

The Williams Record

EDITORS
Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

NEWS
Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

FEATURES
Philip Busch

LAYOUT
Michael Govan

MANAGING EDITOR
Bob Buckner

OP-ED
Paul Sabah

SPORTS
Dan Keating

OUTLOOK
Jon Tigar

ENTERTAINMENT
Ronald Isen

PHOTOGRAPHY
Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College. (Phone 413-397-2400). Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year. Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA. March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA. 01267.

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Next year's Junior Advisors chosen got a fair treatment.

"If there was an applicant that no one had ever heard of at all, who thought he would be a good JA because he was extremely outgoing, we had to consider that claim as suspect," Dayton said.

Stern said Committee members tried to find out on their own more about unknown candidates by talking to the candidate's friends or JA.

Although committee member Kathy Galica '83 conceded that the picture of unknown applicants might be less complete, she said that did not rule them out as candidates. In some cases, too much information hurt a candidate's chances, she reiterated.

The Committee placed heavy emphasis on the personal statements and JA recommendations. Stern said. Some candidates expressed their willingness to devote time; committee members knew about other candidates' obligations.

"If a member said a candidate spent all his time in the library or was heavily into sports year round, that was a factor," Dayton explained.

But there was no such thing as the "perfect applicant," Galica said. "We weren't looking for a specific set of characteristics," she explained. "We tried to select a diverse group of sophomores."

Dayton claimed that although Committee members had different opinions on what constituted diversity, the Committee as a whole felt that it picked only the most qualified applicants.

No sophomores serve

by Julia Genlesse

Although Selection Committee Jon Dayton and Dean of Freshmen Cris Roosenraad say the committee represented a diversity of opinion, no sophomores were on the committee this year. The College Council's Elections Committee, a five-man group headed by John Segal '82, picks at-large members on the basis of a self-recommendation. Five of the 6 applicants turned down for the 8 at-large seats were sophomores; all were rejected on the basis of their statements, according to Segal.

"We weren't particularly impressed by people who wrote 'I think I know all the right people who should be JA's,'" he explained, "or 'I believe in Williams and think it's a great place.' A lot of people feel that way. Those statements didn't tell us anything about the applicant."

Some of the committee members said the opinion of sophomores would have been helpful; others did not think their absence from the committee made much difference.

Roosenraad said he had no opinion because he was unaware that no sophomores were selected. The Council also appointed one freshman to the committee. Dayton pointed out that while a freshman does not know as many of the applicants as do the upper-classmen on the committee, a freshman can be more objective about the candidates' personal statements.

Roosenraad added that he wanted to see more freshmen serve on the committee.

Only the at-large members must submit an application for spots on the committee. Former JA's volunteered to Dayton, their president, while current JA's went to Stuart Robinson, their president.

Dayton said that, in the interest of diversity, he had recruited at least one JA from each of the six freshmen dorms to serve on the committee.

Renzi's
COLLEGE BOOK STORE, INC.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267

Except for books which arrived late, all textbooks are being returned.

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

COTTAGE CLOTHES

CLASS ACT!

WATER STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN
OPEN 7 DAYS

This Summer, Cornell

What better place to be than far above Cayuga's waters as you improve your writing skills, work with computers, participate in a pre-law program, or take a course in conceptual drawing? Nowhere else can you learn in the company of so diverse a group of faculty and students in such a uniquely attractive setting of hills, lakes, gorges and waterfalls.

At Cornell, you can fulfill requirements, accelerate your degree program, or simply take advantage of the opportunity to study those intriguing subjects that you have always put off.

Request an Announcement and see for yourself all the reasons why Cornell is the place you should be this summer. Tuition is $145 per semester credit or less.

Cornell University Summer Session, B13 Ives Hall, Ithaca, New York 14853

Preseason Shoe Sale

Selected Shoes

20% - 50% off

Running

	Reg.	Sale
Nike Elite	35.95	28.95
Reebok Aztec	49.95	39.95
Ladies New Balance 620	48.95	25.00
Ladies Reebok Shadow	39.95	31.95

Tennis

Nike Lady Racquette	24.95	15.00
Men's Bata Canvas	24.95	15.00

Selected baseball & soccer shoes

$10 - $15

Goff's Sports, inc.

MON.-SAT. 9-5:30

MASTER CARD VISA

Spring Street 458-3605 Williamstown

TEACHING:
THE CAREER WITH A FUTURE

Mathematics • Science • English • Social Studies
Elementary Education • Spanish • Music • Art • Dance Physical Education • Special Education • TESOL (Teaching of English to Speakers of Other Languages) • Bilingual Education • Reading and Education

Come to the largest, most diversified graduate school of education in the world and prepare to meet the growing demand for public and independent school teachers.

Teachers College offers

- Individual advisement and study opportunities to help liberal arts graduates without extensive backgrounds in mathematics or science meet the urgent need for teachers of these subjects.
- Emphasis on computer literacy and the application of technology to learning and teaching.
- Courses in multilingual and multicultural aspects of education.
- Joint degree programs with other graduate schools of Columbia University, Union Theological Seminary, and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America.
- Special financial aid programs for future teachers studying full-time or part-time in designated fields.
- Access to New York City, an international center of politics, the arts, economics, culture, communication, and ethnic diversity.

TEACHERS
COLLEGE
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

For more information, call (212) 678-3710 or complete the coupon below and send to Box 302A, Teachers College/Columbia University, New York, New York 10027.

Please send information about graduate programs in Teaching. I am particularly interested in the following field(s): (please list)

Name _____

Address _____

Undergraduate school _____

Date of graduation _____

Major field _____ Minor field _____

A day on the docks of New Bedford

by Peggy Stevenson

On a cold, bright, dusty morning in March on the fishing wharves of New Bedford, Massachusetts, the students of the Williams-Mystic Program are entering a different kind of classroom. Books temporarily put aside, we are in a small brick building. The room is crowded with the fishermen of New Bedford and other nearby ports. It is eight o'clock in the morning, and the air is filled with smoke. A number of the conversations flying around are in quick, clipped Portuguese. This is the fish auction of the New Bedford Boat Owners Association.

Returning from trips of up to ten days of fishing on Georges Bank or Nantucket Shoals are the vessels Iberia II, Sagres, Valkyrie, Odin, and others. They have mixed cargoes consisting mostly of cod, haddock, and yellowtail flounder, with a few other species mixed in. A vessel's cargo is listed by species, in thousands of pounds, on a chalkboard at the front of the building. An entire trip's catch is sold in one piece. In front of the chalkboard, and separated from it by a high rail, are the buyers from fish packing plants in the area.

The bell rings at eight o'clock, starting twenty minutes of bidding. Officials of the auction walk back and forth by the chalkboard, writing the price per pound of each species, which rises as the bidding continues. When the bidding is closed, a boat's captain can take what is offered, or he may try to sell the load elsewhere, although it is unlikely that prices will get any better, and moving elsewhere costs time and diesel fuel.

Looking like small New England college students, we stand out from the crowd and draw some stares. The fishermen are curious; but not inquisitive.

We are conducting a kind of research which only moves if we ask the questions. Once they get started, the fishermen love to talk. A question about the size of "whale" cod brings an answer that moves from the subject of cod, to the trials of the fishermen's union, to the problems with foreign competitors, to the quota system imposed on commercial fishermen by the Federal government, to criticisms of "the guys who make the rules", and back to the price of cod. When asked who it is that makes the rules, he replied—"Ted Kennedy, you know, guys like that."

New Bedford has a large Portuguese community, and many of the Portuguese are fishermen. Some questions were answered in broken English, some were not answered at all. Later, we see where some of the Portuguese-manned and owned vessels are docked. It is an impressive fleet. A man is weaving a ripped net with fast, expert hands.

Most of the men we talked to didn't seem pleased with the fishing conditions on the Banks. The highest praise of the fishing grounds—"Not too bad."

Still, fishing can't be all that bad, because some of the men are getting wealthy in this business. An experienced deckhand can get $40,000 a year or better. Part ownership of a vessel or command of one increases that sum considerably. And yet—with only a sketchy knowledge of what a fisherman's life is like, I came away from the New Bedford docks in no doubt that they earn their money.

We are given a swift tour of the docks and of the vessels by Howard Nickerson, an official of the New England Fisheries Steering Committee. He was a commercial fisherman for many years before coming onshore to work for the cause of New England fishing. He is a gruff man, and speaks in a forceful manner. No words are wasted. In speaking of New Bedford fishing, he refers to "the product", or "seafood", he seems to have an aversion to the word "fish."

Our time in New Bedford included the fish auction; tours of the wharves, some fishing vessels and a fish packing plant; a visit to the Seamen's

"It takes some shifting of the cerebral gears to move from the library stacks to the wharves of New Bedford to do research."

Bethel (an ecumenical church for sailors); and a look at the New Bedford Whaling Museum.

The day in New Bedford is a class of the Marine Policy Seminar, one of the courses taught by Professor Benjamin Labaree, director of the Williams-Mystic Program. The seminar is an integrated study of the politics, industries, laws, people, and events which surround this country's maritime activities. This day is an unusual, refreshing approach to learning. It is delving into the realities of a modern industry by talking with the people who work in it and make it their way of life. It takes some shifting of the cerebral gears to move from the library stacks to the wharves of New Bedford to do research. There is a spark to it that I don't think I will ever associate with reading scholarly works.

This day is a start, but there is a long way to go. I was told, emphatically, by a fisherman who kept his other eye on the price of yellowtail flounder as he spoke,—that I had to see it for myself. Come down to the docks and go out on the fishing grounds for a couple of days. To understand the fisherman's business, and his life, he said, "You've got to go out on the boats."

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE 118 Water St., 10 a.m. - 2 p.m., Monday - Friday. Phone 458-8157.

FOR SALE: Altec Lansing 5 speakers, four years old, $200/pair. Call Dave Dewey, 8-4020.

UNCLE JIM will be at the Log tonight.

FOR SALE—Ibanez electric guitar, 65 watt Yamaha Amp. W/ built-in dist. S.U. 2497.

I'M SELLING MY BOMB. 1973 Chevy Chevelle wagon-new battery, recent tune-up, runs well (just went to Florida and back). Perfect for commuting to La Cocina or the 5 college area. $450 negotiable. Call AJ x2662.

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O.
Dr. Thomas R. Maselli
OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

SUPER CUTOUT LP SALE

Pretenders I & II	$3.99
Hendrix "Experiences" Soundtrack I & II	$4.99
Ramones "End of the Century"	$3.99
Madness I & II	$3.99
Blondie "Parallel Lines"	$4.99
Human Sexual Response	$3.99

— HUNDREDS MORE —

— SOME QUANTITIES LIMITED —

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street

458-5229

Viewpoint

I sleep a lot

by Susan G. Reifer

Recently I had an unsettling conversation, a good laugh, a curious fright and a depressing loss. Or maybe I should say I had an innocuous chat, a bicycle, a visitor and a backpack. Or maybe I should just explain . . .

My conversation was not really a chat. It was a mere statement. A girl I know simply said, "It is really a shame that Easter Sunday is after vacation. People should be with their families then . . . Maybe we should organize an Easter egg hunt in the quad. That would be good—Everyone celebrates Easter." At the time I said nothing; but that night as I lay in bed her comment came back to me. Everyone celebrates Easter. "Funny," I thought, "that's the first I heard of it." I wanted to run upstairs and ask her, "Does everyone think about death the same way you do? And is the red that I see the same color as the red that you see? And do all families have the same income as does your family? Or don't the others count, are they not part of your Everyone?" But I didn't. I just felt sad and went to sleep.

My good laugh was not really a bicycle. It was a missing bicycle. I came home from the library late one night and noticed that my bicycle was missing. I looked all over and eventually found it. I found it in a tree. A birch tree. And boy did I laugh. It was very funny seeing my bicycle lodged, unharmed, in that birch tree outside of Williams A. I wanted to get it down but I didn't. I just chuckled and went to sleep.

Faculty Meeting—

Continued from Page 1

Jane Lopes '82, member of the Review Committee, was the only student to speak at the meeting. She supported keeping Winter Study and said she considered the winter term more valuable than the extra time that would be provided by longer semesters.

Peter Frost of the History department countered the statements made by many of his colleagues that students put forth effort during regular semesters but slack off during Winter Study.

"Do all students work terribly hard during the regular semesters?" Frost asked. "No! And they don't all goof off during Winter Study. Winter Study is good for the best students."

Michael Katz of the Russian department, on the other hand, found fault with all the proposals, particularly proposal A.

"Proposal A tries to be all things to all people," Katz said, "and ends up not being a substantial change . . . I don't know what I'm going to do two weeks from now—maybe I'll stay home."

Proposals and amendments to proposals will be accepted until April 19. The faculty will vote on amendments to proposals and the proposals themselves on April 28.

CONCERT LISTINGS

prepared by

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

Apr. 16 Police, Carrier Oome, Syracuse, NY

Apr. 17 & 18 Grateful Dead, Civic Ctr., Hartford (sold out)

Apr. 20 & 21 Bonnie Raitt & the John Hall Band, Orpheum, Boston

Apr. 23 Bonnie Raitt, Palace, Albany

Apr. 23 thru 25 B-52's, Orpheum, Boston (sold out)

Apr. 29 Asia, Orpheum, Boston

May 1 Rick Springfield, Civic Ctr., Providence, RI

May 2 Rick Springfield, John B. Hynes Vet. Auditorium, Prudential Ctr., Boston

May 7 Sammy Hagar, Orpheum, Boston

May 20 The Jam, Orpheum, Boston

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday

Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday

Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday

Watch Record
for specials.

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

IF ANY ONE OF YOU— FACULTY, STUDENT, FEMALE, MALE, WHOEVER,WHATEVER— IS TRULY INTELLECTUAL OR INTELLIGENT OR INTERESTING AND SINCERE TO WANT TO TRY A 'TRUE' (POSSIBLE?) FRIENDSHIP BEFORE YOU DIE, PLEASE DO CONTACT ME, MONIQUE W. (PHI), AT ANY TIME, SOME WAY. X6560(24 hours) S.U. 1403 28 Tyler

WILLIAMSTOWN
NATIONAL BANK

Williamstown Massachusetts

COMPLETE BANKING AND
TRUST SERVICES

We Know How To Help

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

SPRING BEER SPECIALS

Molsons Golden Ale	still $11.99/case
Tuborg Gold 12 oz. NR	$7.99/case
Schlitz 12 oz. cans	$8.79/case

Carlings, Reingold, Schmitt's and Utica Club
16 oz. returnables $7.49/case plus $1.50 deposit

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

LaCocina

OPEN EVERY DAY
FROM 11:30 AM
SUN. FROM 4 PM

home style Mexican cooking
all legal beverages

nightly entertainment

MONDAY AND TUESDAY

25° DRAFT BEER

LUNCHEON
SPECIALS

850 State Road. 664-4757

The Berkshires Most Unique Family Restaurant

The career of the 80's!
It begins with our second degree.

Economic security.

Today's changing health care field provides exciting career options, mobility and economic security. There is a growing demand for men and women with the bachelor of science in nursing degree. Most graduates earn starting salaries of $18,000 to $21,000 at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania and other leading institutions.

Career options.

- Consulting to industry and health care organizations
- Medical and nursing publications
- Direct patient care
- Public health law
- Independent practice
- Administration and education

I'd like more information.

Name _____

Address _____

City, State, Zip _____

Director of Admissions

School of Nursing

University of Pennsylvania

Nursing Education Building Philadelphia, PA 19104

(215) 243-4271

Upward mobility.

We offer a special second degree program that credits your present degree toward the BSN. Electives are waived. Scheduling is flexible. Financial aid is available. You can submatriculate into one of our 14 master's programs while completing your undergraduate studies.

Be a leader.

This is the career of the 80's. It's specialized and it's varied. A BSN from a leading Ivy League university will start you on your way in a profession that will grow and expand in the years to come.

Second in nation

Ephmen gain best finish ever

The men's swim team finished a strong second in the NCAA Div. III National Championships for Swimming and Diving completed over Spring Break at Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Va. Kenyon College of Ohio won the meet for the third straight year, totaling 299 points to Williams' 197 and St. Lawrence University's 147.

The second place gives the Ephmen their highest finish ever in the national meet, and comes just one week after the Williams women swimmers captured the national title.

Williams pulled away from St. Lawrence on the final night of the three day meet. Captain Mike Regan '82 took a third place in the 100 yard freestyle with a time of 46.16. Rob Sommer '84 then swam a 1:58.06 200 yard backstroke to capture fifth place. The 200 yard butterfly event saw two Williams swimmers finish in the top ten, with Ben Aronson third and freshman Peter Orphanos '85 sixth. The Williams 400 yard relay squad of Sommer, Regan, Jeff Mills '84 and Jeff Mook '83 put together a time of 3:08.5 to finish second behind Kenyon College.

Regan and Sommer were standouts throughout the meet for Williams. Regan finished third in his other sprint specialty, the 50 yard freestyle, while Sommer picked up a third place in the 100 yard back and a fourth in the 200 yard individual medley. The two were also members of the champion 400 yard medley relay team, which included junior Dave Rowley swimming breast stroke and Aronson swimming butterfly. The foursome set a pool record with their time of 3:30.43 on Thursday evening.

Doug Jones of Clairmont-Mudd distinguished himself by setting two NCAA Div. III records while winning both backstrokes events. His times were 1:52.0 and 52.09 in the 200 and 100 yard races respectively.

Joseph Gentile of Western Patterson also won two individual events. He set a pool record of 20.88 in the 50 free and an NCAA record in the 100 yard free with a time of 45.57.

The Williams Ephmen are the New England swim champs for the fourth straight year. Their regular season record was 8-1.

Snow and ice closed down most spring sports this weekend. When spring starts, so will spring sports. Stay tuned to this station for news of their commencement. (Berg)

THE KING'S LIQUOR STORE
part of the Williams College
since 1946

BEER SPECIALS

Bud Lite in Stock

Stout for Spring

Guinness - $3.39/4 pk.

on Spring Street 413-458-5948

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

FOR SOPHOMORES OR JUNIORS
An American Studies Semester in Boston

Interdisciplinary courses in American Culture (architecture, the decorative arts, history, literature, material culture, and painting), and Urban Affairs (social history, political science, and sociology) . . . Practical experience through an internship in a civic or cultural institution . . .

Apply now for next semester: The New England Program
226 Bay State Rd.
Boston University, Boston, MA 02215
Phone: 617-353-2948

FRIDAY
Happy Hour 4-6 pm
w/Happy Hour prices

THE LOBB

McCLELLAND'S
STATIONERY & OFFICE SUPPLIES
38 Spring St., Williamstown 458-4930

artspace

GRAND OPENING!
20% off everything through this week.

Cornell Law School
Undergraduate Prelaw Program
June 7 to July 20, 1982

A demanding six-week program
for college students who want
to learn what law school is like.

For further information write to
Jane G. Death, Cornell Law School
634 Myron Taylor Hall, Ithaca, NY 14853

THE CLIP SHOP AND YOU
A TEAM THAT WORKS WELL TOGETHER!

We just want you to know that your continued patronage and kind words are appreciated. We feel you, the students of Williams College, are one of the reasons for our big success. That is why we have always had a discount for students. From now til May 15th we would like to offer an additional $2.00. It's a way for us to say thank you to all of you who have visited us before, and a great opportunity for those whom we never met. This offer is good only if you bring this advertisement with you.

As always, we are eager to please and accommodate you with our excellence.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

GENUINE

This week's recipient is senior co-captain of the swim team Mike Regan. He led the squad to second place in the nation—the team's highest finish ever. Mike, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

The Williams Record

Vol. 95, No. 23

USPA 684-680

Williams

College

April 20, 1982

Student thwarts abduction attempt

by Jeffrey H. Brainard

An unidentified man unsuccessfully attempted to force a Williams woman into his car last Saturday night at about 7:45 p.m., according to Dean of the College Daniel O'Connor.

Later that evening, between 8:15 and 8:45 p.m., an 18-year-old woman disappeared from a store in Florida, Massachusetts. Since Florida is about 30 minutes from Williamstown by car, O'Connor and the police suspect that she could have been abducted by the same man.

O'Connor reported that the campus incident occurred when a man allegedly stopped his car on the road behind Lehman Hall, called the Williams student over to ask for directions, and then stepped out and attempted to force her into the car. She screamed and bit him, managing to free herself and run away.

There were no eyewitnesses and the man drove away before the victim could get his license plate number. However, the woman described the man as white, about 30 years of age, 5'4", light brown hair, and barrel chested with a pot belly. His car was a Ford LTD, light green with a dark top and a light blue interior. O'Connor asks anyone who saw this individual to contact Security.

"We're assuming this was an isolated incident, but it shows that we're not immune to the problems of the larger society," O'Connor said. "It also shows that students can defend themselves."

There were no witnesses to the alleged abduction in Florida, which is a few miles east of North Adams. The woman, Lynn M. Burdick, was alone in the store. She is described as 5'4", 115 pounds, with long, dark brown hair. She was wearing a plaid gray-pink shirt, blue jeans, and a windbreaker. The store's cash box was also missing. The Massachusetts State Police are investigating the case but have no leads so far.

A man fitting the description of the attacker was also seen on Friday night in Sawyer Library, O'Connor said. The man reportedly entered a women's bathroom. A woman asked him who he was and he replied that he worked for the company that operates the library's vending machines. He then left, and no further incident was reported.

O'Connor reminded students to report suspicious individuals to Security. He also pointed out that students can get escort service by calling Security at 2336.

Students charged to the 1982 season opening of Chapin beach.

Student seeks closed recruiter policy

by Laura Sellgsohn

Employers that do not follow College policies on individual rights would be barred from Office of Career Counseling (OCC) facilities under a proposal now before the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL).

Jeff Menzer '82 appeared before the Committee last week to ask "that the OCC adopt a policy which denies use of its facilities to organizations which do not adhere to the College's policy on individual rights."

CUL chairman Cris Roosenraad said this "very narrow proposal" would affect only organizations that have written policies that directly violate College rights. This would, he illustrated, affect the armed services, which prohibit homosexuals from enlisting, but would not cover organizations which may practice secondary discrimination through operations in South Africa. He added that only OCC services, such as scheduling interviews, publicizing the organization and providing a room for the recruiter, would be withheld.

The Student Handbook recognizes "men and women of diverse races, religions, national ethnic backgrounds, and sexual orientations" and guarantees the "rights of all to express themselves in words and actions, so long as they can do so without infringing upon the rights of others or violating standards of good conduct."

Menzer commented after the meeting, "The College has made a commitment to these values, and should maintain them."

President John Chandler spoke in support of the current OCC open recruitment policy at a faculty meeting in February in response to a student demonstration against Air Force interviews.

Menzer maintained that Chandler fails to distinguish between freedom of thought and freedom of action. Chandler exceeds the reasonable limits of the term 'open campus,' argues Menzer, when he allows the accommodation of groups which engage in discriminatory actions.

Admission competition stiffens

Twenty-one percent of the class of '86 hopefuls received acceptance letters last week, as compared to 23.5 percent the year before. The Admissions Office reviewed 4,426 applications this year.

The twenty one percent acceptance rate puts Williams in an elite group of schools. Only six to ten schools admit less than 25 percent of their applicants, according to Admissions officials.

The number of minority acceptances increased as did the number of students admitted from urban areas. Rural boarding schools, traditionally important sources of Williams students, accounted for fewer applicants than usual.

Acceptances of blacks jumped from 71 to 85 students, almost a 20 percent increase. Blacks constitute over nine percent of those accepted. The number of Asian-Americans admitted remained virtually unchanged at 117. The College accepted 71 Hispanics this year as opposed to 58 last year. Women comprise 44 percent of those accepted.

Admissions officials see a trend toward greater numbers of urban students.

"New York City is one of the urban areas where academic schools have remained strong," remarked Tim Napier, Assistant Director of Admissions. The two high schools with the highest number of students accepted were New York schools Regis and Stuyvesant, with acceptances of 16 and 12 respectively. The states with the highest representation in acceptances are, in descending order: New York, Massachusetts, California, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

Transfer policy deadlocked

As two plans to change the house transfer system lie deadlocked in the Housing Committee, the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) underlined its intention to review the current open transfer policy before the end of the academic year, according to CUL chairman Cris Roosenraad.

Housing Committee chairman Kathleen Merrigan '82 reported that College Council guidelines prevent the committee from presenting an official recommendation to the CUL.

She claimed that two-thirds of committee members support a tightened transfer system. John Kowalik '83, Pratt House President, pointed out, however, that the support is divided between two proposals, one creating class quotas for houses and one requiring a Dean's approval for affiliation changes.

One-third of the committee supports the status quo, said Merrigan. Kowalik explained that these members, usually Mission Park or Greylock presidents, believe house affiliation should be "a matter of preference."

College Council rules require Housing Committee decisions to be made by consensus of all members or by a majority of ten voting members—the five Housing Category representatives and five members elected by the rest of the committee.

Merrigan said the Committee will submit an unofficial report to the CUL in two weeks, in "the spirit of a Supreme Court opinion," with both the majority and minority viewpoint.

Kowalik said he expects the CUL will "definitely take into consideration what the students think" about the transfer policy.

Librarian shelves career

by Sarah R. Gross

Lawrence Wikander, Williams College Librarian, is retiring this year after 14 years of service.

After graduating from Williams in 1937, Wikander attended Columbia University and the University of Pennsylvania. Wikander returned to Williams in 1968 after working at the Forbes Library in Northampton, Massachusetts and Temple University in Philadelphia.

Called back to help plan and oversee the construction of Sawyer Library, he remained as College Librarian. His revisions include expanding the College's reference facilities, introducing computers as a resource, and helping found the Williamsiana Library in Stetson.

Phyllis Cutler, Assistant Librarian and Science Librarian at Brandeis University, will assume Wikander's position in July. Cutler, who received a B.A. from Harvard in 1962, earned an M.S.L.S. from Simmons College in 1966 and worked at libraries in Norwood and Newton, Massachusetts, before going to Brandeis.

Wikander thinks the library will face a few major challenges in the next few years. A major project includes the creation of a "joint library system" which would incorporate other college libraries in a common ownership of reference materials. Students can expect to find more microfilm and microfiche and expanded computer applications in the library.

Once he retires, Wikander plans to follow his philosophy of "not being at a certain place at a certain time."

He is pursuing his interest in Calvin Coolidge by working on a project to organize and publish a manuscript on the man. He is a Trustee of the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Foundation and the author of Calvin Coolidge: A Chronological Summary.

The Trustees also appointed Winthrop Wassenar, now Associate Director of the Physical Plant, to succeed Peter Welanetz as Director of the Physical Plant on January 1 of next year.

They also approved beginning the alumni addition to the faculty club, but expressed some uncertainty over the new theater, leaving its construction up to President Chandler's discretion.

INSIDE THE RECORD • The South African plight _____ p.3

• Dangers of nuclear rhetoric _____ p. 4

• Williams invades UN — p.7

• Women's crew triumphs 10

The Williams Record

Don't Sell Us Short

"Williams College (has established) codes of conduct . . . to foster . . . learning to honor tastes and beliefs that may differ from one's own."
Student Handbook

We pride ourselves in being open-minded—hearing all sides of an issue before reaching a decision. Yet a proposal before the Committee on Undergraduate Life would prohibit the Career Counseling office from seeking, providing for, or publicizing any organization that violates the school's stated guidelines for student conduct.

Restricting any freedom of information on campus is clearly opposed to the stated goals of the institution. The guidelines for student conduct are intended to protect the widest possible range of personal behavior "without infringing on the rights of others." A regulation ostensibly set to protect the rights of a few students would infringe on the rights of others who wish to learn about outside organizations.

The decision of whether one should hear a representative is a personal choice. If an organization is intrinsically bad and unworthy of Williams students, then surely we should be capable of making that judgment on our own. Prohibiting these groups from campus robs us of the chance to listen, agree or disagree.

Although the proposal does not prohibit representatives from the entire campus, it presents obstacles which unfairly handicap our access to information.

The students have earned the right to make knowledgeable decisions for themselves.

SIDESHOW

by SUTTON

TANGENTS

by Grodzins

EPHRAIM

by Banevicius

Lawrence Wikander's philosophy of life:

"... not being at a certain place at a certain time."

LETTERS

The doors

To the editor:
Why is it that the three loudest doors on the Williams College campus serve as the main entrances to the second, third and fourth floors of the Sawyer Library?
Jeff Louis '85

Help

To the editor:
As a group of concerned individuals, the members of OPEN LINES would like to remind students, faculty, and staff that the end of the semester is a period of increased psychological stress. We hope that this college community will be mindful of the added pressures and be responsive to them. Many resources such as the Dean's office, the Chaplain's office, Peer Health, and OPEN LINES, are available to help alleviate these problems. Don't hesitate to take advantage of these services; we want to help.

Sincerely,
OPEN LINES
William Joseph Cotreau '84
Diane Margolin '83
Carol West '83

Hardships continue for apartheid's victims

by Lola Bogoy

Editor's Note: The following article on apartheid appears in the same week that South African poet and scholar Dennis Brutus visits the Williams campus. In honor of his visit we reprint some of his poetry within the article.

I have recently resigned from Williams' Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR), a year and a half after gladly accepting my appointment. I perceived it then as an opportunity to work against racial discrimination in South Africa; I quit when I became convinced that my participation on that committee was ineffective in producing change in South Africa—or, for that matter, at Williams.

During that year and a half, I learned a great deal about South Africa and about apartheid. I want to share some of that information with you and explain why I believe that fighting apartheid is my responsibility—and yours.

Literally, the term "apartheid" means "separateness." In practice, apartheid is a system of legally mandated racial discrimination; the law expressly provides separate and unequal privileges for blacks and whites. One's political, civil, economic, and social rights are determined on the basis of race. South Africa is not simply another country in which racism exists; it is the only country in which racism is a cornerstone of the political and economic system.

Non-whites, who make up about 85 percent of the population, are excluded entirely from participation in the political system which governs them. Civil liberties are equally restricted. The government may imprison indefinitely any person suspected of being a danger to state security or public order. This is called "preventive detention"—imprisonment without trial or determination of guilt. A recent Rockefeller Foundation Commission on South Africa notes that "a person who stands in jeopardy of losing his or her freedom by arbitrary detention or other forms of confinement, because he or she has spoken out against injustice, for example, has, for all practical purposes, no civil rights at all." The Commission reports that in South Africa "anyone who engages in activities frowned on by the government lives in constant danger of losing his or her personal freedom."

Even peaceful criticism of the government risks heavy costs. Executive decree can imprison individuals, close down newspapers, and outlaw organizations. Organizing to work for peaceful change threatens "law and order" in South Africa, because those laws and that order are founded on racial discrimination.

Economic and social rights are similarly curtailed. The government has relegated the African population to so-called "native homelands"—scattered bits and pieces of rural, arid territory to which most Africans have no tribal or historical bond. In order to support their families, Africans must seek work outside of the homelands—but even traveling requires government permission. Every African must carry a passbook containing identification and employment information; that passbook determines where the individual may be and where he or she may work. Failure to carry a passbook, looking for a new job in a new place and being anywhere without permission are all crimes punishable by imprisonment.

When business concerns need cheap labor, the government grants permission to work and live outside the homelands. But the wage-earner's pass does not extend to his or her family members, who must remain behind. In this way, apartheid rips families apart—sometimes for months, sometimes for years. This is hardly social justice.

If we look at health, education, and income statistics, the implications of apartheid become clear. The mortality rate for black infants is ten times as high as that for whites. Malnutrition among blacks is widespread. For example, a recent survey of one of the homelands estimated that 52 percent of the two-to-three-year-olds are malnourished. In the schools, ten times as much is spent on white schoolchildren as black. Whites earn ten times as much per capita as blacks. Apartheid in South Africa does indeed mean separate and unequal.

Much more could be said about apartheid and its consequences, but I think these facts convey a general sense of the situation. The human suffering is enormous—and unnecessary. Apartheid benefits a very few at the cost of a great many.

Deplore it as you might, it is often relatively easy to ignore racism when you are not directly involved. But to deplore racism is not enough. To do nothing about apartheid is to allow the system—and the suffering—to continue. If you believe that there are basic human rights then you must defend them for all people in all places.

I will not presume to tell you how you should fight apartheid. There are many possible routes and many disagreements about which are most effective. I quit the ACSR because I disagreed with other well-intentioned people about what Will-

When they deprive me of the evenings how shall I speak my inexpressible grief?

Think of the night-air, sweet with dew and stars
the moon a molten ingot's spilling—splash plagued on the night's glassed-ocean floor, the elegance of lamp-lit autumn oaks preening in accidental man-made grace and this rat-ceilinged hovel on my head.

When I am prisoned from my evenings
how shall I word my inarticulate woe?

I shall curl to the tight knot of a shrivelled worm or angularly bundled like a mangy cat huddle against myself for warmth or grub among leaf-litter of my autumn years rustling foregone endearments in my throat and seeking easement in remembered tenderness

but how shall I mouth my unencompassable woe and how shall I be consoled?

ams as an institution can and should do to fight apartheid. I would be glad to discuss my opinions with anyone who is interested. My purpose here is not to present my own opinions, but to urge you to form your own.

People all over the country, in churches, at universities, in social concern groups—are banding together to fight apartheid. The Williams Anti-

Apartheid Coalition is open to all students, faculty and staff who want to join in the effort. I urge you to learn more from them and from other sources, and to decide for yourself which actions seem most effective.

If you find racism abhorrent, help to end it. If you believe in human rights, help fight for them. If you don't speak out, your silence will speak for you.

For My Sons & Daughters

Memory of me will be a process of conscious and unconscious exorcism;
not to condemn me, you will need forgetfulness of all my derelictions, and kindness will be only yours
if you insist on clinging steadfastly to some few small exaggerated symbols—
"This much he cared," or "Thus he did"
and "If he could, he would have done much more."

This I can understand, for my affection enables me to penetrate the decades and your minds and now I seek no mitigation—would even welcome some few words of scorn;
but it might help if, reading this,
in after adult bitter years,
you are enabled then to say: "He really cared then?"
"Really cared?" "Our fictions have some substance then!"

I will not ask you then to add what I do now:
my loneliness; my failures; my amalgam wish to serve:
my continental sense of sorrow drove me to work and at times I hoped to shape your better world.

Dennis Brutus 1978

The Williams Record

EDITORS

Rich Henderson, Steve Spears

NEWS

Sara Ferris
Katya Hokanson

MANAGING EDITOR

Bob Buckner

OUTLOOK

Jon Tigar

FEATURES

Philip Busch

OP-ED

Paul Sabbah

ENTERTAINMENT

Ronald Issen

LAYOUT

Michael Govan

SPORTS

Dan Keating

PHOTOGRAPHY

Steve Farley

The RECORD is published weekly while school is in session by the students of Williams College (Phone 413-397-2100).
Deadline for articles and letters is 2 p.m. Sunday. Subscription price is $12.00 per year.
Entered as second class postal matter Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA., and reentered at Williamstown, MA, March 5, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA, 01267.

McClelland's Stationery and Office Products

Hallmark Cards
Crane and Eaton Stationery
School Supplies
Art Supplies

 McClelland's
36 Spring Street - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

at Chapin Hall

Saturday, April 24 8:00 p.m.
featuring Bowdoin's "Miscellanea"
$1 at the door

MICHEL'S OF WILLIAMSTOWN

Catering with a special touch for special occasions.

- Private Parties
- Platters
- Hors d'oeuvres

Contact Mary for more information.
458-5441

PANORAMA

When the bombs start falling

by Paul Sabbah

"Fasts and prayers for peace, bicycle marathons, a 'Run for your Life' race, teach-ins and a dance for disarmament will be held in the next week as part of a nationwide campaign to alert Americans to the dangers of nuclear war." So writes The New York Times of the week of nuclear education that the nation will engage in this week. Sponsored by Ground Zero, a non-partisan educational project, the project may prove to be one of the largest political protest drives in recent memory. The hope is that people around the nation will increase their awareness as to the dangers of nuclear war, and relay that message to the Administration. Here's just a sample of events planned for the days ahead:

—A "Run for your Life" race in Winston-Salem, N.C., from the center of town to the airport, passing signs along the way which will depict concentric circles of destruction from a nuclear explosion. As a Ground Zero spokesman said, "not even the swiftest of foot would get very far when the bombs start falling."

—Classes at Luther College in Iowa are to be suspended on Thursday and replaced by seminars and lectures on nuclear issues.

—Students and faculty at Stanford will meet for a "Dance for Disarmament," and residents of Santa Clara, California will be given a tour of the nuclear weapons plant there.

The essence of this week is an emphasis on education and not direct political action, and that is how it should be. Here on campus, we too should take note of the events that are taking place around the country, and in Williamstown. But we should view them in the educational sense for which they are being offered. Rather than choose to ignore or boycott the proceedings of the week on the grounds that you support a hard-line, pro-defense build-up stance, or are just opposed to any form of pacifism, you should, in the spirit of open-mindedness and a desire to learn, listen in. Certainly, the details surrounding the possible incidence of nuclear war are in question: the results, on the other hand, are far less debatable. The destruction possible from even a "limited" encounter, if there is such a thing, would be devastating in scope.

On the other hand, it is also important to recognize that the nuclear freeze proposal pushed by various members of Congress and under discussion here Thursday night at the disarmament panel has not been endorsed by the leader of the Ground Zero movement, or various other military and arms control specialists.

The reasoning behind the stand of these people is clear: U.S. chances for averting a nuclear war depend just as much on improving and stabilizing relations with the Soviet Union as they do on arms control or disarmament. We cannot assume that just because we reduce the numbers of our nuclear arsenals we won't use what is remaining.

... the days ahead may see one of the largest political protest drives in recent memory ...

Throughout the week, therefore, our growing awareness of nuclear issues should be supplemented by a growing awareness that U.S.-Soviet relations are not such that we can initiate arms talks or peace talks that will bring viable results. The message to President Reagan should therefore be two-fold: We will not tolerate the destruction of life and property that a nuclear exchange will surely bring, and we must improve our relations and prospects for peace through negotiation, and not rhetoric.

CLASSIFIEDS

PARCEL SERVICE. 118 Water St., 10 am - 2 pm, Monday-Friday. Phone 458-8157.

RESUME POINTS! Seniors with jobs seek to sell various resume points. Dean's List, committee work, etc. All points must go! S.U. 2448 or 2497.

Correction from last week's issue: 1973 Chevy Wagon for sale. $450 negotiable. Call AJ x2622.

WINE SPECIAL

Beaujolais

Villages

750 ml. $5.99

BEER SPECIAL

Wurtzburger

$3.15/6-pk

Your Williams College CHAIRS

will conform with any trend

Order from
WILLIAMS CO-OP, 25 Spring St., Williamstown, Mass.

Williams Rocker - $125.00

Williams Arm Chair with Cherry Arms - $150.00

Whether your home, office, or studio follows the so-called conventional or modern trend, these beautiful chairs will lend themselves in perfect harmony. For these chairs, which come in black, with gold trim, have a proper place in the conventional or modern setting.

You have always admired these chairs for their beauty in design and comfort ... and now ... you may own one with that added "Personal Touch" ... The College Seal has been attractively screened, in gold, to the front of these chairs.

Chairs shipped F.O.B. Williamstown
Freight may be Prepaid

Williams Co-op

From the Director's Chair

Ed's note: prior to its performance, for The Record, last Saturday night, Matt Shapiro interviewed Bonnie Nadell, director of Quintet in Twenty-Four.

Record: Let's talk about beginnings. When you first read the play what did you think to yourself?

Bonnie Nadell: I thought it would be very difficult to do theatrically. It is a very intellectual play and the audience would have to work very hard at listening to it. You have to give the audience clues in a play like this which switches between numerous types and characters. You let them know that something is happening through visual means because there is only so much they can listen to.

R: Is it possible to communicate an audience the complexity of form that one realizes in reading the play?

B.N.: No, no it's not.

R: How much of the play do you want to be evident? Is it essential that all 24-odd characters and the three style sub-divisions come across?

B.N.: The play is designed to make the audience uncomfortable. It is not something they'll go to and simply be entertained and say, "Hey, that was fun." It is something to make people think and question. There is something called the "fourth wall" which reaches from the edge of the stage to the audience. What we're trying to do is break down the "fourth wall", assaulting the audience and saying "Think about yourself and what you're doing here."

R.: The play is very self-conscious about role-playing. Often the reality of the situation is obscured to the point where the audience does not know what to believe. They might perceive the play as a series of elaborate exercises.

B.N.: That's an element of the play. The play is self-consciously theatrical.

Continued on Page 7

Hay Fever ...

Williams is looking forward to the spring Hay Fever season, featuring Williamstheatre's production of Noel Coward's social comedy. Hay Fever will be performed at the AMT during Parents' and Spring Carnival Weekends.

Williams takes United Nations by storm

by Laura Seligsohn

After a false start, a blown engine, and a four-car fender bender in the middle of the blizzard, the last contingent of the twelve-member Williams delegation to the National Model United Nations Convention arrived at Manhattan's plush Grand Hyatt Hotel near supper time on April 7, about a day late.

With nearly 130 colleges representing some 143 nations and the PLO and SWAPO, Williams' Somali and Democratic Kampuchean delegations were hardly missed. The seven Williams students who had been in New York the day before to attend committee meetings were able to fill in the newcomers, thereby readying the plunge into four days of debate, caucusing, resolution-drawing, and merry-making.

Grand Jihad planned

The United Nations simulation was authentically structured. Delegates were divided into committees including the UN Social, Humanitarian, and Cultural Committee which grappled with human rights violations in Namibia, South Africa, and Democratic Kampuchea; the Commission on Human Settlements, which discussed "new and renewable energy sources" in Less Developed Countries, and the Islamic League whose enthusiastic members got somewhat carried away in planning a grand jihad to retake Jerusalem.

Committees were headed by chairmen and secretaries who maintained order (most of the time) and assured consistency with general UN policies and the policies of the different committees. Debate, voting and caucusing were conducted according to parliamentary procedure, the formality of which resulted in substantial chunks of time spent bickering (diplomatically, of course) over single-word objections to committee resolutions. Some delegates were better researched than others, a condition which proved embarrassing for those whose formulations of their country's policies were blown away by members of other delegations. Overall though, most delegates came reasonably well-prepared, and the conference ran smoothly and swiftly.

Hungover harmony

Parties and bar-hopping often lasted to the wee hours, rendering even the chairman of 9:00 a.m. committee sessions alternately authoritarian and punchy. Most of the delegates shared this condition, though, so the effects of after-committee activity generated the sort of unity that often lasted to the wee hours, unity that often follows from shared misfortune.

The conference culminated on Saturday, April 10th, with committee and plenary sessions at the United Nations Building. Delegates sat in the seats of their real-life counterparts to consider resolutions submitted by the committees for adoption by the conference as a whole.

Most of our delegation did not remain for the Delegates Ball that night. We arrived back in Williamstown around two in the morning, which felt strange after the intensity of struggling with international crises and the bluntness of the city. It was very quiet.

Association of American Publishers
Study Guides now available ...
20¢ each/5 for $1.00

SPRING BEER SPECIALS

Molsons Golden Ale still $11.99/case
Tuborg Gold 12 oz. NR $7.99/case
Schlitz 12 oz. cans $8.79/case

Carlings, Reingold, Schmitt's and Utica Club
16 oz. returnables $7.49/case plus $1.50 deposit

WEST PACKAGE STORE
ROUTE 2
BETWEEN N.A. AND WILLIAMSTOWN
663-6081

LaCocina

OPEN EVERY DAY
FROM 11:30 AM
SUN. FROM 4 PM

home style Mexican cooking
all legal beverages
nightly entertainment

MONDAY AND TUESDAY

25¢ DRAFT BEER

LUNCHEON
SPECIALS

850 State Road, 664-4757

The Berkshires Most Unique Family Restaurant

House of Walsh

Authentic
Black lacquer with gold trim,
natural wood arms
with the
Williams College Seal.

Rocker reg. $175
Now $139

Chair $155

Order NOW for delivery by Graduation
[20% deposit with all orders]

House of Walsh Student Account
VISA—MC—AMERICAN EXPRESS
44 Spring St. Williamstown, Ma. 458-5010

Miller Brewing Co.

SEEKING CANDIDATES FOR

Campus Representative

Positions

FOR

ACADEMIC YEAR 1982-1983

BOTH MEN AND WOMEN ENCOURAGED

TO APPLY TO SU 2203

QUESTIONS: J DAYTON, T.CASEY

"Quintet" buried and confusing

by Scott Cornog

Eric Scheye's play Quintet in 24, presented by Cap and Bells last weekend, is not very fair to its audience. Besides being hostile to us for attending the show, saying that "going to the theatre for you has become an obscenity," it also left many of us thoroughly confused without even knowing why. The production was not poorly mounted, and I would not call the play badly written, for a novice. Therefore, I assume that the ambiguity that runs from beginning to end was intended, although the point of it, if there is one, is too deeply buried in the mire.

Let's start off with what we know about the play. The program notes tell us that it "takes place in a psychiatric halfway house. The residents are performing exercises in order to learn how to function when they are released." There are enough references to the performing of "exercises" in the play to have us assume that the program is telling the truth. There are five cast members listed in the program, and, sure enough, five actors are on-stage. Now we know why there is a "quintet" in the title. But what about the "24"?—Is that supposed to be the number of "exercises" performed? It's hard to say, since we are often unsure about what an "exercise" is and what it is not. So we lose count. I am told by someone involved with the production that within the play there are bits of twenty-four other plays—works of Beckett, Chekhov, Genet, and so on. While one might recognize a few Shakespeare lines here and there, and elsewhere some Beckett-like word play, it is unfair to expect the audience to catch this intent on its own.

The audience is often unsure during the play about when exactly the patients are performing their "therapeutic" exercises—is it whenever they are onstage? Even when they are talking about the exercises? Or is it just sometimes onstage? At points, the uncertainty is clearly intended by Scheye. There is one point, for example, when a patient asks, "Were we playing the game right?" Another replies, "I didn't know we were playing." We don't know either.

Scheye has placed an impossible burden on his actors. Oftentimes the only clue the audience is supposed to have as to whether or not a given scene is an "exercise" is the untrained playacting of the patients. However, by the very nature of a college production, the actors often simply cannot convey that perspective. In non-professional theatre, it is not easy for the audience to be able to tell whether a false accent or exaggerated gesture is intended, or whether it is merely due to the inexperience of the actor. This difficulty is magnified by the play, which constantly switches too quickly and unclearly from playacting to "reality."

Actually, one can find little fault with the actors in this production. Each of the five actors plays several "roles" in the course of the exercises, and all were performed as well as could be expected. Sally Nicholson, Shawn Lovley, and John Denaro are especially to be congratulated for handling an enormously difficult, explicitly sexual "exercise" so well. Diego Arciniegas and Margie Duffield were also very fine.

Bonnie Nadell did a generally accomplished job of directing. Her staging of a long sadomasochistic sexual exercise was especially effective. Still, I couldn't help thinking that there were several points where she might have been able to make the play's proceedings a little less vague. Too often, the ambiguity went past the point of being intriguing, becoming simply frustrating.

The play also had its moments of going beyond frustrating to being plain annoying. There is a lot of jumbled talk in it about the theatre's inaccurate mirroring of life, visualized by four large cracked aluminum mirrors on the set. Early in the play, one character says, "I never think of the theatre as being real," and we can almost hear the author subtly winking at us. It gets worse later on when one of the patients (the task is assigned to poor Margie Duffield) looks out at the audience, and, accusing us of being voyeurs, yells "Why are you paying to watch, when you can do so much better without paying and trying... It's pornography!" The author may think he's being clever and self-revealing, but if that statement is sincere, then it seems to invalidate his play. The whole bit comes off as being pretentious.

Even with the frustration and pretension, the play is not without its signs of genuine talent in a beginning playwright. The premise is ambitious and intriguing, and the dialogue is pieced together well. Several of the role-playing exercises are nicely handled. Scheye's biggest problem is his excessive admiration of ambiguity for its own sake. In Quintet in 24, one of his character says, "A good question must have no answer." Maybe, but is that necessarily true of a good play?

Other Ivory Towers

Continued from Page 5

Lafayette College

A four-by-eight foot postcard was on display at Lafayette last month to protest the Federal Reserve System. The card, addressed to Dan Rather, Bill Moyers, and (Executive Producer) Don Hewitt of CBS News by the "Committee to Inform CBS 60 Minutes," was meant to inform "60 Minutes" of problems the committee thinks are inherent in the structure of the Fed, said The Lafayette.

The committee was formed in October by Robert Kilbanks '74, and now has about 20 student members. They feel the Federal Reserve is primarily responsible for high interest rates and is too independent of Congress and the President.

Television is the best way to inform people of the issue, Kilbanks feels, with 60 Minutes in particular being very effective at prompting action.

North Adams State

Tuition increases hit all Massachusetts state colleges last month. Tuitions will rise 17 percent, lifting North Adams' bill $120—to $845 for the year, according to The Beacon.

PAPPA CHARLIE'S DELI

185 Spring Street

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

A & W Rootbeer is now available on draft. Made fresh on the premises. Also available in takeout containers.

Qt. — 85¢
1/2 gallon — $1.75
gallon — $2.95

Director's Chair

Continued from Page 5

cal. There are times when the actors slip into "real" roles and then draw back and say, "See, we were only playing". Which is what all the off-stage conversations are about.

R.: How irritating or provocative is the theme of

Bonnie Nadell '82, director of the "very despairing" QUINTET IN TWENTY-FOUR. "It goes beyond all the rules of plot, character, and dramatic development." (Farley) role-playing? Will the audience be taken by it, or will they squirm or even smirk?

B.N.: I don't think they'll squirm... a lot of it is very funny and designed to amuse. But the end will definitely strike home. The play works cyclically. You go through three parts and come back to the same point. The audience will be aware of this at the end but not somewhere in the middle. They will not be able to see the direction of the play.

R.: Is there no room for tragedy?

B.N.: Oh, the play is very despairing, but you don't understand the characters well enough to have genuine sympathy when each actor has five parts. Some are so brief you barely notice them. I think some people will be tempted to say this is a lot of words strung together.

R.: How important was it to delineate the 24-odd characters? Are the actual voices more important in themselves than a voice attached to a character?

B.N.: I want people to walk away asking what level of reality they were on. "Was I on stage or was I watching?" Genet is known for saying to the audience, "Look, you're here, what are you doing here? why are you watching us?" This is a frontal assault on the audience. What the actors are doing is working on four levels: the characters they are playing, the inmates and two other levels. The other part of the play is power and how these characters manage to use power through their bodies and voices. There are no good or evil characters, but there are those who are strong or weak. These people are acting in a vacuum world. It is a world in which you can feel for a split second and then it goes. It is something that anyone can understand.

THE CLIP SHOP AND YOU A TEAM THAT WORKS WELL TOGETHER!

We just want you to know that your continued patronage and kind words are appreciated. We feel you, the students of Williams College, are one of the reasons for our big success. That is why we have always had a discount for students. From now til May 15th we would like to offer an additional $2.00. It's a way for us to say thank you to all of you who have visited us before, and a great opportunity for those whom we never met. This offer is good only if you bring this advertisement with you.

As always, we are eager to please and accommodate you with our excellence.

The Purple Pub

Bank Street

Monday
Draft Beer Night
Pabst Beer 64 oz.
pitchers $1.50
7 pm - 12 midnight

Tuesday
Prime Time
(reduced prices)

Wednesday, April 21
Bud Light Night
Prizes
9 - close

NOTE: Lunch served Monday-Saturday 11:30-2:00 p.m.
Best Deli in town!

Thursday

Vodka Night
Any Vodka drink
$1.00

Friday

Lunch special
Beer and Deli
Sandwich with I.D.
$2.00

Dr. Irving J. Tanzman, F.A.A.O. Dr. Thomas R. Maselli OPTOMETRISTS

Specializing in contact lenses and students' visual problems.

85 MAIN STREET
NORTH ADAMS, MA. 01247
662-2020 — 663-5845

COUNSELORS

Top Boy's Camp, Berkshire Mts., Mass., seeks men over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Archery, Arts & Crafts, Baseball, Basketball, Karate, Lacrosse, Tennis, Swimming (W.S.I.), Sailing, Windsurfing, Waterskiing, Pianist. Also typist for office. Good salary, plus room, board and laundry.

WRITE: Camp Lenox

270-14R Grand Central Parkway
Floral Park, New York 11005

TONITE

FINAL SENIOR NITE OF THE YEAR!

discounts to all card carrying members of the Class of 1982

WEDNESDAY

Geoff Bartley

blues, folk guitarist will perform

(sponsored by Williams Coffeehouse)

NO HAPPY HOUR THIS FRIDAY.

THE LOG

LEARN WILDERNESS

In the rugged mountains of Wyoming and Washington, NOLS is teaching the essential skills of backcountry living.

On the Alaskan arctic tundra and the grasslands of Kenya, East Africa, NOLS students are learning the challenges of enjoying and preserving the wild lands of the earth.

For seventeen years THE NATIONAL OUTDOOR LEADERSHIP SCHOOL has trained wilderness leaders for most of the major outdoor programs in this country. Today, this unique non-profit educational center offers over 30 different backcountry courses which range in length from 2 weeks to 3½ months.

If you want to LEARN WILDERNESS this summer send for your free copy of the 1982 NOLS catalogue of courses.

COLLEGE CREDIT AVAILABLE

Write: NOLS
P.O. Box AA Dept. T82
LANDER, WYO 82520
or call (307) 332-6973

NOLS

YOU'VE STILL GOT TIME TO... PICK UP CASH!

6-PAK PICK UP

COULD YOUR CAMPUS GROUP USE A QUICK $500—$1,000?
YOU'VE GOT THE TIME...WE'VE GOT THE PLAN!

Miller Brewing Company and our local distributor are conducting an exciting six week contest on your campus. Your organization could qualify for one of the three $1,000.00 or three $500.00 cash awards. Winners will be determined at the conclusion of the contest. So remember, make your next pick up a Miller High Life, Lite or Löwenbräu. Quality pays off in many ways!! Contact your local Miller Campus Rep for more details.

MID-POINT STANDINGS
Six Top Groups

Dennett House
Fitch-Currier
The Recycling Club

Men's Rugby
Women's Rugby
Dodd House

1981 Miller Brewing Company, Milwaukee, WI.

Netmen ace another

Continuing as the winning team on campus despite their first loss, the men's varsity tennis team beat Tufts 5-4 on Saturday. Earlier in the week, the netmen fell for the first time all season in a 5-4 battle with Colgate. The teams' record now stands at 5-1.

The split week was not overly discouraging for the Ephmen, as Tufts and Colgate were expected to be their most challenging opponents all year. The loss to the Ephmen was Tufts' first of the year.

Williams' singles victory came from Greg Zaff '84, Marc Sopher '83, Donnie Mykrantz '82 and Kelton Burbard '83 at the number one, two, five and six positions, respectively.

Following losses in the first and second doubles matches, the Ephmen clinched the victory when Mykrantz and Jeff Harmen '82 came from behind 6-7, 6-1, 6-1 to win. The triumph was especially pleasing for Williams as it avenged a tough loss for the Ephmen last year.

The Colgate match on Thursday was equally close, but tipped in the Red Raiders' favor. Playing at number two, senior Chuck Warshaver had a match point for Williams, but was nipped by his Colgate foe.

Mykrantz won at number five and Craig Hammond '85 took the number six match. The Purple and Gold wound up the day by taking the number two and three doubles matches, but fell short by a 5-4 match tally.

Lax thumps Smith

Playing under first-year coach Karen Weaver, the women's lacrosse team split its first two games last week. The Ephwomen jumped all over Smith by a 10-3 score Saturday after being dropped 9-6 by Division I Springfield Thursday.

Many players contributed to the scoring barrage against Smith, led by Alison Earle '84 with three tallies. Eileen Conley '82 chipped in two goals and senior co-captains Nancy Gelsmar and Beth Connolly each added one. The other three scorers were Martha Mealy '82, Jenny O'Brien '83 and Alison Fuller '85 with one apiece.

Coach Weaver commented on the team's offense. "We exhibited a very balanced attack. Everybody contributed to the win which shows the tremendous depth that we have," she said.

The Ephwomen's season opener at Springfield was played under the lights on astro-turf. Williams couldn't overcome the unusual conditions, the bigger school and opening-game jitters. O'Brien was the only player to manage two goals for the Purple and Gold. Weaver was not discouraged, saying: "Even in the losing effort to Springfield, we played very well."

Beth Flynn '83 did the netminding for the Ephwomen in both games. She rejected ten shots against Springfield and 13 versus Smith.

Men sink in Little Three

In a season of frustrations, the men's varsity crew lost both the heavyweight and lightweight races of the Little Three competition on Saturday.

The races were moved from Williams' home Lake Onota to Amherst because Onota is still frozen.

The Lightweights, stroked by senior George Baumgarten, lost their second photo-finish race in two weeks. Wesleyan sprinted past the Ephmen in the last 500 meters of the 2000 meter race, to win by .8 seconds. Amherst placed a distant third.

The loss was particularly frustrating because of its similarity to last week's loss to WPI in Worcester in which a last-second sprint gave WPI a 1.6 second margin of victory.

The heavyweight boat, despite much improvement, fell to both Little Three foes. Handicapped by great inexperience, the Ephmen are below their usual level of excellence.

Amherst surprised everyone, including their coach, by sprinting past Wesleyan at the finish to garner the prestigious Saratoga Oar trophy. It was the Lord Jeffs' first Little Three Heavyweight title since 1975. Williams had won it three of the last four years.

The surly weather forced the Ephmen off the water for the week preceding the WPI race and still has them off their home lake. The team has been making a 50 minute ride each way to practice on the Hudson River in Stillwater, NY.

Freshmen unstoppable
The freshmen overcame all this adversity to triumph in the Little Three races. The freshmen "A" boat topped the Cardinals by ten seconds and the Jeffs by 18. The "B" race was considerably closer, with Williams winning by a slim one-second margin over Wesleyan.

DEVELOP YOUR EXPERTISE IN ISRAEL

WORK IN YOUR FIELD, LEARN HEBREW & TOUR ISRAEL
Programs for Six Months and One Year
(Internships, Community Work And More)

For Further Information Contact:

SHERUT LA'AM

American Zionist Youth Foundation

515 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022

Telephone (212) 751-6070

THESE COURSES DESERVE MORE THAN A SECOND THOUGHT

AFRO-AMERICAN STUDIES

Art 286 African Art
Art 318 Environmental Planning & Design
Economics 216 Urban and Regional Economics
Economics 217S Environment, Energy and Resources
English 220 Introduction to Afro-American writing
English 355 Black writing in the 1960s
(same as Afro-American studies 401)

History 108 Europe and the Non-Western World:
Industrialization and Social change
History 219 African History: Cultural change in the Pre-Colonial Era

History 220 African History: The Colonial Period and Independence
History 261 Afro-American History thru Civil War
History 262 Afro-American History
Reconstruction to Present

History 331 Southern Africa: Race, class and ethnicity in the Modern World
Philosophy 215 Philosophy of Law
Political Science 317 Environmental Law
Political Science 318 Civil Liberties in the United States
Psychology 351 Race Relations
Religion 230 Marxism and Black Religion
Religion 232 The Genealogy of Racism
Sociology 206 Comparative Race & Ethnic Relations Sociology 305 The Afro-American: A Sociological Perspective

LATIN AMERICA

Anthropology 216 Peoples of Latin America
Political Science 249S Latin American Politics
Spanish 103-104 Intermediate Spanish
Spanish 105-106 Advanced composition & conversation Spanish 112 Latin American Civilization conducted in Spanish
Spanish 203 Major American Authors: 1880 to the Present conducted in Spanish
Spanish 402 Studies in Modern Latin American Literature

MIDDLE EAST

Art/Classics 322 The Ancient Near East
Political Science 347 Domestic Politics of the Middle East Religion 217 Islam

RUSSIA AND EAST EUROPE

History 337 Russian History to 1855
History 338 Russian History: 1855-1964
History 402 Studies in Comparative History: Revolution and Peasant Societies in the Non-Western World
Political Science 246 Soviet Government: Problems of Political Change in Communist Systems
Political Science 402F Seminar in International Relations
Russian 106 Introduction to Russian Literature
Russian 123 Intensive Intermediate Russian Russian 201 Nineteenth Century Prose
Russian 203 Cultural History
Russian 205 Topics in Advanced Russian
Russian 301 Russian Classics in Translation
Russian 302 Soviet Literature in Translation
Russian 305 Revolution and Modernism
Russian 309 Russian Satire (Same as Theatre 315)

AREA STUDIES

Concept Courses
Area Studies 201-202 Critical Languages
Economics 204 Economic Development
Economics 215 Economics of the world's food system
Economics 364 Problems of Developing Countries Political Science 227 The Third World and the International System
Political Science 304F Comparative Political Analysis

JEWISH STUDIES

Religion 201 The Jewish Bible/Old Testament
Religion 202 Christian Tradition
(Same as History of Ideas 102)
(Hebrew offered if tutors and tapes are available)

WOMEN'S STUDIES

Anthropology 222 The Anthropology of Sex Roles
Art 451 The Image of Women, Men and Man in Baroque Art
Art 478 Picasso, Gertrude Stein and Company
Economics 203S Women, The Family and Economic Life
English 208 American Literature from the Civil War to World War I
English 335 The Realistic Tradition in the Nineteenth Century Novel
English 354 Contemporary American Poetry
English 375 Psychoanalytic and Myth Criticism
History 303S American Labor History
History 310F Family and Community in Early America
History 401 Studies in the American Tradition:
Types of Social Change and The Historical Understanding
Psychology 342 Individual Differences
Religion 218F Religion and Literature
Sociology 203S Social Inequality

PLEASE NOTE:

For courses in those areas that are bracketed for 1981-1982, and course descriptions, consult Courses of Instruction 1981-1982.

Paid for and Sponsored by The College Council

Women's crew tops competition

by Martha Platt

After walking away with the Little Three, the women's varsity crew powered past Smith and Rutgers Saturday to wrap up a perfect day.

Because neither Wesleyan nor Amherst had JV crews, the Eph's JV rowed in the varsity race. Williams varsity, co-captained by seniors Sue Smith and Klippy Little, won handily with about six lengths of open water over Williams JV which beat Wesleyan varsity by ten seconds and Amherst varsity by 23 seconds.

The Ephwomen have won the women's Little Three varsity trophy all eight years of its existence.

The novice boat, composed entirely of first-year rowers, also romped over their Little

Three challengers.

The varsity continued its winning ways in the afternoon with another first place finish over both Smith and Rutgers. The Ephwomen moved out strongly over the last 500 meters to take Smith by one second and Rutgers by six. The wins were particularly impressive due to the size of Rutgers' program and the traditional strength of Smith's crew.

The novices were next on the slate, and beat Smith by twelve seconds, though they fell to Rutgers by 19 seconds.

The last race of the day ended in defeat for the Williams JV as they lost to Smith by 3½ lengths and to Rutgers by 30 seconds over choppy water and through strong winds.

Eph co-captain Joe Merrill '82 went all the way in defeat in Williams' home opener against Union College. (Farley)

Jumbos stomp Ephs

The Ephmen were exciting, but they weren't victorious. It took seven goals in the final period and three overtimes for the Tufts Jumbos to down the Ephmen 10-9, in men's varsity lacrosse on Saturday.

Williams blew to an early lead over the visiting Jumbos behind senior Dirk Rittenhouse's two first-period goals. Tufts answered once, but scores by senior Tad Chase '82 and freshman Dick Wilde in the second stanza gave the Ephmen a commanding 4-1 lead.

Not sitting on their advantage, the Purple and Gold added three more goals in the third period, as Chase notched his second and Jay Wheatley '82 and Tim Curran '83 chipped in scores.

Insurmountable lead?

By the end of three quarters, Williams seemed to have the game sewn up with a 7-3 lead. But the Jumbos stormed back. Even two more Williams goals in the fourth period didn't induce Tufts to give up. Jay Wheatley netted his second tally of the day and junior John Graham finished out the Ephs scoring from his position on defense.

Seven goals, coming from a multitude of Tufts scorers, effected the dramatic comeback.

Though stunned by the reversal, the Ephs did not surrender. Two four-minute overtimes passed without a score.

Minding the net for Williams was freshman Dave Flynn who turned away 28 shots. But Flynn's stinginess was matched by his counterpart, and the game went into a third OT.

Sudden death

Tufts ended it less than a minute into that overtime to drop Williams' record to 0-2. All defeats look the same in the win-loss column, but not all are the same on the field, as the valiant effort in defeat that the Ephmen put forth Saturday demonstrates.

Earlier in the week, a bigger and better Yale squad thumped Williams 11-6. Tom Costley '82 was the only Ephmen to score two goals.

Baseball team thaws out

by John Clayton

The baseball team won one, but lost two in a weekend of high-scoring games. On Saturday, they split a doubleheader at Tufts, winning 6-4 and losing 7-6, and on Sunday they lost a slugfest to Trinity, 11-8.

Trinity jumped out with seven runs in the first inning on Sunday, virtually winning the game before the lineups were announced. Williams pitcher John DeLorenzo '84 was having his problems in the cold and wind in Williamstown, giving up two home-run blasts.

But DeLorenzo settled down to allow only one run through the seventh inning. Meanwhile, Williams was chipping away at the lead. They got three in the third, one in the fourth, then knocked out Trinity starter Mike Crisone with two in the fifth. However, Trinity came back with three runs in an error-plagued eighth inning. A Williams bottom-of-the-ninth rally was stopped by a spectacular shoe-string catch by Trinity centerfielder Todd Dayres.

The opener at Tufts was the highlight of the weekend. Sophomore John Hennigan got the 6-4 victory, giving up nine hits and striking out seven. Freshman designated hitter Mike Coakley was the offensive star of the game, and the year for that matter, going two for two with two walks in the first game, two for four in the second game and two for two Sunday.

Williams won the game in the last inning, the seventh, when senior John Lawler knocked in the tying and winning runs. Catcher B. J. Connolly '84 batted in an insurance run.

In a turnaround, the nightcap saw Williams lose the lead in the last inning. Freshman pitcher Mike DeWindt got the loss, as he went into the sixth inning with a 6-4 lead and loaded the bases with two outs. Freshman David Moss came in to replace him, and walked in one run to make it 6-5. An error by Brian Rutledge let in the tying run, and the winning run scored on a single to left. The game was immediately called due to rain, and Tufts got the win.

"We're playing well," said Williams Coach Jim Briggs. "You can quote me on this: we're going to win some games. That's a good team out there. We're hitting well, we've got good defense up the middle, and we came back well on Sunday."

"We need some help at third base—we had too many errors there so far—but we could do very well this season."

In the first game of snow-delayed season, Union defeated Williams 5-3 with two runs in the eighth inning off Eph senior co-captain and starting pitcher Joe Merrill. Freshman Mike Coakley was the offensive star for the Ephmen, going three for five with two singles and a double.

Williams is now 1-3, and with most of the snowed-out games made up, they can return to a regular schedule. Their next game is Tuesday at Little Three foe Wesleyan.

Sports Shorts

National tryout

Three women's crew members were invited to try out for the U.S. National Team during Spring Break last month by coach Buzz Congram. Congram asked seniors Sue Smith and Janet Harmon and sophomore Hope Bigelow to perform several different tests while the team was training in Washington, D.C. The coach will be keeping watch on the athletes' progress this spring.

Track triumph

The men's track team easily handled Trinity College Saturday, winning most of the field events and all the running events except the 880 yd. run. The final score was 96-57.

Co-captain Charlie Von Arentschildt '82 and Tomas Alejandro '83 handled the sprints while Brian Angle '84, Bennett York '84 and co-captain Jeff Poggi '82 took the longer distances and the hurdles.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon.-Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
01267
458-5717

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is senior Leslie Weckstein who coxed the women's varsity crew to both a Little Three championship and victories over Smith and Rutgers Saturday. Weckstein settled the crew down after a poor start to snatch the win in the second race. Leslie, this Bud's for you!

